

THIS BOOK MUST NOT BE REMOVED FROM THE LIBRARY

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON LIBRARY

346.4

Mx. North

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON LIBRARY

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2026

THE ALL ENGLAND LAW REPORTS

(INCORPORATING THE
LAW TIMES REPORTS
AND THE
LAW JOURNAL REPORTS)

OF CASES DECIDED IN
THE HOUSE OF LORDS THE PRIVY COUNCIL
ALL DIVISIONS OF THE SUPREME COURT AND COURTS OF SPECIAL JURISDICTION

1951

VOLUME 1

Consulting Editor :

Sir ROLAND BURROWS, K.C.

Recorder of Cambridge.

Managing Editor of Halsbury's Laws of England, Hailsham Edition.

Consulting Editor for Chancery Cases :

HAROLD CHRISTIE, Esq., K.C.

Benchers of Lincoln's Inn.

Consulting Editor for Taxation Cases :

CYRIL KING, Esq., K.C.

Benchers of the Middle Temple.

General Editor :

G. F. L. BRIDGMAN, Esq.

of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

[For list of Reporters see overleaf]

Published by

BUTTERWORTH & CO. (Publishers) LTD., 4, 5 & 6 BELL YARD, TEMPLE BAR, LONDON, W.C.2.

CASES REPORTED IN VOLUME I

	PAGE		PAGE
ABBOTT v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL [K.B.D.]	569	COMES, R.M.R. HOUSING SOCIETY, LTD. v. [C.A.]	16
ADAMS (decd.), Re [CH.D.]	1037	COMPTON, STANLEY v. [C.A.]	859
ADAMS v. SUNDAY PICTORIAL NEWSPAPERS		CONWAY v. WIMPEY (GEORGE) & CO., LTD. [C.A.]	56
(1920), LTD. [C.A.]	865	— [C.A.]	363
ALBURY, R. v. [C.C.A.]	491	CORAL v. KLEYMAN [K.B.D.]	518
ALEXANDER v. SPRINGATE [K.B.D.]	351	COULTHURST'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [C.A.]	774
ALLEN v. ALLEN [C.A.]	724	COURT v. ROBINSON [C.A.]	209
AMALGAMATED ANTHRACITE COLLIERIES, LTD.,		COVENTRY PERMANENT ECONOMIC BUILDING
NATIONAL COAL BOARD v. [C.A.]	844	SOCIETY v. JONES [CH.D.]	901
AMBLER v. AMBLER [LEEDS WINTER ASSIZES]	980	CRANE CHRISTMAS & CO., CANDLER v. [C.A.]	426
ANGELO-CYPRIAN TRADE AGENCIES, LTD. v.		CRESSWELL v. HODGSON [C.A.]	710
PAPHOS WINE INDUSTRIES, LTD. [K.B.D.]	873	CROWTHER v. CROWTHER [H.L.]	1131
ANTONIO LABORATORIES, LTD., Re [CH.D.]	110	CUMBE v. ROBINSON [C.A.]	661
ATTORNEY-GENERAL, READING v. [H.L.]	617	CURRAN v. NEWPARK CINEMAS, LTD. [C.A.]	295
AUSTIN (G.H.) & SONS, LTD., REYNOLDS v.		CURTIS v. CHEMICAL CLEANING AND DYEING CO.,
[K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	606	LTD. [C.A.]	631
B.'S SETTLEMENT, Re [CH.D.]	949n	CUSTOMS AND EXCISE COMRS. v. RENSONP
BAILEY (decd.), Re [C.A.]	391	DRAPERS, LTD. [C.A.]	450
BARCLAY JACK, LTD., MONKLAND v. [C.A.]	714	DALEY v. DIGGERS, LTD. [K.B.D.]	116
BARCLAYS BANK, LTD., INLAND REVENUE		DANDO, THOMAS v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1010
COMRS. v. [H.L.]	1	DANISH MERCANTILE CO., LTD. v. BEAUMONT
BARKER, R. v. [C.C.A.]	479	[C.A.]	925
BARNETT, R. v. [C.C.A.]	917	DARNELL v. MILLWOOD [C.A.]	88
BARRON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), LITTMAN v.		DAVIES, In the Estate of [GLOUCESTER ASSIZES]	920
[CH.D.]	701	D'AVIGDOR-GOLDSMID'S LIFE POLICY, Re
BARRS, MINISTRY OF NATIONAL INSURANCE v.		[CH.D.]	240
[C.A.]	532	DEBTOR (NO. 21 OF 1950), Re A. Ex parte THE
BEAUMONT, Ex parte. R. v. LONDON SESSIONS		PETITIONING CREDITORS v. THE DEBTOR
APPEAL COMMITTEE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	232	[CH.D.]	600
BEAUMONT, DANISH MERCANTILE CO., LTD. v.		DEMETRIADES v. GLASGOW CORPN. [H.L.]	457
[C.A.]	925	DIGGERS, LTD., DALEY v. [K.B.D.]	116
BEDFORD (decd.), Re [CH.D.]	1093	DIMENT, COATES v. [DORSET WINTER ASSIZES]	890
BENNETT v. BENNETT [K.B.D.]	1088	DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS, Ex parte.
BIGOS v. BOUSTED [K.B.D.]	92	R. v. WOLVERHAMPTON DEPUTY RECORDER
BIRMINGHAM (WEST) RENT TRIBUNAL, R. v. Ex		[K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	627
parte EDGBASTON INVESTMENT TRUST, LTD.		DORMAN, LONG & CO., LTD. v. HILLIER [K.B.D.
[K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	198	DIVL. CT.]	357
BLAND-SUTTON'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [C.A.]	494	DOWNIE v. TURNER [C.A.]	416
BLECKLY (decd.), Re [CH.D.]	628	DOWSE (decd.), Re [CH.D.]	558
— [C.A.]	1064	DUDLEY, TINSLEY v. [C.A.]	252
BODDINGTON v. WISSON [C.A.]	166	DUFF'S SETTLEMENTS TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	869
BOLTON v. STONE [H.L.]	1078	EAGLE STAR INSURANCE CO., LTD., LLOYDS
BOLTON LEATHERS, LTD., HALES v. [H.L.]	643	BANK, LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	914
BOOTS CASH CHEMISTS (SOUTHERN), LTD., JOYCE		EAST NORFOLK LOCAL VALUATION COURT, R. v.
v. [C.A.]	682	Ex parte MARTIN [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	743
BOUSTED, BIGOS v. [K.B.D.]	92	EBBW VALE URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL, Ex
BOYD-GIBBINS v. SKINNER [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1049	parte. R. v. SOUTH WALES TRAFFIC LICENSING
BRASSEY'S DEED TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	102	AUTHORITY [C.A.]	806
BRICKETT, STAGG v. [C.A.]	152	EDGBASTON INVESTMENT TRUST, LTD., Ex parte.
BRITISH AND COLONIAL FURNITURE CO., LTD. v.		R. v. BIRMINGHAM (WEST) RENT TRIBUNAL
MCLROY (WILLIAM), LTD. [C.A.]	404	[K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	198
BROCK v. RICHARDS [C.A.]	261	EDWARDS v. EDWARDS [DIV.]	63
BROWNING v. BROWNING [DIV.]	758	FAHRI, THIRD PARTY. CASSIDY v. MINISTRY OF
BRUCE (W.), LTD. v. STRONG (J.) (A FIRM),		HEALTH [C.A.]	574
KERIL MISCHIEFF, LTD. (THIRD PARTY),		FALKIRK IRON CO., LTD., WILLIAMS v. [BIRMING-
ABRAHAM (F.) & CO. (A FIRM) (FOURTH		HAM ASSIZES]	294
PARTY), BAKIRIS & CO., LTD. (FIFTH PARTY)		FARRANT, KEATS (BOB), LTD. v. [K.B.D. DIVL.
[C.A.]	1021	CT.]	899
BRUCE, MILLS v. [C.A.]	111	FERGUSON v. WEAVING [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	412
BULLER v. MOUNVIEW ESTATES, LTD. [K.B.D.]	693	FITZWILLIAM'S (EARL) WENTWORTH ESTATES
CANDLER v. CRANE CHRISTMAS & CO. [C.A.]	426	Co. v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY
CASSIDY v. MINISTRY OF HEALTH (FAHRI,		PLANNING [C.A.]	982
THIRD PARTY) [C.A.]	574	FOOT, KEMSLEY v. [C.A.]	331
CHALLEN (CHARLES H.) & SON, LTD., CLIFFORD		FORD, GREGORY v. [NOTTINGHAMSHIRE SUMMER
v. [C.A.]	72	ASSIZES]	121
CHATTERTON v. MACLEAN [K.B.D.]	761	FORWOOD, TURNER v. [C.A.]	746
CHEMICAL CLEANING AND DYEING CO., LTD.,		FRANKENSWERTH, REGIONAL PROPERTIES,
CURTIS v. [C.A.]	631	LTD. v. [C.A.]	178
CITY OF LONDON, ETC., RENT TRIBUNAL, R. v.		FRENCH PROTESTANT HOSPITAL, Re [CH.D.]	938
Ex parte HONIG [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	195	FULHAM, HAMMERSMITH AND KENSINGTON
CLIFFORD v. CHALLEN (CHARLES H.) & SON,		RENT TRIBUNAL, R. v. Ex parte ZEREK
LTD. [C.A.]	72	[K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	482
COATES v. DIMENT [DORSET WINTER ASSIZES]	890	GARFORTH-BLES v. GARFORTH-BLES [DIV.]	308
COHEN, R. v. [C.C.A.]	203	GATENBY, R. v. [C.C.A.]	173
COLE v. MILSOME [K.B.D.]	311	GEE-WHIZ, THE [ADM.]	876
COMBE v. COMBE [C.A.]	767	GINGER (decd.), Re [CH.D.]	422

GLASGOW CORPN., DEMETRIADES v. [H.L.]	457
GOODMAN, Ex parte . R. v. HAMPTSTEAD AND ST. PANCRAS RENT TRIBUNAL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	170
GOULD v. MINISTER OF NATIONAL INSURANCE [K.B.D.]	368
GRANT, R. v. [C.C.A.]	28
GREENWOOD v. SKETCHER [C.A.]	750
GREGORY v. FORD [NOTTINGHAMSHIRE SUMMER ASSIZES]	121
HALES v. BOLTON LEATHERS, LTD. [H.L.]	643
HALL (decd.), Re [Ch.D.]	1073
HALPERN v. HALPERN [Div.]	315
HAMPTSTEAD AND ST. PANCRAS RENT TRIBUNAL, R. v. Ex parte GOODMAN [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	170
HANNAM, MCCULLOCH v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	402
HARRINGTON, JELLIFF v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	384
HARRISON v. NATIONAL COAL BOARD [H.L.]	1102
HARROWBY (EARL) v. SNELSON [STAFFORDSHIRE AUTUMN ASSIZES]	140
HAVANT AND WATERLOO URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL, HIGHAM v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	173
HAWKS v. MCARTHUR [Ch.D.]	22
HEMMINGS, ROE v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	389
HERITAGE, R. v. [C.A.]	1013
HERITAGE, RHODES v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	904
HIGH STREET, DEPTFORD, Re 139 [Ch.D.]	950
HIGHAM v. HAVANT AND WATERLOO URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	173
HILL v. LUTON CORPN. [K.B.D.]	1028
HILLIER, DORMAN, LONG & CO., LTD. v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	357
HINCKLEY URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. WEST MIDLANDS GAS BOARD. [Ch.D.]	160
—, C.A.	788
HINRICHSSEN EDITION, LTD., NOVELLO AND CO., LTD. v. [Ch.D.]	779
HODGSON, CRESSWELL v. [C.A.]	710
HONIG, Ex parte . R. v. CITY OF LONDON, ETC., RENT TRIBUNAL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	195
HORTON, LANGDON v. [C.A.]	60
HOWKINS v. JARDINE [C.A.]	320
HUNTER (decd.), Re [Ch.D.]	58
HUNTER v. TOWERS [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	349
INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. BARCLAYS BANK, LTD. [H.L.]	1
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., POTTS' EXECUTORS v. [H.L.]	76
INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. SILVERTS, LTD. [C.A.]	703
JARDINE, HOWKINS v. [C.A.]	320
JEFFERY, WILCOX v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	464
JELLIFF v. HARRINGTON [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	384
JOHN, WIMPEY (GEORGE) & CO., LTD. v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	307
JONES, COVENTRY PERMANENT ECONOMIC BUILDING SOCIETY v. [Ch.D.]	901
JONES v. MAYNARD [Ch.D.]	802
JONES v. SAVERY [C.A.]	820
JOYCE v. BOOTS CASH CHEMISTS (SOUTHERN), LTD. [C.A.]	682
KEATS (BOB), LTD. v. FARRANT [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	899
KEMSLEY v. FOOT [C.A.]	331
KLEYMAN, CORAL v. [K.B.D.]	518
— (INFANTS), Re [Ch.D.]	912
LAMB v. SUNDERLAND AND DISTRICT CREAMERY, LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	923
LANDER (decd.), Re [Ch.D.]	622
LANGDON v. HORTON [C.A.]	60
LEE (E.), LTD., LLOYD v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	589
LEEMAN v. STOCKS [Ch.D.]	1043
LEWIS (JOHN) AND CO., LTD., TIMS v. [C.A.]	814
LINNITT, WILLIAMS v. [C.A.]	278
LITTMAN v. BARRON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) [Ch.D.]	701
LLOYD v. LEE (E.), LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	589
LLOYDS BANK, LTD. v. EAGLE STAR INSURANCE CO., LTD. [K.B.D.]	914
LONDON COUNTIES NEWSPAPERS, SELLERS v. [C.A.]	544
LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, ABBOTT v. [K.B.D.]	569
LONDON SESSIONS APPEAL COMMITTEE, R. v. Ex parte BEAUMONT [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	232
LONDON SESSIONS APPEAL COMMITTEE, R. v. Ex parte ROGERS [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	343
LONDON SESSIONS APPEAL COMMITTEE, R. v. Ex parte WESTMINSTER CITY COUNCIL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1032
LONDON TRANSPORT EXECUTIVE, SMITH v. [H.L.]	667
LOVEGROVE, R. v. [C.C.A.]	804
LUMSDEN, R. v. [C.C.A.]	1101
LUTON CORPN., HILL v. [K.B.D.]	1028
MCARDLE (decd.), Re [C.A.]	905

MCARTHUR, HAWKS v. [Ch.D.]	22
MCCLELLAND, R. v. [C.C.A.]	557
MCCULLOCH v. HANNAM [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	402
MCILROY (WILLIAM), LTD., BRITISH AND COLONIAL FURNITURE CO., LTD. v. [C.A.]	404
MCKEE v. MCKEE [P.C.]	942
MACLEAN, CHATTERTON v. [K.B.D.]	761
MACLEAN v. MACLEAN [C.A.]	967
MARTIN, Ex parte . R. v. EAST NORFOLK LOCAL VALUATION COURT [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	743
MARTIN'S MORTGAGE TRUSTS, Re [C.A.]	1053
MATT, ROSE v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	361
MAY, PEARLBERG v. [C.A.]	1001
MAYNARD, JONES v. [Ch.D.]	802
MEYERS (decd.), Re [Ch.D.]	538
MILLS v. BRYCE [C.A.]	111
MILLWOOD, DARNELL v. [C.A.]	88
MILSOME, COLE v. [K.B.D.]	311
MINISTER OF NATIONAL INSURANCE, GOULD v. [K.B.D.]	368
MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING, FITZWILLIAM'S (EARL) WENTWORTH ESTATES CO. v. [C.A.]	982
MINISTRY OF EDUCATION, ST. DAVID'S COLLEGE, LAMPETER v. [Ch.D.]	559
MINISTRY OF HEALTH, CASSIDY v. (FAHRNI, THIRD PARTY) [C.A.]	574
MINISTRY OF NATIONAL INSURANCE v. BARRS [C.A.]	532
MONKLAND v. BARCLAY (JACK), LTD. [C.A.]	714
MOORE (PERCY G.), LTD. v. STRETCH [C.A.]	228
MOUNTVIEW ESTATES, LTD., BUTLER v. [K.B.D.]	693
NATIONAL COAL BOARD v. AMALGAMATED ANTHRACITE COLLIERIES, LTD. [C.A.]	844
NATIONAL COAL BOARD, HARRISON v. [H.L.]	1102
NEWARK CINEMAS, LTD., CURRAN v. [C.A.]	295
NOAD (decd.), Re [Ch.D.]	467
NORTHUMBERLAND COMPENSATION APPEAL TRIBUNAL, R. v. Ex parte SHAW [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	268
NOVELLO AND CO., LTD. v. HINRICHSSEN EDITION, LTD. [Ch.D.]	779
NOWELL v. NOWELL [Div.]	474
OFFICIAL SOLICITOR, POST OFFICE v. [K.B.D.]	522
OPPENHEIM v. TOBACCO SECURITIES TRUST CO., LTD. [H.L.]	31
PAPHOS WINE INDUSTRIES, LTD., ANGLO-CYPRIAN TRADE AGENCIES, LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	873
PARIS v. STEPNY BOROUGHCOUNCIL [H.L.]	42
PARRY, TAYLOR v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	355
PATEL v. WILLIS [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	470
PAYNE v. RAILWAY EXECUTIVE [K.B.D.]	1034
PEARCE, R. v. [C.C.A.]	493
PEARLBERG v. MAY [C.A.]	1001
PERRINS v. PERRINS [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1075
PERRY, TINKHAM v. [C.A.]	249
PICKETT v. PICKETT (otherwise Moss) [Div.]	614
POLSKY v. S. AND A. SERVICES [K.B.D.]	185
—, [C.A.]	1062
PORTMAN BUILDING SOCIETY, THIRD PARTY, READ'S TRUSTEE IN BANKRUPTCY v. SMITH [Ch.D.]	406
PORTMAN BUILDING SOCIETY v. YOUNG [C.A.]	191
POST OFFICE v. OFFICIAL SOLICITOR [K.B.D.]	522
POTTS' EXECUTORS v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [H.L.]	76
POWER'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS, Re [Ch.D.]	932
PRATT v. RICHARDS [K.B.D.]	90
PRESTON-JONES v. PRESTON-JONES [H.L.]	124
PRICE v. PRICE [Div.]	877
PURSELL v. RAILWAY EXECUTIVE [C.A.]	536
R. v. ALBURY [C.C.A.]	491
R. v. BARKER [C.C.A.]	479
R. v. BARNETT [C.C.A.]	917
R. v. BIRMINGHAM (WEST) RENT TRIBUNAL, Ex parte EDGBASTON INVESTMENT TRUST, LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	198
R. v. CITY OF LONDON, ETC., RENT TRIBUNAL, Ex parte HONG [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	195
R. v. COHEN [C.C.A.]	203
R. v. EAST NORFOLK LOCAL VALUATION COURT, Ex parte MARTIN [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	743
R. v. FULHAM, HAMMERSMITH AND KENSINGTON RENT TRIBUNAL, Ex parte ZERER [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	482
R. v. GATENBY [C.C.A.]	173
R. v. GRANT [C.C.A.]	28
R. v. HAMPTSTEAD AND ST. PANCRAS RENT TRIBUNAL, Ex parte GOODMAN [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	170
R. v. HERITAGE [C.C.A.]	1013
R. v. LONDON SESSIONS APPEAL COMMITTEE, Ex parte BEAUMONT [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	232

ASSIGNMENT
Equitable. See EQUITABLE ASSIGNMENT.
ASSISTED PERSON
See LEGAL AID.
ASSURANCE
Life assurance— Estate duty on money received under policy. See ESTATE DUTY (Property deemed to pass).
ATTESTATION
Will. See WILL.
ATTORNMENr CLAUSE
In mortgage— Creation of relationship of landlord and tenant—Application of Rent Restrictions Acts [PORTMAN BUILDING SOCIETY v. YOUNG]	191
AUCTION
Illegal bidding agreement— Proceedings on indictment—Competency [R. v. BARNETT]	917
Sale of land— Memorandum of contract—Signature of party to be charged—Agreement signed only by purchaser—Vendor's name and initials inserted at head of agreement by auctioneer before auction—Admissibility of evidence of intention of parties that document should be final written record of contract [LEEMAN v. STOCKS]	1043
BAIL
See CRIMINAL LAW.
BAILEE
Larceny from— Special property in goods—"Owner"—Deposit of goods as security—Goods taken away by depositor [ROSE v. MATT]	361
Negligence. See NEGLIGENCE.
BAILEMENT
Delivery to bailee— Goods on bailee's premises—Irrelevance of whether bailor invitee or licensee—Licensee of public house—Motor bicycle left in covered yard, marked "garage," adjoining and forming part of premises [TINSLEY v. DUDLEY]	252
BANKRUPTCY
Costs— Set-off—Separate proceedings—Bankruptcy petition by judgment creditors dismissed with costs—Judgment debt unpaid—Jurisdiction to order stay of execution of order for costs [Re A DEBTOR (No. 21 of 1950). Ex parte THE PETITIONING CREDITORS v. THE DEBTOR]	600
BASTARDY
"Single woman"— Married woman living with husband at date of application for affiliation order—National Assistance Act, 1948 (c. 29), s. 1, s. 42 (1), (2)—Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872 (c. 65), s. 3 [TAYLOR v. PARRY]	355
BILL OF EXCHANGE
Consideration— Payment of cheque into bank—Drawing of cheques on account at request of drawer's agent [COLE v. MILSOME]	318
Requirements of form— Document in form of cheque—"Pay cash or order"—Not payable "to or to order of specified person or to bearer"—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (c. 61), s. 3 (1) [COLE v. MILSOME]	318
BILL OF SALE
Assurance of personal chattels by way of security— Purported sale of car followed by hire-purchase agreement—Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882 (c. 43), s. 3 [POLSKY v. S. & A. SERVICES, LTD.]	185, 1062
BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION
Powers. See STREET TRAFFIC.
BUILDING
Being found in by night with intent to commit felony. See CRIMINAL LAW.
Control. See BUILDING CONTROL.
BUILDING CONTROL
Licence— Failure to obtain—Prosecution by local authority—Information laid by clerk to council—No resolution by council authorising clerk to take proceedings—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927), reg. 56A (2) (as amended)—Control of Building Operations (Proceedings by Local Authorities) (No. 1) Order, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 75), art. 1 [BOB KEATS, LTD. v. FARRANT]	899
Work ordered by tenant— Licence in name of sub-tenant—Right of builder to recover cost of work from tenant—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927, as amended by S. R. & O., 1945, No. 502), reg. 56A (2) (6) [WOOLFE v. WEXLER]	635
BUILDING LAND
Compulsory purchase by Central Land Board— Power of board to acquire land for disposal for permitted development—Planning permission granted by local authority to prospective lessee—Owner unwilling to sell at existing use value. [EARL FITZWILLIAM'S WENTWORTH ESTATES CO. v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING]	983
BUILDING OPERATION
In factory. See FACTORY.
Liability of contractor and sub-contractor— Scaffolding erected by main contractor—Omission to provide guard-rail—Accident to workman employed by sub-contractor [PRATT v. RICHARDS]	90
BUILT UP AREA
See STREET TRAFFIC.
"C" LICENCE
Motor vehicle. See STREET TRAFFIC.
CAPITAL
Reduction. See COMPANY.
CAR PARK
Liability of owner for loss of vehicle. See BAILMENT; INN.
CARAVAN SITE
Licence under Public Health Act, 1936, s. 269— Not planning permission [HIGHAM v. HAVANT & WATERLOO URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL]	173

CARRIAGE OF GOODS	PAGE
Carriage for hire—Delivery of goods "subjected to a process or treatment in the course of trade or business carried on" by contractor—Open-cast coal mining—Carriage of coal from site to and from screening plant—Road and Rail Traffic Act, 1933 (c. 53), s. 1 (5) (b) [GEORGE WIMPEY & Co. v. JOHN]	307
Restrictions on area of operation—Permit to carry agricultural produce outside twenty-five miles limit—Imported unprocessed hides—Transport Act, 1947 (c. 49), s. 52 (1) [SCARR v. WURZAL]	1014
CARRIER "C" licence. See STREET TRAFFIC.
CATERING Wages regulation. See WAGES.
CENTRAL LAND BOARD Compulsory purchase powers. See COMPULSORY PURCHASE.
CERTIFICATE Legal aid. See LEGAL AID.
CERTIORARI Rent tribunal—Determination of collateral question on which jurisdiction depends—Review of decision [R. v. CITY OF LONDON, ETC., RENT TRIBUNAL. Ex parte HONIG] Review of decision on preliminary question as to jurisdiction [R. v. FULHAM, HAMMERSMITH AND KENSINGTON RENT TRIBUNAL. Ex parte ZEREK] Statutory tribunal—Error of law on face of decision [R. v. NORTHUMBERLAND COMPENSATION APPEAL TRIBUNAL. Ex parte SHAW]	195 482 268
"CHANCELLOR'S CONCESSION" Option to purchase dwelling-house at value for estate duty purposes—Purchase at concession value [Re DOWSE (dec'd.)]	558
CHARGING ORDER See EXECUTION.
CHARITABLE PURPOSE See CHARITY.
CHARITY Benefit to the community—Establishment of home of rest for nurses of institution [Re WHITE'S WILL TRUSTS] Provision of fire brigade [Re WOKINGHAM FIRE BRIGADE TRUSTS] Education—Public character—Public nature of bond between beneficiaries—Gift for the education of the children of past and present members of limited company [OPPENHEIM v. TOBACCO SECURITIES TRUST CO., LTD.] Hospital—Gift to—Effect of National Health Service. See NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE. Non-charitable object—Gift to Royal College of Surgeons [Re BLAND-SUTTON'S WILL TRUSTS] Uncertainty—"Welfare benefit or assistance of members of His Majesty's navy (whether past present or future)" [Re MEYERS (dec'd.)] Relief of poverty—Gift for the benefit of widows and orphaned children of deceased officers and deceased ex-officers of a bank [Re COULTHURST'S WILL TRUSTS] Relations in needy circumstances—Immediate gift [Re SCARISBRICK'S WILL TRUSTS] Trust—Profit from trust—Directors of charitable corporation—Directors empowered to make bye-laws—Validity of bye-law permitting directors to be paid for professional services [Re FRENCH PROTESTANT HOSPITAL]	528 454 31 494 538 774 822 938
CHEMIST Chemist's shop—Factory—Staff comprising manager, dispenser, assistants and porter—Porter alone employed in manual labour [JOYCE v. BOOTS CASH CHEMISTS (SOUTHERN), LTD.]	682
CHEQUE See BILL OF EXCHANGE.
CHILD Maintenance. See DIVORCE.
CIRCUIVITY OF ACTION Salvage—Salvaging vessel and colliding vessel under control of different departments of Crown [THE SUSAN V. LUCKENBACH]	753
CLEANER AND DYER Contract to clean garment—Clause in document excluding liability "for any damage howsoever arising"—Innocent misrepresentation as to extent of exception clause—Exclusion of exception [CURTIS v. CHEMICAL CLEANING & DYEING CO., LTD.]	631
COAL Nationalisation of industry—Workmen's compensation—Contribution—Miner suffering from gradual disease—Compensation paid by National Coal Board—Right of board to contribution from miner's employers before nationalisation—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), s. 43 (1) (c) (iii)—Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946 (c. 59), s. 7 (1), s. 10 (3), sched. II [NATIONAL COAL BOARD v. AMALGAMATED ANTHRACITE COLLIERIES, LTD.]	844
COAL MINE See MINE (Coal mine).
COMMISSION Servant. See MASTER AND SERVANT (Remuneration).
COMPANY Oppression—Petition for order regulating conduct of company's affairs—Need to state nature of relief sought—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 210 (1) [Re ANTIGEN LABORATORIES, LTD.] Private company—Charging order absolute on shares standing in name of judgment debtor—Transfers executed before date of order—Articles of company in regard to transfers not complied with—Shares still registered in name of judgment debtor—Rights of purchasers as against judgment creditor [HAWKS v. MCARTHUR] Surtax—Undistributed income—Apportionment to members—Member a married woman living with her husband—Liability of husband [INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. BARCLAY'S BANK, LTD.]	110 22 1

COMPANY—continued.

- Proceedings by—Action in name of company started by solicitor without authority—Liquidation
—Adoption of proceedings by liquidator—Ratification [DANISH MERCANTILE CO., LTD. v. BEAUMONT] .. 925
- Reduction of capital—Paid-up share capital in excess of company's wants—Transfer of certain assets to newly formed investment holding company—Part of share capital of old company to be paid off by reducing nominal amount of each share by 2s., and transferring to shareholder a 2s. share of new company—Present value of assets to be transferred exceeding amount by which share capital reduced—Possibility of nationalisation of industry—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 66 (1) (c) [Ex parte WESTBURN SUGAR REFINERIES, LTD.] .. 881
- Share premium account—Distribution to shareholders—Whether capital or income in hands of payee—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 56 (1), (2), (3) [Re DUFF'S SETTLEMENTS TRUSTS] .. 869
- Trial—Commitittal order—Stamp of court [R. v. DEPUTY RECORDER OF WOLVERHAMPTON. Ex parte DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS] .. 627

COMPENSATION

- Acquisition of land. See TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING.
- Agricultural holding—Disturbance. See AGRICULTURE.
- Loss of employment owing to National Health Service Act, 1946. See NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE.

COMPULSORY PURCHASE

- Building land—Compulsory purchase by Central Land Board—Power of board to acquire land for disposal for permitted development—Planning permission granted by local authority to prospective lessee—Owner unwilling to sell at existing use value—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51), s. 43 (1) (2) [EARL FITZWILLIAM'S WENTWORTH ESTATES CO. v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING] .. 982
- Police purposes—Duty of county council—Police Act, 1946 (c. 46), s. 15 [WILTSHIRE STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE v. WILTSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL] .. 1041
- Town and country planning. See TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING.

CONDITIONAL DISCHARGE

- See CRIMINAL LAW (Sentence).

CONDONATION

- See DIVORCE.

CONFISCATION

- Confiscatory law of foreign country—Not enforceable in England. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

CONFLICT OF LAWS

- Confiscatory law of foreign country—Not enforceable in England—Sale in Germany of Jewish property by trustee appointed under confiscatory decree—Not effective to pass copyright in United Kingdom [NOVELLO & CO. v. HINRICHSSEN EDITION, LTD.] .. 779

CONSIDERATION

- See generally CONTRACT.
- Equitable assignment. See EQUITABLE ASSIGNMENT.
- Failure. See GAMING (Debt).
- Statement in deed—Parol evidence to prove larger consideration. See DEED.

CONSPIRACY

- Criminal. See CRIMINAL LAW.

CONTRACT

- Consideration—Undertaking by divorced husband to pay allowance to wife—No request that wife should abstain from applying for maintenance order [COMBE v. COMBE] .. 767
- Excepting clause—Exclusion of exception—Innocent misrepresentation as to extent of clause—Cleaner and dyer—Damage to garment [CURTIS v. CHEMICAL CLEANING AND DYEING CO., LTD.] .. 631
- Illegality—Frustration of contract by one party—Right of other party to relief—Agreement for Italian money to be made available in Italy, and to be paid for with English money in England—Share certificate deposited by defendant with plaintiff as security for payment—Right of defendant to recover share certificate [BIGOS v. BOUSTED] .. 92
- Sale of goods. See SALE OF GOODS.

CONTROL OF GOODS

- Supply for export only—"Supply"—Delivery to agent—Declaration signed by agent in name of principal and undated—Validity—Proof of delivery in contravention of declaration—Knitted Goods (Manufacture and Supply) Order, 1948 (S.I., 1948, No. 316), art. 3 (2) (as substituted by art. 1 (a) of the Knitted Goods (Manufacture and Supply) (Amendment) (No. 2) Order, 1948) (S.I., 1948, No. 994) art. 3A (1) (as added by art. 1 (b) of the amending Order)—Utility Mark and Apparel and Textiles (General Provisions) Order, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 2642), art. 16 (1) (b), art. 18 (4) [PATEL v. WILLIS] .. 470

COPYRIGHT

- Emergency legislation—Power of comptroller to grant to non-enemy subject licence to exercise copyright owned by enemy—Right of owner, after shedding enemy character, to exercise copyright subject to rights of statutory licensee—Patents, Designs, Copyright and Trade Marks (Emergency) Act, 1939 (c. 107), s. 2 (1). [NOVELLO AND CO., LTD. v. HINRICHSSEN EDITION, LTD.] .. 779

CORRECTIVE TRAINING

- See CRIMINAL LAW (Sentence).

COSTS

- Assisted persons' right to. See LEGAL AID.
- Criminal cases. See CRIMINAL LAW (Costs).
- Disallowing costs of successful plaintiff—Breach of contract—Goods supplied alleged to be valueless—Full purchase price claimed—Statement of claim amended by leave during trial to cover cost of remedying trial defect in goods—Plaintiffs unsuccessful on main claim, but successful on amendment—Right of defendants to costs [ANGLO-CYPRIAN TRADE AGENCIES, LTD. v. PAPHOS WINE INDUSTRIES, LTD.] .. 873
- Divorce. See DIVORCE.
- Security for costs—Legal aid—Plaintiff not assisted person when order first made—Subsequent grant of emergency certificate—Effect on order [CONWAY v. GEORGE WIMPEY & CO., LTD.] .. 56

COSTS—continued.

- Set-off—Separate proceedings—Bankruptcy petition by judgment creditors dismissed with costs—Judgment debt unpaid—Jurisdiction to order stay of execution of order for costs [RE A DEBTOR (No. 21 of 1950)]. Ex parte THE PETITIONING CREDITORS v. THE DEBTOR 600
- Taxation—Withdrawal and re-delivery of bill—Discretion of court to permit—Counsel's fees not paid before delivery of bill—Unpaid fees not set out under separate heading—Fees paid by solicitor before taxation—Disallowance—R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 27 (29A) [RE A SOLICITOR] 592
- Tender—Claim for £149—£106 paid into court—£136 awarded to plaintiff—Amount for which judgment should be given [READ'S TRUSTEE IN BANKRUPTCY v. SMITH (PORTMAN BUILDING SOCIETY, THIRD PARTY)] 406

COUNSEL

Fees. See COSTS (Taxation).

COUNTY COURT

- Appeal—Leave—Time when application for leave should be made—Before filing of notice of appeal—County Courts Act, 1934 (c. 53), s. 105 (a) [CUMBER v. ROBINSON] 661
- Possession action—Jurisdiction to postpone execution of order—County Courts Act, 1934 (c. 53), s. 48 (1)—County Court Rules, 1936, Ord. 24, r. 11 [JONES v. SAVERY] 820

COURT OF APPEAL

Further evidence—Agreed medical report in court below—Change of opinion by doctor—Evidence to modify medical report [PURSELL v. RAILWAY EXECUTIVE] 536

COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL

See CRIMINAL LAW (Appeal).

COURTS EMERGENCY POWERS

See EMERGENCY LEGISLATION.

CRICKET

See GAMES.

CRIMINAL LAW

- Appeal—Court of Criminal Appeal—Error in order of court—Inherent power of court to ensure that its own orders are properly carried out [R. v. GATENBY] 173
- Trial judge sitting as member of the court* [R. v. LOVEGROVE] 804
- Ball—Conviction by court of summary jurisdiction—Committal for sentence to quarter sessions—Notice of appeal to quarter sessions against conviction—Right to apply to High Court for bail—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), s. 29 (1), s. 37 (1) (a) [RE WHITEHOUSE] 353
- "Being found by night in a building with intent to commit a felony"—"Found . . . in"—Prisoner seen to enter building and later to run out of it—Larceny Act, 1916 (c. 50), s. 28 (4) [R. v. LUMSDEN] 1101
- Company—Trial—Committal order—Stamp of court [R. v. DEPUTY RECORDER OF WOLVERHAMPTON. Ex parte DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS] 627
- Conspiracy—Statutory offence punishable on summary conviction—Particulars of conspiracy in same terms as statutory offence—Charge of illegal agreement relating to bidding at auction—Competency of proceedings on indictment—Auctions (Bidding Agreements) Act, 1927 (c. 12), s. 1 (1) [R. v. BARNETT] 917
- Costs—Order to pay—Enforcement—No power in court to prescribe method of enforcement—Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908 (c. 15), s. 6 (5) [R. v. McCLELLAND] 557
- Evidence—Questions to accused by judge—Examination on matters not put in evidence by counsel [R. v. COHEN] 203
- Wife—Charge against husband of sending letter threatening to murder her—Admissibility of wife's evidence—Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (c. 100), s. 16—Criminal Evidence Act, 1893 (c. 36), s. 4, schedule* [R. v. YEO] 864
- Gross indecency—Conviction of both parties—Evidence of action in concert with consent of both—Conviction of one party and acquittal of other—Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (c. 69), s. 11 [R. v. PEARCE] 493
- Larceny—"Owner"—Special property in goods—Bailee—Deposit of goods as security—Goods taken away by depositor—Larceny Act, 1916 (c. 50), s. 1 (2) (iii) [ROSE v. MATT] 361
- Sentence—Committal to quarter sessions by court of summary jurisdiction. See QUARTER SESSIONS.
- Conditional discharge—Order not to be made if fine also imposed—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), s. 7 (1), s. 13* [R. v. McCLELLAND] 557
- Corrective training—Not to run concurrently with imprisonment—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), s. 21 (1)* [R. v. HERITAGE] 1013
- Notice of previous convictions—Committal for sentence—Service of notice three days before sentence by quarter sessions—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), s. 23 (1)* [R. v. GRANT] 28
- Power of the court to pass consecutive sentences—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), s. 21 (1)* [R. v. ALBURY] 491

CROWN

Soldier bribed by civilian—Right of Crown to receive amount of bribes [READING v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL] 617

CRUELTY

Divorce proceedings, in. See DIVORCE.

CUSTODY

Child. See INFANT.

CUSTOMS

- Harbouring uncustomed goods—Ingredients of offence—Knowledge that goods uncustomed—Intent to defraud—Prima facie case—Goods found on premises of accused—Onus on accused to prove that goods customed or that he did not know duty had not been paid—Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (c. 36), s. 186, s. 259—Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (c. 36), s. 1 (f) [R. v. COHEN] 203
- Illegal export—Goods brought to "quay or other place"—"Other place"—Residence of defendant—Import, Export and Customs Powers (Defence) Act, 1939 (c. 69), s. 3 (1) (b) [ROE v. HEMMINGS] 389

DAMAGE
Special damage— Pleading . See PLEADING .
DAMAGES
Measure of damages— Service pension—Exclusion in assessment [PAYNE v. RAILWAY EXECUTIVE]	1034
DEATH
Of statutory tenant. See RENT RESTRICTION .
DEATH DUTY
See ESTATE DUTY .
DEBT
Gaming debt. See GAMING .
DEED
Consideration— Nominal consideration stated—Admissibility of evidence to show true consideration [TURNER v. FORWOOD]	746
Illegality— Public policy—Divorce—Undertaking by wife petitioner not to take proceedings for child's maintenance [BENNETT v. BENNETT]	1088
DEPENDENT RELATIVE REVOCATION
Doctrine of. See WILL (Revocation) .
DERMATITIS
Contracted through use of synthetic glue— Provision of safe system of working—Protective cream kept in store, but not in workshop—No insistence by foreman on its use [CLIFFORD v. CHARLES H. CHALLEN & SON, LTD.]	72
See also INDUSTRIAL INJURY (Industrial disease).
DESERTION
See DIVORCE .
DISCOVERY
Interrogatory— Libel . See LIBEL .
DIVORCE
Adultery— Proof—Period of gestation—Three hundred and sixty days—Standard of proof—Facts within judicial knowledge [PRESTON-JONES v. PRESTON-JONES]	124
Cruelty— Natural consequence of respondent's acts—Rebuttable presumption—No act of violence—Callous indifference—Reasonable apprehension of danger to health [SIMPSON v. SIMPSON]	955
Desertion— Insanity—Intention to continue desertion—No irrebuttable presumption of inability to form or retain animus deserendi [CROWTHER v. CROWTHER]	1131
Termination— Intercourse on number of occasions with deserting spouse during attempts at reconciliation—Condonation—Deserting spouse's refusal to resume cohabitation—Revival of original desertion [WHITNEY v. WHITNEY]	301
Offer by deserting spouse to resume cohabitation— No expression of repentance—No evidence of violence by deserting against deserted spouse [PRICE v. PRICE]	877
Maintenance— Child—Order for payment of annual sum to be held in trust for children—Power of court to create trust in favour of children—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 193 (1), (3) (added by the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 10 (4)) [YATES (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. STARKEY]	732
Undertaking in deed by wife petitioner not to take proceedings for maintenance— Covenant by husband to pay annuity for child—Illegality of wife's undertaking [BENNETT v. BENNETT]	1088
Undertaking by husband to pay yearly allowance— No application by wife to apply for order for maintenance—Enforcement of undertaking [COMBE v. COMBE]	767
Petition— Petition within three years of marriage—Leave to present—Jurisdiction of commissioner to grant—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 70 (5)—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 1 (1) [AMBLER v. AMBLER]	980
Practice— Notice of intention to proceed—Delay of more than one year in proceeding with petition—Delay in supplying particulars—R.S.C., Ord. 64, r. 13—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1950 (S.I., 1950, No. 1940/L.27), r. 79, r. 80 [BROWNING v. BROWNING]	758
Re-hearing— Jurisdiction of Divisional Court—Application after decree absolute—No error in court of trial—Procedural regularity—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 523/L.9), r. 36 [EDWARDS v. EDWARDS]	63
Security for wife's costs— Matters to be taken into consideration—Means of husband and wife—Reversionary interest of wife realisable for money—Conduct of parties in relation to the litigation—Undue prolongation of proceedings—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1950 (S.I., 1950, No. 1940/L.27), r. 65 (3) [MACLEAN v. MACLEAN]	967
DOG
See ANIMAL .
EDUCATION
Gift for purposes of— Charitable object . See CHARITY .
University— What constitutes [ST. DAVID'S COLLEGE, LAMPETER v. MINISTRY OF EDUCATION]	559
EMERGENCY CERTIFICATE
Legal aid. See LEGAL AID .
EMERGENCY LEGISLATION
Copyright. See COPYRIGHT .
Courts emergency powers— Taking possession of property—Hire-purchase agreement—Car sold by hirer in breach of agreement—Car released by owners to purchaser on payment of amount due under agreement—Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1943 (c. 19), s. 1 (2) (a) (ii) [CHATTERTON v. MACLEAN]	761
Goods— Control of . See CONTROL OF GOODS .
ENFORCEMENT NOTICE
See TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING .
EQUITABLE ASSIGNMENT
Absence of consideration— Validity—Need to be complete and perfect [Re MCARDLE (dec'd.)]	905
ESTATE CONTRACT
Registration as land charge. See LAND CHARGE .

ESTATE DUTY	PAGE
“Chancellor's concession.” See “CHANCELLOR'S CONCESSION.”
Exemption—Government securities—Beneficial ownership of persons neither domiciled no ordinarily resident in United Kingdom—Life tenant under settlement domiciled and ordinarily resident in United Kingdom—Remaindermen domiciled and ordinarily resident outside United Kingdom—Exemption on death of life tenant—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1915 (c. 89), s. 47— Finance (No. 2) Act, 1931 (c. 49), s. 22 (1) [Re SMITH'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS]	146
Incidence—Real property—Option to purchase given by will—Proportion of duty to be borne by purchaser—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 16 (1), (5)—Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), s. 36 (1), (9) [Re LANDER (decd.)]	622
Passing—Property deemed to pass—Money received under policy of assurance—Policy kept up for donee—“Donee”—Interest accruing or arising—Accruing or arising on death of assured— Contemporaneous assignment of policy and other property—Subsequent premiums paid by assignee—Whether policy indirectly purchased or provided by assignor—Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30), s. 2 (1) (c), s. 2 (1) (d)—Finance Act, 1939 (c. 41), s. 30 (1) [Re D'AVIGDOR- GOLDSMID'S LIFE POLICY]	240
Policy of assurance—Premiums paid by trustees of settlement—Death of assured— Cesser of payment premiums—Claim on “slice” of capital to produce premiums— Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30), s. 2 (1) (b), s. 7 (7) [Re BRASSEY'S DEED TRUSTS]	102
ESTOPPEL
Tenancy by—Tenancy agreement entered into by mortgagor before completion of purchase by her of mortgaged property—Mortgage granted to facilitate purchase—Exclusion of mortgagor's power to lease [COVENTRY PERMANENT ECONOMIC BUILDING SOCIETY v. JONES]	901
EVIDENCE
Parol evidence to vary terms of deed [TURNER v. FORWOOD]	746
EXECUTION
Charging order absolute—Shares in private company—Transfers executed by judgment debtor before date of order—Articles of company in regard to transfers not complied with—Shares still registered in name of judgment debtor—Rights of purchasers as against judgment creditor [HAWKS v. MCARTHUR]	22
Garnishee order—Prior assignment of debt—Direction and authority to garnishees to pay to third party all moneys owing by them to judgment debtors—No direct evidence of assignment— Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 136 (1) [CURRAN v. NEWPARK CINEMAS, LTD.]	295
EXPORT
Illegal. See CUSTOMS.
EXPRESS CARRIAGE
See STREET TRAFFIC.
EYES
Protection of—In factory—“Fettingling”—Moulder removing “runners” or “gates” from castings [WILLIAMS v. FALKIRK IRON CO., LTD.]	294
FACTORY
Building operation—Safe means of access—Operation in factory by independent contractor— Duty of occupier—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 26 (1), s. 107 (1), (2)—Factories Act, 1948 (c. 55), s. 14 (4) (a) [WHINCUP v. JOSEPH WOODHEAD & SONS (ENGINEERS), LTD.]	387
Chemist's shop—Staff comprising manager, dispenser, assistants, and porter—Porter alone employed in manual labour—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 151 (1) [JOYCE v. BOOTS CASH CHEMISTS (SOUTHERN), LTD.]	682
“Place” used for purpose other than processes carried on in factory—Use for purpose other than processes for and incidental to main purpose of factory—Maintenance shop “within curtilage forming factory”—Repair of plant used in factory—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 14 (1), s. 151 (6) [THOROGOOD v. VAN DEN BERGHS AND JURGENS, LTD.]	682
Protection of eyes—“Fettingling”—Moulder removing “runners” or “gates” from castings— Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 49—Protection of Eyes Regulations, 1938 (S.R. & O., 1938, No. 654), reg. 1, sched. [WILLIAMS v. FALKIRK IRON CO., LTD.]	294
Safe means of access—Building operation in factory. See Building operation, ante. Movement of injured workman during performance of work—Repair of roof—Removal of iron sheets—Workman's fall through unsafe part of roof while removing sheet—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 26 (1) [DORMAN, LONG & CO., LTD. v. HILLIER]	357
FAIR COMMENT
See LIBEL.
FALSE IMPRISONMENT
Arrest without warrant—Person arrested to be taken before justice or police officer forthwith— No right of detention for purpose of investigation—Need to state reason for arrest—Reasonable steps to be taken in circumstances [TIMS v. JOHN LEWIS & CO., LTD.]	814
FAMILY
Tenants', member of. See RENT RESTRICTION (Death of tenant).
FAMILY PROVISION
Evidence—Intention of testator—Statement, not in writing, made by testator to deponent— Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938 (c. 45), s. 1 (7) [Re SMALLWOOD (decd.)]	372
“FETTLING”
See FACTORY (Protection of eyes).
FINE
Conditional discharge—Order not to be made if fine imposed [R. v. McCLELLAND]	557
FIRE BRIGADE
Provision of—Charitable purpose—Benefit to community [Re WOKINGHAM FIRE BRIGADE TRUSTS]	454
FOOD AND DRUGS
Analyst's certificate—Added water in milk—Statement of opinion—Admission of certificate in evidence—Food and Drugs Act, 1938 (c. 56), s. 81 (1)—Public Analysts Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 840), reg. 4 [McCULLOCH v. HANNAM]	402
Proceedings against third party—“Act or default” of wholesaler—Need to prove mens rea or negligence—Food and Drugs Act, 1938 (c. 56), s. 83 (3) [LAMB v. SUNDERLAND AND DISTRICT CREAMERY, LTD.]	923

FOREIGN COURT

- Order for custody of infant—Variation by British court—Welfare of infant paramount consideration [MCKEE v. MCKEE] 942

FORFEITURE

- Clause in settlement. See SETTLEMENT.
Lease. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

GAMES

- Cricket—Negligence—Injury from ball hit into highway—[BOLTON v. STONE] 1078

GAMING

- Debt—Recovery of money alleged to be won on a wager—New contract—Undertaking to pay by father of loser—Promise by bookmaker not to report to Tattersalls committee—Enforceability of agreement—Consideration—Undertaking not security for gaming liability—Gaming Act, 1710 (c. 19), s. 1—Gaming Act, 1845 (c. 109), s. 18 [CORAL v. KLEYMAN] 518

GARNISHEE ORDER

- See* EXECUTION.

GAS

- Nationalisation—Financial adjustment—Power of local authority to apply surplus revenue in aid of general rate—Unappropriated profit of working period up to vesting date—Liability of area gas board to remit—Hinckley Local Board Gas Act, 1880 (c. clvii), s. 43, as amended by Hinckley Gas Order, 1922 (S.R. & O., 1922, No. 608)—Interpretation Act, 1889 (c. 63), s. 38 (2) (c)—Gas Act, 1948 (c. 67), s. 56 (2) [HINCKLEY URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. WEST MIDLANDS GAS BOARD] 160, 788

GOOGLES

- Need to provide for garage worker—Workman's special risk of injury [PARIS v. STEPNEY BOROUGH COUNCIL] 42

GOODS

- Carriage of. See CARRIAGE OF GOODS.
Control of. See CONTROL OF GOODS.
Sale of. See SALE OF GOODS.

GROSS INDECENCY

- See* CRIMINAL LAW.

GUARANTEE

- Hire-purchase agreement—Indemnity against loss sustained through default or breach by hirer—Repudiation of agreement by hirer—Motor car sold in breach of agreement—Acceptance of repudiation by owners—Effect on liability of guarantor [CHATTERTON v. MACLEAN] 761

HARBOURING UNCUSTOMED GOODS

- See* CUSTOMS.

HIRE-PURCHASE

- Courts emergency powers—Taking possession of property—Car sold by hirer in breach of agreement—Car released by owners to purchaser on payment of amount due under agreement [CHATTERTON v. MACLEAN] 761

- Guarantee for performance of agreement by hirer—Indemnity against loss sustained through default or breach by hirer—Repudiation of agreement by hirer—Motor-car sold in breach of agreement—Acceptance of repudiation by owners—Effect on liability of guarantor [CHATTERTON v. MACLEAN] 761

HOME OF REST

- For nurses of specified institution—Charitable object [Re WHITE'S WILL TRUSTS] 528

HOSPITAL

- Bequest to. See NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE; WILL.
Legacy to found a cot—"Found" [Re GINGER (dec'd.)] 422
Medical school—Gift to. See WILL (Gift to medical school).
National Health Service, under. See NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE.
Negligence—Liability for negligence of members of staff—Medical practitioner employed by hospital under contract of service—House surgeon [CASSIDY v. MINISTRY OF HEALTH (FAHRNI, THIRD PARTY)] 574

HUSBAND

- Liability for wife's income tax—Private company—Undistributed income—[INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. BARCLAY'S BANK, LTD.] 1

HUSBAND AND WIFE

- Maintenance—Application to High Court—"Reasonable maintenance"—Tests of reasonableness—Husband's common law liability—Previous standard of living—Absence of security or certainty of continuance of existing allowance—Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949 (c. 100), s. 5 (1) [SCOTT v. SCOTT] 216
Wilful neglect to maintain—Deed of separation—Covenant by husband for periodical payments—No default in payments—Improvement in husband's financial position—Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949 (c. 100), s. 5 (1) [TULIP v. TULIP] 563 Reasonable belief in wife's adultery—Dismissal of petition for divorce based on this belief—Continued validity of this defence to claim maintenance [ALLEN v. ALLEN] 724
Title to property—Investments made of moneys from common fund [JONES v. MAYNARD] 802

ILLEGALITY

- Enforcement of illegal contract. See CONTRACT (Illegality).

INCOME TAX

- Reliefs—Children's allowance—Maintenance order—Order providing for payment of annual sum to be held in trust for children—Treatment as husband's income of sums paid—"Settlement"—"Settlor"—Finance Act, 1936 (c. 34), s. 21 (1), (9) (b), (c) [YATES v. STARKEY] 732
Sched. D—Relief in respect of losses—Set-off against profits—Excess rent of immediate lessor—"Profits"—Leasehold properties sub-let at rents exceeding head rents and net annual values—Other properties sub-let at rents below head rents or not sub-let—Finance Act, 1927 (c. 10), s. 27 (1)—Finance Act, 1940 (c. 29), s. 15 (1) [LITTMAN v. BARRON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES)] 701

INDUSTRIAL DISEASE

See INDUSTRIAL INJURY.

INDUSTRIAL INJURY

Industrial disease—Dermatitis—Attack before July 5, 1948—Recurrence after that date—Right of workman to workmen's compensation—National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) Act, 1946 (c. 62), s. 55 (1), s. 89 (1), proviso (a) [HALES v. BOLTON LEATHERS, LTD.] 643

INFANT

Custody—Previous order of foreign court—Variation of order—Welfare of infant paramount consideration [MCKEE v. MCKEE] 942

[RE B.'S SETTLEMENT] 949

Maintenance—Application to vary order—Reference to High Court—Competency—Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925 (c. 45), s. 7 (3) [RE L. (Infants)] 912

Education or training—Continuance of order after sixteen—Matters to be considered—Interests of child—Means of parties—Married Women (Maintenance) Act, 1949 (c. 99), s. 2 (2) [NOWELL v. NOWELL] 474

INN

Loss of guest's property—Theft of motor car from car park of inn—Need to prove guest a "traveller"—"Traveller"—Resident in neighbourhood—Car park within hospitium of inn—Notice relieving innkeeper of liability [WILLIAMS v. LINNITT] 278

INSANITY

Desertion—As affecting animus deserendi. See DIVORCE (Desertion—Insanity).

INSURANCE

Accident insurance—Exclusion of personal injuries sustained by insured if over the age of sixty-five years—"Personal injuries"—Insured aged sixty-five years, seven months [LLOYDS BANK, LTD. v. EAGLE STAR INSURANCE CO., LTD.] 914

Life assurance—Estate duty on money received under policy. See ESTATE DUTY (Passing)

Motor insurance. See STREET TRAFFIC.

National insurance. See NATIONAL INSURANCE.

INTENTION TO PROCEED

Notice of, in matrimonial cause [BROWNING v. BROWNING] 758

INTEREST

Sale of land—Interest on purchase price—Purchaser in possession before completion—Failure to complete—Payment of purchase money into court—Liability of purchaser to pay interest from date of lodgment until completion [PEARLBERG v. MAY] 1001

INTESTACY

Intestate tenant—Notice to quit—Issue before grant of letters of administration—No service on President of Probate Division—Service on persons in occupation—Notice addressed to tenant's "executors . . . and to all others whom it may concern"—Grant of letters of administration before date of operation of notice to quit [HARROWBY (EARL) v. SNELSON] 140

INTOXICATING LIQUOR

Offences—Consumption after permitted hours—Aiding and abetting—Knowledge of offence by licensee's servants—No knowledge in licensee—Liability of licensee—Licensing Act, 1921 (c. 42), s. 4 (b) [FERGUSON v. WEAVING] 412

INVITEE

Bailment of goods with invitor—Goods on invitor's premises [TINSLEY v. DUDLEY] 252

JUDGMENT

Tender—Claim for £149—£106 paid into court—£136 awarded to plaintiff—Amount for which judgment should be given—Costs [READ'S TRUSTEE IN BANKRUPTCY v. SMITH (PORTMAN BUILDING SOCIETY, THIRD PARTY)] 406

JUSTICES

Appeal from. See QUARTER SESSIONS.

Committal to quarter sessions for sentence. See QUARTER SESSIONS.

Cruelty. See DIVORCE (Cruelty).

LAND

Building. See BUILDING LAND.

Registration. See REGISTRATION OF LAND.

Requisition. See REQUISITION.

Sale. See SALE OF LAND.

LAND CHARGE

Registration—Estate contract—Tenancy agreement—Effect on subsequent mortgagees—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 199 (1) [COVENTRY PERMANENT ECONOMIC BUILDING SOCIETY v. JONES] 901

LANDLORD AND TENANT

Attornment clause in mortgage—Creation of relationship [PORTMAN BUILDING SOCIETY v. YOUNG] 191

Intestate tenant—Notice to quit—Issue before grant of letters of administration—No service on President of Probate Division—Service on persons in occupation—Notice addressed to "tenant's executors . . . and to all others whom it may concern"—Grant of letters of administration before date of operation of notice to quit [HARROWBY (EARL) v. SNELSON] 140

Lease—Assignment—Covenant not to assign without consent—Provision for circumstances in which refusal not to be deemed unreasonable—Validity—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 19 (1) [RE SMITH'S LEASE] 346

Forfeiture—Waiver—Breach of covenant—Covenants against underletting without consent and against user otherwise than as private dwelling-house—Unlawful underletting—Acceptance by landlord of rent—Waiver of forfeiture for breach of covenant as to user [DOWNIE v. TURNER] 416

Right to re-enter—Land required for "building sites or planting or other purposes"—Ejusdem generis rule—Right to re-enter for purpose of building sports stadium [COATES v. DIMENT] 890

New lease—Interim order—Application by tenant—Undertaking by landlord not to dispossess tenant during proceedings for new lease—Right of tenant to interim order—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 5 (1), (13) [BRITISH AND COLONIAL FURNITURE CO., LTD. v. WILLIAM MCILROY, LTD.] 404

LANDLORD AND TENANT—continued.

Recovery of possession—County court action—Jurisdiction to postpone execution of order [JONES v. SAVERY] 820

LARCENY

See generally CRIMINAL LAW.

LEASE

See LANDLORD AND TENANT.
Assignment. See SALE OF LAND (Lease).

LEGACY

See ADMINISTRATION OF ESTATES.
Construction. See WILL.

LEGAL AID

Certificate—Issue more than three months after grant of emergency certificate—Validity—Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1950 (S.I., 1950, No. 1359), reg. 10 (9), reg. 12 (1), reg. 15 (9)—R.S.C., Ord. 64, r. 7 [GREENWOOD v. SKETCHER] 750

Costs—Assisted person—Right to costs when successful—Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949 (c. 51), s. 1 (7) (b) [DALEY v. DIGGERS, LTD.] 116

Security for costs—Plaintiff not "assisted person" when order first made—Subsequent grant of emergency certificate—Effect on order—Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949 (c. 51), s. 12 (2) (b) (ii) [CONWAY v. GEORGE WIMPEY & Co., LTD.] 56

LEGITIMATION

Legitimation per subsequens matrimonium—Child born before annulment of mother's first marriage for incapacity—Legitimacy Act, 1926 (c. 60), s. 1 (2)—Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949 (c. 100), s. 4 (1) [Re ADAMS (dec'd.)] 1037

LIBEL

Fair comment—Article criticising conduct of newspaper—Need for facts on which comment made to be stated in alleged libel [KEMSLEY v. FOOT] 331

Interrogatory—Fair comment—Malice—Interrogatories as to defendants' sources of information or grounds of belief—R.S.C., Ord. 31, r. 1A [ADAMS v. SUNDAY PICTORIAL NEWSPAPERS (1920), LTD.] 865

LICENCE

Building. See BUILDING CONTROL.
Motor vehicle. See STREET TRAFFIC.
Street trading. See STREET TRADING.

LICENSED PREMISES

Loss of customer's property—Motor bicycle stolen from covered yard, marked "garage," adjoining and forming part of premises [TINSLEY v. DUDLEY] 252

Theft of car from car park—Need to prove guest a "traveller"—"Traveller"—Resident in neighbourhood—Car park within hospitium of inn—Notice seeking to relieve innkeeper of liability [WILLIAMS v. LINNITT] 278

LICENSEE

Bailment of goods with licensor—Goods on licensor's premises [TINSLEY v. DUDLEY] 252

Of licensed premises—Aiding and abetting licensing offence—Consumption of liquor after permitted hours—Knowledge of licensee's servants—No knowledge in licensee [FERGUSON v. WEAVING] 412

LIEN

Maritime. See SHIPPING.

LIFE ASSURANCE

See INSURANCE.

LIGHTING

Of motor vehicle. See STREET TRAFFIC (Motor vehicle).

LIMITATION OF ACTION

Public authority. See PUBLIC AUTHORITY.

LOCAL AUTHORITY

House of—Sub-lease—Protection of sub-tenant under Rent Restrictions Acts [PERCY G. MOORE, LTD. v. STRETCH] 223

LOCAL GOVERNMENT

Superannuation—Increase of pension under Pensions (Increase) Act, 1944. See PENSION.

LOCAL VALUATION COURT

See RATES.

MAINTENANCE

Child. See DIVORCE.
Infant. See INFANT.
Wife. See DIVORCE; HUSBAND AND WIFE.

MARITIME LIEN

See SHIPPING.

MASTER AND SERVANT

Contract of service—Implied term—Performance of statutory duty—Servant not required to perform illegal act—Permitting vehicle to be used on road without policy of insurance in force—Accident caused by servant's negligence—Liability of employer for damages—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 35 (1) [GREGORY v. FORD] 121

Duty of master—Provision of safe system of working—Dermatitis contracted through use of synthetic glue—Protective cream kept in store, but not in workshop—No insistence by foreman on its use [CLIFFORD v. CHARLES H. CHALLEN & SON, LTD.] 72

Liability of master—Negligence of servant—Accident to unauthorised passenger in lorry—Extent of duty to take care [CONWAY v. GEORGE WIMPEY & Co., LTD.] 363

Reasonable foreseeability of injury to servant—Intermediation of act of inadvertence by employee [THOROGOOD v. VAN DEN BERGHES AND JURGENS, LTD.] 682

MASTER AND SERVANT	PAGE
Liability of master— continued .
Workman's special risk of injury—Garage fitter—Need to provide goggles—Workman with only one eye—Injury to other eye [PARIS v. STEPNEY BOROUGH COUNCIL]	42
Profits obtained by a servant dishonestly by virtue of employment— Right of master to profits—Soldier—Bribes by civilian—Right of Crown thereto [READING v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL] ..	617
Remuneration— Commission—Right to commission on orders obtained by servant before, but executed after, termination of contract of employment—Sale of advertising space [SELLERS v. LONDON COUNTIES NEWSPAPERS]	544
Wages. See WAGES.
MEASURE OF DAMAGES
See DAMAGES
MEDICAL REPORT
Agreed report— Change of opinion by doctor—Evidence to modify report—Admissibility on appeal [PURSELL v. RAILWAY EXECUTIVE]	536
MEDICAL SCHOOL
Gift to. See WILL (Gift to medical school).
MEMORANDUM
Contract for sale of land, of. See SALE OF LAND (Contract).
MILK
Adulteration. See FOOD AND DRUGS.
MINE
Coal mine— Shot-firing—Breach of statutory duty by shot-firer—Liability of mine owner, manager and under-manager—General Regulations, 1913 (S.R. & O., 1913, No. 748), reg. 1, made under Coal Mines Act, 1911 (c. 50), s. 86 (1)—Explosives in Coal Mines Order, 1934 (S.R. & O., 1934, No. 6), cl. 2 (e), cl. 2 (h) [HARRISON v. NATIONAL COAL BOARD]	1102
MONEYLENDER
Enforcement of security— Loan secured by second mortgage—Sale of mortgaged property by first mortgagee—Claim by moneylender of surplus proceeds—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 105—Moneylenders Act, 1927 (c. 21), s. 13 (1) [Re MARTIN'S MORTGAGE TRUSTS] ..	1053
MORTGAGE
Attornment clause— Creation of relationship of landlord and tenant—Application of Rent Restrictions Acts [PORTMAN BUILDING SOCIETY v. YOUNG]	191
Power of leasing— Tenancy by estoppel—Tenancy agreement entered into by mortgagor before completion of purchase by her of mortgaged property—Mortgage granted to facilitate purchase—Exclusion of mortgagor's power of leasing [COVENTRY PERMANENT ECONOMIC BUILDING SOCIETY v. JONES]	901
Sale— Application of proceeds—Claim by moneylender as second mortgagee—Claim against mortgagor statute-barred—"Person entitled to the mortgaged property"—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 105—Moneylenders Act, 1927 (c. 21), s. 13 (1) [Re MARTIN'S MORTGAGE TRUSTS]	1053
MOTOR VEHICLE
See STREET TRAFFIC.
MUSIC-HALL ARTIST
See THEATRES AND ENTERTAINMENTS.
NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE
Compensation for loss of employment— Clerk to hospital board—Also clerk to local authority—Consideration of service with local authority—National Health Service (Transfer of Officers and Compensation) Regulations, 1948 (S.I., 1948, No. 1475), reg. 2 [R. v. NORTHUMBERLAND COMPENSATION APPEAL TRIBUNAL. Ex parte SHAW]	268
Hospital— Legacy to hospital—Continuance of work of hospital after National Health Service Act, 1946—Payment of legacy to body administering hospital under Act [Re MEYERS (dec'd.)]	538
Destruction of object—Vesting of hospital in Minister of Health after death of testator, but before legacy paid over [Re HUNTER (dec'd.)]	58
"Specific purpose of hospital"—Payment to board of governors—Gift to infirmary "for the purposes of a home of rest for the nurses"—National Health Service Act, 1946 (c. 81), s. 60 (1) (2) [Re WHITE'S WILL TRUSTS]	528
NATIONAL INSURANCE
Contributions— Agreement by employer to pay—Inclusion in wages—Maritime lien [THE GEE-WHIZ]	876
Recovery—Debt due to Crown—Arrears payable under National Health Insurance Act, 1936—National Insurance Act, 1946 (c. 67), s. 54 (1), s. 66 (1) (a) [MINISTRY OF NATIONAL INSURANCE v. BARRS]	532
"Self-employed person"— Music-hall artist—National Insurance Act, 1946 (c. 67), s. 1 (2) (a) (b) [GOULD v. MINISTER OF NATIONAL INSURANCE]	368
Stamp— Possession of fictitious stamp—"Lawful excuse"—Purchase in good faith from person not authorised to sell [WINKLE v. WILTSHIRE]	479
NATIONALISATION
Coal industry. See COAL.
Company— Reduction of capital—Possibility of nationalisation of company [Ex parte WEST-BURN SUGAR REFINERIES, LTD.]	881
Gas industry. See GAS.
NEGLIGENCE
Accountant— Preparation of company's accounts—Knowledge that accounts to be shown to prospective investor in company—Liability of accountants to investor [CANDLER v. CRANE CHRISTMAS & CO.]	426
Bailee— Clause in document excepting liability "for any damage howsoever arising" to bailed article—Innocent misrepresentation as to extent of exception clause—Exclusion of exception—Cleaner and dyer—Damage to garment [CURTIS v. CHEMICAL CLEANING & DYEING CO., LTD.] ..	631
Building in course of construction— Liability of contractor and sub-contractor—Scaffolding erected by main contractor—Omission to provide guard-rail—Accident to workman employed by sub-contractor—Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.I., 1948, No. 1146), regs. 5, 24, 31 [PRATT v. RICHARDS]	90

NEGLIGENCE—*continued.*Hospital. See HOSPITAL.

Licensed premises—Loss of customer's property—Motor bicycle stolen from covered yard, marked "garage," adjoining and forming part of premises [TINSLEY v. DUDLEY] .. . 252

Theft of car from car park of inn—Need to prove guest a "traveller"—"Traveller"—Resident in neighbourhood—Car park within hospitium of inn—Notice seeking to relieve innkeeper of liability [WILLIAMS v. LINNITT] .. . 278

Master and servant. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

Sport—Cricket—Injury from ball hit from ground into highway [BOLTON v. STONE] .. . 1078

NEW LEASE

Under Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927. See LANDLORD AND TENANT (New lease).

NIGHT

Offences committed by night. See CRIMINAL LAW.

NOTICE TO QUIT

See RENT CONTROL.Agricultural holding. See AGRICULTURE.

NULLITY

Legitimacy of child of voidable marriage—Child born before annulment of mother's first marriage—Effect of Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949 (c. 100), s. 4 (1) [Re ADAMS (decd.)] .. . 1037

Pleading—Petition by husband on ground of wife's impotence—Cross-charge of desertion—Need to file cross-petition—Inclusion in same document as answer [PICKETT v. PICKETT (otherwise MOSS)] .. . 614

OMNIBUS

Service. See STREET TRAFFIC.

PARTIES

To action. See PRACTICE.

PENSION

Increase—Pension "payable by local authority solely in respect of local government service"—Transfer of servant to transport board—Continuance as member of pension fund of local authority—"Enactment by which fund regulated"—London Passenger Transport Act, 1933 (c. 14), s. 80 (9)—Pensions (Increase) Act, 1944 (c. 21), sched. I, Part II, para. 1 [ABBOTT v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL] .. . 569

PERMITTED HOURS

Consumption of liquor. See INTOXICATING LIQUOR.

PETITION

Divorce. See DIVORCE.

PLEADING

Damage—Special damage—Breach of contract—Sale of goods—Goods supplied alleged to be valueless—Full purchase price claimed—Alternative claim where goods not valueless, but depreciated [ANGLO-CYPRIAN TRADE AGENCIES, LTD. v. PAPHOS WINE INDUSTRIES, LTD.] .. . 873

POLICE

Acquisition of land for police purposes—Duty of county council [WILTSHIRE STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE v. WILTSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL] .. . 1041

POSSESSION

Of demised property. See COUNTY COURT; LANDLORD AND TENANT; RENT RESTRICTION.

POVERTY

Relief of. See CHARITY (Relief of poverty).

PRACTICE

Appeal—Question of fact—Disagreement with tribunal which heard witnesses [SIMPSON v. SIMPSON] .. . 955

Parties—Striking out party—Action instituted without proper authority—Ratification on behalf of plaintiff—Action in name of company without authority—Liquidation of company—Adoption of proceedings by liquidator [DANISH MERCANTILE CO., LTD. v. BEAUMONT] .. . 925

PREMIUM

Condition of grant, etc., of tenancy. See RENT CONTROL (Premium).

PRIVATE COMPANY

See COMPANY; SURTAX.

PROFITS TAX

Computation of profits—Deduction of directors' remuneration—"Controlling interest" of directors—Shares registered in name of custodian trustee—Finance Act, 1937 (c. 54), sched. IV, para. 11 [INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. SILVERTS, LTD.] .. . 703

PROMISE

Enforcement—Undertaking by divorced husband to pay allowance to wife—No request that wife should abstain from applying for maintenance [COMBE v. COMBE] .. . 767

PROPERTY

After-acquired—Covenant to settle. See SETTLEMENT.

PUBLIC AUTHORITY

Limitation of action—Writ issued within period of limitation—Defect in endorsement—Service with statement of claim after expiration of period—Defect in writ cured by statement of claim—Competency of action—Limitation Act, 1939 (c. 21), s. 21 (1) [HILL v. LUTON CORPORATION] .. . 1023

PUBLIC POLICY

Deed—Covenant contrary to public policy. See DEED (Illegality).

PURCHASE TAX

Double tax—Relief—Tax chargeable on appropriation of goods by wholesaler—Tax paid on previous occasion on purchase by vendor to wholesaler—Finance Act, 1944 (c. 23), s. 15 (1) [COMMISSIONERS OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE v. RENSOP DRAPERS, LTD.] .. . 450

QUARTER SESSIONS

Appeal—Appeal from justices—Sentence—"Order made on conviction"—Order that defendant should enter into recognisance—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), s. 36 (2) [R. v. LONDON SESSIONS APPEAL COMMITTEE. Ex parte BEAUMONT] .. . 232 Appeal—continued.

"Order made on conviction"—Committal for sentence—Appeal against committal—Competency—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), s. 36 (2) [R. v. LONDON SESSIONS APPEAL COMMITTEE. Ex parte ROGERS]	343
Street trading—Licence—Appeal by borough council against decision of court of summary jurisdiction varying decision of council to cancel licence [R. v. LONDON SESSIONS APPEAL COMMITTEE. Ex parte WESTMINSTER CITY COUNCIL]	1032
Committal to, for sentence by court of summary jurisdiction—"Character and antecedents"—Not confined to previous convictions—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), s. 29 (1) [R. v. VALLETT]	231
Identification of prisoner—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), s. 29 (1) [R. v. BARKER]	479

RATES

Local valuation court—Withdrawal of objection to proposal to alter valuation list—Valuation court not entitled to proceed with hearing of appeal—Local Government Act, 1948 (c. 26), s. 41 (6) [R. v. EAST NORFOLK LOCAL VALUATION COURT. Ex parte MARTIN]	743
---	-----

RATIFICATION

Solicitor's act in starting action without authority—Adoption of proceedings by or on behalf of plaintiff [DANISH MERCANTILE CO., LTD. v. BEAUMONT]	925
---	-----

REASONABLE RENT

Application for. See RENT CONTROL (Reasonable rent).

RECTIFICATION

Lease. See SALE OF LAND (Lease—Assignment).

REDUCTION OF CAPITAL

See COMPANY.

REGISTRATION

Land charge. See LAND CHARGE.

REGISTRATION OF LAND

Rectification of register—Land erroneously included in registered title of adjoining land—Contribution to mistake by registered proprietor—"Void" disposition—Land Registration Act, 1925 (c. 21), s. 82 (3) (a), (b) [Re 139 HIGH STREET, DEPTFORD]	950
--	-----

RENT CONTROL

Notice to quit—Notice given after tenancy referred to tribunal—Validity and effect—Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946 (c. 34), s. 5 [ALEXANDER v. SPRINGATE]	351
Premium—Payment by tenants to builders for conversion of dwelling-houses into flats—Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (c. 40), s. 2 (1), s. 18 (2), sched. 1, Part I, para. 1 [R. v. BIRMINGHAM (WEST) RENT TRIBUNAL. Ex parte EDGBASTON INVESTMENT TRUST, LTD.]	198
Requirement of payment as condition of continuance of lease—Proviso for re-entry on breach of any of tenant's covenants—Agreement in 1948 to pay premium for grant of fourteen years' lease—Premium payable by instalments over ten years—First annual instalment of premium falling due after June 2, 1949—Demand for payment of instalment—Instalments of premium not additional rent—Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (c. 40), s. 2 (1) [REGOR ESTATES, LTD. v. WRIGHT]	219
Reasonable rent—Withdrawal of application—Jurisdiction of tribunal to proceed with hearing—Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (c. 40), s. 1 (1) [R. v. HAMPSTEAD AND ST. PANCRAS RENT TRIBUNAL. Ex parte GOODMAN]	170
Reduction of rent—House converted into flats—Flat first rated as separate hereditament at £80—No apportionment of assessment of dwelling-house—Jurisdiction of tribunal—Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (c. 40), s. 1 (1) [R. v. SIDMOUTH RENT TRIBUNAL. Ex parte SELLEK]	107
Rent tribunal—Jurisdiction—Determination of collateral question on which jurisdiction depends—Existence of tenancy at time of reference—Review of decision—Certiorari—Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946 (c. 34), s. 2 (1) (2) [R. v. CITY OF LONDON, ETC., RENT TRIBUNAL. Ex parte HONIG]	195
Determination of question on which jurisdiction depends—Unfurnished letting—Document signed by tenant describing letting as furnished alleged to be a sham—Proceedings before tribunal—Admissibility in evidence of unstamped document—Certiorari—Review of tribunal's decision—Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (c. 40), s. 1 (1) [R. v. FULHAM, HAMMERSMITH AND KENSINGTON RENT TRIBUNAL. Ex parte ZEREK]	482
Proceedings before tribunal—Refusal to admit in evidence unstamped document [R. v. FULHAM, HAMMERSMITH AND KENSINGTON RENT TRIBUNAL. Ex parte ZEREK]	482

RENT RESTRICTION

Alternative accommodation—"Suitable to the needs of the tenant and his family"—"Family"—Exclusion of housekeeper and her husband and child—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 3 (3) (ii) [DARNELL v. MILLWOOD]	88
Assignment without consent of landlord—Assignment by contractual tenant—Need for prohibition in tenancy agreement against sub-letting—Right of landlords to damages for failure of tenant to deliver up premises at end of term—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 3 (1), sched. 1 (d) [REGIONAL PROPERTIES, LTD. v. FRANKENSCHWERTH]	178
Death of tenant—Claim by daughter to remain in possession—Contractual tenancy—Premises let below standard rent—Increase of rent demanded by landlord and paid by tenant—No notice of increase served—Increase to a figure still below standard rent—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 3 (2), s. 12 (1) (g) [MILLS v. BRYCE]	111
"Member of tenant's family"—First cousins—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (1) (g) [LANGDON v. HORTON]	60
"Where tenant leaves no widow"—Implication of residence with tenant at time of his death—"Member of tenant's family"—Woman living in adultery with tenant—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (1) (g) [TINKHAM v. PERRY]	249
Dwelling-house owned by local authority—Protection of sub-tenant—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), s. 3 (2) (c) [PERCY G. MOORE, LTD. v. STRETCH]	223
Mortgage—Attornment clause—Creation of relationship of landlord and tenant—Application of Rent Restrictions Acts [PORTMAN BUILDING SOCIETY v. YOUNG]	191

RENT RESTRICTION—continued.

“Obligation of the tenancy”— Undertaking by tenant to remain in employment of third party—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), sched. I, para. (a) [R.M.R. HOUSING SOCIETY, LTD. v. COMBS]	16
Possession—Reasonableness—Discretion of judge—Matters for consideration—Interests of parties concerned—Public policy—Landlord’s only motive financial gain—Landlord offering, as “suitable alternative accommodation,” new house at higher rent, so as to sell old house at greater profit— Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 3 (1) [CRESSWELL v. HODGSON]	710
Shop and dwelling-house let together—Subsequently let separately to same tenant under two leases— Application of Rent Acts to shop—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), s. 3 (3) [CUMBE v. ROBINSON]	661
Standard rent—House first let furnished—Purchase of furniture by tenant during occupation—Subsequent letting unfurnished—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (1) (as amended by Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), sched. I) [STAGG v. BRICKETT]	152
Premises originally let for business purposes—Change of user—Knowledge of landlord’s rent collector—Implication of landlord’s consent—Later letting at higher rent—Determination of standard rent under Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 6—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (1) (a) [COURT v. ROBINSON]	209
Sub-tenancy—Exclusive use of part of flat—Kitchen shared with tenant—Order for possession against tenant—Landlord’s right to possession against sub-tenant—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 15 (3)—Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (c. 40), s. 8 (1) [STANLEY v. COMPTON]	859
RENTCHARGE
Improvement—“Redemption”—Payment by tenant for life under settlement of periodical instalments representing capital and interest—Right to recoupment out of capital [Re SANDBACH (decd.)]	971
REQUISITION
Land—Use by competent authority—Cutting of trees—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927), reg. 51 (2) [DEMETRIADES v. GLASGOW CORPN.]	457
REVOCATION Will. See WILL.
SAFE MEANS OF ACCESS
See FACTORY.
SAFE SYSTEM OF WORKING
See MASTER AND SERVANT.
SALE OF GOODS
Damage—Special damage—Pleading [ANGLO-CYPRIAN TRADE AGENCIES, LTD. v. PAPHOS WINE INDUSTRIES, LTD.]	873
Non-delivery—Dealer to use his “best endeavours to secure delivery” within reasonable time or by specified date—Conditions in regard to sale by dealer imposed by manufacturer after date of contract between dealer and customer—Customer required to enter into covenant against re-sale—Refusal by customer to enter into covenant—Refusal by manufacturer to deliver car to dealer for appropriation to customer—Liability of dealer [MONKLAND v. JACK BARCLAY, LTD.]	714
SALE OF LAND
Contract—Memorandum—Signature of party to be charged—Sale by public auction—Agreement signed only by purchaser—Vendor’s name and initials inserted at head of agreement by auctioneer before auction—Admissibility of evidence of intention of parties that document should be final written record of contract—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 40 (1) [LEEMAN v. STOCKS]	1043
Interest on purchase price—Purchaser in possession before completion—Failure to complete—Payment of purchase money into court—Liability of purchaser to pay interest from date of lodgment until completion [PEARLBERG v. MAY]	1001
Lease—Assignment—Conveyance by assignors as “beneficial owners”—Implied covenants that lease not void or voidable and that all covenants performed up to time of conveyance—Covenant to repair not performed—Condition of sale that property taken with full notice of state of repair—Liability of assignors—Rectification of lease—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 76 (1) (b), sched. II, Part II [BUTLER v. MOUNTVIEW ESTATES, LTD.]	693
SALVAGE
See SHIPPING.
SCAFFOLD
Provision of guard rail [PRATT v. RICHARDS]	90
SECURITY
For gaming liability. See GAMING.
SECURITY FOR COSTS
See COSTS.
Divorce. See DIVORCE.
SENTENCE
See CRIMINAL LAW; QUARTER SESSIONS SERVANT
See MASTER AND SERVANT.
SET-OFF
Costs. See COSTS.
SETTLED LAND
Improvement rentcharge—“Redemption”—Tithes annuity—“Discharge”—Payment by tenant for life of periodical instalments under rentcharge, representing capital and interest, and of annuities—Right to recoupment, in respect of such part of payments as represented capital, out of capital moneys subject to settlement—Settled Land Act, 1925 (c. 18), s. 73 (1) (xiii), (xvi) [Re SANDBACH (decd.)]	971

SETTLEMENT	PAGE
After-acquired property—Covenant to settle on trusts of a will—Covenantor acquiring absolute interest (i) under the settlement and (ii) under the will—Application of covenant [Re ROGERS' SETTLEMENT]	236
Capital or income—Shares in limited company—Payments to shareholders out of share premium account—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 56 (1), (2), (3) [Re DUFF'S SETTLEMENTS TRUSTS]	869
Forfeiture—Express advancement clause—Consent to advancement [Re SHAW'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS; Re WISELY'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS]	656
Surtax. See SURTAX (Settlement).
Variation. See VARIATION OF SETTLEMENT.
SHARE
Legacy of shares—Shares forming part of testator's estate—Right of legatee to dividends declared before satisfaction of legacy [Re HALL (decd.)]	1073
Private company—Charging order on shares standing in name of judgment debtor—Transfers executed before date of judgment—Consideration for sale—Articles of company in regard to transfers not complied with—Rights of purchasers as against judgment creditor [HAWKS v. MCARTHUR]	22
SHARE PREMIUM ACCOUNT
See COMPANY.
SHIPPING
Maritime lien—Wages and disbursements—National insurance contributions—Agreement by employer to pay—Inclusion in wages [THE GEE-WHIZ]	876
Salvage—Right to recover—Salving vessel and colliding vessel under control of different departments of Crown—Circuity of action [THE SUSAN V. LUCKENBACH]	753
SHOT FIRING
Coal mine, in—Safety regulations. See MINE (Coal mine).
SOLDIER
Bribes by civilian—Right of Crown to recover amount of bribes [READING v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL]	617
SOLICITOR
Authority—Action begun without authority—Ratification by or on behalf of plaintiff [DANISH MERCANTILE CO., LTD. v. BEAUMONT]	925
SPECIAL DAMAGE
Pleading. See PLEADING.
SPECIAL OCCASION
Exempting motor vehicle from need for road service licence. See STREET TRAFFIC (Stage carriage).
STAGE CARRIAGE
See STREET TRAFFIC.
STAMP
Possession of fictitious stamp—National insurance stamp—"Lawful excuse"—Purchase in good faith from person not authorised to sell—Post Office Act, 1908 (c. 48), s. 65 (1) (b) (as applied by National Insurance and Industrial Injuries (Stamps) Regulations, 1948 (S.I., 1948, No. 1443), reg. 1) [WINKLE v. WILTSHIRE]	479
STANDARD RENT
See RENT RESTRICTION.
STATUTORY DUTY
Performance by master—Implied term in contract of service—Insurance of motor vehicle—Accident caused by servant's negligence—Liability of employer for damages [GREGORY v. FORD]	121
STATUTORY TRIBUNAL
Certiorari to quash decision—Error on face of order. See CERTIORARI.
STAY OF PROCEEDINGS
Arbitration clause in contract. See ARBITRATION.
STRAYING
Of animals. See ANIMAL.
STREET TRADING
Licence—Cancellation—Reversal of council's decision by magistrate—Right of council to appeal to quarter sessions—"Person aggrieved"—London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1947 (c. xlv), s. 64 [R. v. LONDON SESSIONS APPEAL COMMITTEE. Ex parte WESTMINSTER CITY COUNCIL]	1032
STREET TRAFFIC
"Articulated Vehicle"—Breakdown vehicle towing lorry—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 17 (2)—Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 670), reg. 3 [HUNTER v. TOWERS]	349
Built up area—Road with no lighting by lamps—Speed limit signs erected by local authority—Prima facie proof that road to be deemed to be in built up area—Road Traffic Act, 1934 (c. 50), s. 1 (1) (b) [BOYD-GIBBINS v. SKINNER]	1049
"C" licence—Vehicle used to carry goods for hire or reward by person other than licence holder—No identification certificate affixed—Road and Rail Traffic Act, 1933 (c. 53), s. 2 (4), s. 9 (1)—Goods Vehicles (Licences and Prohibitions) Regulations, 1936 (S.R. & O., 1936, No. 269), reg. 12 (2) [LLOYD v. E. LEE, LTD.]	589
Carriage of goods. See CARRIAGE OF GOODS.
Driving uninsured motor vehicle—Failure by employer to insure—Implied term in contract of service—Accident caused by servant's negligence—Liability of employer for damages [GREGORY v. FORD]	121
Express carriage—Special occasion—Conveyance of private party—Journey advertised by organisers—Coach-owners' ignorance of advertisement—Road Traffic Act, 1934 (c. 50), s. 25 (1) (b) [REYNOLDS v. G. H. AUSTIN & SONS, LTD.]	606
General trade licence—Motor car used for towing caravan—Caravan not a mechanically propelled vehicle—Road Vehicles (Registration and Licensing) Regulations, 1949 (S.I., 1949, No. 1618), reg. 29, art. D (4) [JELLIFF v. HARRINGTON]	384

STREET TRAFFIC—continued.

Motor vehicle— Lighting —"Road"—Forecourt of shop adjoining highway, but used only by customers—No wall between forecourt and highway—Road Transport Lighting Act, 1927 (c. 37), s. 1 (1), s. 15 [THOMAS v. DANDO]	1010
Omnibus service— Powers of British Transport Commission—Delegation of powers to transport executive—Extent of powers and validity of delegation—Transport Act, 1947 (c. 49), s. 2 (1) (a), s. 14 (2) [SMITH v. LONDON TRANSPORT EXECUTIVE]	667
"Service provided by commission or agent of commission"—Share capital of company actually providing service acquired by British Transport Commission—Transport Act, 1947 (c. 49), s. 65 (1) [R. v. SOUTH WALES TRAFFIC LICENSING AUTHORITY. Ex parte EBBW VALE URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL]	806
Stage carriage— Special occasion—Conveyance of guests once a week from holiday camp to railway station—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 61 (2)—Road Traffic Act, 1934 (c. 50), s. 25 (1) [VICTORIA MOTORS (SCARBOROUGH), LTD. v. WURZAL]	1016

STRIKING OUT PARTY

See PRACTICE (Parties).

SURGEON

Employed by hospital—Responsibility for negligence. See HOSPITAL.

SURTAX

Private company— Undistributed income—Apportionment to members—Member a married woman living with her husband—Liability of husband—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), All Schedules Rules, r. 16, proviso (1)—Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 21 (1) (2) (as amended by the Finance Act, 1927 (c. 10), s. 31 (2)—Finance Act, 1927 (c. 10), s. 42 (7)—Finance Act, 1936 (c. 34), s. 19 (5) [INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. BARCLAYS BANK, LTD.]	1
Settlement— Sums paid to settlor otherwise than as income—Body corporate connected with a settlement—Loans to settlor by body corporate—Payments made by company to third parties on behalf of settlor—Finance Act, 1938 (c. 46), s. 40 (3), s. 40 (5) (a) (i) [POTTS' EXECUTORS v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.]	76

TAXATION

Of costs. See COSTS.

TENANCY

Estoppel, by. See ESTOPPEL.

TENDER

Costs— Claim for £149—£106 paid into court—£136 awarded to plaintiff—Amount for which judgment should be given [READ'S TRUSTEE IN BANKRUPTCY v. SMITH (PORTMAN BUILDING SOCIETY, THIRD PARTY)]	406
---	-----

THEATRES AND ENTERTAINMENTS

Music-hall artist— National insurance—"Self-employed person" [GOULD v. MINISTER OF NATIONAL INSURANCE]	368
---	-----

TITHE

Annuity—"Discharge"— Payment of annuity by tenant for life under settlement—Right to recoupment out of capital [Re SANDBACH (decd.)]	971
---	-----

TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING

Compulsory acquisition— Compensation—Possibility of service of enforcement notice—Notice to treat served after the passing of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, and before the "appointed day"—Planning permission—Caravan site—Licence under Public Health Act, 1936 (c. 49), s. 269 (1)—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51), s. 75 (1) [HIGHAM v. HAVANT AND WATERLOO URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL]	173
Enforcement notice— No appeal against notice—Subsequent summons for contravention—No power to question validity of notice—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51), s. 24 (3) [PERRINS v. PERRINS]	1075

TRADING WITH ENEMY

See ALIEN.

TRANSPORT COMMISSION

See STREET TRAFFIC.

TRAVELLER

Guest at inn— Liability of innkeeper for loss of property—Motor car stolen from car park [WILLIAMS v. LINNITT]	278
---	-----

TREE

On requisitioned land— Right of requisitioning authority to cut [DEMETRIADES v. GLASGOW CORPN.]	457
--	-----

TRIAL

See CRIMINAL LAW.

TRUST AND TRUSTEE

Additional trustee— Appointment—Appointment by appointor of himself—Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 36 (6) [Re POWER'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS]	932
Profit from trust— Directors of charitable corporation—Directors empowered to make bye-laws—Validity of bye-law permitting directors to be paid for professional services [Re FRENCH PROTESTANT HOSPITAL]	938

UNIVERSITY

What constitutes [ST. DAVID'S COLLEGE, LAMPETER v. MINISTRY OF EDUCATION]	559
---	-----

VARIATION OF SETTLEMENT

"Settlement"— Part of house conveyed by wife to husband for no consideration—Provision for husband, and in view of continuance of matrimonial relations—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 192 [HALPERN v. HALPERN]	315
Variation inimical to interests of child— Withdrawal of funds from settlement by husband—Husband guilty party—Facts to be considered [GARFORTH-BLES v. GARFORTH-BLES]	308

WAGES

National Insurance contributions— Agreement by employer to pay—Inclusion in wages—Maritime lien [THE GRB-WHIZ]	876
---	-----

WAGES—continued.

- Regulation—Catering worker—Minimum remuneration—Exclusion of waiters' "tips"—Catering Wages Act, 1943 (c. 24), s. 9 (2) [WROTTESELEY v. REGENT STREET FLORIDA RESTAURANT, LTD.] 566

WIFE

- Competence as witness—Charge against husband of sending letter threatening to murder her [R. v. YEO] 864

WILL

- Attestation—Acknowledgment of signature—Subscription by one witness before acknowledgment of signature by testatrix to second witness—Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 9 [In the Estate of DAVIES] 920
- Class gift—Closing of class—Gift to children on attaining specified age—Gift in futuro subject to life interest—No member of class existing at cesser of life interest—Closing of class on attainment of specified age by one member of class [Re BLECKLY (dec'd.)] 628, 1064
- Gift to corporation described by its correct corporate title—Context showing that despite continued existence of corporation payment not intended to be made to it [Re MEYERS (dec'd.)] 538
- Gift to medical school of hospital—Gift over if hospital nationalised or passes into public ownership—Whether gift over takes effect consequent on National Health Service Act—National Health Service Act, 1946 (c. 81), s. 6 (1), s. 8 (1), s. 15 (1) [Re BLAND-SUTTON'S WILL TRUSTS] 494
- Gift "to the issue of our marriage"—Exclusion of grandchildren [Re NOAD (dec'd.)] 467
- Gift to the staff of company who shall have "had not less than five years' service"—Need for period to be continuous—Inclusion of war service [Re BEDFORD (dec'd.)] 1093
- Incorporation of trusts of earlier settlement—Limited power of revocation and appointment reserved to testator by settlement—Reference in will to "deed or deeds" executed thereafter under power [Re SCHINTZ'S WILL TRUSTS] 1095
- Lapse—Gift to hospitals "to be added to the invested funds" of the hospital—Hospital possessing no invested funds—Receipt of proper officer to be a discharge—Corporation having no officers [Re MEYERS (dec'd.)] 538
- Legacy—Destruction of object—Gift to hospital—Vesting of hospital in Minister of Health after death of testator, but before legacy paid over—National Health Service Act, 1946 (c. 81), s. 6 (1) [Re HUNTER (dec'd.)] 58
- To found a cot in a hospital—"Found" [Re GINGER (dec'd.)]* 422
- Necessary implication—Gift over on death of B in A's lifetime—B surviving A but predeceasing testatrix [Re BAILEY (dec'd.)] 391
- Option to purchase dwelling-house at value for estate duty purposes—"Chancellor's concession"—Purchase at concession value [Re DOWSE (dec'd.)] 558
- Revocation—Dependent relative revocation—Revocation clause in later will—Destruction of earlier will after execution of later will—Destruction in belief later will valid—Later will invalid [In the Estate of DAVIES] 920
- Principles of construction of revocatory clause—Partial revocation by codicil [Re WRAY (dec'd.)]* 375

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION

- Coal industry—Nationalisation—Contribution—Miner suffering from gradual disease—Compensation paid by National Coal Board—Right of board to contribution from miner's employers before nationalisation [NATIONAL COAL BOARD v. AMALGAMATED ANTHRACITE COLLIERIES, LTD.] 844
- Indemnity to employer by third party causing injury—Death of third party—Claim against estate—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), s. 30 (2)—Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934 (c. 41), s. 1 (3), (4) [POST OFFICE v. OFFICIAL SOLICITOR] 522
- Industrial disease—Dermatitis—Attack before July 5, 1948—Recurrence after that date—Workman insured under National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) Act, 1946—Right of workman to workmen's compensation [HALES v. BOLTON LEATHERS, LTD.] 643

WRIT

- Defect in endorsement—Cure by statement of claim—Effectiveness of writ [HILL v. LUTON CORPORATION] 1028

CASES REFERRED TO

PAGE

Adams v. London Improved Motor Coach Builders, Ltd., [1921] 1 K.B. 495; 90 L.J.K.B. 685; 124 L.T. 537; Digest Supp. 925, 926, 927, 928, 931
Admiralty Comrs. v. Susquehanna (Owners), The Susquehanna, [1926] A.C. 655; 95 L.J.P. 123; 135 L.T. 456; 41 Digest 802, 6624	754, 756
Admiralty Comrs. v. Valverde (Owners), [1938] 1 All E.R. 162; [1938] A.C. 173; 107 L.J.K.B. 99; 153 L.T. 231; Digest Supp. 32, 35, 823, 829
Aga Khan v. Times Publishing Co., Dawson v. Same, [1924] 1 K.B. 675; 93 L.J.K.B. 361; 130 L.T. 746; 32 Digest 153, 1847	332, 339
Albert Life Assurance Co., Re, (1870), L.R. 9 Eq. 703; 39 L.J.Ch. 257; 22 L.T. 92; 29 Digest 362, 2927	241, 246
Aldham v. United Dairies (London), Ltd., [1939] 4 All E.R. 522; [1940] 1 K.B. 507; 109 L.J.K.B. 323; 162 L.T. 71; 2nd Digest Supp. 683, 691
Alexander v. Rayson, [1936] 1 K.B. 169; 105 L.J.K.B. 148; 154 L.T. 205; Digest Supp. 93, 98, 99, 100, 101, 956, 957, 958, 966
Allen v. Allen, Feb. 1, 1951 (unreported)
Alton v. Midland Ry. Co., (1865), 19 C.B.N.S. 213; 34 L.J.C.P. 292; 12 L.T. 703; 144 E.R. 768; 12 Digest 49, 269	427, 431, 433
Andrews v. Partington, (1791), 3 Bro. C.C. 401; 29 E.R. 610; 44 Digest 768, 6266
Angel v. Angel, [1946] 2 All E.R. 635; 176 L.T. 90; 111 J.P. 14; 2nd Digest Supp. 628, 629, 631, 1064, 1065, 1066, 1067, 1068, 1069, 1070
Anon., (1857), Dea. & Sw. 295; 164 E.R. 581; 27 Digest 370, 3565	958, 966, 615
Applegarth v. Colley, (1842), 10 M. & W. 723; 12 L.J.Ex. 34; 7 J.P. 741; 152 E.R. 663; 25 Digest 416, 203	513, 521
Armitage v. Williams, (1859), 27 Beav. 346; 54 E.R. 135; 44 Digest 772, 6305	1065, 1070
Artillery Mansions, Ltd. v. Macartney, [1948] 2 All E.R. 875; [1949] 1 K.B. 164; [1949] L.J.R. 405; affd., [1947] 1 All E.R. 686; [1947] K.B. 594; 2nd Digest Supp. 153, 156, 158
Artizans, Labourers and General Dwellings Co. v. Whitaker, [1919] 2 K.B. 301; 88 L.J.K.B. 859; 121 L.T. 243; 31 Digest 577, 7259	16, 19
Ashby v. Tolhurst, [1937] 2 All E.R. 837; [1937] 2 K.B. 242; 106 L.J.K.B. 783; 156 L.T. 518; Digest Supp. 252, 256, 257
Ashby v. White, (1703), 2 Ld. Raym. 938; 92 E.R. 126; revsd., (1704), 1 Bro. Parl. Cas. 62; 1 E.R. 417; 36 Digest 289, 376	427, 432
Asher v. Seaford Court Estates, Ltd., [1950] 1 All E.R. 1018; [1950] A.C. 508	111, 113, 115
Aston v. Smith, [1924] 2 K.B. 143; 93 L.J.K.B. 733; 131 L.T. 565; 31 Digest 570, 7175	111, 112
Atkin v. Rose, [1923] 1 Ch. 522; 92 L.J.Ch. 209; 128 L.T. 653; 31 Digest 152, 2371	416, 418
Atkinson v. Sellers, (1858), 5 C.B.N.S. 442; 28 L.J.M.C. 12; 28 L.J.C.P. 72; 32 L.T.O.S. 147; 23 J.P. 71; 141 E.R. 181	279, 287
A.-G. v. Barclays Bank, Ltd., [1943] 1 All E.R. 181; affd., [1943] 2 All E.R. 123; [1943] K.B. 721; 112 L.J.K.B. 585; 169 L.T. 149; revsd. Barclays Bank, Ltd. v. A.-G., [1944] 2 All E.R. 208; [1944] A.C. 372; 113 L.J.K.B. 465; 171 L.T. 366; 2nd Digest Supp. 102, 106
A.-G. v. Belgrave Hospital, [1910] 1 Ch. 73; 79 L.J.Ch. 75; 101 L.T. 628; 8 Digest 300, 784
A.-G. v. Bucknall, (1742), 2 Atk. 328; 26 E.R. 600; 8 Digest 396, 2203	422, 423, 424, 425
A.-G. v. Comber, (1824), 2 Sim. & St. 93; 57 E.R. 281; 8 Digest 244, 33	823, 831, 832, 839
A.-G. v. Dobree, [1900] 1 Q.B. 442; 69 L.J.Q.B. 223; 81 L.T. 607; 64 J.P. 24; 21 Digest 17, 97	775, 776, 777, 823, 830
A.-G. v. Goddard, (1929), 98 L.J.K.B. 743; Digest Supp.	242, 248
A.-G. v. Lockwood, (1842), 9 M. & W. 378; 152 E.R. 160; affd. on other grounds sub nom. Lockwood v. A.-G., 10 M. & W. 464; 42 Digest 767, 1934	617, 620
A.-G. v. Murray, [1904] 1 K.B. 165; 73 L.J.K.B. 66; 89 L.T. 710; 68 J.P. 89; 21 Digest 16, 79	683, 688
A.-G. v. Northumberland (Duke), (1877), 7 Ch.D. 745; 47 L.J.Ch. 569; varied without affecting this point, (1878), 38 L.T. 245; 8 Digest 306, 856	241, 246
A.-G. v. Price, (1810), 17 Ves. 371; 84 E.R. 143; 8 Digest 242, 12	823, 829, 831, 832, 833, 834, 840, 843
A.-G. v. Robinson, [1901] 2 I.R. 67; 21 Digest 15, 73, q	242, 248
A.-G. for Palestine v. Fakhry Ayyas, [1947] A.C. 332; [1947] L.J.R. 879; 2nd Digest Supp. 389, 390, 391	146, 147, 149
Augusta Magan, Re, [1922] 2 I.R. 208
Auster (1914), Ltd. v. London Motor Coach Works, Ltd., (1914), 84 L.J.K.B. 580; 112 L.T. 99; Digest, Practice, 73, 631	1028, 1029
B.'s Settlement, Re, [1951] 1 All E.R. 949n; [1940] Ch. 54; 109 L.J.Ch. 20; 2nd Digest Supp. 942, 943, 949
Baker v. Dalgleish S.S. Co., Ltd., [1922] 1 K.B. 361; 91 L.J.K.B. 392; 36 Digest 140, 943	1035, 1036
Baker v. Turner, [1950] 1 All E.R. 834; [1950] A.C. 401	859, 860, 861
Balfour v. Kensington Gardens Mansions, Ltd., (1932), 49 T.L.R. 29; Digest Supp.	346, 348
Panbury Peerage Case, (1811), 1 Sim. & St. 153; 57 E.R. 62; 3 Digest 362, 35	125, 133, 138
Bank of New South Wales v. Piper, [1897] A.C. 383; 66 L.J.P.C. 73; 76 L.T. 572; 61 J.P. 660; 14 Digest 33, 38	607, 614
Barrell v. Fordree, [1932] A.C. 676; 101 L.J.K.B. 529; 96 J.P. 278; sub nom. Fordree v. Barrell, 147 L.T. 206; Digest Supp.	859, 861
Barrett v. Hardy Brothers (Alnwick), Ltd., [1925] 2 K.B. 220; 94 L.J.K.B. 665; 133 L.T. 249; 31 Digest 561, 7090	210, 212
Barton v. Fincham, [1921] 2 K.B. 291; 90 L.J.K.B. 451; 124 L.T. 495; 85 J.P. 145; 31 Digest 579, 7280	16, 18
Barton v. Keeble, [1928] Ch. 517; 97 L.J.Ch. 215; 139 L.T. 136; Digest Supp.	416, 419
Bartram v. Bartram, [1949] 2 All E.R. 270; [1950] P. 1; [1949] L.J.R. 1679; 113 J.P. 422; 2nd Digest Supp.	301, 302, 305
Bassett, Re, Ex p. Lewis, [1896] 1 Q.B. 219; 65 L.J.Q.B. 144; 73 L.T. 736; 4 Digest 524, 4790	600, 602, 603, 605
Bates, Re, [1928] Ch. 682; 97 L.J.Ch. 240; 139 L.T. 162; Digest Supp.	869, 872
Battersby v. Anglo-American Oil Co., Ltd., [1944] 2 All E.R. 387; [1945] K.B. 23; 114 L.J.K.B. 49; 171 L.T. 300; 2nd Digest Supp.	1028, 1031
Batting v. London Passenger Transport Board, [1941] 1 All E.R. 228; 2nd Digest Supp.	1028, 1030
Baxter v. Eckersley, [1950] 1 All E.R. 139; [1950] 1 K.B. 480	111, 112, 113
Bell London & Provincial Properties, Ltd. v. Reuben, [1946] 2 All E.R. 547; [1947] K.B. 157; [1947] L.J.R. 251; 176 L.T. 92; 2nd Digest Supp.	178
Benett-Stanford Settlement Trusts, Re, [1947] 1 All E.R. 888; [1947] L.J.R. 1073; 177 L.T. 301; 2nd Digest Supp.	236, 237, 239, 240
Bennett v. Bennett, [1939] 2 All E.R. 387; [1939] P. 274; 108 L.J.P. 119; 161 L.T. 96; Digest Supp.	1132, 1134

	PAGE
Bennett v. Mellor, (1793), 5 Term. Rep. 273; 101 E.R. 154; 29 Digest 12, 162	279, 281, 283, 289
Berg v. Sadler & Moore, [1937] 1 All E.R. 637; [1937] 2 K.B. 158; 106 L.J.K.B. 593; 156 L.T. 334; aff. , [1936] 2 All E.R. 456; Digest Supp. 93, 98, 99, 100, 101
Berry v. Gaukroger, [1903] 2 Ch. 116; 72 L.J.Ch. 435; 88 L.T. 521; 21 Digest 27, 155	622, 623, 625
Bethune v. Bethune, [1891] P. 205; 60 L.J.P. 18; 63 L.T. 259; 27 Digest 288, 2613	956, 958
Bett v. Dalmeny Oil Co., (1905), 7 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 787	1103, 1125
Bidie, Re , Bidie v. General Accident Fire & Life Assurance Corp'n., Ltd., [1948] 2 All E.R. 995; [1949] Ch. 121; [1949] L.J.R. 386; 113 J.P. 22; 2nd Digest Supp. 249, 250
Bilbee v. Hasse & Co., (1889), 5 T.L.R. 377; 1 Digest 522, 1820	545, 551, 553
Binding v. Great Yarmouth Port & Haven Comrs., (1923), 92 L.J.K.B. 377; 128 L.T. 743; 16 B.W.C.C. 28; 34 Digest 260, 2220	369, 372
Birmingham and District Land Co. v. London & North Western Ry. Co., (1888), 40 Ch.D. 268; 60 L.T. 527; 11 Digest 214, 990	768, 796
Bishopsgate Motor Finance Corp'n., Ltd. v. Transport Brakes, Ltd., [1949] 1 All E.R. 37; [1949] 1 K.B. 322; [1949] L.J.R. 741; 2nd Digest Supp. 1063
Black v. Rife Coal Co., Ltd., [1912] A.C. 149; 81 L.J.P.C. 97; 106 L.T. 161; 5 B.W.C.C. 217; 34 Digest 740, 1166	1103, 1110, 1116, 1118, 1122, 1123, 1125
Black v. Lake & Elliot, Ltd., (1912), 106 L.T. 533; 39 Digest 458, 849	427, 435
Blakey v. Latham, (1889), 41 Ch.D. 518; 60 L.T. 624; 42 Digest 284, 3193	601, 603, 604
Blows v. Chapman, [1947] 2 All E.R. 576; 112 J.P. 8; 2nd Digest Supp. 122, 123
Blyth v. Birmingham Waterworks Co., (1856), 11 Exch. 781; 25 L.J.Ex. 212; 26 L.T.O.S. 261; 20 J.P. 247; 36 Digest 6, 1	1079, 1084
Boddington v. Wisson, [1951] 1 All E.R. 166	890, 891, 895
Bone v. Ekless, (1860), 5 H. & N. 925; 29 L.J.Ex. 438; 157 E.R. 1450; 12 Digest, Replacement, 317, 2443	93, 96
Borough Court Estate, Re , [1932] 2 Ch. 39; 101 L.J.Ch. 316; 147 L.T. 476; Digest Supp. 972, 978
Borrows v. Delaney, (1889), 24 L.R. Ir. 503; 30 Digest 481, e	694, 700
Bostel Bros., Ltd. v. Hurlock, [1948] 2 All E.R. 312; [1949] 1 K.B. 74; [1948] L.J.R. 1846; 2nd Digest Supp. 636, 640, 642
Boston Deep Sea Fishing & Ice Co. v. Ansell, (1888), 39 Ch.D. 339; 59 L.T. 345; 1 Digest 484, 1632	617, 620
Bosville v. A.-G., (1887), 12 P.D. 177; 56 L.J.P. 97; 57 L.T. 88; 3 Digest 362, 42	125, 127
Bosworthick v. Bosworthick, [1927] P. 64; 95 L.J.P. 171; 136 L.T. 211; Digest Supp. 315, 316, 319, 320
Bouch v. Sproule, (1887), 12 App. Cas. 385; 56 L.J.Ch. 1037; 57 L.T. 345; 40 Digest 665, 2035	869, 872
Bourhill v. Young, [1942] 2 All E.R. 396; [1943] A.C. 92; 111 L.J.P.C. 97; 167 L.T. 261; 2nd Digest Supp. 1079, 1080, 1085
Bowen, Re , [1893] 2 Ch. 491; 62 L.J.Ch. 681; 68 L.T. 789; 8 Digest 327, 1102	495, 504, 516
Bowen, Re , [1948] 2 All E.R. 979; [1949] Ch. 67; [1949] L.J.R. 413; 2nd Digest Supp. 392, 393, 399, 401
Bown v. Bown & Weston, [1945] 2 All E.R. 778; [1949] P. 91; [1948] L.J.R. 1912; 2nd Digest Supp. 315, 318
Bowness v. O'Dwyer, [1948] 2 All E.R. 181; [1948] 2 K.B. 219; [1948] L.J.R. 1774; 2nd Digest Supp. 152, 155, 157, 158
Bowron v. Bowron, [1925] P. 187; 94 L.J.P. 33; 132 L.T. 773; 89 J.P. 43; 27 Digest 561, 6168	1131, 1133
Boyd v. Boyd, [1938] 4 All E.R. 181; 108 L.J.P. 25; 159 L.T. 522; 102 J.P. 525; Digest Supp. 955, 956, 960, 961, 962, 963
Boyd v. Mathers & South Africa, Ltd., (1893), 9 T.L.R. 443; 1 Digest 522, 1821	545, 550, 556
Bradburn v. Great Western Ry. Co., (1874), L.R. 10 Exch. 1; 44 L.J.Ex. 9; 31 L.T. 464; 36 Digest 127, 839	1035, 1036
Bradley v. Newsom (H.), Sons & Co., [1919] A.C. 16; 88 L.J.K.B. 35; 119 L.T. 239; 12 Digest 344, 2866	762, 765
Bragg v. Bragg, [1925] P. 20; 94 L.J.P. 11; 132 L.T. 346; 27 Digest 565, 6242	474, 475
Bramley v. Teal, (1818), 3 Madd. 219; 56 E.R. 490; 40 Digest 294, 2539	1001, 1005, 1006
Brand v. Glasse, (1584), Moore, K.B. 158; 72 E.R. 503; 29 Digest 13, 175	279, 285, 292, 293
Bray v. Ford, [1896] A.C. 44; 65 L.J.Q.B. 213; 73 L.T. 609; 43 Digest 865, 3112	938, 940
Brend v. Wood, (1946), 175 L.T. 306; 110 J.P. 317; 2nd Digest Supp. 606, 611
Brice v. Bannister, (1878), 3 Q.B.D. 569; 47 L.J.Q.B. 722; 38 L.T. 739; 8 Digest 428, 63	296, 299
Briscoe v. Stephens, (1824), 2 Bing. 213; 3 L.J.O.S.C.P. 257; 130 E.R. 288; 21 Digest 232, 629	483, 488
British American Tobacco Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1943] 1 All E.R. 13; [1943] A.C. 335; 112 L.J.K.B. 81; 169 L.T. 98; 29 Tax Cas. 49; 2nd Digest Supp. 704, 705, 706, 707, 709, 710
British & American Trustee & Finance Corp'n. v. Couper, [1894] A.C. 399; 63 L.J.Ch. 425; 70 L.T. 882; 9 Digest 149, 840	882, 883, 884, 885
British Railway Traffic & Electric Co. v. Kahn, [1921] W.N. 52; Digest Supp. 186, 188
British Thomson-Houston Co. v. Sterling Accessories, Ltd., British Thomson-Houston Co. v. Crowther & Osborn, Ltd., [1924] 2 Ch. 33; 93 L.J.Ch. 335; 131 L.T. 535; Digest Supp. 806, 808
Brock v. Wollams, [1949] 1 All E.R. 715; [1949] 2 K.B. 388; 2nd Digest Supp. 60, 61, 62
Bromage, Re , [1935] Ch. 605; 104 L.J.Ch. 299; 153 L.T. 313; Digest Supp. 1038, 1040
Brookman v. Smith, (1872), L.R. 7 Exch. 271; 41 L.J.Ex. 114; 26 L.T. 974; 44 Digest 1176, 10177	391, 392, 393, 395, 396, 398, 401
Brooks v. Beirnsstein, [1909] 1 K.B. 98; 78 L.J.K.B. 243; 99 L.T. 970; 3 Digest 96, 258	762, 764
Brooks v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1913] 3 K.B. 398; 82 L.J.K.B. 1086; 109 L.T. 363; 42 Digest 670, 815	242, 247
Brooks v. Mason, [1902] 2 K.B. 743; 72 L.J.K.B. 19; 88 L.T. 24; 67 J.P. 47; 14 Digest 38, 81	607, 613
Brooks & Co. v. Blackburn Benefit Society, (1884), 9 App. Cas. 857; 54 L.J.Ch. 376; 52 L.T. 225; 7 Digest 487, 199	77, 80, 83, 85
Brown v. Brown, [1936] 2 All E.R. 1616; [1937] P. 7; 105 L.J.P. 103; 155 L.T. 418; Digest Supp. 315, 318, 319, 320
Brown v. Cocking, (1868), L.R. 3 Q.B. 672; 37 L.J.Q.B. 250; 18 L.T. 560; 16 Digest 381, 2192	483, 489
Brown v. Draper, [1944] 1 All E.R. 246; [1944] K.B. 309; 113 L.J.K.B. 196; 170 L.T. 144; 2nd Digest Supp. 16, 19
Brown v. Higgs, (1801), 3 Ves. 561; 32 E.R. 473; aff. , (1813), 18 Ves. 192; 34 E.R. 290; 44 Digest 746, 6037a	823, 828
Brown v. Metropolitan Counties, etc., Society, (1859), 1 E. & E. 832; 28 L.J.Q.B. 236; 33 L.T.O.S. 162; 120 E.R. 1123; 35 Digest 327, 714	762, 766
Brown v. Robins, [1943] 1 All E.R. 548; 168 L.T. 340; 2nd Digest Supp. 152, 153, 155, 158
Brownlie v. Campbell, (1880), 5 App. Cas. 925; 35 Digest 9, 24	426, 431
Brunsdon v. Woolledge, (1765), Amb. 507; 27 E.R. 327; 44 Digest 890, 7481	824, 840
Buchler v. Buchler, [1947] 1 All E.R. 319; [1947] L.J.R. 820; 176 L.T. 341; 111 J.P. 179; 2nd Digest Supp. 955, 956, 960, 961, 962, 963, 964, 965
Buck, Re , [1896] 2 Ch. 727; 65 L.J.Ch. 881; 75 L.T. 312; 60 J.P. 775; 8 Digest 262, 246	32, 38

- Egerton v. Brownlow (Earl), (1853), 4 H.L. Cas. 1; 8 State Tr. N.S. 193; 23 L.J.Ch. 348; 21 L.T.O.S. 306; 10 E.R. 359; 12 Digest 240, 1971 .. 716, 723
- Egmont's (Lord) Settled Estates, Re, (1890), 45 Ch.D. 395; 59 L.J.Ch. 763; 63 L.T. 608; 30 Digest 294, 205 .. 971, 975, 976, 977
- Ellison v. Airey, (1748), 1 Ves. Sen. 111; 27 E.R. 924; 44 Digest 1166, 10100 .. 628, 1064, 1068, 1070
- Else & Co., Ltd. v. Palmer, (1924), (unreported), quoted in JONES AND PROUDFOOT'S .. 1063
- NOTES ON HIRE PURCHASE LAW, 2nd ed., p. 99 .. 483, 489
- Elston v. Rose, (1868), L.R. 4 Q.B. 4; 38 L.J.Q.B. 6; 19 L.T. 280; 13 Digest 469, 791 .. 768, 771
- Emanuel v. Emanuel, [1945] 2 All E.R. 494; [1946] P. 115; 114 L.J.P. 60; 173 L.T. 118; 2nd Digest Supp. .. 389, 390, 391
- Emerson v. Woods, [1942] N.I.R. 118 .. 628, 1065, 1068, 1071, 1072
- Emmet's Estate, Re, (1880) 13 Ch.D. 484; 49 L.J.Ch. 295; 42 L.T. 4; 44 Digest 769, 6282 .. 210, 212, 214
- Epsom Grand Stand Assocn., Ltd. v. Clarke, [1919] W.N. 170; 31 Digest 581, 7296 .. 528, 529
- Estlin, Re, (1903), 72 L.J.Ch. 637; 89 L.T. 88; 8 Digest 245, 45 .. 426, 431
- Evans v. Bicknell (1801), 6 Ves. 174; 31 E.R. 998; 35 Digest 33, 249 .. 606, 608, 611
- Evans v. Dell, [1937] 1 All E.R. 349; 156 L.T. 240; 101 J.P. 149; Digest Supp. .. 956, 966, 967
- Evans v. Evans, (1900), 1 Hag. Con. 35; 161 E.R. 466; 27 Digest 281, 2622 .. 1043, 1044, 1045, 1047, 1048
- Evans v. Hoare, [1892] 1 Q.B. 593; 61 L.J.Q.B. 470; 66 L.T. 345; 56 J.P. 664; 12 Digest, Replacement, 174, 1143 .. 1043, 1044, 1045, 1047, 1048
- Evans v. Liverpool Corpn., [1906] 1 K.B. 160; 74 L.J.K.B. 742; 69 J.P. 263; 34 Digest 40, 160 .. 575, 582
- Everett v. Griffiths, [1920] 3 K.B. 163; 89 L.J.Ch. 929; 123 L.T. 280; 84 J.P. 161; affd., [1921] 1 A.C. 631; 90 L.J.K.B. 737; 125 L.T. 230; 85 J.P. 149; 33 Digest 267, 1862 .. 427, 433, 435
- Everitt v. Everitt, [1948] 2 All E.R. 545; 2nd Digest Supp. .. 63, 66, 68, 71, 72
- Everitt v. Everitt, [1949] 1 All E.R. 908; [1949] P. 374; 113 J.P. 279; 2nd Digest Supp. 724, 728, 877, 879, 956, 961, 962
- F. P. H. Finance Trust, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (No. 2), [1945] 1 All E.R. 492; [1946] A.C. 38; 114 L.J.K.B. 203; 172 L.T. 278; 28 Tax Cas. 209; 2nd Digest Supp. .. 2, 12
- Falmouth Boat Construction, Ltd. v. Howell, [1950] 1 All E.R. 538; [1950] 2 K.B. 16 .. 781, 788
- Fardon v. Harcourt-Rivington, (1932), 146 L.T. 391; Digest Supp. .. 262, 266, 1079, 1085
- Fender v. Midmay, [1937] 3 All E.R. 402; 106 L.J.K.B. 641; 157 L.T. 340; sub nom. Fender v. St. John-Midmay, [1938] A.C. 1; Digest Supp. .. 716, 723
- Finch v. Telegraph Construction & Maintenance Co., Ltd., [1949] 1 All E.R. 452; 2nd Digest Supp. .. 73, 75
- Fish v. Kelly, (1864), 17 C.B.N.S. 194; 144 E.R. 78; 44 Digest 108, 1032 .. 427, 433
- Fisher v. Bridges, (1854), 3 E. & B. 642; 118 E.R. 1283; sub nom. Bridges v. Fisher, 23 L.J.Q.B. 276; 23 L.T.O.S. 223; 18 J.P. 599; 12 Digest 277, 2272 .. 1088, 1091
- Fisher v. Calvert, (1879), 27 W.R. 301; 8 Digest 447, 225 .. 906, 909
- Fisher v. Fisher, [1942] 1 All E.R. 438; [1942] P. 101; 111 L.J.P. 28; 166 L.T. 225; 2nd Digest Supp. .. 768, 771, 773, 1088, 1091
- Fitzgerald (Lord), Re, (1914), 112 L.T. 86; 42 Digest 344, 3392 .. 925, 926, 928
- Foss v. Harbottle, (1843), 2 Hare 461; 67 E.R. 189; 9 Digest 41, 42 .. 926, 929
- Foster v. Robinson, [1950] 2 All E.R. 342; [1951] 1 K.B. 149 .. 768, 770
- Fox's Estate, Re, [1937] 4 All E.R. 664; Digest Supp. .. 391, 392, 393, 396, 397, 398, 399, 400
- Frankfurter v. W. L. Exner, Ltd., [1947] Ch. 629; [1948] L.J.R. 553; 177 L.T. 257; 2nd Digest Supp. .. 750, 781, 782, 783
- Freeman, Re, [1910] 1 Ch. 681; 79 L.J.Ch. 678; 102 L.T. 516; 44 Digest 330, 1608 .. 376, 378, 379, 380, 381, 383
- Frith v. Frith, [1906] A.C. 254; 75 L.J.P.C. 50; 94 L.T. 383; 17 Digest 337, 1437 .. 746, 747, 749
- Fry v. Salisbury House Estate, Ltd., [1930] A.C. 432; 99 L.J.K.B. 403; 143 L.T. 77; 15 Tax Cas. 266; Digest Supp. .. 701, 702
- Fulham Metropolitan Borough Council v. Santilli, [1933] 2 K.B. 357; 102 L.J.K.B. 728; 149 L.T. 452; 97 J.P. 174; Digest Supp. .. 1032, 1033
- Gaisberg v. Storr, [1949] 2 All E.R. 411; [1950] 1 K.B. 107; 2nd Digest Supp. .. 767, 768, 769, 770, 771, 772, 1088, 1091
- Gammans v. Ekins, [1950] 2 All E.R. 140; [1950] 2 K.B. 328 .. 60, 62, 63
- Garrett, Re, [1934] Ch. 477; 103 L.J.Ch. 244; 151 L.T. 194; Digest Supp. .. 656, 659
- Gaskill v. Gaskill, [1921] P. 425; 90 L.J.P. 339; 126 L.T. 115; 27 Digest 298, 2753 .. 125, 128, 133, 134, 136, 137, 138
- Gay, Re, [1926] 3 D.L.R. 40; 59 O.L.R. 40; Digest Supp. .. 192, 948
- Gee, Re, [1948] 1 All E.R. 498; [1948] Ch. 284; [1948] L.J.R. 1400; 2nd Digest Supp. .. 937, 938
- Gee, Walker & Slater, Ltd. v. Friary Hotel (Derby), Ltd., (1949), 66 T.L.R. 59 .. 280, 292
- Geillinger v. Gibbs, [1897] 1 Ch. 479; 66 L.J.Ch. 230; 76 L.T. 111; 42 Digest 338, 3320 .. 926, 928
- Gell v. Watson, (1825), 2 Sim. & St. 402; 3 L.J.O.S. Ch. 199; 57 E.R. 400; 40 Digest 213, 1799 .. 1001, 1002, 1008, 1009
- General Medical Council v. Inland Revenue Comrs., English Branch Council of General Medical Council v. Inland Revenue Comrs., (1928), 97 L.J.K.B. 578; 139 L.T. 226; 13 Tax Cas. 819; Digest Supp. .. 495, 515
- George v. Skivington, (1869), L.R. 5 Exch. 1; 39 L.J.Ex. 8; 21 L.T. 495; 39 Digest 441, 705 .. 427, 434, 435, 439, 440
- Gerahty v. Baines & Co., (1903), 19 T.L.R. 554; 1 Digest 522, 1823 .. 545, 550, 556
- German v. Yates, (1915), 32 T.L.R. 52; 8 Digest 456, 293 .. 906, 909
- Gibson v. South American Stores (Gath and Chaves), Ltd., [1949] 2 All E.R. 18; [1949] Ch. 572; [1949] L.J.R. 1228; affd. in part and reversd. in part, [1949] 2 All E.R. 985; [1950] Ch. 117; 2nd Digest Supp. .. 32, 38, 775, 778, 823, 827, 828, 837
- Gidden v. Mills, [1925] 2 K.B. 713; 134 L.T. 31; 31 Digest 559, 7063 .. 210, 212
- Gill v. Continental Gas Co., (1872), L.R. 7 Exch. 332; 41 L.J.Ex. 176; 27 L.T. 424; 21 Digest 652, 2302 .. 22, 23, 25
- Gillam v. Taylor, (1873), L.R. 16 Eq. 581; 42 L.J.Ch. 674; 28 L.T. 833; 8 Digest 242, 14 .. 823, 833, 840, 841
- Gilmour v. Coates, [1949] 1 All E.R. 848; [1949] A.C. 426; [1949] L.J.R. 1034; 2nd Digest Supp. .. 31, 33, 36, 823, 837
- Ginesi v. Ginesi, [1947] 2 All E.R. 438; 111 J.P. 521; affd., [1948] 1 All E.R. 373; [1948] P. 179; [1948] L.J.R. 892; 112 J.P. 194; 2nd Digest Supp. .. 125, 135
- Glasgow Corpn. v. Muir, [1943] 2 All E.R. 44; [1943] A.C. 448; 112 L.J.P.C. 1; 169 L.T. 53; 107 J.P. 140; 2nd Digest Supp. .. 1079, 1081, 1082, 1083, 1085
- Glass' Will Trusts, Re, [1950] 2 All E.R. 953; [1950] Ch. 643 .. 58, 59, 538, 539, 541
- Glengaber, The, (1872), L.R. 3 A. & E. 534; 41 L.J.Adm. 84; 27 L.T. 380; 41 Digest 843, 7059 .. 754, 755, 756

Glenister v. Glenister, [1945] 1 All E.R. 513; [1945] P. 30; 114 L.J.P. 69; 172 L.T. 250; 109 J.P. 194; 2nd Digest Supp.	724, 727, 728, 729, 730
Gold v. Essex County Council, [1942] 2 All E.R. 237; [1942] 2 K.B. 293; 112 L.J.K.B. 1; 167 L.T. 166; 106 J.P. 242; 2nd Digest Supp.	574, 575, 577, 578, 579, 581, 582, 583, 586, 587
Good, Re , [1905] 2 Ch. 60; 74 L.J.Ch. 512; 92 L.T. 796; 8 Digest 258, 197	539, 543, 544
Gooding v. Gooding, (1749), 1 Ves. Sen. 231; 27 E.R. 1001; 44 Digest 616, 4436	824, 840
Gosling, Re , (1900), 43 W.R. 300; 8 Digest 244, 471	32, 38
Graham, Re , [1929] 2 Ch. 127; 98 L.J.Ch. 291; 141 L.T. 197; Digest Supp.	391, 392, 393, 394, 398, 399, 401
Gray v. Gray, [1919] 1 Sc. L.T. 163	125, 132, 136
Green & Sons v. Minister of Health (No. 2), [1947] 2 All E.R. 469; [1948] 1 K.B. 34; [1948] L.J.R. 1; 111 J.P. 530; 2nd Digest Supp.	983, 995
Greenwood v. Turner, [1891] 2 Ch. 144; 60 L.J.Ch. 351; 64 L.T. 261; 40 Digest 119, 945	1001, 1004
Griffin, Ex p. , Re Adams, (1880), 14 Ch.D. 37; 49 L.J.Bey. 28; 42 L.T. 704; 4 Digest 524, 4789	600, 602, 604, 605
Griffin v. Tomkins, (1880), 42 L.T. 359; 44 J.P. 457; 31 Digest 58, 2044	416, 418
Griffiths v. Studebakers, Ltd., [1924] 1 K.B. 102; 93 L.J.K.B. 50; 130 L.T. 215; 87 J.P. 199; 34 Digest 153, 1202	607, 611
Grimston v. Innkeeper, (1627), Het. 49; 124 E.R. 334; 29 Digest 4, 33	279, 281
Grote v. Chester & Holyhead Ry. Co., (1848), 2 Exch. 251; 154 E.R. 485; 34 Digest 161, 1262	575, 587
Grove Grady, Re , [1929] 1 Ch. 557; Digest Supp.	31, 34
Groves v. Wimborne (Lord), [1898] 2 Q.B. 402; 67 L.J.Q.B. 862; 79 L.T. 284; 34 Digest 218, 1815	1103, 1108, 1113, 1114, 1115
Gulielm's Case, (1625), Lat. 88; 82 E.R. 288	279, 281, 288
Gundry v. Sainsbury, [1910] 1 K.B. 645; 79 L.J.K.B. 713; 102 L.T. 440; 42 Digest 126, 1207	117, 118
Gunner v. Gunner & Stirling, [1948] 2 All E.R. 771; [1949] P. 77; [1948] L.J.R. 1904; 2nd Digest Supp.	815, 317
Hadum v. Hadum, [1948] 2 All E.R. 412; [1949] P. 147; [1949] L.J.R. 341; 2nd Digest Supp.	125, 128, 131, 136, 137
Hafner, Re , [1943] I.R. 426; 2nd Digest Supp.	23, 27
Hall v. Booth, (1834), 3 Nev. & M. K.B. 316; 14 Digest 175, 1531	814, 815, 817
Hall v. Derby Sanitary Authority, (1885), 16 Q.B.D. 163; 55 L.J.M.C. 21; 54 L.T. 175; 50 J.P. 278; 8 Digest 243, 26	32, 37, 40
Hall v. Ody, (1799), 2 Bos. & P. 28; 126 E.R. 1136	600, 602, 603
Hancock v. Watson, [1902] A.C. 14; 71 L.J.Ch. 149; 85 L.T. 729; 43 Digest 644, 792	495, 504
Hardaker v. Idle District Council, [1896] 1 Q.B. 335; 65 L.J.Q.B. 363; 74 L.T. 69; 60 J.P. 196; 34 Digest 31, 89	575, 587
Harding v. Glyn, (1739), 1 Atk. 469; 26 E.R. 299; 44 Digest 890, 7477	823, 838
Harding v. Harding, (1886), 17 Q.B.D. 442; 55 L.J.Q.B. 462; 8 Digest 442, 191	290, 299, 906, 998
Harding v. Price, [1948] 1 All E.R. 283; [1948] 1 K.B. 695; [1948] L.J.R. 1624; 112 J.P. 189; 2nd Digest Supp.	606, 611
Harland's Case, (1641), Clay. 97; 29 Digest 5, 42	279, 281, 285, 287, 288, 289, 292
Harold v. Smith, (1860), 5 H. & N. 381; 29 L.J.Ex. 141; 157 E.R. 1229; sub nom. Harrold v. Smith, 1 L.T. 556	116, 117
Harris v. Boots, Cash Chemists (Southern), Ltd., [1904] 2 Ch. 376; 73 L.J.Ch. 708; 31 Digest 415, 5620	694, 699
Harrison v. Hill, 1932 S.C. (J.) 13; Digest Supp.	1011, 1012
Hartland, Re , [1911] 1 Ch. 459; sub nom. , Re Dixon Hartland, 80 L.J.Ch. 305; 104 L.T. 490; 21 Digest 38, 247	241, 247
Hartwells of Oxford, Ltd. v. British Motor Trade Association, [1950] 2 All E.R. 705; [1951] 1 Ch. 50	716, 719
Haseldine v. Daw & Son, Ltd., [1941] 3 All E.R. 156; [1941] 2 K.B. 343; 111 L.J.K.B. 45; 165 L.T. 185; 2nd Digest Supp.	427, 433, 439, 443
Hastelow v. Jackson, (1828), 8 B. & C. 221; 2 Man. & Ry. K.B. 209; 6 L.J.O.S.K.B. 318; 108 E.R. 1026; 25 Digest 406, 95	93, 96
Hasting v. Hasting, [1947] 2 All E.R. 744; [1948] P. 68; [1948] L.J.R. 119; 2nd Digest Supp.	768, 771
Hay (or Bourhill) v. Young, [1942] 2 All E.R. 396; [1943] A.C. 92; 111 L.J.P.C. 97; 167 L.T. 261; 2nd Digest Supp.	364, 367, 683, 692
Head v. Head, (1823), Turn. & R. 138; 37 E.R. 1049; 3 Digest 359, 11	124, 125, 127
Heather, Re , (1870), 5 Ch. App. 694; 39 L.J.Ch. 781; 42 Digest 158, 1588	592, 595
Heaven v. Pender, (1882), 9 Q.B.D. 302; 51 L.J.Q.B. 465; 47 L.T. 163; 47 J.P. 87; reversd. (1883), 11 Q.B.D. 503; 52 L.J.Q.B. 702; 49 L.T. 357; 47 J.P. 709; 36 Digest 8, 9	91, 92, 427, 435, 438, 439, 445
Hedley v. Pinkney & Sons S.S. Co., [1894] A.C. 222; 63 L.J.Q.B. 419; 70 L.T. 630; 34 Digest 210, 1726	1103, 1106, 1113, 1125
Henderson v. Squire, (1869), L.R. 4 Q.B. 170; 38 L.J.Q.B. 73; 19 L.T. 601; 33 J.P. 532; 31 Digest 546, 6925	178, 183, 184
Hermann v. Charlesworth, [1905] 2 K.B. 123; 74 L.J.K.B. 620; 93 L.T. 284; 12 Digest, Replacement, 317, 2444	93, 97, 100
Heskell v. Continental Express, Ltd., [1950] 1 All E.R. 1033	427, 433, 444
Hick v. Raymond and Reid, [1893] A.C. 22; 62 L.J.Q.B. 98; 68 L.T. 175; 12 Digest, Replacement, 344, 2672	716, 719
Hicks v. Newport, Abergavenny & Hereford Ry. Co., (1857), 4 B. & S. 403, n. ; 122 E.R. 510; 36 Digest 141, 945	1034, 1036
Hildesheim, Re , [1914] 3 K.B. 841; 84 L.J.K.B. 1; 111 L.T. 749; 42 Digest 156, 1559	592, 596, 598
Hill v. Booth, [1930] 1 K.B. 381; 99 L.J.K.B. 49; 142 L.T. 80; Digest Supp.	220, 223
Hill v. Hill (William) (Park Lane), Ltd., [1949] 2 All E.R. 452; [1949] A.C. 530; [1949] L.J.R. 1383; 2nd Digest Supp.	518, 519, 520
Hill (R. A.) v. Permanent Trustee Co. of New South Wales, Ltd., [1930] A.C. 720; 144 L.T. 65; sub nom. Re Hill (Richard), 99 L.J.P.C. 191; Digest Supp.	869, 871, 872
Hills v. Sughrue, (1846), 15 M. & W. 253; 153 E.R. 844; sub nom. Mills v. Seybourne, 6 L.T.O.S. 414; 12 Digest, Replacement, 431, 3311	716, 718
Hillyer v. St. Bartholomew's Hospital (Governors), [1909] 2 K.B. 820; 78 L.J.K.B. 958; sub nom. Hillyer v. London Corp. (St. Bartholomew's Hospital Governors) 101 L.T. 368; 73 J.P. 501; 34 Digest 550, 87	574, 575, 577, 578, 581, 582, 585, 586
Hindmarsh v. Charlton, (1861), 8 H.L. Cas. 160; 4 L.T. 125; 25 J.P. 339; 11 E.R. 388; 44 Digest 261, 882	921, 922
Hobbs v. Winchester Corp., [1910] 2 K.B. 471; 79 L.J.K.B. 1123; 102 L.T. 841; 74 J.P. 415; 14 Digest 36, 64	606, 611
Hobourn Aero Components Ltd.'s Air Raid Distress Fund, Re , [1946] 1 All E.R. 501; [1946] Ch. 194; 115 L.J.Ch. 158; 174 L.T. 428; 2nd Digest Supp.	31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 37, 40, 41, 823, 837

- Hodgkinson v. Fernie, (1857), 3 C.B.N.S. 189; 27 L.J.C.P. 66; 140 E.R. 712; 2 Digest 527, 1645 269, 273, 276, 277
- Hodgson, Re, [1913] 1 Ch. 34; 82 L.J.Ch. 31; 107 L.T. 607; 40 Digest 562, 1008 656, 657, 660
- Hogge v. Burgess, (1858), 3 H. & N. 293; 27 L.J.Ex. 318; 31 L.T.O.S. 119; 157 E.R. 482; 269, 276
- 2 Digest 529, 1658
- Holmes v. Penney, (1854), 9 Exch. 584; 23 L.J.Ex. 132; 22 L.T.O.S. 276; 156 E.R. 249; 592, 596
- 42 Digest 258, 2914
- Hontestroom, S.S. v. S.S. Sagaporack, S.S. Hontestroom v. S.S. Durham Castle, [1927] A.C. 87; 95 L.J.P. 153; 136 L.T. 33; Digest, Practice, 770, 3353 955, 957, 965
- Hood-Barre v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1946] 2 All E.R. 768; 176 L.T. 283; 27 Tax Cas. 385; 2nd Digest Supp. 733, 736, 737
- Hopes v. Hopes, [1948] 2 All E.R. 920; [1949] P. 227; [1949] L.J.R. 104; 113 J.P. 10; 2nd Digest Supp. 302, 305
- Hopwood v. Rolls Royce, Ltd., (1947), 176 L.T. 514; 2nd Digest Supp. 357, 359, 360
- Horton v. Horton, [1940] 3 All E.R. 380; [1940] P. 187; 109 L.J.P. 108; 163 L.T. 314; 2nd Digest Supp. 955, 957, 958, 966
- Horton v. London Graving Dock Co., Ltd., [1950] 1 All E.R. 180; [1950] 1 K.B. 421 91, 92
- Hosegood v. Hosegood, (1950), 66 T.L.R. 735 955, 958, 960, 961
- Hotchkin's Settled Estates, Re, (1887), 35 Ch.D. 41; 56 L.J.Ch. 445; 56 L.T. 244; 30 Digest 294, 208 972, 978
- Howard's Settled Estates, Re, [1892] 2 Ch. 233; 61 L.J.Ch. 311; 67 L.T. 156; 30 Digest 281, 66 971, 976, 979
- Hubbard (otherwise Rogers) v. Hubbard, [1901] P. 157; 70 L.J.P. 34; 84 L.T. 441; 27 Digest 520, 5623 315, 316, 318, 319, 320
- Hubbuck & Sons v. Wilkinson, Heywood & Clark, [1889] 1 Q.B. 86; 68 L.J.Q.B. 34; 79 L.T. 429; 32 Digest 209, 2599 332, 333
- Hubert v. Treherne, (1842), 3 Man. & G. 743; 11 L.J.C.P. 78; 133 E.R. 1338; 12 Digest, Replacement, 175, 1158 1043, 1044, 1048, 1049
- Hughes v. Bank of New Zealand, [1936] 3 All E.R. 975; 106 L.J.K.B. 309; 156 L.T. 153; affd., [1938] 1 All E.R. 778; [1938] A.C. 366; 107 L.J.K.B. 306; 158 L.T. 463; 21 Tax Cas. 472; Digest Supp. 146, 148
- Hughes v. Metropolitan Ry. Co., (1877), 2 App. Cas. 439; 46 L.J.Q.B. 583; 36 L.T. 932; 42 J.P. 421; 21 Digest 310, 1137 768, 769
- Hughes v. Percival, (1883), 8 App. Cas. 443; 52 L.J.Q.B. 719; 49 L.T. 189; 47 J.P. 772; 7 Digest 300, 240 575, 586
- Humphrey v. Bowers, (1929), 45 T.L.R. 297; Digest Supp. 427, 435
- Humphrey v. Williams (falsely calling herself Humphrey), (1860), 29 L.J.P.M. and A. 62; 27 Digest 405, 4043 615, 616
- Humphries v. Horne, (1844), 3 Hare 276; 67 E.R. 386; 40 Digest 197, 1646 1001, 1002, 1006, 1007, 1008
- Hunt v. Star Newspaper Co., Ltd., [1908] 2 K.B. 309; 77 L.J.K.B. 782; 98 L.T. 629; 32 Digest 139, 1702 332, 336, 337, 338, 340, 341
- Hunter v. Hunter, [1936] A.C. 222; 105 L.J.Ch. 97; 154 L.T. 513; Digest Supp. 22, 23, 27
- Huntly (Marchioness) v. Gaskell, [1905] 2 Ch. 656; 75 L.J.Ch. 66; 93 L.T. 785; Digest, Practice, 66, 570 1028, 1031
- Hutcheson v. Jones, (1817), 2 Madd. 124; 56 E.R. 281; 44 Digest 804, 6580 628
- Hyams v. Stuart King, [1908] 2 K.B. 696; 77 L.J.K.B. 794; 99 L.T. 424; 25 Digest 401, 58 518, 520, 521
- Hyman v. Hyman, [1929] A.C. 601; 98 L.J.P. 81; 141 L.T. 329; 93 J.P. 209; Digest Supp. 767, 768, 770, 771, 772, 774, 1088, 1090, 1091, 1092
- Income Tax Special Purposes Comrs. v. Pemsel, [1891] A.C. 531; 61 L.J.Q.B. 265; 65 L.T. 621; 55 J.P. 805; 3 Tax Cas. 53; 8 Digest 241, 1 31, 33, 38
- Indermaur v. Dames, (1866), L.R. 1 C.P. 274; Har. & Ruth. 243; 35 L.J.C.P. 184; 14 L.T. 484; affd., (1867), L.R. 2 C.P. 311; 36 L.J.C.P. 181; 16 L.T. 293; 31 J.P. 390; 36 Digest 35, 208 91, 92, 252, 256
- Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Bibby (J.) & Sons, Ltd., [1943] 2 All E.R. 419; 170 L.T. 8; 29 Tax Cas. 167; reversd., Bibby (J.) & Sons, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1944] 1 All E.R. 548; 170 L.T. 370; 29 Tax Cas. 167; affd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 667; 114 L.J.K.B. 353; 173 L.T. 17; 29 Tax Cas. 167; 2nd Digest Supp. 704, 705, 706, 707, 708, 709, 710
- Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Clark (F. A.) & Son, Ltd., [1941] 2 All E.R. 86, 651; [1941] 2 K.B. 270; 111 L.J.K.B. 1; 165 L.T. 275; 29 Tax Cas. 49 704, 705, 709
- Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Forrest, (1890), 15 App. Cas. 334; 60 L.J.Q.B. 281; 63 L.T. 36; 54 J.P. 772; 3 Tax Cas. 117; 39 Digest 299, 780 495, 500, 502, 503, 512, 513, 514, 516
- Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Scott, [1892] 2 Q.B. 152; 61 L.J.Q.B. 432; 67 L.T. 173; 56 J.P. 632; 3 Tax Cas. 134; 8 Digest 264, 265 495, 513, 517
- Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Scott's Trustees, 1918 S.C. 720; 55 S.L.R. 654; [1918] 2 S.L.T. 97; 21 Digest 15, 73 242, 248
- Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Westminster (Duke), [1936] A.C. 1; 104 L.J.K.B. 383; 153 L.T. 223; sub nom. Westminster (Duke) v. Inland Revenue Comrs., 19 Tax Cas. 490; Digest Supp. 77, 80, 82
- Insall v. Nottingham Corpn., [1948] 2 All E.R. 232; [1949] 1 K.B. 261; [1949] L.J.R. 156; 2nd Digest Supp. 152, 153, 157, 158
- Institution of Civil Engineers v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1932] 1 K.B. 149; 100 L.J.K.B. 705; 145 L.T. 553; 16 Tax Cas. 158; Digest Supp. 495, 502, 512, 513, 517
- Isaac v. Defriez, (1754), Amb. 595; 27 E.R. 387; 44 Digest 890, 7479 32, 38, 823, 825, 830, 840, 843
- Isherwood, Ex p., Re Knight, (1882), 22 Ch.D. 384; 52 L.J.Ch. 370; 48 L.T. 398; 35 Digest 328, 719 191, 193
- James, Re, [1932] 2 Ch. 25; 101 L.J.Ch. 265; 146 L.T. 528; Digest Supp. 528, 529, 530
- James v. Vane, (1860), 2 E. & E. 883; 29 L.J.Q.B. 169; 2 L.T. 281; 121 E.R. 330; 12 Digest 327, 2726 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411
- Jeffries v. Reynolds, (1882), 52 L.J.Q.B. 55; sub nom. Jeffries v. Reynolds, Ex p. Reynolds, 48 L.T. 358; 21 Digest 654, 2329 23, 25
- Jodrell v. Jodrell, (1851), 14 Beav. 397; 51 E.R. 339; 27 Digest 233, 2042 733, 739
- Johnson v. Edgware, etc., Ry. Co., (1866), 35 Beav. 480; 35 L.J.Ch. 322; 14 L.T. 45; 55 E.R. 982; 31 Digest 535, 6809 891, 998, 899
- Johnson v. Youden, [1950] 1 All E.R. 300; [1950] 1 K.B. 544 412, 414
- Johnstone v. Beattie, (1843), 10 Cl. & Fin. 42; 1 L.T.O.S. 250; 8 E.R. 657; 28 Digest 286, 1397 942, 948
- Jolley, Re, (1901), 17 T.L.R. 244; 21 Digest 33, 199 622, 623, 626
- Jones, Re, [1942] 1 All E.R. 642; [1942] Ch. 328; 111 L.J.Ch. 193; 167 L.T. 84; 2nd Digest Supp. 1096, 1097, 1098, 1099, 1100

Jones v. Davies, [1901] 1 K.B. 118; 70 L.J.Q.B. 38; 83 L.T. 412; 65 J.P. 39; 3 Digest 388, 266	355, 356
Jones v. Evans, [1945] 1 All E.R. 19; [1944] K.B. 582; 114 L.J.K.B. 29; 171 L.T. 138; 108 J.P. 170; 2nd Digest Supp.	355, 356
Jones v. Hulton (E.) & Co., [1909] 2 K.B. 444; 78 L.J.K.B. 937; 101 L.T. 330; 32 Digest 164, 1939	956, 962
Jones v. Newtown & Llanidloes Guardians, [1920] 3 K.B. 381; 89 L.J.K.B. 1161; 124 L.T. 23; 84 J.P. 237; 27 Digest 76, 601	1132, 1133
Jones v. Tyler, (1834), 1 Ad. & El. 522; 3 L.J.K.B. 166; 110 E.R. 1307; 29 Digest 12, 151 279, 284, 287, 291, 293
Jones v. Westcomb, (1711), Prec. Ch. 316; 24 E.R. 149; 44 Digest 1175, 10165 391, 392, 393, 394, 396, 397, 398, 399, 400, 401
Jones v. Whitehill, [1950] 1 All E.R. 71; [1950] 2 K.B. 204	60, 61
Jones v. Williams, (1767), Amb. 651; 27 E.R. 422; 8 Digest 244, 36	31, 33
Jones & Carter, Re, [1922] 2 Ch. 599; 91 L.J.Ch. 824; 127 L.T. 622; Digest Supp.	269, 273
Joseph v. Henry, (1850), 1 L.M. & P. 388; 19 L.J.Q.B. 369; 15 L.T.O.S. 210; 14 J.P. 755; 13 Digest 549, 1046	483, 489
Jozwiak v. Hierowski, [1948] 2 All E.R. 9; [1948] L.J.R. 1648; 2nd Digest Supp. 152, 154, 155, 156, 157, 159
Kafiristan, The, [1936] 3 All E.R. 563; 106 L.J.P. 11; affd. C.A., [1937] 1 All E.R. 40; [1937] P. 63; 106 L.J.P. 62; 156 L.T. 171; reversd. H.L., [1937] 3 All E.R. 747; 106 L.J.P. 91; 157 L.T. 439; sub nom. The Beaverford v. Kafiristan, [1938] A.C. 136; Digest Supp.	753, 754, 755, 756, 757
Kaslefsky v. Kaslefsky, [1950] 2 All E.R. 398; [1951] P. 38; 114 J.P. 404	955, 957, 958, 966, 967
Kearley v. Thomson, (1890), 24 Q.B.D. 742; 59 L.J.Q.B. 288; 63 L.T. 150; 54 J.P. 804; 12 Digest, Replacement, 318, 2453	93, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100
Keats v. Thompson, [1939] N.Z.L.R. 30; Digest Supp.	178, 183
Kellner's Will Trusts, Re, [1949] 2 All E.R. 774; [1949] Ch. 46; 2nd Digest Supp.	58, 539, 540
Kelly v. Kelly, (1869), L.R. 2 P. & D. 31; on appeal , (1870), L.R. 2 P. & D. 59; 39 L.J.P. & M. 28; 22 L.T. 308; 27 Digest 284, 2555	956, 958, 966
Kemp-Welch v. Kemp-Welch and Crymes, [1910] P. 233; 79 L.J.P. 92; 102 L.T. 787; 27 Digest 442, 4543	63, 66
Kendrick's Agreement, Re, [1948] 2 All E.R. 101; [1948] Ch. 430; [1948] L.J.R. 1332; 2nd Digest Supp.	166, 167, 169
Kent v. Elstob, (1802), 3 East. 18; 102 E.R. 502; 2 Digest 522, 1601	269, 276
Kestell v. Langmaid, [1949] 2 All E.R. 749; [1950] 1 K.B. 233; 2nd Digest Supp.	166, 168
King v. Cadogan (Earl), [1915] 1 K.B. 821; 84 L.J.K.B. 779; affd. [1915] 3 K.B. 485; 84 L.J.K.B. 2069; 113 L.T. 895	199, 201, 202
King v. Port of London Authority, [1920] A.C. 1; 88 L.J.K.B. 889; 121 L.T. 587; 34 Digest 434, 3548	644, 650, 652, 654, 655
Kitchen's Trustee v. Madders and Madders, [1949] 2 All E.R. 1079; 2nd Digest Supp.	210, 213
Knatchbull's Settled Estate, Re, (1885), 29 Ch.D. 588; 54 L.J.Ch. 1168; 53 L.T. 284; 30 Digest 281, 65	971, 973, 974
Knight v. Knight, [1925] Ch. 835; 95 L.J.Ch. 33; 133 L.T. 259; 42 Digest 304, 3382	601, 603
Laidlaw's (Sir Robert) Will Trusts, Re, (1935), unreported	32, 38
Lambert v. Thwaites, (1866), L.R. 2 Eq. 151; 35 L.J.Ch. 406; 14 L.T. 159; 37 Digest 478, 756	823, 828
Lamond v. Richard, [1897] 1 Q.B. 541; 66 L.J.Q.B. 315; 76 L.T. 141; 61 J.P. 260; 29 Digest 6, 53	279, 281, 283, 286, 289
Lancaster & Macnamara, Re, [1918] 2 K.B. 472; 87 L.J.K.B. 1250; 119 L.T. 440; 2 Digest 42, 232	321, 323, 325, 327, 329, 330
Lane v. Cotton, (1702), 12 Mod. Rep. 472; 1 Salk. 17; 88 E.R. 1458; 91 E.R. 17; 29 Digest 6, 48	280, 290
Langford Property Co., Ltd. v. Batten, [1950] 2 All E.R. 1079	107, 109
Langridge v. Levy, (1837), 2 M. & W. 519; 6 L.J.Ex. 137; 150 E.R. 863; affd. , (1838), 4 M. & W. 337; 150 E.R. 1458; sub nom. Levi v. Langridge, 1 Horn & H. 325; 7 L.J.Ex. 387; 35 Digest 51, 464	427, 434
Lassence v. Tierney, (1849), 1 Mac. & G. 551; 2 H. & Tw. 115; 15 L.T.O.S. 557; 41 E.R. 1379; 43 Digest 648, 790; 44 Digest 554, 3715	287, 240, 495, 496, 497, 503
Lauder v. Lauder, [1949] 1 All E.R. 76; [1949] P. 277; 2nd Digest Supp.	956, 958, 966, 967
Laurence v. Fox, (1859), 20 N.Y. 268	427, 448
Laurin, Re, (1927), 60 O.L.R. 409; Digest Supp.	942, 948
Lavender v. Diamints, Ltd., [1949] 1 All E.R. 532; [1949] 1 K.B. 585; [1949] L.J.R. 970; 2nd Digest Supp.	387, 388
Lawrie v. Lees, (1880), 14 Ch.D. 249; 49 L.J.Ch. 636; 42 L.T. 485; 44 J.P. 506; affd. , (1881), 7 App. Cas. 19; 51 L.J.Ch. 209; 46 L.T. 210; 31 Digest 172, 3049	416, 419, 420
Lawson, Re, [1914] 1 Ch. 682; 83 L.J.Ch. 519; 110 L.T. 573; 44 Digest 900, 7593	1093, 1094
Ledingham v. Bermejo Estancia Co., Ltd., Agar v. Bermejo Estancia Co., Ltd., [1947] 1 All E.R. 749; 2nd Digest Supp.	768, 770
Le Lievre v. Gould, [1893] 1 Q.B. 491; 62 L.J.Q.B. 353; 68 L.T. 626; 57 J.P. 484; 35 Digest 28, 187	426, 431, 432, 434, 437, 438, 439, 441, 442, 443, 444, 445, 446
L'Estrange v. Graucob (F.), Ltd., [1934] 2 K.B. 394; 103 L.J.K.B. 730; 152 L.T. 164; Digest Supp.	632, 633, 634, 635
Levy v. Goldhill & Co., [1917] 2 Ch. 297; 86 L.J.Ch. 693; 117 L.T. 442; 1 Digest 523, 1829	545, 551, 553
Lewis v. Hughes, [1916] 1 K.B. 831; 85 L.J.K.B. 1019; 114 L.T. 643; 80 J.P. 265; 31 Digest 272, 4165	891, 894
Lewis v. Purvis, (1947), 177 L.T. 267; 2nd Digest Supp.	661, 664
Liley v. Hey, (1842), 1 Harc 580; 11 L.J.Ch. 415; 66 E.R. 1162; 8 Digest 243, 25	823, 833, 840, 842
Limpus v. London General Omnibus Co., (1862), 1 H. & C. 526; 32 L.J.Ex. 34; 7 L.T. 641; 27 J.P. 147; 158 E.R. 993; 34 Digest 129, 939	364, 367
Lindsey County Council v. Marshall, [1936] 2 All E.R. 1076; [1937] A.C. 97; 105 L.J.K.B. 614; sub nom. Marshall v. Lindsey County Council, 155 L.T. 297; 100 J.P. 411; Digest Supp.	575, 582
Linnett v. Metropolitan Police Comr., [1946] 1 All E.R. 380; [1946] K.B. 290; 115 L.J.K.B. 513; 174 L.T. 178; 110 J.P. 153; 2nd Digest Supp.	412, 451
Lochgelly Iron & Coal Co., Ltd. v. M'Mullan, [1934] A.C. 1; 102 L.J.P.C. 123; 149 L.T. 526; 26 B.W.C.C. 463; Digest Supp.	1103, 1107, 1108, 1112, 1113, 1115, 1123, 1125
Lockharts v. Rosen (Bernard) & Co., [1922] 1 Ch. 433; 91 L.J.Ch. 321; 127 L.T. 18; 40 Digest 196, 1635	694, 700
London & Blackwall Ry. Co. v. Cross, (1886), 31 Ch.D. 354; 55 L.J.Ch. 315; 54 L.T. 309; 28 Digest 365, 25	926, 929

London & North Eastern Ry. Co. v. Berriman, [1946] 1 All E.R. 255; [1946] A.C. 278; 115 L.J.K.B. 124; 174 L.T. 151; 38 B.W.C.C. 109; 2nd Digest Supp. 636, 641, 683, 687, 1103. 1111, 1130
London & South Western Ry. Co. v. Gomm, (1882), 20 Ch.D. 562; 51 L.J.Ch. 530; 46 L.T. 449; 40 Digest 305, 2617	622, 623, 624
London Co-operative Society, Ltd. v. Southern Essex Assessment Committee, [1941] 3 All E.R. 252; [1942] 1 K.B. 53; 111 L.J.K.B. 113; 165 L.T. 409; 105 J.P. 399; 2nd Digest Supp. 683, 686
London Corpn. v. Cox, (1867), L.R. 2 H.L. 239; 36 L.J.Ex. 225; 16 Digest 101, 23	433, 438
London Corpn. v. Horner, (1914), 111 L.T. 512; 11 Digest 177, 554	332, 333
Long (Fred) & Sons, Ltd. v. Burgess, [1949] 2 All E.R. 484; [1950] 1 K.B. 115; 2nd Digest Supp.	141, 144
Lord Advocate v. Fleming, [1897] A.C. 145; 66 L.J.P.C. 41; 61 J.P. 692; sub nom. Lord Advocate v. Robertson, 76 L.T. 125; 21 Digest 87, 632	241, 245
Lord Advocate v. Hamilton's Trustees, 1942 S.C. 426; 2nd Digest Supp.	241, 247, 248
Lord Advocate v. Inzivar Estates, [1938] 2 All E.R. 424; [1938] A.C. 402; 107 L.J.P.C. 65; 159 L.T. 97; Digest Supp.	241, 245
Loveden v. Loveden, (1810), 2 Hag. Con. 1; 161 E.R. 648; 27 Digest 296, 2730	125, 138
Low v. Bouvier, [1891] 3 Ch. 82; 60 L.J.Ch. 594; 65 L.T. 533; 8 Digest 464, 354; 85 Digest 33, 254	427, 432, 433, 440, 446, 632, 634
Lucas, Re , [1922] 2 Ch. 52; 91 L.J.Ch. 480; 127 L.T. 272; Digest Supp.	775, 776
Lyle (B. S.), Lt. v. Chappell, (1931), T.L.R. 562; reversd. on other grounds, [1932] 1 K.B. 691; Digest Supp.	77, 82
Lyons v. Financial News, Ltd. (No. 1), (1909), 53 Sol. Jo. 671; 32 Digest 152, 1846	332, 342
M.-T. v. M.-T. & Official Solicitor, [1949] P. 331; [1949] L.J.R. 378; 2nd Digest Supp. 125, 128, 130, 131, 133, 136, 137
Macadam, Re , [1945] 2 All E.R. 664; [1946] Ch. 73; 115 L.J.Ch. 14; 173 L.T. 395; 2nd Digest Supp.	938
Mackenzie v. Alarids, [1905] A.C. 285; 40 Digest 498, 462	236, 238
Mackintosh v. Mackintosh, (1864), 2 Macph. (Ct. of Sess.) 1357; 38 Digest 55, 342 xx	43, 48
M'Lean v. Lefley (or M'Lean), 1947 S.C. 79; 2nd Digest Supp.	942, 948
Macmillan & Co., Ltd. v. Rees, [1946] 1 All E.R. 675; 175 L.T. 86; 2nd Digest Supp.	153, 157
McPherson v. McPherson, [1936] A.C. 177; 105 L.J.P.C. 41; 154 L.T. 221; Digest Supp.	63, 70, 71
McQuire v. Western Morning News Co., [1903] 2 K.B. 100; 72 L.J.K.B. 612; 88 L.T. 757; 32 Digest 151, 1826	332, 335, 337, 341
Madell v. Thomas & Co., [1891] 1 Q.B. 230; 60 L.J.Q.B. 227; 64 L.T. 9; 7 Digest 17, 75	186, 188, 189, 190
Magnhild (Owners) v. McIntyre Brothers & Co., [1920] 3 K.B. 321; 89 L.J.K.B. 1110; 124 L.T. 160; on appeal , [1921] 2 K.B. 97; 90 L.J.K.B. 527; 124 L.T. 771; 17 Digest 275, 896	801, 898
Mahmoud & Ispahani, Re , [1921] 2 K.B. 716; 90 L.J.K.B. 821; 125 L.T. 161; 12 Digest 271, 2220	636, 640
Mahon v. Osborne, [1939] 1 All E.R. 535; [1939] 2 K.B. 14; 108 L.J.K.B. 567; 160 L.T. 329; Digest Supp.	575, 588
Mahon v. Savage, (1803), 1 Sch. & Lef. 111; 44 Digest 890, 7473 iv	823, 832, 838, 839
Mainwaring v. Beevor, (1849), 8 Hare 44; 68 E.R. 266; 44 Digest 569, 3865	1065, 1070
Mangena v. Wright, [1909] 2 K.B. 958; 78 L.J.K.B. 879; 100 L.T. 960; 32 Digest 140, 1722	332, 339
Mann v. Mann, [1922] P. 238; 91 L.J.P. 204; 126 L.T. 222; 27 Digest 279, 2496	1088, 1091
Mann v. Merrill, [1945] 1 All E.R. 708; 114 L.J.K.B. 406; 173 L.T. 2; 2nd Digest Supp. 661, 663, 664
Manners v. Manners and Fortescue, [1936] 1 All E.R. 41; [1936] P. 117; 105 L.J.P. 26; 154 L.T. 271; Digest Supp.	63
Marryat, Re , [1948] 1 All E.R. 796; [1948] Ch. 293; [1948] L.J.R. 1237; 2nd Digest Supp. 1093, 1094
Marsh v. Marsh, [1945] A.C. 271; 2nd Digest Supp.	63, 71
Marshall v. Glanville (Glanville, Granville), [1917] 2 K.B. 87; 86 L.J.K.B. 767; 116 L.T. 560; 1 Digest 523, 1834	545, 551, 553, 556
Marshall v. London Passenger Transport Board, [1936] 3 All E.R. 83; Digest Supp.	1028, 1030, 1031
Mason v. Keeling, (1699), 1 Ld. Raym. 606; 91 E.R. 1305; 2 Digest 243, 274	262, 265
Matthews v. Matthews, [1932] P. 103; 101 L.J.P. 41; 147 L.T. 240; 96 J.P. 290; Digest Supp.	563, 565
Meier v. Meier, [1948] 1 All E.R. 161; [1948] P. 89; [1948] L.J.R. 436; 2nd Digest Supp.	63, 69, 70
Mercur v. Graves, (1872), L.R. 7 Q.B. 499; 41 L.J.Q.B. 212; 26 L.T. 551; 42 Digest 286, 3213	601, 605
Mervale v. Carson, (1887), 20 Q.B.D. 275; 58 L.T. 331; 52 J.P. 261; 32 Digest 152, 1837	332, 338
Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Coggins & Griffith (Liverpool), Ltd., [1946] 2 All E.R. 345; [1947] A.C. 1; 115 L.J.K.B. 465; 175 L.T. 270; 2nd Digest Supp.	575, 585, 586
Miley v. A.-G., [1918] 1 I.R. 455	495, 501, 515
Mills v. Mills, [1940] 2 All E.R. 254; [1940] P. 124; 109 L.J.P. 86; 163 L.T. 272; 2nd Digest Supp.	1088, 1091
Monk v. Warbey, [1935] 1 K.B. 75; 104 L.J.K.B. 153; 152 L.T. 194; Digest Supp.	122, 123
Montefiore v. Guedalla, [1903] 2 Ch. 723; 73 L.J.Ch. 13; 89 L.T. 472; 43 Digest 678, 1086	932, 935
Moore v. King, (1842), 3 Curt. 243; 2 Notes of Cases 45; 163 E.R. 716; 44 Digest 261, 884	920, 921, 922
Mordaunt v. Moncreiffe, (1874), L.R. 2 Sc. & Div. 374; 43 L.J.P. & M. 49; 30 L.T. 649; 39 J.P. 4; 27 Digest 384, 3770	125, 138
Morgan v. Shaw, (1817), 2 Mer. 138; 35 E.R. 892; 42 Digest 552, 1143	1001, 1005
Morgan's Will Trusts, Re , [1950] 1 All E.R. 1097; [1950] Ch. 637	58, 422, 423, 538, 539, 541
Morris v. Davies, (1837), 5 Cl. & Fin. 163; 7 E.R. 365; 3 Digest 359, 12	125, 133, 137, 138
Morris v. Wise, (1860), 2 F. & F. 51; 175 E.R. 955; 14 Digest 175, 1533	814, 815, 818
Morton v. Dixon (William), 1909 S.C. 807	43, 49, 52
Morton v. Morton, [1942] 1 All E.R. 273; 111 L.J.P. 33; 166 L.T. 164; 106 J.P. 139; 2nd Digest Supp.	563, 565
Mosley v. Fosset, (1598), 1 Roll. Abr. 4; 29 Digest 15, 197	280, 291
Mummery v. Mummery, [1942] 1 All E.R. 553; [1942] P. 107; 111 L.J.P. 58; 166 L.T. 343; 2nd Digest Supp.	301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306
Mytton v. Mytton, (1886), 11 P.D. 141; 57 L.T. 92; 50 J.P. 488; 27 Digest 285, 2561	956, 958
Napier Star, The , [1939] P. 330; 161 L.T. 285; Digest Supp.	1103, 1106, 1113
Nash v. Morley, (1842), 5 Beav. 177; 11 L.J.Ch. 336; 49 E.R. 545; 8 Digest 293, 710	823, 833
National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children v. Scottish National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, [1915] A.C. 207; 84 L.J.P.C. 29; 111 L.T. 869; 44 Digest 827, 6786	539, 541
Naylor v. Yearsley, (1860), 2 F. & F. 41; 175 E.R. 950; 1 Digest 522, 1819	545, 550, 556
Neale v. Del Soto, [1945] 1 All E.R. 191; [1945] K.B. 144; 114 L.J.K.B. 138; 172 L.T. 65; 2nd Digest Supp.	859, 861, 863
Neptune the Second The , (1814), 1 Dodds 467; 165 E.R. 1380; 41 Digest 696, 5284	575, 587
Newbould v. A.-G., [1931] P. 75; 100 L.J.P. 54; 144 L.T. 728; Digest Supp.	1098, 1039

Newen, Re , [1894] 2 Ch. 297; 63 L.J.Ch. 763; 70 L.T. 653; 58 J.P. 767; 43 Digest 678, 1085	932, 934, 937
Nicholson v. Willan, (1804), 5 East, 507; 102 E.R. 1164; 8 Digest 42, 252	280, 290
Noble v. Southern Ry. Co., [1940] 2 All E.R. 383; [1940] A.C. 583; 109 L.J.K.B. 509; 164 L.T. 1; 33 B.W.C.C. 176; 2nd Digest Supp.	269, 277
Nocton v. Ashburton (Lord), [1914] A.C. 932; 83 L.J.Ch. 784; 111 L.T. 641; 35 Digest 55, 493	426, 431, 432, 438, 440, 443, 444, 445
North & South Insurance Corp., Ltd. v. National Provincial Bank, Ltd., [1936] 1 K.B. 328; 105 L.J.K.B. 163; 154 L.T. 255; Digest Supp.	311, 312
Northwestern Utilities, Ltd. v. London Guarantee & Accident Co., Ltd., [1936] A.C. 108; 105 L.J.P.C. 18; 154 L.T. 89; Digest Supp.	43, 48
Nugent v. Vetzera, (1866), L.R. 2 Eq. 704; 35 L.J.Ch. 777; 15 T.L.R. 33; 30 J.P. 820; 28 Digest 288, 1410	942, 948
O'Brien v. Salisbury (Marquis), (1889), 54 J.P. 215; 32 Digest 172, 1009	332, 342
Old Gate Estates, Ltd. v. Toplis & Harding & Russell, [1939] 3 All E.R. 209; 161 L.T. 227; Digest Supp.	427, 433, 439, 443, 445
Oliver v. Davis, [1949] 2 All E.R. 353; [1949] 2 K.B. 727; [1949] L.J.R. 1661; 2nd Digest Supp.	768, 771
Olley v. Marlborough Court, Ltd., [1949] 1 All E.R. 127; [1949] 1 K.B. 532; [1949] L.J.R. 360; 2nd Digest Supp.	632, 633
Oppenheim v. Tobacco Securities Trust Co., Ltd., [1951] 1 All E.R. 31	823, 829, 837, 838
Orchard v. Bush & Co., [1898] 2 Q.B. 284; 67 L.J.Q.B. 650; 78 L.T. 557; 29 Digest 13, 164	279, 282, 283, 284, 286, 289
Orford, Re , [1896] 1 Ch. 257; 65 L.J.Ch. 253; 73 L.T. 681; 21 Digest 41, 257	623
Ousey v. Ousey & Atkinson, (1874), L.R. 3 P. & D. 223; 43 L.J.P. & M. 35; 30 L.T. 911; 27 Digest 322, 3004	724, 727, 728
Page v. Midland Ry. Co., [1894] 1 Ch. 11; 63 L.J.Ch. 126; 70 L.T. 14; 40 Digest 282, 2450	694, 699
Parr v. A.-G., [1926] A.C. 239; 95 L.J.K.B. 417; 134 L.T. 321; Digest Supp.	241, 246
Parsons v. Equitable Investment Co., Ltd., [1916] 2 Ch. 527; 85 L.J.Ch. 761; 115 L.T. 194; 7 Digest 49, 256	77, 80, 82
Partington v. A.-G., (1869), L.R. 4 H.L. 100; 38 L.J.Ex. 205; 21 L.T. 370; 18 Digest 35, 344	2, 13, 77, 81
Parvin v. Morton Machine Co., Ltd., 1950 S.C. 371	683, 686, 688, 689
Pasley v. Freeman, (1789), 3 Term. Rep. 51; 100 E.R. 450; 35 Digest 25, 763	427, 431, 432
Pearson v. Rose & Young, Ltd., [1950] 2 All E.R. 1027; [1951] 1 K.B. 275	1063
Peek v. North Staffordshire Ry. Co., (1863), 10 H.L. Cas. 473; 32 L.J.Q.B. 241; 8 L.T. 768; 11 E.R. 1109; 8 Digest 57, 381	280, 290
Peek v. Peek, [1947] 2 All E.R. 578; [1948] P. 46; [1948] L.J.R. 833; affmd. , [1948] 2 All E.R. 297; 2nd Digest Supp.	63, 66, 69
Penang and General Investment Trust, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1943] 1 All E.R. 514; [1943] A.C. 486; 112 L.J.K.B. 356; 169 L.T. 93; 25 Tax Cas. 219; 2nd Digest Supp.	2, 14
Penton v. Barnett, [1898] 1 Q.B. 276; 67 L.J.Q.B. 11; 77 L.T. 645; 31 Digest 484, 6327	416, 417, 421
Perceival, Re , (1888), 59 L.T. 21; 44 Digest 328, 7595	376, 378, 379, 380, 381, 383
Perrott (J. F.) & Co., Ltd. v. Cohen, [1950] 2 All E.R. 939	768, 770
Petty v. Petty, [1943] 2 All E.R. 511; [1943] P. 101; 112 L.J.P. 97; 169 L.T. 224; 2nd Digest Supp.	63, 69
Pew v. Pew, Jan. 30, 1951 (unreported)	956, 963, 964, 965
Phillips v. Copping, [1935] 1 K.B. 15; 104 L.J.K.B. 78; 152 L.T. 175; Digest Supp.	111, 113, 114
Phillips v. Hallahan, [1925] 1 K.B. 756; 94 L.J.K.B. 694; 133 L.T. 236; 31 Digest 559, 7062	661, 663, 664, 666
Pickard v. Smith, (1861), 10 C.B.N.S. 470; 4 L.T. 470; 142 E.R. 535; 34 Digest 162, 1264	575, 587
Pidgeon v. Legg, (1857), 29 L.T.O.S. 166; 21 J.P. 743; 29 Digest 3, 5	280, 289
Pilling v. Abergele Urban District Council, [1950] 1 All E.R. 76; [1950] 1 K.B. 636; 114 J.P. 69	174, 176
Point of Ayr Collieries, Ltd. v. Lloyd-George, [1943] 2 All E.R. 546; 2nd Digest Supp.	983, 990, 999
Polemias & Furness, Withy & Co., Ltd., Re , [1921] 3 K.B. 560; 90 L.J.K.B. 1353; 126 L.T. 154; 41 Digest 419, 2620	683, 690, 691, 692
Poole v. National Bank of China, Ltd., [1907] A.C. 229; 76 L.J.Ch. 458; 96 L.T. 889; 9 Digest 149, 842	882, 883, 884, 885
Pope v. Great Eastern Ry. Co., (1866), L.R. 3 Eq. 171; 36 L.J.Ch. 60; 15 L.T. 239; 40 Digest 188, 1573	1001, 1005
Porter (William) & Co., Ltd., Re , [1937] 2 All E.R. 361; Digest Supp.	768, 770
Pratt v. Pratt, [1939] 3 All E.R. 437; [1939] A.C. 417; 108 L.J.P. 97; 161 L.T. 49; Digest Supp.	1131, 1133, 1135
Prince v. Prince, [1950] 2 All E.R. 375	63, 69, 71
Pringle v. Gloag, (1879), 10 Ch.D. 676; 48 L.J.Ch. 380; 40 L.T. 512; 42 Digest 284, 3191	601, 603
Prinsep v. Prinsep, [1929] P. 225; 98 L.J.P. 105; 141 L.T. 220; Digest Supp.	308, 309, 315, 316, 319
Proclamations' Case, (1611), 12 Co. Rep. 74; 77 E.R. 1352; 11 Digest 503, 55	983, 999
Prout v. Hunter, [1924] 2 K.B. 736; 93 L.J.K.B. 993; 132 L.T. 193; 31 Digest 557, 7040	153, 156
Puddephatt v. Leith (No. 2), [1916] 2 Ch. 168; 85 L.J.Ch. 543; 114 L.T. 1159; 42 Digest 284, 3195	601, 603, 605
Pugh, Re , [1943] 2 All E.R. 361; [1943] Ch. 387; 112 L.J.Ch. 311; 169 L.T. 284; 2nd Digest Supp.	373, 374
Pulford v. Pulford, [1923] P. 18; 92 L.J.P. 14; 128 L.T. 256; 27 Digest 307, 2846	302, 304
R. v. Armagh JJ., [1897] 2 I.R. 57; 30 I.L.T. 47; 30 Digest 68, c	252, 254
R. v. Barnett, etc., Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Millman, [1950] 2 All E.R. 216; [1950] 2 K.B. 506; 114 J.P. 390	195, 198, 199, 202
R. v. Barnett, etc., Rent Tribunal. Ex p. Reeds Investments, Ltd., [1950] 2 All E.R. 848; 114 J.P. 505	635, 636, 642
R. v. Beamon, [1948] 1 All E.R. 947; 112 J.P. 302; 2nd Digest Supp.	491
R. v. Bennett, R. v. Newton, (1913), 9 Cr. App. Rep. 146; 14 Digest 506, 5590	804, 805
R. v. Bolton, (1841), 1 Q.B. 66; 10 L.J.M.C. 49; 5 J.P. 370; 113 E.R. 1054; 16 Digest 110, 94; 16 Digest 418, 2775	269, 275, 483, 487
R. v. Brighton and Area Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Marine Parade Estates (1936), Ltd., [1950] 1 All E.R. 946; [1950] 2 K.B. 410; 114 J.P. 242	195, 198, 483, 486
R. v. Chapman, [1931] 2 K.B. 606; 100 L.J.K.B. 562; 146 L.T. 120; 95 J.P. 205; Digest Supp.	914, 915
R. v. City of London, etc., Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Honig, [1951] 1 All E.R. 195; 115 J.P. 42	482, 485, 486, 490
R. v. Clifford, [1939] 1 All E.R. 352; Digest Supp.	914, 916
R. v. Collingwood, (1848), 12 Q.B. 681; 17 L.J.M.C. 168; 12 L.T.O.S. 105; 116 E.R. 1025; 3 Digest 388, 264	355, 356

	PAGE
R. v. Coney , (1882), 8 Q.B.D. 534; 51 L.J.M.C. 66; 46 L.T. 307; 46 J.P. 404; 15 Digest 645, 6870	464, 466, 467
R. v. County of London Quarter Sessions, Ex p. Metropolitan Police Comr. , [1948] 1 All E.R. 72; [1948] 1 K.B. 670; [1948] L.J.R. 472; 112 J.P. 118; 2nd Digest Supp.	232, 233
R. v. Fitzgerald , (1948), unreported	204, 206
R. v. Fulham, Hammersmith and Kensington Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Philippe , [1950] 2 All E.R. 211; 114 J.P. 384	195, 198, 199, 202
R. v. Goodwin , [1944] 1 All E.R. 506; [1944] K.B. 518; 113 L.J.K.B. 476; 171 L.T. 14; 108 J.P. 159; 2nd Digest Supp.	1101
R. v. Grant , [1936] 2 All E.R. 1156; 106 L.J.K.B. 9; 155 L.T. 209; 100 J.P. 324; Digest Supp.	29, 231
R. v. Hackney, Islington and Stoke Newington Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Keats , [1950] 2 All E.R. 138; 114 J.P. 359	482, 484, 485, 486, 487, 490
R. v. Hall , [1891] 1 Q.B. 747; 60 L.J.M.C. 124; 64 L.T. 394; 14 Digest 206, 1867	917, 919
R. v. Hampstead and St. Pancras Furnished Houses Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Ascot Lodge, Ltd. , [1947] 2 All E.R. 12; [1947] K.B. 973; [1947] L.J.R. 1003; 176 L.T. 560; 111 J.P. 349; 2nd Digest Supp.	195, 198
R. v. Higgins , [1947] 2 All E.R. 619; [1948] 1 K.B. 165; [1948] L.J.R. 442; 112 J.P. 27; 2nd Digest Supp.	279, 283, 286, 289
R. v. Hornby & Peaple , [1946] 2 All E.R. 487; 175 L.T. 518; 110 J.P. 391; 2nd Digest Supp.	493, 494
R. v. Income Tax Special Purposes Comrs. , (1888), 21 Q.B.D. 313; 53 J.P. 84; sub nom. R. v. Income Tax Special Comrs., Ex p. Cape Copper Mining Co., Ltd. , 57 L.J.Q.B. 513; 59 L.T. 455; 2 Tax Cas. 332; 28 Digest 97, 680	195, 197, 198, 483, 485, 487
R. v. Jones , [1896] 1 Q.B. 4; 65 L.J.M.C. 28; 73 L.T. 584; 60 J.P. 89; 15 Digest 753, 8122	493, 494
R. v. Kakelo , [1923] 2 K.B. 793; 92 L.J.K.B. 997; 129 L.T. 477; 87 J.P. 184; Digest Supp.	204, 206, 917, 919
R. v. Kysant (Lord) , [1932] 1 K.B. 442; 101 L.J.K.B. 97; 146 L.T. 21; Digest Supp.	632, 634
R. v. Lincolnshire JJ., Ex p. Brett , [1926] 2 K.B. 192; 95 L.J.K.B. 827; 135 L.T. 141; 90 J.P. 149; Digest Supp.	195, 197, 483, 485, 489
R. v. London County Keepers of the Peace & JJ. , (1890), 25 Q.B.D. 357; sub nom. R. v. London JJ., Ex p. Fulham Vestry , 59 L.J.M.C. 146; 63 L.T. 243; 55 J.P. 56; 26 Digest 460, 1760	1032, 1033
R. v. London Sessions Appeal Committee, Ex p. Beaumont, ante , p. 232	344, 345
R. v. Luellin , (1701), 12 Mod. Rep. 445; 88 E.R. 1441; 29 Digest 9, 105	279, 281, 286, 288
R. v. Luffe , (1807), 8 East 193; 103 E.R. 316; 3 Digest 388, 263	355, 356
R. v. Middlesex Quarter Sessions, Ex p. Director of Public Prosecutions , [1950] 1 All E.R. 916; [1950] 2 K.B. 589; 114 J.P. 276	344
R. v. Nat Bell Liquors, Ltd. , [1922] 2 A.C. 128; 91 L.J.P.C. 146; 127 L.T. 437; 16 Digest 419, 2795	269, 274, 276, 277
R. v. Neal , [1949] 2 All E.R. 438; [1949] 2 K.B. 590; 113 J.P. 468; 2nd Digest Supp.	204, 208
R. v. O'Neill , [1948] 2 All E.R. 761; 112 J.P. 432; 2nd Digest Supp.	491
R. v. Paddington & St. Marylebone Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Bell London & Provincial Properties, Ltd. , [1949] 1 All E.R. 720; [1949] 1 K.B. 666; 113 J.P. 209; 2nd Digest Supp.	983, 1000
R. v. Parkin , [1949] 2 All E.R. 651; [1950] 1 K.B. 155; 113 J.P. 509; 2nd Digest Supp.	1101, 1102
R. v. Pilkington , (1853), 2 E. & B. 546; 21 L.T.O.S. 165; 118 E.R. 872; sub nom. Ex p. Grimes , 22 L.J.M.C. 153; 3 Digest 388, 265	355, 356
R. v. Rymer , (1877), 2 Q.B.D. 136; 46 L.J.M.C. 108; 35 L.T. 774; 41 J.P. 199; 29 Digest 9, 108	252, 254, 279, 283, 286
R. v. Scoffin , [1930] 1 K.B. 741; 99 L.J.K.B. 521; 143 L.T. 121; Digest Supp.	914, 916
R. v. Sharman (alias Sutherland) , (1913), 9 Cr. App. Rep. 130; 14 Digest 506, 5589	804, 805
R. v. Sheridan , [1936] 2 All E.R. 883; [1937] 1 K.B. 223; 106 L.J.K.B. 6; 155 L.T. 207; 100 J.P. 319; Digest Supp.	20, 231
R. v. Sherman (H.), Ltd. , [1949] 2 All E.R. 207; [1949] 2 K.B. 674; 113 J.P. 412; 2nd Digest Supp.	627
R. v. Wilkes , (1769), 4 Burr. 2527; 98 E.R. 327; sub nom. Wilkes v. R. , 4 Bro. Parl. Cas. 360; 2 E.R. 244; 14 Digest 333, 3524	491, 492
R. v. Wilkinson & Marsden , (1821), Russ. & Ry. 470; 15 Digest 900, 9877	361, 362, 363
Racecourse Betting Control Board v. Secretary of State for Air , [1944] 1 All E.R. 60; [1944] Ch. 114; 113 L.J.Ch. 129; 170 L.T. 29; 2nd Digest Supp.	269, 278, 276, 277
Rawlings v. General Trading Co. , [1921] 1 K.B. 635; 90 L.J.K.B. 404; 124 L.T. 562; Digest Supp.	917, 919
Rayner, Re , (1920), 89 L.J.Ch. 369; 122 L.T. 577; 84 J.P. 61; Digest Supp.	31, 32, 34, 37, 40
Reed v. Braithwaite , (1871), L.R. 11 Eq. 514; 40 L.J.Ch. 355; 24 L.T. 351; 44 Digest 1153, 9977	467, 468
Rees d. Mears v. Perrot , (1830), 4 C. & P. 230; 172 E.R. 683; 31 Digest 453, 5998	141, 142, 143
Regional Properties, Ltd. v. Frankschwerth , [1951] 1 All E.R. 178	683, 689
Reid v. Cupper , [1915] 2 K.B. 147; 84 L.J.K.B. 573; 112 L.T. 573; 42 Digest 284, 3794	600, 601, 603, 604, 605
Rekstin v. Severo Sibirsk Gosudarstvennoe Akcionerhoe Obschestro Komseverputi & Bank for Russian Trade, Ltd. , [1933] 1 K.B. 47; 102 L.J.K.B. 16; 147 L.T. 231; Digest Supp.	296, 299
Remon v. City of London Real Property Co. , [1921] 1 K.B. 49; 89 L.J.K.B. 1105; 123 L.T. 617; 31 Digest 556, 7032	16, 18
Reynolds v. Austin (G. H.) & Sons, Ltd. , [1951] 1 All E.R. 606; 115 J.P. 192	1017, 1020
Keynolds v. Howell , (1873), L.R. 8 Q.B. 398; 42 L.J.Q.B. 181; 29 L.T. 209; 42 Digest 48, 397	925, 926, 928, 931
Rhodes v. Cornford , [1947] 2 All E.R. 601; 2nd Digest Supp.	178
Rhondda's (Viscountess) Claim , [1922] 2 A.C. 339; 92 L.J.P.C. 81; 128 L.T. 155; 42 Digest 613, 137	668, 679
Ricclip Parish v. Henden Parish , (1698), 5 Mod. Rep. 416; 87 E.R. 739; 37 Digest 299, 995	269, 276, 277
Richards v. Goskar , [1936] 3 All E.R. 839; [1937] A.C. 304; 106 L.J.K.B. 85; 156 L.T. 52; Digest Supp.	644, 654
Rickards (Charles), Ltd. v. Oppenheim , [1950] 1 All E.R. 420; [1950] 1 K.B. 618	768, 770
Riddell v. Reid , [1942] 2 All E.R. 161; [1943] A.C. 1; 111 L.J.P.C. 65; 167 L.T. 301; 2nd Digest Supp.	1103, 1111, 1115
Roberts v. Jones , [1946] 2 All E.R. 678; [1947] K.B. 221; [1947] L.J.R. 606; 176 L.T. 33; 2nd Digest Supp.	153, 157
Roberts v. Massey , (1807), 13 Ves. 561; 33 E.R. 404; 40 Digest 200, 1669	1002, 1008
Robertson v. Minister of Pensions , [1948] 2 All E.R. 767; [1949] 1 K.B. 227; [1949] L.J.R. 323; 2nd Digest Supp.	768, 769, 770, 772, 773
Robins & Co. v. Gray , 2 Q.B. 501; 65 L.J.Q.B. 44; 73 L.T. 252; 59 J.P. 741; 29 Digest 19, 240	253, 259
Robson v. Eaton , (1785), 1 Term Rep. 62; 99 E.R. 973; 42 Digest 63, 559	926, 928

	PAGE
Roe v. Russell, [1928] 2 K.B. 117; 97 L.J.K.B. 290; 138 L.T. 253; 92 J.P. 81; Digest Supp.	178, 180
Rogers' Question, Re , [1948] 1 All E.R. 328; 2nd Digest Supp.	802, 803
Roos v. Stent, (1909), T.S. 988; 32 Digest 44, f	332, 336, 341
Ross v. Ross, [1950] 1 All E.R. 654; [1950] P. 160	1088, 1092
Royal College of Surgeons of England, Re , [1899] 1 Q.B. 871; 68 L.J.Q.B. 613; 80 L.T. 611; sub nom. Royal College of Surgeons of England v. Inland Revenue Comrs., 4 Tax Cas. 344; 39 Digest 299, 1781	495, 497, 500, 501, 503, 511, 513, 516, 517
Rudler v. Franks, [1947] K.B. 530; [1947] L.J.R. 658; 176 L.T. 326; 111 J.P. 190; 2nd Digest Supp.	229, 230
Rush v. Matthews, [1926] 1 K.B. 492; 95 L.J.K.B. 409; 134 L.T. 571; 31 Digest 573, 7201	220, 224
Rushbrook v. Rushbrook, [1939] 4 All E.R. 73; [1940] P. 24; 109 L.J.P. 1; 162 L.T. 222; 2nd Digest Supp.	1131, 1133
Russell v. Russell, [1895] P. 315; 64 L.J.P. 105; 73 L.T. 295; on appeal , [1897] A.C. 395; 66 L.J.P. 122; 77 L.T. 249; 61 J.P. 771; 27 Digest 318, 2960	724, 727
Russell v. Russell, [1897] A.C. 395; 66 L.J.P. 122; 77 L.T. 249; 61 J.P. 771; 27 Digest 291, 2661	956, 963
Russell v. Russell, [1924] A.C. 687; 93 L.J.P. 97; 131 L.T. 482; Digest Supp.	125, 126, 130, 133
Russell & Harding, Re , (1922), 128 L.T. 476; Digest Supp.	321, 331
Rylands v. Fletcher, (1868), L.R. 3 H.L. 330; 37 L.J.Ex. 161; 19 L.T. 220; 33 J.P. 70; 36 Digest 187, 311	1079, 1086
Sadd v. Griffin, [1908] 2 K.B. 510; 77 L.J.K.B. 775; 99 L.T. 502; 42 Digest 156, 1553 592, 595, 597, 598
Salomon v. Salomon & Co., Salomon & Co. v. Salomon, [1897] A.C. 22; 66 L.J.Ch. 35; 75 L.T. 426; 42 Digest 622, 225	806, 808, 810
Sampson, Re , [1906] 1 Ch. 435; 75 L.J.Ch. 302; 94 L.T. 241; 43 Digest 681, 1110	932, 935, 937
Samuel v. Salmon & Gluckstein, Ltd., [1945] 2 All E.R. 520; [1946] Ch. 8; 115 L.J.Ch. 103; 173 L.T. 358; 2nd Digest Supp.	220, 224
Sanders v. Spencer, (1566), 3 Dyer 266b; 73 E.R. 591; 29 Digest 13, 173	279, 285, 292
Scarborough v. Cosgrove, [1905] 2 K.B. 805; 74 L.J.K.B. 892; 93 L.T. 530; 3 Digest 83, 187	252, 254, 258
Schneider v. Norris, (1814), 2 M. & S. 286; 105 E.R. 388; 12 Digest, Replacement, 175, 1153 1044, 1045, 1046
Scott v. Avery, (1856), 5 H.L. Cas. 811; 25 L.J.Ex. 308; 28 L.T.O.S. 207; 10 E.R. 1121; 2 Digest 350, 263	1021, 1023
Scott v. Brown, Doering, McNab & Co., Slaughter & May v. Brown, Doering, McNab & Co., [1892] 2 Q.B. 724; 61 L.J.Q.B. 738; 67 L.T. 782; 57 J.P. 213; 12 Digest, Replacement, 267, 2060	93, 94
Scott v. London Dock Co., (1865), 3 H. & C. 596; 34 L.J.Ex. 220; 13 L.T. 148; 159 E.R. 665; 36 Digest 91, 601	575, 581
Scott v. Scott, [1921] P. 107; 90 L.J.P. 171; 124 L.T. 619; 27 Digest 510, 5486	768, 771, 773, 774
Seabrook v. Mervyn, [1947] 1 All E.R. 295; 2nd Digest Supp.	152, 153, 155, 156, 158, 159
Sealey v. Tandy, [1902] 1 K.B. 296; 71 L.J.K.B. 41; 85 L.T. 459; 66 J.P. 19; 29 Digest 3, 11	252, 254
Searle v. Wallbank, [1947] 1 All E.R. 12; [1947] A.C. 341; [1947] L.J.R. 258; 176 L.T. 104; 2nd Digest Supp.	261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268
Sechiari, Re , [1950] 1 All E.R. 417	869, 871
Shackleton v. Greenhalgh, [1950] 2 All E.R. 1223	859, 862, 863, 864
Shearman v. Pollard, [1950] 1 All E.R. 976; [1950] 2 K.B. 43	1035, 1036
Sheffield Corp'n. v. Luford, Same v. Morrell, [1929] 2 K.B. 180; 98 L.J.K.B. 512; 141 L.T. 265; 93 J.P. 235; Digest Supp.	820, 821
Sherborne's (Lord) Settled Estate, Re , [1929] 1 Ch. 345; 98 L.J.Ch. 273; 141 L.T. 87; Digest Supp.	972, 978
Sheras v. De Rutzen, [1895] 1 Q.B. 918; 64 L.J.M.C. 218; 72 L.T. 839; 59 J.P. 440; 14 Digest 38, 80	606, 609, 610, 611, 612
Shields (John) & Co. (Perth), Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., (1950), 100 L.Jo. 399; L. (E.P.T.) 96	704, 710
Shiels v. Blackburne, (1789), 1 Hy. Bl. 158; 126 E.R. 94; 1 Digest 435, 1267	427, 433
Short v. Henderson, Ltd., (1946), 115 L.J.P.C. 41; 174 L.T. 417; 39 B.W.C.C. 62; 2nd Digest Supp.	369, 371
Sickert v. Sickert, [1899] P. 278; 68 L.J.P. 114; 81 L.T. 495; 27 Digest 315, 2930	956, 961
Sidebotham, Ex p. , Re Sidebotham, (1880), 14 Ch.D. 458; 49 L.J.Bcy. 41; 42 L.T. 783; 4 Digest 225, 2114	1032, 1033
Signy v. Abbey National Building Society, [1944] 1 All E.R. 448; [1944] K.B. 449; 113 L.J.K.B. 486; 170 L.T. 238; 2nd Digest Supp.	152, 153, 157, 159
Simmons v. Heath Laundry Co., [1910] 1 K.B. 543; 79 L.J.K.B. 395; 102 L.T. 210; 3 B.W.C.C. 200; 34 Digest 21, 15	575, 579
Skeats' Settlement, Re , (1889), 42 Ch.D. 522; 58 L.J.Ch. 656; 61 L.T. 500; 43 Digest 678, 1034	932, 933, 935, 937
Skinner v. Geary, [1931] 2 K.B. 546; 100 L.J.K.B. 718; 145 L.T. 675; 95 J.P. 194; Digest Supp.	178, 180, 181
Slim v. Croucher, (1860), 1 De G.F. & J. 518; 29 L.J.Ch. 273; 2 L.T. 103; 45 E.R. 462; 35 Digest 34, 262	426, 431, 432
Small v. Attwood, (1838), 3 Y. & C. Ex. 105; 160 E.R. 633; 40 Digest 349, 2964 1001, 1002, 1006, 1008
Smith, Re , (1858), 3 H. & N. 227; 157 E.R. 455; sub nom. , Ex p. Smith, 27 L.J.M.C. 186; 31 L.T.O.S. 87; 22 J.P. 450; 33 Digest 361, 707	412, 413
Smith v. Baker & Sons, [1891] A.C. 325; 60 L.J.Q.B. 683; 65 L.T. 467; 55 J.P. 660; 36 Digest 95, 633	43, 54
Smith v. Cook, (1875), 1 Q.B.D. 79; 45 L.J.Q.B. 122; 33 L.T. 1722; 40 J.P. 247; 2 Digest 253, 345	262, 266
Smith v. London Transport Executive, [1949] 2 All E.R. 295; [1949] Ch. 685; 2nd Digest Supp. aff'd. , H.L., ante , p. 667	806, 810, 812
Smith v. Martin & Kingston-upon-Hull Corp'n., [1911] 2 K.B. 775; 80 L.J.K.B. 1256; 105 L.T. 281; 75 J.P. 433; 34 Digest 40, 163	575, 578, 586
Smith v. Mather, [1948] 1 All E.R. 704; [1948] 2 K.B. 212; [1948] L.J.R. 1209; 2nd Digest Supp.	141, 144
Smith v. River Douglas Catchment Board, [1949] 2 All E.R. 179; 113 J.P. 388; sub nom. Smith & Snipes Hall Farm, Ltd. v. River Douglas Catchment Board, [1949] 2 K.B. 500; 2nd Digest Supp.	426, 431
Smith v. Smith, [1945] 1 All E.R. 584; 114 L.J.P. 30; 173 L.T. 8; 2nd Digest Supp.	315, 318
Smith, Coney & Barrett v. Becker, Gray & Co., [1916] 2 Ch. 86; 84 L.J.Ch. 865; 112 L.T. 914; 2 Digest 379, 420	1022, 1024
Solicitor, Re A., (1883), 27 Sol. Jo. 683; 42 Digest 399, 4503	592, 596
Solicitor, Re A., [1936] 1 All E.R. 491; [1936] 1 K.B. 523; 105 L.J.K.B. 376; 154 L.T. 621; Digest Supp.	592, 597, 599

Solicitor, Re A , [1943] 1 All E.R. 157; [1943] Ch. 48; 112 L.J.Ch. 73; 168 L.T. 127; 2nd Digest Supp.	592, 598, 599
Somerset v. Hart, (1884), 12 Q.B.D. 360; 53 L.J.M.C. 77; 48 J.P. 327; 14 Digest 43, 122	412, 414, 606, 610
Somerset v. Wade, [1894] 1 Q.B. 574; 63 L.J.M.C. 126; 70 L.T. 452; 58 J.P. 231; 14 Digest 38, 79	412, 414
Somerset County Council, Ex p. , (1899), 58 L.J.Q.B. 513; 61 L.T. 512; sub nom. Re Somerset County Council , 54 J.P. 182; 33 Digest 107, 719	1041, 1042
Spiller v. Maude, (1881), 32 Ch.D. 158 n; 8 Digest 348, 1412	32, 38, 823, 837
Squire v. Squire, [1948] 2 All E.R. 51; [1949] P. 51; [1948] L.J.R. 1345; 112 J.P. 319; 2nd Digest Supp.	956, 957, 958, 961, 962
Staffs Motor Guarantee, Ltd. v. British Wagon Co., Ltd., [1934] 2 K.B. 305; 103 L.J.K.B. 613; 151 L.T. 396; Digest Supp.	186, 189
Stagg v. Brickett, [1951] 1 All E.R. 152	210, 215
Standing v. Bowring, (1885), 31 Ch.D. 282; 55 L.J.Ch. 218; 54 L.T. 191; 17 Digest 214, 267	296, 299
Standingford v. Probert, [1949] 2 All E.R. 861; [1950] 1 K.B. 377; 2nd Digest Supp.	88, 89
Stephens v. Watson, (1702), 1 Salk. 45; 91 E.R. 44; sub nom. , Watson's Case, (1701), 3 Salk. 26; 91 E.R. 26; 30 Digest 81, 633	279, 288
Stepney Borough Council v. Joffe, [1949] 1 All E.R. 256; [1949] 1 K.B. 599; [1949] L.J.R. 561; 113 J.P. 124; 2nd Digest Supp.	1032, 1033
Stevens v. Tirard, [1939] 4 All E.R. 186; [1940] 1 K.B. 204; 109 L.J.K.B. 202; 161 L.T. 400; 23 Tax Cas. 321; 2nd Digest Supp.	733, 735, 740, 741
Stimpson's Trusts, Re , [1931] 2 Ch. 77; 100 L.J.Ch. 312; 145 L.T. 249; Digest Supp.	656, 658, 659
Stone v. Stone & Brownrigg, (1864), 3 Sw. & Tr. 372; 33 L.J.P.M. & A. 95; 10 L.T. 140; 164 E.R. 1319; 27 Digest 516, 5551	815, 817
Stott v. Shaw & Lee, [1928] 2 K.B. 26; 97 L.J.K.B. 556; 139 L.T. 302; Digest Supp.	77, 80, 82
Strauss v. Francis, (1867), 4 F. & F. 1107; 15 L.T. 674; 32 Digest 147, 1783	332, 335
Stuart v. Bute (Marquis), Stuart v. Moore, (1861), 9 H.L. Cas. 440; 4 L.T. 382; 11 E.R. 799; 23 Digest 337, 2045	942, 948
Sudeley (Lord) v. A.-G., [1897] A.C. 11; 66 L.J.Q.B. 21; 75 L.T. 398; 61 J.P. 420; 21 Digest 122, 917	147, 150, 151
Sudeley's (Lord) Settled Estates, Re , (1887), 37 Ch.D. 123; 57 L.J.Ch. 182; 58 L.T. 7; 30 Digest 293, 199	971, 974, 975, 976, 977
Sweeny v. Sweeny, (1876), I.R. 10 C.L. 375; 31 Digest 453, q	141, 142
Swift v. Barrett, (1940), 163 L.L.B. 154; 104 J.P. 239; 2nd Digest Supp.	1050, 1051
Sydney Municipal Council v. Campbell, [1925] A.C. 338; 133 L.T. 63; sub nom. Sydney Municipal Council v. Hughes Motor Service, Ltd., 94 L.J.P.C. 65; Digest Supp.	983, 986, 992, 1000
Symons v. Rees, (1876), 1 Ex.D. 416; 13 Digest 470, 192	483, 488
Syng v. Syng, [1901] P. 317; 70 L.J.P. 97; 85 L.T. 83; affirm. , [1900] P. 180; 69 L.J.P. 106; 83 L.T. 224; 64 J.P. 454; 27 Digest 375, 3631	724, 728
Tanham v. Nicholson, (1872), L.R. 5 H.L. 561; 31 Digest 454, 6013	141, 143
Tarback v. Tarback, (1835), 4 L.J.Ch. 129; 44 Digest 1139, 9849	392, 395, 401, 402
Tarry v. Ashton, (1876), 1 Q.B.D. 314; 45 L.J.Q.B. 260; 34 L.T. 97; 40 J.P. 439; 34 Digest 163, 1274	575, 586
Tattersall v. Drysdale, [1935] 2 K.B. 171; 104 L.J.K.B. 511; 153 L.T. 75; Digest Supp.	121, 123
Taylor v. Bowers, (1876), 1 Q.B.D. 291; 46 L.J.Q.B. 89; 34 L.T. 938; 12 Digest, Replacement, 316, 2438	93, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101
Tennant v. Lord Advocate, [1939] 1 All E.R. 672; [1939] A.C. 207; 108 L.J.P.C. 65; 160 L.T. 441; Digest Supp.	241, 246
Thain, Re , [1926] Ch. 676; 95 L.J.Ch. 292; 135 L.T. 99; Digest Supp.	943, 949
Thames & Mersey Marine Insurance Co. v. Hamilton, Fraser & Co., (1887), 12 App. Cas. 484; 56 L.J.Q.B. 626; 57 L.T. 695; revers. S.C. sub nom. Hamilton v. Thames & Mersey Marine Insurance Co., (1886), 17 Q.B.D. 195; 55 L.J.Q.B. 390; 17 Digest 257, 697	891, 898
Thomas v. Howell, (1874), L.R. 18 Eq. 198; 43 L.J.Ch. 799; 30 L.T. 244; 38 J.P. 693; 8 Digest 243, 17	823, 833, 840, 842, 843
Thomas v. Smith, unreported (May 2, 1932)	592, 599
Thomas v. Thomas, [1924] P. 194; 93 L.J.P. 61; 130 L.T. 716; 27 Digest 315, 2925	724, 727, 877, 880, 881, 956, 962, 963
Thomas v. Thomas, [1946] 1 All E.R. 170; 115 L.J.P. 75; 110 J.P. 203; 2nd Digest Supp.	877, 881, 956, 962
Thompson, Re , (1885), 30 Ch.D. 441; 55 L.J.Ch. 138; 53 L.T. 479; 42 Digest 159, 1594	592, 595, 598
Thompson v. Corby, (1860), 27 Beav. 649; 3 L.T. 73; 24 J.P. 581; 54 E.R. 257; 8 Digest 244, 34	775, 776, 777
Thompson v. Ingham, (1850), 14 Q.B. 710; 19 L.J.Q.B. 189; 15 L.T.O.S. 23; 117 E.R. 274; 13 Digest 549, 1049	483, 488, 489
Thompson v. Lacy, (1820), 3 B. & Ald. 283; 106 E.R. 667; 29 Digest 2, 3	279, 282, 283, 289
Thomson's Mortgage Trusts, Re , [1920] 1 Ch. 508; 89 L.J.Ch. 213; 123 L.T. 138; Digest Supp.	1053, 1054, 1056, 1057, 1058, 1059, 1061, 1062
Tillmanns & Co. v. S.S. Knutsford, Ltd., [1908] 2 K.B. 385; 77 L.J.K.B. 778; 99 L.T. 399; on appeal, sub nom. S.S. Knutsford, Ltd. v. Tillmanns & Co., [1908] A.C. 406; 77 L.J.K.B. 977; 99 L.T. 399; 17 Digest 275, 895	891, 898
Truslove v. Whitechurch, (1840), 1 Man. & G. 426; 133 E.R. 399; Digest, Practice, 270, 67	1028, 1029
Tuck & Sons v. Priestner, (1887), 19 Q.B.D. 629; 56 L.J.Q.B. 553; 52 J.P. 213; 13 Digest 211, 467; 42 Digest 729, 1516	636, 641, 642, 683, 687, 1103, 1130
Tuckwood v. Rotherham Corp., [1921] 1 K.B. 526; 90 L.J.K.B. 341; 124 L.T. 522; 85 J.P. 101; 13 B.W.C.C. 327; 34 Digest 497, 4104	522, 526
Turner v. Kingsbury Collieries, Ltd., [1921] 3 K.B. 169; 90 L.J.K.B. 1132; 125 L.T. 625; 14 B.W.C.C. 249; 34 Digest 376, 3047	483, 489
Tweedle v. Atkinson, (1861), 1 B. & S. 393; 30 L.J.Q.B. 265; 4 L.T. 468; 25 J.P. 517; 121 E.R. 762; 12 Digest 42, 218	906
Twine v. Bean's Express, Ltd., (1946), 174 L.T. 239; affd. , 175 L.T. 131; 2nd Digest Supp.	364, 365, 366, 367
Tyler v. London and India Docks Joint Committee, (1892), 9 T.L.R. 11; 34 Digest 59, 355	1093, 1094
Ultramares Corp. v. Touche, (1931), 174 N.E. 441; 255 N.Y. 170	427, 435, 447
Utlizen v. Nicols, [1894] 1 Q.B. 92; 63 L.J.Q.B. 289; 70 L.T. 140; 58 J.P. 103; 3 Digest 57, 32	252, 258
Usmar v. Usmar, [1949] P. 1; [1948] L.J.R. 1418; 2nd Digest Supp.	956, 966
Verge v. Somerville, [1924] A.C. 496; 131 L.T. 107; sub nom. A.-G. for Australia v. Somerville, 93 L.J.P.C. 173; Digest Supp.	32, 38
Verney's Settled Estates, Re , [1898] 1 Ch. 508; 67 L.J.Ch. 243; 75 L.T. 191; 30 Digest 284, 90	971, 976, 979

Vickery v. Martin, [1944] 2 All E.R. 167; [1944] K.B. 679; 113 L.J.K.B. 552; 171 L.T. 89; 2nd Digest Supp.	210, 213
Victoria Dairy Co. v. West, (1895), 11 T.L.R. 233; 7 Digest 10, 38	186, 188
Vint, Re , [1940] 3 All E.R. 470; [1940] Ch. 920; 109 L.J.Ch. 431; 163 L.T. 306; 2nd Digest Supp.	373, 374, 375
Walker v. Crystal Palace Football Club, Ltd., [1910] 1 K.B. 87; 79 L.J.K.B. 229; 101 L.T. 645; 3 B.W.C.C. 53; 34 Digest 239, 2045	575, 579
Walmesley v. Walmesley, (1893), 69 L.T. 152; 27 Digest 288, 2619	956, 966
Walrond v. Hawkins, (1875), L.R. 10 C.P. 342; 44 L.J.C.P. 116; 39 J.P. 248; sub nom.	416, 418, 419, 420
Waldron v. Hawkins, 32 L.T. 119; 31 Digest 504, 6515	269, 274, 275, 276, 277
Walsall Overseers v. London & North Western Ry. Co., (1878), 4 App. Cas. 30; 48 L.J.M.C. 65; 39 L.T. 453; 43 J.P. 108; 16 Digest 186, 920	467, 468
Walsh v. Johnston, [1899] 1 I.R. 501; 44 Digest 852, 7059 in	815, 816
Walters v. Smith (W. H.) & Son, Ltd., [1914] 1 K.B. 595; 83 L.J.K.B. 335; 110 L.T. 345; 78 J.P. 118; 14 Digest 177, 1549	279, 281, 286, 288, 289
Warbrooke v. Griffin, (1609), 2 Brownl. 254; 123 E.R. 927; 29 Digest 21, 276	942, 948
Ward v. Laverty, [1925] A.C. 101; 94 L.J.P.C. 17; 131 L.T. 614; 28 Digest 274, 1255	1103, 1110, 1122, 1125
Watkins v. Naval Colliery Co. (1897), Ltd., [1911] 2 K.B. 162; 80 L.J.K.B. 746; 104 L.T. 439; reversd. , [1912] A.C. 693; 81 L.J.K.B. 1056; 107 L.T. 321; 84 Digest 741, 1173	186, 188
Watson, Re , Ex p. Official Receiver in Bankruptcy, (1890), 25 Q.B.D. 27; 59 L.J.Q.B. 394; 63 L.T. 209; 7 Digest 17, 74	955, 956, 957, 963, 964, 965
Watt (or Thomas) v. Thomas, [1947] 1 All E.R. 582; [1947] A.C. 484; [1947] L.J.R. 515; 176 L.T. 498; 2nd Digest Supp.	1096, 1099
Webb v. Sadler, (1873), 8 Ch. App. 419; 42 L.J.Ch. 498; 28 L.T. 388; 37 Digest 408, 181	152, 155, 156, 158, 159
Welch v. Nagy, [1949] 2 All E.R. 868; [1950] 1 K.B. 455; 2nd Digest Supp.	955, 957, 966
Westall v. Westall, (1949), 65 T.L.R. 337; 2nd Digest Supp.	102, 106
Westminster Bank, Ltd. v. A.-G., [1939] 2 All E.R. 72; [1939] Ch. 610; 108 L.J.Ch. 294; 160 L.T. 432; 2nd Digest Supp.	357, 358, 359, 360, 387, 388, 389
Whitby v. Burt, Boulton & Hayward, Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 324; [1947] K.B. 918; [1947] L.J.R. 1280; 177 L.T. 556; 111 J.P. 481; 2nd Digest Supp.	823, 831, 832, 833, 840
White v. White, (18C2), 7 Ves. 423; 32 E.R. 171; 8 Digest 242, 10	279, 289
White's Case, (1558), 2 Dyer, 158b; 73 E.R. 343; 29 Digest 4, 29	308, 310
Whitton v. Whitton, [1901] P. 348; 71 L.J.P. 10; 85 L.T. 646; 27 Digest 519, 5600	210, 212
Whitty v. Scott-Russell, [1950] 1 All E.R. 884; [1950] 2 K.B. 32	824, 840
Widmore v. Woodroffe, (1766), Amb. 636; 27 E.R. 413; 44 Digest 890, 7452	768, 771
Wigan v. English and Scottish Law Life Assurance Assoc., [1909] 1 Ch. 291; 78 L.J.Ch. 120; 100 L.T. 34; 12 Digest 212, 1701	56
Willé v. St. John, [1910] 1 Ch. 701; 79 L.J.Ch. 239; 102 L.T. 383; 42 Digest 258, 2919	1021, 1024
Willesford v. Watson, (1873), 8 Ch. App. 473; 42 L.J.Ch. 447; 28 L.T. 428; 37 J.P. 548; 2 Digest 338, 164	1131, 1133, 1134, 1136
Williams v. Williams, [1939] 3 All E.R. 825; [1939] P. 365; 108 L.J.P. 140; 161 L.T. 202; affd. , [1939] 2 All E.R. 13; [1939] P. 315; 160 L.T. 366; Digest Supp.	125, 132
Williamson v. McClelland, 1913 S.C. 678; 50 Sc. L.R. 469; 1 S.L.T. 289; 3 Digest 398, 3289	823, 828, 836, 841
Wilson v. Duguid, (1883), 24 Ch.D. 244; 53 L.J.Ch. 52; 49 L.T. 124; 37 Digest 532, 1232	1103, 1106, 1113
Wilson v. Merry, (1868), L.R. 1 Sc. & Div. 326; 19 L.T. 30; 32 J.P. 675; 34 Digest 211, 1747	43, 54, 575, 587, 1103, 1111, 1117
Wilsons and Clyde Coal Co., Ltd. v. English, [1937] 3 All E.R. 628; [1938] A.C. 57; 106 L.J.P.C. 117; 157 L.T. 406; Digest Supp.	661, 664
Wimbush v. Cibulia, Wimbush v. Levinski, [1949] 2 All E.R. 432; [1949] 2 K.B. 564; 2nd Digest Supp.	111, 113
Winchester Court, Ltd. v. Miller, [1944] 2 All E.R. 106; [1944] K.B. 734; 114 L.J.K.B. 152; 171 L.T. 150; 2nd Digest Supp.	369, 371
Winter German Opera, Ltd., Re , (1907), 23 T.L.R. 662; 42 Digest 909, 58	426, 431
Winterbottom v. Wright, (1842), 10 M. & W. 109; 11 L.J.Ex. 415; 152 E.R. 402; 36 Digest 63, 407	229, 230
Wirral Estates, Ltd. v. Shaw, [1932] 2 K.B. 247; 101 L.J.K.B. 370; 147 L.T. 87; 96 J.P. 143; Digest Supp.	209, 210, 212, 215
Wolfe v. Hogan, [1949] 1 All E.R. 570; [1949] 2 K.B. 194; 2nd Digest Supp.	125, 128, 132, 137, 724, 728
Wood v. Wood, [1947] 2 All E.R. 95; [1947] P. 103; [1948] L.J.R. 784; 111 J.P. 423; 2nd Digest Supp.	575, 587
Woodward v. Mayor of Hastings, [1944] 2 All E.R. 565; [1945] 1 K.B. 174; 114 L.J.K.B. 211, 218; 172 L.T. 16; 109 J.P. 41; 2nd Digest Supp.	518, 521
Woolf v. Hamilton, [1898] 2 Q.B. 337; 67 L.J.Q.B. 917; 79 L.T. 49; 6 Digest 147, 960	63, 66, 71, 72
Woolfenden v. Woolfenden, [1947] 2 All E.R. 653; [1948] P. 27; [1948] L.J.R. 622; 2nd Digest Supp.	814, 815, 817
Wright v. Court, (1825), 4 B. & C. 596; 4 L.J.O.S. K.B. 17; 107 E.R. 1182; 14 Digest 173, 1508	921, 922
Wyatt v. Berry, [1893] P. 5; 62 L.J.P. 28; 68 L.T. 416; 44 Digest 262, 888	628
Wyndham v. Wyndham, (1789), 3 Bro. C.C. 55; 29 E.R. 407; 44 Digest 293, 1250	1088, 1092
Yates v. Starkey, [1950] 2 All E.R. 614; [1951] Ch. 45	296, 300
Yates v. Terry, [1902] 1 K.B. 527; 71 L.J.K.B. 282; 86 L.T. 133; 8 Digest 487, 558	724, 727
Yeatman v. Yeatman, (1868), L.R. 1 P. & D. 489; 37 L.J.P. & M. 37; 18 L.T. 415; 27 Digest 322, 3001	1103, 1111, 1112, 1113, 1115, 1117, 1119, 1120, 1124
Yelland v. Powell Duffryn Associated Collieries, Ltd., [1941] 1 All E.R. 278; [1941] 1 K.B. 154; 110 L.J.K.B. 401; 164 L.T. 401; 2nd Digest Supp.	575, 579
Yewens v. Noakes, (1880), 6 Q.B.D. 530; 50 L.J.Q.B. 132; 44 L.T. 128; 45 J.P. 8, 468; 1 Tax Cas. 260; 34 Digest 21, 14	1132, 1134
Yonge v. Toynbee, [1910] 1 K.B. 215; 79 L.J.K.B. 208; 102 L.T. 57; 42 Digest 53, 438	280, 289
York v. Grindstone, (1703), 1 Salk. 385; 91 E.R. 338; sub nom. , York v. Grenough, 2 Ld. Raym. 866; 92 E.R. 79; 29 Digest 6, 49	186, 188, 189
Yorkshire Railway Wagon Co. v. Maclure, (1882), 21 Ch.D. 309; 51 L.J.Ch. 857; 47 L.T. 290; 10 Digest 737, 4607	269, 277, 495, 500
Young v. Bristol Aeroplane Co., Ltd., [1944] 2 All E.R. 293; [1944] K.B. 718; 113 L.J.K.B. 513; 171 L.T. 113; 37 B.W.C.C. 51; affd. , [1946] 1 All E.R. 98; [1946] A.C. 163; 115 L.J.K.B. 63; 174 L.T. 39; 38 B.W.C.C. 48; 2nd Digest Supp.	1022, 1025
Young v. Buckett, (1882), 51 L.J.Ch. 504; 46 L.T. 266; 2 Digest 374, 388	601, 603
Young v. Mead, [1917] 2 I.R. 258; 42 Digest 284, 3192 in

STATUTES, ETC., REFERRED TO

PUBLIC GENERAL STATUTES	PAGE
Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), s. 36 (1), (9)	622
Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923 (c. 9), s. 60	890
Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948 (c. 63)—
s. 1 (1), (2)	320
s. 65	890
Arbitration Act, 1950 (c. 27), s. 4 (1)	1021
Auctions (Bidding Agreements) Act, 1927 (c. 12), s. 1 (1)	917
Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872 (c. 65), s. 3	355
Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (c. 61), s. 3 (1)	311
Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882 (c. 43), s. 3	185, 1062
Catering Wages Act, 1943 (c. 24), s. 9 (2)	566
Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946 (c. 59), ss. 7 (1), 10 (3), sched. II	844
Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38)—
s. 56 (1) (2) (3)	869
s. 66 (1) (c)	881
s. 210 (1)	110
Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908 (c. 15), s. 6 (5)	557
County Courts Act, 1934 (c. 53)—
s. 48 (1)	820
s. 105 (a)	661
Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1943 (c. 19), s. 1 (2) (a) (ii)	761
Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (c. 36)—
s. 1 (f)	203
s. 4, schedule	864
Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58)—
ss. 7 (1), 13	557
s. 21 (1)	491, 1013
s. 23 (1)	28
s. 23 (1)	231, 353, 479
s. 36 (2)	232, 343
s. 37 (1) (a)	353
Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (c. 69), s. 11	493
Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (c. 36), ss. 186, 259	203
Dogs Act, 1871 (c. 56), s. 2	904
Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67)—
s. 14 (1)	682
s. 26 (1)	357, 387
s. 49	294
s. 107 (1) (2)	387
s. 151 (1)	682
(6)	682
Factories Act, 1948 (c. 55), s. 14 (4) (a)	387
Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30)—
s. 2 (1) (b)	102
(c) (d)	240
s. 7 (7)	102
Finance (No. 2) Act, 1915 (c. 89), s. 47	146
Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 21 (1) (2) (as amended by the Finance Act, 1927 (c. 10), s. 31 (2))	1
Finance Act, 1927 (c. 10)—
s. 27 (1)	701
s. 42 (7)	1
Finance (No. 2) Act, 1931 (c. 49), s. 22 (1)	146
Finance Act, 1936 (c. 34)—
s. 19 (5)	1
s. 21 (1), (9) (b) (c)	732
Finance Act, 1937 (c. 54), sched. IV, para. 11	703
Finance Act, 1938 (c. 46), ss. 40 (3), 40 (5) (a) (i)	76
Finance Act, 1939 (c. 41), s. 30 (1)	240
Finance Act, 1940 (c. 29), s. 15 (1)	701
Finance Act, 1944 (c. 23), s. 15 (1)	450
Food and Drugs Act, 1938 (c. 56)—
s. 81 (1)	402
s. 83 (3)	923
Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946 (c. 34)—
s. 2 (1) (2)	195
s. 5	351
Gaming Act, 1710 (c. 19), s. 1	518
Gaming Act, 1845 (c. 109), s. 18	518
Gas Act, 1948 (c. 67)—
s. 19 (1)	160
s. 56 (2)	160, 788
Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925 (c. 45), s. 7 (3)	912
Import, Export and Customs Powers (Defence) Act, 1939 (c. 69), s. 3 (1) (b)	389
Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), All Schedules Rules, r. 16, proviso (1)	1 Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17)—
s. 3 (2)	111
s. 12 (1) (as amended by Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), sched. I)	152
(a)	209
(g)	60, 111, 249
s. 15 (3)	859
Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938 (c. 45), s. 1 (7)	372
Interpretation Act, 1889 (c. 63)—
s. 38 (2)	166
(a) (b)	890
(c)	788, 890
Land Registration Act, 1925 (c. 21), s. 82 (3) (a) (b)	950
Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36)—
s. 5 (1) (13)	404
s. 19 (1)	346

	PAGE
Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (c. 40)—
s. 1 (1)	107, 170, 482
s. 2 (1)	198, 219
s. 8 (1)	859
s. 18 (2), sched. I, Part I, para. 1	198
Larceny Act, 1916 (c. 50)—
s. 1 (2) (iii)	361
s. 28 (4)	1101
Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20)—
s. 16 (1), (5)	622
s. 40 (1)	1043
s. 76 (1) (B)	693
s. 105	1053
s. 136 (1)	295
s. 199 (1)	901
sched. II, Part II	693
Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934 (c. 41)—
s. 1 (3) (4)	522
s. 5 (1)	216, 563
Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949 (c. 100), s. 4 (1)	1037
Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949 (c. 51)—
s. 1 (7) (b)	116
s. 12 (2) (b) (ii)	56
Legitimacy Act, 1926 (c. 60), s. 1 (2)	1037
Licensing Act, 1921 (c. 42), s. 4 (b)	412
Limitation Act, 1939 (c. 21), s. 21 (1)	1028
Local Government Act, 1948 (c. 26), s. 41 (6)	743
London Passenger Transport Act, 1933 (c. 14), s. 80 (9)	569
Married Women (Maintenance) Act, 1949 (c. 99), s. 2 (2)	474
Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 1 (1)	980
Moneylenders Act, 1927 (c. 21), s. 13 (1)	1053
National Assistance Act, 1948 (c. 29), ss. 1, 42 (1) (2)	355
National Health Service Act, 1946 (c. 81)—
s. 6 (1)	58, 494
ss. 8 (1), 15 (1)	494
s. 60 (1) (2)	528
National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) Act, 1946 (c. 62), ss. 55 (1), 89 (1), proviso (a)	643
National Insurance Act, 1946 (c. 67)—
s. 1 (2) (a) (b)	368
ss. 54 (1), 66 (1) (a)	532
Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (c. 100), s. 16	864
Patents, Designs, Copyright and Trade Marks (Emergency) Act, 1939 (c. 107), s. 2 (1)	779
Pensions (Increase) Act, 1944 (c. 21), sched. I, Part II, para. 1	569
Police Act, 1946 (c. 46), s. 15	1041
Post Office Act, 1908 (c. 48), s. 65 (1) (b) (as applied by National Insurance and Industrial Injuries (Stamps) Regulations, 1948 (S.I., 1948, No. 1443), reg. 1)	479
Public Health Act, 1936 (c. 49), s. 269 (1)	173
Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32)—
s. 3 (1)	178, 710
s. 3 (3) (ii)	88
s. 6	209
sched. I (a)	16
(d)	178
Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71)—
s. 3 (2) (c)	228
(3)	661
Road and Rail Traffic Act, 1933 (c. 53)—
s. 1 (5) (b)	307
ss. 2 (4), 9 (1)	589
Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43)—
s. 17 (2)	349
s. 35 (1)	121
s. 61 (2)	1016
Road Traffic Act, 1934 (c. 50)—
s. 1 (1) (b)	1049
s. 25 (1)	1016
(b)	606
Road Transport Lighting Act, 1927 (c. 37), ss. 1 (1), 15	1010
Settled Land Act, 1925 (c. 18), s. 73 (1) (xiii), (xvi)	971
Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49)—
s. 70 (5)	980
s. 192	315
s. 193 (1) (3) (added by the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 10 (4))	732
Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51)—
s. 24 (3)	1075
s. 43 (1) (2)	982
s. 75 (1)	173
Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939 (c. 89), s. 4 (1)	779
Transport Act, 1947 (c. 49)—
ss. 2 (1) (a) 14 (2)	667
s. 52 (1)	1014
s. 65 (1)	806
Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 36 (6)	932
Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 9	920
Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84)—
s. 30 (2)	522
s. 43 (1) (c) (iii)	844

LOCAL STATUTES

Hinckley Local Board Gas Act, 1880 (c. clvii), s. 43, as amended by Hinckley Gas Order, 1922 (S.R. & O., 1922, No. 608)	788
London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1947 (c. xlii), s. 64	1032

RULES

County Court Rules, 1936, Ord. 24, r. 11	820
Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 523/L.9), r. 36	63
Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1950 (S.I., 1950, No. 1940/L.27)—
r. 65 (3)	967
rr. 79, 80	758
R.S.C.—
Ord. 31, r. 1A	865
Ord. 64, r. 7	750
r. 13	758
Ord. 65, r. 27 (29A)	592

REGULATIONS

Agriculture (Control of Notices to Quit) Regulations, 1948 (S.I., 1948, No. 190), reg. 7	890
Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.I., 1948, No. 1145), regs. 5, 24, 31	90
Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927, as amended by S.R. & O., 1945, No. 502)—
reg. 51 (2)	457
reg. 56A (2)	635, 899
(6)	635
reg. 62 (4A)	166
General Regulations, 1913 (S.R. & O., 1913, No. 748), reg. 1 , made under Coal Mines Act, 1911 (c. 50), s. 86 (1)	1102
Goods Vehicles (Licences and Prohibitions) Regulations, 1936 (S.R. & O., 1936, No. 269), reg. 12 (2)	589
Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1950 (S.I., 1950, No. 1359), regs. 10 (9), 12 (1), 15 (9)	750
Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 670), reg. 3	349
National Health Service (Transfer of Officers and Compensation) Regulations, 1948 (S.I., 1948, No. 1475), reg. 2	268
Protection of Eyes Regulations, 1938 (S.R. & O., 1938, No. 654), reg. 1, sched.	294
Public Analysts Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 840), reg. 4	402
Road Vehicles (Registration and Licensing) Regulations, 1949 (S.I., 1949, No. 1618), reg. 29, art. D (4)	384

ORDERS

Aliens Order, 1920 (S.R. & O., 1920, No. 448), art. 18 (2)	464
Control of Building Operations (Proceedings by Local Authorities) (No. 1) Order, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 75), art. 1	899
Defence Regulations (No. 3) Order, 1948 (S.I., 1948, No. 336), art. 1	166
Explosives in Coal Mines Order, 1934 (S.R. & O., 1934, No. 6), cl. 2 (e), (h)	1102
Knitted Goods (Manufacture and Supply) Order, 1948 (S.I., 1948, No. 316), art. 3 (2) (as substituted by art. 1 (a) of the Knitted Goods (Manufacture and Supply) (Amendment) (No. 2) Order, 1948 (S.I., 1948, No. 994)); art. 3A (1) (as added by art. 1 (b) of the amending Order)	470
Utility Mark and Apparel and Textiles (General Provisions) Order, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 2642), arts. 16 (1) (b), 18 (4)	470

WORDS AND PHRASES

	PAGE
Act or default	923
Appointed day	173
Articulated vehicle	349
Assisted person	56
Being found by night in a building with intent to commit a felony	1101
Beneficial owners	693
Best endeavours to secure delivery	714
Building sites or planting or other purposes	890
Chancellor's concession	558
Character and antecedents	231
Controlling interest	703
Deed or deeds	1095
Discharge	971
Donee	240
Enactment by which fund regulated	569
Executors . . . and to all others whom it may concern	140
Family	88
Fetling	294
For any damage howsoever arising	631
For the purposes of a home of rest for the nurses	528
Found	422
Found . . . in	1101
Garage	252
Gates	294
Had not less than five years' service	1093
Lawful excuse	479
Member of tenant's family	60, 249
Obligation of the tenancy	16
Order made on conviction	232, 343
Other place	389
Owner	361
Pay cash or order	311
Payable by local authority solely in respect of local government service	569
Person aggrieved	1032
Person entitled to the mortgaged property	1053
Personal injuries	914
Place	682
Profits	701
Quay or other place	389
Reasonable maintenance	216
Redemption	971
Road	1010
Runners	294
Self-employed person	368
Service provided by commission or agent of commission	806
Settlement	315, 732
Settlor	732
Single woman	355
Slice	102
Specific purpose of hospital	528
Subjected to a process or treatment in the course of trade or business carried on	307
Suitable alternative accommodation	710
Suitable to the needs of the tenant and his family	88
Supply	470
Tips	566
To be added to the invested funds	538
To or to order of specified person or to bearer	311
To the issue of our marriage	467
Traveller	278
Void	950
Welfare benefit or assistance of members of His Majesty's navy (whether past present or future)	538
Where tenant leaves no widow	249
Within curtilage forming factory	682

CORRIGENDA

- P. 21. R.M.R. HOUSING SOCIETY, LTD. v. COMBS. Line E.3: for "p. 24" read "p. 148."
- P. 58. Re HUNTER (decd.) Counsel for the defendants: for "McMullan" read "McMullen."
- P. 101. BIGGS v. BOUSTED. Line B.3: for "plaintiff's wife" read "defendant's wife."
- P. 139. PRESTON-JONES v. PRESTON-JONES. Line C.4: for "founded" read "founded." P. 140 line 4: for "more, but" read "more. But."
- P. 173. R. v. GATENBY. Counsel: for "The appellant did not appear" read "Spafford for the appellant." Solicitors: read "Solicitors: Registrar, Court of Criminal Appeal (for the appellant); Director of Public Prosecutions (for the Crown)." instead of as printed.
- P. 535. MINISTRY OF NATIONAL INSURANCE v. BARRE. Solicitors: for "Solicitor, Ministry of Health" read "Solicitor, Ministry of National Insurance."
- P. 539. Re MEYERS (decd.). For the appearances of counsel as published read: "P. H. B. W. Foster for the plaintiffs, the executors of the will. V. M. C. Pennington, J. A. Brightman, H. E. Francis and O. R. W. W. Lodge (R. E. Megarry with him) for various corporations which formerly administered certain hospitals. Cross, K.C., and Monckton for next of kin. Denys B. Buckley for the boards of governors of hospitals, regional hospital boards, hospital management committees and the Attorney-General."
- P. 693. BUTLER v. MOUNTVIEW ESTATES, LTD. For the second "held" as printed read: "(ii) the breach by the vendors of the covenant to repair contained in the lease gave the landlord a right of action for damages even if he had waived his right of re-entry, and, as the implied covenant contained in the latter part of sched. II, Part II, to the Act of 1925 (viz., that all the covenants contained in the lease had been observed up to the time of conveyance) was another branch of the covenant for title, the breach thereof by the vendors occurred at the time of the assignment even though the landlord had made no claim, and, therefore, prima facie, the purchaser had a right of action against the vendors for damages in respect of the breach immediately on the execution of the assignment, the fact that he knew of the breach being immaterial, as the covenant was unqualified."
- P. 804. JONES v. MAYNARD. Solicitors: for "Burn & Berriage" read "Kingsford, Dorman & Co."
- P. 911. Re MCARDLE (decd.). Solicitors: after "Routh, Stacey, Hancock & Willis" read "agents for Maslen & Maslen, Bournemouth."
- P. 921. In the Estate of DAVIES. Counsel: for "G. O. Heron" read "C. G. Heron."

THE ALL ENGLAND LAW REPORTS

INCORPORATING THE
LAW TIMES REPORTS
AND THE
LAW JOURNAL REPORTS

INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. BARCLAYS BANK, LTD. AND OTHERS.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Simonds, Lord Normand, Lord Oaksey, Lord Morton of Henryton and Lord MacDermott), November 13, 14, 15, December 14, 1950.]

Surtax—Private company—Undistributed income—Apportionment to members—Member a married woman living with her husband—Liability of husband—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), All Schedules Rules, r. 16, proviso (1)—Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 21 (1) (2) (as amended by the Finance Act, 1927 (c. 10), s. 31 (2))—Finance Act, 1927 (c. 10), s. 42 (7)—Finance Act, 1936 (c. 34), s. 19 (5).

During the period of twenty-one months ending on Dec. 31, 1936, a company, to which the Finance Act, 1922, s. 21, applied, made large profits. In 1937 a small dividend on its shares was declared and in 1938 the company went into liquidation. Subsequently, the Special Commissioners of Income Tax made a direction under s. 21 of the Act of 1922 that the income of the company for the said period of twenty-one months should be deemed to be the income of its members, between whom the income was later apportioned. The only shareholders, apart from a comparatively small number of shares held by a public company, were three married women, on whose husbands assessment to surtax were made by the commissioners in respect of the apportioned sums. The husbands did not elect to pay the tax, and notice of the charge was served on the company in liquidation. The company did not pay within the time limited by the Finance Act, 1936, s. 19 (5), and the commissioners now sought payment from the husbands.

HELD: proviso (1) to r. 16 of the All Schedules Rules of the Income Tax Act, 1918 (by which it is provided that the profits of a married woman living with her husband shall be deemed the profits of the husband) was applicable to surtax and must be read into s. 21 (2) of the Act of 1922; the words "with any necessary modification" in s. 21 (2) did not operate to alter the proviso in any material respect, the word "member" being construed, where the proviso so required, to include a reference to the husband of a member living with that member; and, therefore, the tax on the apportioned income was payable by the husbands.

Decision of the COURT OF APPEAL, sub nom. Latilla v. Inland Revenue Comrs. ([1949] 2 All E.R. 589), reversed.

[AS TO SURTAX IN RESPECT OF UNDISTRIBUTED PROFITS OF COMPANIES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 17, pp. 289-299, paras. 574-595; and FOR CASES, see Digest Supp.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) F.P.H. Finance Trust, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (No. 2), [1945] 1 All E.R. 492; [1946] A.C. 38; 114 L.J.K.B. 203; 172 L.T. 278; 28 Tax Cas. 209; 2nd Digest Supp. A
- (2) Partington v. A.-G., (1869), L.R. 4 H.L. 100; 38 L.J.Ex. 205; 21 L.T. 370; 18 Digest 35, 344.
- (3) Penang and General Investment Trust, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1943] 1 All E.R. 514; [1943] A.C. 486; 112 L.J.K.B. 356; 169 L.T. 93; 25 Tax Cas. 219; 2nd Digest Supp. B

APPEALS by the Crown from an order of the Court of Appeal dated July 27, 1949, and reported, sub nom. Latilla v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1949] 2 All E.R. 589, allowing appeals by the taxpayers from orders of ATKINSON, J., dated Mar. 24, 1947, affirming decisions of the Special Commissioners of Income Tax. C

The taxpayers were the husbands of three members of a private company, in respect of the undistributed income of which assessments to surtax had been made under the Finance Act, 1922, s. 21. Having regard to the Income Tax Act, 1918, All Schedules Rules, r. 16, the Crown claimed to assess the husbands of the members in the name of the company in respect of proportions of the undistributed income. The Special Commissioners confirmed the assessments. The facts and relevant statutory provisions are set out in the opinion of LORD MACDERMOTT. D

Sir Andrew Clark, K.C., J. H. Stamp and R. P. Hills for the Crown.
Grant, K.C., Graham-Dixon, K.C., and John Creese for the taxpayers.

The House took time for consideration. E

Dec. 14. The following opinions were delivered.

LORD SIMONDS: My Lords, finding myself unable to uphold the decision of the Court of Appeal in these cases I was prepared to give my own reasons for taking a different view of the complicated provisions of the various Acts which we have had to consider, but having had the advantage of reading the opinion which my noble and learned friend, LORD MACDERMOTT is about to deliver I shall content myself with saying that I am in full agreement with his reasoning and conclusions and cannot usefully add anything on my own behalf. I move that the appeals be allowed and that the order of ATKINSON, J., affirming the determination of the Commissioners for the Special Purposes of the Income Tax Acts be restored, and that the respondents do pay the costs of the appellants in this House and the Court of Appeal. F G

LORD NORMAND: My Lords, were it not that we are differing from the Court of Appeal I would content myself with expressing my full concurrence with my noble and learned friend, LORD MACDERMOTT, whose opinion I have had the advantage of reading in print. As it is, I shall detain your Lordships as briefly as may be with a statement of my reasons for concluding that the appeal should be allowed. I shall find it necessary for this purpose to refer to the Income Tax Act, 1918, the Finance Act, 1922, s. 21, and the Finance Act, 1936, s. 19 (5), but it is not necessary for me to consider the earlier legislation, or to refer to the Finance Act, 1927, which substituted surtax for super-tax and applied to surtax the provisions applicable to super-tax. H

Rule 16 of the Income Tax Act, 1918, is an income tax rule applicable to all schedules and it is universally applicable for the purposes of income tax unless an application is made under r. 17 for the separate assessment of the income of husband and wife. Rule 16 enacts that “ . . . a married woman . . . being entitled to any . . . profits to her separate use, shall be assessable and chargeable to tax as if she were sole and unmarried.”

I pause there to say that “profit” is equivalent to income, and that “chargeable” in that context includes liability to pay. But there are attached to the enactment two provisos of which the first alone is relevant. It provides that the profits of a married woman living with her husband shall be deemed the profits of the husband, and shall be assessed and charged in his name and not in her name or the name of her trustee. The effect as matter of construction seems to me clear. The profits of a married woman living with her husband, instead of being assessed on her as they would have been under the enacting part of the rule, shall be assessed in her husband’s name; instead of being chargeable on her as they would have been under the enacting part of the rule, they shall be charged, which must mean charged to tax, in her husband’s name, with the effect that instead of being exigible from her as it would have been under the principal enactment the tax will be exigible from her husband. The proviso, it must be noted, overrides other provisions in the schedules by which the tax is charged on a person under a particular description. I shall give only one example. Under sched. E the tax is charged on every person exercising certain offices of profit. If a married woman living with her husband exercises one of these offices, the tax is, in spite of the express term of sched. E, charged on her husband and it is from him that it is exigible. Another example of the effect of the proviso is that a statement of total income under s. 27 (1) of the Act of 1918 is made by the husband and includes as part of his income the income of his wife if living with him.

I turn now to the super-tax provisions of the Income Tax Act, 1918. It is an additional duty of income tax on the income of individuals in excess of a certain amount. Therefore, the total income of the individual is the basis for it and the individual must furnish a statement of his total income: s. 5 (1), and s. 7 (2) and (3). All the provisions of the Act relating to persons who are to be chargeable with income tax and to income tax assessments and to the collection and recovery of income tax are made applicable to super-tax. Rule 16 is thus made applicable in its entirety to super-tax, so that the husband has to include in his statement of his total income the income of his wife living with him, and he has to pay the super-tax on this total income. The wife makes no return and pays no part of the tax. Her income is aggregated with her husband’s, because the proviso to r. 16 overrides the word “individual.”

The Finance Act, 1922, s. 21, deals with a notional income. Under sub-s. (1), when a direction is made, the income of the company shall for the specified year be deemed to be the income of the members and the amount thereof shall be apportioned among them. Furthermore, the member shall for the purposes of the tax be deemed to have received the amount apportioned to him: sched. I, para. 9; and it shall be included in the statement of his total income or in any amended statement of his total income, and it shall be deemed to be the highest part of that income: sched. I, para. 8. Section 21 (2) requires that super-tax chargeable under the section in respect of the amount of the company’s income apportioned to a member “ . . . shall be assessed upon that member in the name of the company, and, subject as hereinafter provided, shall be payable by the company . . .” It also provides that all the provisions of the Income Tax Acts relating to super-tax assessments and the collection and recovery of super-tax shall with any necessary modification apply to super-tax assessments and to the collection and recovery of super-tax charged under the section. Rule 16 with its proviso is, therefore, ex figura verborum made part of the rules applicable to the assessment, collection and recovery of the super-tax charged under the section, but that does not greatly advance the Crown's case because the problem for decision lurks under the words "with any necessary modification." It is also important to note (s. 21 (3)) that the member is given an option to pay, but the super-tax is not exigible from him—only from the company, after service on it of a notice of charge. That was, however, changed by the Finance Act, 1936, s. 19 (5). The sub-section provides that when a notice of charge has been served on a company or its liquidator under s. 21 (3) of the Act of 1922 and the tax has not been paid by the company before a certain period, the tax shall thereupon, without prejudice to the right to recover it from the company, be recoverable from the member on whom the tax was assessed.

My Lords, s. 19 of the Finance Act, 1936, is a series of amendments of s. 21 of the Act of 1922, and s. 19 (5) takes its place as a proviso added to s. 21 (3) of the Act of 1922 and has been from the date at which it came into operation within the outlook of the words "subject as hereinafter provided" in s. 21 (2) of the Act of 1922. When a married woman living with her husband is a member of a company which has been the subject of a direction under s. 21 of the Act of 1922, how far does proviso (1) to r. 16 apply? In my opinion, it applies in its totality with slight modification. In the first place, the apportioned income is profits of the wife. There is an express statutory enactment that it is to be deemed to be so and that she is to be deemed to have received it for the purpose of super-tax under s. 21. Secondly, the tax, instead of being assessed on her as it would have been under the enacting part of r. 16 and under the provisions of s. 21 (2), is to be assessed on her husband under the proviso to r. 16, but it is to be assessed in the company's name. Thirdly, instead of being chargeable on and payable by her as it would have been under the enacting part of r. 16, it is to be chargeable on and payable by her husband, not, it is true primo loco, but secondarily and conditionally on the company's failure to pay. There are, therefore, two modifications of r. 16. The first is that the proviso did not contemplate a charge on the husband in any name but his own in respect of his wife's income, but as applied to super-tax under the Finance Act, 1922, s. 21, the peculiar mode of assessment on the husband in the company's name is requisite. Here no contradiction is involved. The effect of r. 16, proviso (1), is that it overrides the word "member," so that "shall be assessed upon that member in the name of the company" must be read "shall be assessed upon the husband of that member (if she is living with her husband) in the name of the company." No more violence is done to the language than when the person who exercises an office is read as the husband of a person living with him as his wife who exercises an office. The second modification is that the proviso applies when the husband's obligation is subsidiary and conditional and not as formerly only when the sole and absolute obligant would under the principal enactment be the married woman and under the proviso be her husband. But with these modifications the proviso applies in its entirety. It is an anomaly that the husband of a member and not the member herself should have power to affect the company's liabilities by accepting or refusing the option to pay: s. 21 (3); but anomalies are inevitable when the legislature is attempting to deal with the machination of tax evasion.

I am not to be taken as suggesting that, before the passing of the Act of 1936, r. 16, proviso (1), did not apply to income deemed under s. 21 of the Act of 1922 to be the income of a member who was a married woman living with her husband. I am inclined to think that it did apply to the effect that the total income under s. 22 was the total income returnable by the husband including the wife's actual income and her deemed income, but it is not necessary to decide that question in this case, and to avoid unnecessary complication and extension of the discussion, I have abstained and shall abstain from entering on it or referring to further provisions of the relevant Acts which seem prima facie to support the view which I am inclined to favour. I, therefore, agree with the motion proposed by my noble and learned friend on the Woolsack.

LORD OAKSEY: My Lords, I have come to the conclusion after some hesitation and doubt that this appeal ought to be allowed. It appears to me that it is possible to read the Finance Act, 1922, s. 21, with r. 16 of the General Rules applicable to scheds. A, B, C, D and E of the Income Tax Act, 1918, in such a way that the sum apportioned to a married woman living with her husband who is a member of a company to which s. 21 applies shall be assessed on her husband for the purposes of super-tax.

Section 21 (1) provides that such a sum shall for super-tax purposes be deemed to be the income of the married woman, and s. 21 (2) provides that all the provisions of the Income Tax Acts and any regulations made thereunder relating to super-tax assessments shall with any necessary modification apply to super-tax assessments under the section. Rule 16 is one of such regulations and if it is applied to the super-tax assessment of a married woman living with her husband under s. 21, it seems to me to be a proper and necessary modification that for the purposes of super-tax the husband should be assessed in the name of the company instead of his wife. If this modification is not made there is a conflict between the provision of s. 21 (2) that the assessment shall be on the wife who is the member of the company and the provision of r. 16 that the profits of a married woman living with her husband shall be assessed in the husband's name. Further, I think it is necessary and proper to modify the provision in r. 16 that the profits shall be charged on the husband since by the express terms of s. 21 (3) they are charged on the company. If this construction is right, r. 16 comes in for the purpose of assessment and aggregation for super-tax, but that part of his super-tax which is referable to the sum apportioned is chargeable to the company.

In my view, the Finance Act, 1936, s. 19 (5), which provides that the tax shall be recoverable from the member on whom it was assessed if the company does not pay, neither helps nor harms the appellants. It is true the husband is not a member of the company, but he has been assessed by virtue of the modification of r. 16 introduced by s. 21 (2) of the Act of 1922, and this section makes him also chargeable if the company does not pay.

Leading counsel for the respondents, in his able argument, contended that r. 16 only applies to profits of a married woman which satisfy three conditions: (i) that she is entitled to such profits; (ii) that she would be assessable on them in her own name but for proviso (1); and (iii) that she would be liable to income tax on them but for proviso (1); and he said that, none of these conditions being satisfied, r. 16 could have no application. Whether or not these three conditions are conditions of the applicability of r. 16 in other cases, it appears to me that they are necessarily modified by s. 21 of the Act of 1922 which can only be harmonised with r. 16 by assessing the husband in respect of the income in question which is deemed to be his wife's by s. 21 (1).

LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON: My Lords, in my view, the Special Commissioners and ATKINSON, J., were right in upholding the assessments made on the respondents in these three appeals. I agree with the opinion which is about to be expressed by my noble and learned friend LORD MACDERMOTT, but, as we are differing from the views of the Court of Appeal, I shall state my reasons shortly in my own words.

I think it is convenient, first, to endeavour to discover the true meaning and intent of the Finance Act, 1922, s. 21, at the time of its enactment, and for this purpose to disregard, for the time being, any subsequent amendments in the section. Turning to sub-s. (1) I find that in the events there stated the commissioners may,

“ . . . by notice in writing to the company, direct that for purposes of assessment to super-tax, the said income of the company shall, for the year or other period specified in the notice, be deemed to be the income of the members, and the amount thereof shall be apportioned among the members . . .”

With this sub-section should be read para. 9 of sched. I to the Act of 1922 which provides that:

“The income apportioned to a member of a company under s. 21 of this Act shall, for the purposes of super-tax, be deemed to have been received by him at the date to which the accounts of the company for the year or period were made up.”

The result so far is that the sums apportioned to Mrs. Latilla, Mrs. Mayo and Mrs. Latilla-Campbell respectively were deemed to be the income of these ladies respectively and were deemed to have been received by them. I now turn to sub-s. (2), which is in the following terms:

“Any super-tax chargeable under this section in respect of the amount of the income of the company apportioned to any member of the company, shall be assessed upon that member in the name of the company, and, subject as hereinafter provided, shall be payable by the company, and all the provisions of the Income Tax Acts and any regulations made thereunder relating to super-tax assessments and the collection and recovery of super-tax shall, with any necessary modification, apply to super-tax assessments and to the collection and recovery of super-tax charged under this section.”

At this stage the vital question arises: Is r. 16 of the All Schedules Rules in sched. I to the Income Tax Act, 1918 (hereafter referred to, for the sake of brevity, as “r. 16”) one of the provisions which, by the latter part of this sub-section, are made applicable “to super-tax assessments and the collection and recovery of super-tax charged under this section”? In order to ascertain what are the “provisions of the Income Tax Acts and any regulations made thereunder relating to super-tax assessments and the collection and recovery of super-tax” which are made applicable by sub-s. (2), I turn to the Finance Act, 1927, s. 42 (7). That section relates to surtax, which was substituted for super-tax by the Act of 1927, but it is common ground between the parties that it is unnecessary, for the present purpose, to draw any distinction between the two taxes. Section 42 (7) provides, inter alia, that “ . . . all the provisions of the Income Tax Acts relating—(a) to persons who are to be chargeable with income tax at the standard rate and to assessments to such tax . . . (c) to the collection and recovery of such tax . . . shall, so far as they are applicable, apply to the charge, assessment, collection and recovery of surtax . . .”

I do not think there can be any doubt that r. 16 is one of the provisions thus described, and thus r. 16 applies, “so far as it is applicable” to super-tax assessments and to the collection and recovery of super-tax charged under s. 21 of the Act of 1922, but I must next consider what is the effect of the words “so far as applicable”? Turning again to the Finance Act, 1922, s. 21 (2), is there any reason why r. 16 should not apply to super-tax assessments and to the collection and recovery of super-tax charged under that section?

My Lords, I shall try the experiment of applying r. 16 to the provisions of s. 21 (2) and see whether such application gives rise to any difficulties. Rule 16, so far as material, is as follows:

“A married woman acting as a sole trader, or being entitled to any property or profits to her separate use, shall be assessable and chargeable to tax as if she were sole and unmarried: Provided that—(1) the profits of a married woman living with her husband shall be deemed the profits of the husband, and shall be assessed and charged in his name, and not in her name or the name of her trustee . . ."

For the sake of simplicity, I shall take the case of income apportioned to Mrs. Latilla. She was at all material times a married woman living with her husband, and the income apportioned to her must be deemed to be her income and to have been received by her in accordance with s. 21 (1) and para. 9 of sched. I to the Act of 1922. This "deeming" must, in my view, have the effect of making this income "profits of a married woman living with her husband" within r. 16. Counsel for the respondents did not contend that there was any distinction, for this purpose, between the word "income" and the word "profits." These profits, pursuant to r. 16, "shall be deemed the profits of the husband, and shall be assessed and charged in his name." I think it follows that, prima facie and subject to the two difficulties which I am about to mention in the case of Mrs. Latilla, a married woman living with her husband, the assessment must be on her husband and not on her.

It was said, however, on behalf of the respondents, that the words "that member" in s. 21 (2) can only refer to Mrs. Latilla, since she and not her husband was the "member of the company" to whom the amount in question was apportioned. I agree that the word "member" refers to Mrs. Latilla, but as soon as the sum in question was apportioned to her it was deemed to be her husband's income under r. 16. For this reason I think that whenever s. 21 is dealing with assessment, it should be read as if the words "or, in the case of a married woman living with her husband, the husband" were inserted after the word "member." So to read the section does not, in my view, do any violence to the language of the section; it is the inevitable result of the latter part of sub-s. (2), which applies r. 16 "so far as it is applicable." On the other hand, at the beginning of sub-s. (2), where the reference is to apportionment and not to assessment, there is no need for the notional insertion of these words, since r. 16 has no effect on an apportionment under s. 21. Another difficulty relied on by counsel for the respondents arises from the fact that under sub-s. (2) the super-tax is to be assessed "upon that member in the name of the company." They pointed out that, under the proviso to r. 16, the profits there mentioned are to be assessed and charged in the name of the husband. Here, they say, a contradiction arises if "member" is given the suggested construction in s. 21 (2). I think the simple answer to this difficulty is that r. 16 is to be applied "with any necessary modification" and that sub-s. (2) imposes a necessary modification by providing that the assessment, on the member or her husband, as the case may be, shall be made in the name of the company.

I now turn to sub-s. (3) of s. 21. That sub-section deals with assessment, and, in accordance with the principle which I have just stated, it should be read as if the words "or, in the case of a married woman, etc." were inserted throughout after the word "member." So read, it gives rise to no difficulty. The second sentence of sub-s. (4), in my judgment, strongly supports the view that the provisions of r. 16 should be imported into s. 21 in the manner which I have suggested. That sentence deals with the case in which

" . . . a member of a company has been assessed to and has paid super-tax otherwise than under this section in respect of any income which has also been assessed and upon which super-tax has been paid under this section . . ."

As the reference is to the assessment of a member, the words "or, in the case of a married woman, etc." should be inserted if the principle already stated is to be applied. If the words "member of a company" are read with the addition of these words the provision has a sensible and natural result; the person who has borne double taxation, i.e., the husband, gets the relief specified in the sub-section. If, however, these words are not inserted, the provision is wholly inoperative in the case of a married woman living with her husband, since such a married woman can never be assessed to or pay super-tax "otherwise than under this section." I do not think that sub-ss. (5) and (6) assist at all, nor does the extended definition of "member" in sub-s. (7); but sub-s. (8) is important because it brings into play sched. I to the Act. I have already referred to para. 9 of that schedule, and para. 8, with its reference to "the statement of his total income" strongly supports the view that r. 16 must be applied to the provisions of s. 21. There is no provision in income tax law for a married woman living with her husband to make any return of total income, and any such provision would be inconsistent with r. 16. Thus, para. 8 of sched. I works smoothly if the husband is the person to be assessed, but does not work at all if the assessment is made on the married woman.

My Lords, so far I have failed to find any reason why r. 16 should not be applied to the provisions of s. 21 in the manner which I have indicated, and s. 49 of the Act of 1922 supplies yet another reason why they should be applied. That section provides that "Part II of this Act shall be construed together with the Income Tax Acts and the Acts relating to inhabited house duty" and Part II includes s. 21. I need not refer in detail to the later statutes, which will be dealt with by my noble and learned friend, LORD MACDERMOTT. For the reasons which I have given, in my view, s. 21 of the Act of 1922 fixed the liability to be assessed for super-tax, in the case of a married woman living with her husband, on the husband. By the Finance Act, 1927, surtax replaced super-tax and certain amendments were made in s. 21, but, in my view, none of the amendments had the effect of placing on the wife the liability to be assessed, or of exempting the husband from that liability. The Finance Act, 1936, s. 19 (5), makes the tax recoverable from the husband, in the events there specified, whereas under the earlier Acts the husband could not be compelled to pay if he did not elect to pay. Again, the phrase "member on whom the tax was assessed" must, in my view, be read with the application of the provisions of r. 16, so as to refer to the husband in the case of a member who is a married woman living with her husband. In the Court of Appeal, SINGLETON, L.J., pointed out ([1949] 2 All E.R. 595) that in sub-s. (1) of s. 21, both in its original form and as amended by the Act of 1927, the word "member" was "... sometimes to be read literally and at other times as meaning 'husband of the member, if the member is a married woman living with her husband'."

I agree, but regret that the learned lord justice did not apply this reasoning to the vital sub-s. (2) and sub-s. (3). I would allow the appeal and restore the order of ATKINSON, J., affirming the assessments.

LORD MACDERMOTT: My Lords, these three appeals by the Inland Revenue Commissioners all raise the same question. It may be stated thus: Is a husband living with his wife liable to pay surtax in respect of undistributed income of a company notionally attributed to his wife, as a member of the company, under the terms of the Finance Act, 1922, s. 21, notwithstanding that those terms are on their face confined to members of the company and the husband himself is not such a member? The Special Commissioners and ATKINSON, J., have answered this question in the affirmative. The Court of Appeal has unanimously answered it in the negative.

It will be convenient before referring to the facts to set out or summarise the more important provisions of the relevant enactments all of which are to be construed (so far as they are not part thereof) together with the Income Tax Acts.

The Finance Act, 1922, s. 21 (as amended by s. 31 (2) of the Finance Act, 1927, by the addition of the words shown in square brackets in sub-s. (1)), provides:

"With a view to preventing the avoidance of the payment of super-tax through the withholding from distribution of income of a company which would otherwise be distributed, it is hereby enacted as follows: (1) Where it appears to the Special Commissioners that any company to which this section applies has not, within a reasonable time after the end of any year or other period ending on any date subsequent to Apr. 5, 1922, for which accounts have been made up, distributed to its members in such manner as to render the amount distributed liable to be included in the statements to be made by the members of the company of their total income for the purposes of super-tax, a reasonable part of its actual income from all sources for the said year or other period, the commissioners may, by notice in writing to the company, direct that for purposes of assessment to super-tax, the said income of the company shall, for the year or other period specified in the notice, be deemed to be the income of the members, and the amount thereof shall be apportioned among the members [and super-tax shall be assessed and charged under the provisions of this section in respect of the sum so apportioned after deducting in the case of each member any amount which has been distributed to him by the company in respect of the said year or period in such manner that the amount distributed falls to be included in the statement of total income to be made by that member for the purposes of super-tax]:

Provided that . . .

(2) Any super-tax chargeable under this section in respect of the amount of the income of the company apportioned to any member of the company, shall be assessed upon that member in the name of the company, and, subject as hereinafter provided, shall be payable by the company, and all the provisions of the Income Tax Acts and any regulations made thereunder relating to super-tax assessments and the collection and recovery of super-tax shall, with any necessary modification, apply to super-tax assessments and to the collection and recovery of super-tax charged under this section.

(3) A notice of charge to super-tax under this section shall in the first instance be served on the member of the company on whom the tax is assessed, and if that member does not within twenty-eight days from the date of the notice elect to pay the tax a notice of charge shall be served on the company and the tax shall thereupon become payable by the company:

Provided that nothing in this sub-section shall prejudice the right to recover from the company the super-tax charged in respect of any member who has elected as aforesaid but who fails to pay the tax by Jan. 1 in the year of assessment or within twenty-eight days of the date on which he is so elected, whichever is later.

(4) Any undistributed income which has been assessed and charged to super-tax under this section shall, when subsequently distributed, be deemed not to form part of the total income from all sources for the purposes of super-tax of any individual entitled thereto.

Where a member of a company has been assessed to and has paid super-tax otherwise than under this section in respect of any income which has also been assessed and upon which super-tax has been paid under this section, he shall, on proof to the satisfaction of the Special Commissioners of the double assessment, be entitled to repayment of so much of the super-tax so paid by him as was attributable to the inclusion in his total income from all sources of the first-mentioned income."

Sub-section (6) defines the companies to which s. 21 applies; sub-s. (7) enacts that the expression "member" shall include any person having a share or interest in the capital or profits or income of a company; and sub-s. (8) applies for the purposes of the section the provisions of sched. I.

Schedule I, by para. 1 and para. 10 thereof, provides for an appeal by the company, but not by a member, in respect of any direction or apportionment given or made under s. 21 (1). It also provides, by para. 11, that any person in whose name any shares of a company are registered shall, if required by notice in writing by the Special Commissioners, state whether or not he is the beneficial owner of such shares, and if not the beneficial owner that he shall furnish the names and addresses of those on whose behalf the shares are registered. Paragraph 8 and para. 9 of the schedule, as amended by the Finance Act, 1927, run as follows:

"8. The apportionment of the actual income from all sources of the company shall be made by the Special Commissioners in accordance with the respective interest of the members, and the income as apportioned to each member [so far as assessable and chargeable to super-tax under s. 21 of this Act] shall, for the purposes of super-tax, be deemed to represent . . . income from his interest in the company for the year or other period and shall be included in the statement of his total income or in an amended statement of total income which the Special Commissioners are hereby authorised to require and shall be deemed to be the highest part of that income.

9. [The income apportioned to a member of a company so far as assessable and chargeable to super-tax under s. 21 of this Act shall for the purposes of that tax be deemed to have been received by him on the date to which the accounts of the company for the year or period were made up or, if an application in that behalf is made by the company to the Special Commissioners at any time within the period limited by this schedule for giving notice of appeal against the direction to the Special Commissioners, on such date as those commissioners determined to be just, having regard to the dates on which distributions of income have been made by the company, and so as to avoid, as far as possible, the inclusion for the purposes of super-tax for any year of income referable to more than one year.]"

By the Finance Act, 1927, s. 38 (1), surtax was imposed as an additional income tax on higher income, in substitution for super-tax, in terms which make the ascertainment of the "total income" of the subject a necessary pre-requisite to his assessment to surtax. By s. 38 (2) the expression "total income" in relation to any person means

" . . . the total income of that person from all sources estimated, as the case may be, either in accordance with the provisions of the Income Tax Acts as they apply to income tax chargeable at the standard rate or in accordance with those provisions as they apply to surtax."

By s. 42 provision is made as to the payment and assessment of surtax, and sub-s. (7) thereof enacts (inter alia) that

" . . . all provisions of the Income Tax Acts relating—(a) to persons who are to be chargeable with income tax at the standard rate and to assessments to such tax . . . shall, so far as they are applicable, apply to the charge, assessment, collection and recovery of surtax . . ."

Sub-section (9) provides for the separate assessment of a husband and wife on an application being made for that purpose in the prescribed manner.

The Finance Act, 1936, s. 19, provides:

"(5) Where a notice of charge is served on a company or the liquidator of a company under sub-s. (3) of the said s. 21 and the tax thereupon becoming payable is not paid by the company before the expiration of three months from the date of service or before Jan. 2 following the year of assessment (whichever is the later), the tax shall thereupon, without prejudice to the right to recover it from the company, be recoverable from the member on whom the tax was assessed."

The Income Tax Act, 1918, ss. 4 to 8, inclusive, dealt with super-tax, but it is unnecessary to set them out as they were repealed by the Act of 1927 and it is conceded that in all relevant respects there is no material difference between their provisions and those now relating to surtax.

Rule 16 of the General Rules applicable to all schedules to the Income Tax Act, 1918, provides:

"A married woman acting as a sole trader, or being entitled to any property or profits to her separate use, shall be assessable and chargeable to tax as if she were sole and unmarried:

Provided that—

(1) the profits of a married woman living with her husband shall be deemed the profits of the husband, and shall be assessed and charged in his name, and not in her name or the name of her trustee; . . ."

The material facts are as follows. The company immediately concerned (hereinafter called "the company") was F.P.H. Finance Trust, Ltd. It was a finance company, financing and dealing in the shares of gold-mining companies. Its capital at all relevant times consisted of one thousand £1 ordinary shares and ten thousand £1 preference shares. The respective rights of the two shareholding classes were unusual. The preference shareholders had the voting control of the company. They were entitled to a fixed cumulative dividend of five per cent. and, subject thereto, the ordinary shareholders were entitled to the whole of the profits declared for distribution as dividends. On a winding-up the ordinary shareholders were entitled to repayment of the nominal amount of their shares and, after that, the whole of the surplus assets were divisible among the preference shareholders. The one thousand ordinary shares were held by a public company, the National Mining Corpn., Ltd., and the ten thousand preference shares were held by three married ladies living with their husbands. They were (i) Mrs. E. M. Latilla, the wife of Mr. H. G. Latilla, an original appellant who has died since the commencement of these proceedings and whose executors (Barclays Bank, Ltd. and his widow, the said Mrs. E. M. Latilla) are respondents in one of the present appeals; (ii) Mrs. G. Latilla-Campbell, daughter of the said Mr. H. G. Latilla and the wife of Mr. E. C. Latilla-Campbell, the respondent in another of these appeals; and (iii) Mrs. E. Mayo, another daughter of Mr. H. G. Latilla and the wife of Mr. Eric S. Mayo, the respondent in the remaining appeal. The company made very large profits during the period of twenty-one months ending on Dec. 31, 1936, at which date the amount standing to the credit of its profit and loss account was £939,167. In 1937 a small dividend was declared amounting in all to £100 on the ordinary and £46 11s. 6d. on the preference shares. In 1938 the company went into liquidation, the National Mining Corpn., Ltd., was paid £1,000 in respect of its ordinary shares, and the remaining assets were distributed to Mrs. Latilla, Mrs. Latilla-Campbell and Mrs. Mayo as the holders of the preference shares. Subsequently, the Special Commissioners, acting under s. 21 (1) of the Act of 1922, made a direction that the income of the company for the said period of twenty-one months should be deemed the income of the members of the company, and they proceeded to apportion this income between the members. The company appealed against the direction and apportionment so made and after much litigation, which need not now be traced, the matter came to your Lordships' House where, on Mar. 22, 1945, the direction was confirmed, as was also the following apportionment: to the National Mining Corpn., Ltd., £1,000 0s. 0d.; to Mrs. Latilla, £285,996 5s. 0d.; to Mrs. Latilla-

Campbell, £285,910 7s. 6d.; to Mrs. Mayo, £285,910 7s. 6d. It may be observed in passing that this apportionment did not reflect the position as it would have been had the income of the company for the relevant period been actually distributed in accordance with the dividend rights of the two shareholding classes. The Special Commissioners in apportioning had construed the words of para. 8 of sched. I to the Act of 1922—"in accordance with the respective interests of the members"—as entitling them to take into account all the different interests of the members under the company's constitution, including the rights to undistributed profits on a winding-up, and this view was confirmed by this House in the proceedings to which I have referred: see F.P.H. Finance Trust, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (No. 2) (1). A

In the meantime, in 1943, the Special Commissioners had made assessments to surtax for 1936-37 in respect of the sums apportioned to the three ladies as above set out. These are the assessments now under appeal. Each assessment was made on the husband of the lady concerned in the sum apportioned to her. The husbands were duly served under s. 21 (3) with notice of charge. They did not elect to pay the tax. Notice of charge was then served on the company in liquidation. It did not pay within the time limited by s. 19 (5) of the Act of 1936, and as a result the present position is that, if the assessments were duly made on the husbands, the tax is now recoverable from them or, in the case of Mr. H. G. Latilla, from his executors. It is agreed that the company was a company to which s. 21 of the Act of 1922 applied, and of a number of questions raised during the earlier stages of the litigation only that mentioned at the beginning of this opinion remains for decision. Were the Special Commissioners entitled to assess the husbands in respect of the sums apportioned to their wives under s. 21? B C D

My Lords, the general purpose of s. 21 appears from its introductory words, and, as respects members of a company who are not married women living with their husbands, its subsequent provisions are now reasonably clear. Difficulty does arise, however, where the members concerned are married women living with their husbands and beneficially entitled, but even in that case there are two points which may be regarded as beyond controversy. In the first place, it was plainly the intention of the legislature to make each of the sums apportioned to individuals subject to super-tax if, when the sum is reckoned in the total income, such tax is attracted. The question is not whether the sum apportioned to a married woman escapes the net altogether and in any event. It is whether the person to be assessed is the lady or her husband. And, secondly, it is, I think, no less clear that s. 21, if regarded in isolation and without reference to the enactments said to be incorporated therewith, contains nothing to authorise the assessment of the husband. The person to be assessed, if the language of sub-s. (2) is to be taken in its natural meaning and without qualification, is the member to whom an amount of the income of the company has been apportioned under sub-s. (1). Such member need not be the registered holder of shares, for he or she may be the beneficial owner having regard to the definition in sub-s. (7); but the husband of a member is not a member within that definition and there is nothing else to put him in the position of a member if one does not look beyond s. 21. This was conceded by the Crown, and its case before your Lordships was based entirely on the ground that r. 16 of the General Rules was brought into operation by s. 21 with the result for which it contended, namely, that the husbands were properly assessed. For the respondents, on the other hand, it was submitted that r. 16 was not brought into play at all, and, alternatively, that, if it was, it did not justify the assessment of the husbands. E F G H

The first question to be considered, therefore, is whether r. 16 has been made applicable to assessments under s. 21. If it has, it must be by virtue of that part of sub-s. (2) of that section which provides:

" . . . and all the provisions of the Income Tax Acts and any regulations made thereunder relating to super-tax assessments . . . shall, with any necessary modification, apply to super-tax assessments and to the collection and recovery of super-tax charged under this section."

Now, by s. 42 (7) of the Act of 1927 (which in this respect echoed one of the repealed provisions of the Act of 1918 as to super-tax) all the provisions of the Income Tax Acts relating to persons chargeable with income tax at the standard rate and to assessments to such tax are directed to be applied to the assessment, collection and recovery of surtax "so far as they are applicable." But r. 16 is, undoubtedly, applicable to surtax, as it was to super-tax, and, accordingly, it must, in my opinion, be regarded as a provision "of the Income Tax Acts . . . relating to super-tax assessments," and, therefore, as a provision which "shall, with any necessary modification," apply to surtax assessments under s. 21.

The next and more difficult question is as to the effect of this incorporation. There can be no doubt that the expression "members" is used in some places in s. 21 in nothing but its ordinary meaning as extended by the definition in sub-s. (7), that is to say, as signifying only the persons in whose names or on whose behalf shares in the company are held. Such, for example, seems to be the plain meaning of "members" on the first, third and fourth of the occasions on which the word is used in sub-s. (1). The conflict, then, is between, on the one hand, a construction which ascribes to the word throughout a meaning limited, as in places it must be limited, to its natural signification as extended by the definition, and, on the other, a construction by which the word is capable of including, where r. 16 so requires, a reference to the person who is the husband of and lives with the member to whom part of the company's income has been apportioned. The choice to be made between these rival interpretations must depend on the nature and force of the impact which r. 16 and the other incorporated provisions make on the structure of s. 21. The next step will be to examine this, but before doing so it will be well to refer to two general considerations which have to be kept in mind at this stage of the inquiry. First of all, s. 21 is, on the Crown view—at any rate since s. 19 (5) of the Act of 1936 became law—a most drastic enactment for the husbands of members of companies to which s. 21 relates, and that all the more as neither they nor their wives are accorded any right of appeal against the apportionment made, though such apportionments may well be the subject of acute controversy between different classes of shareholders. For this reason, if for no other, the natural meaning of the language used by the legislature ought only to be departed from on clear and cogent grounds. And, secondly, taxation is imposed by the language and not merely by the trend or habit of the relevant legislation. As LORD CAIRNS said in Partington v. A.-G. (2) (L.R. 4 H.L. 122):

"If the person sought to be taxed comes within the letter of the law he must be taxed, however great the hardship may appear to the judicial mind to be. On the other hand, if the Crown, seeking to recover the tax, cannot bring the subject within the letter of the law, the subject is free, however apparently within the spirit of the law the case might otherwise appear to be."

By the terms of s. 21 (1) the sum apportioned to the wife of each of the original appellants was deemed to be her income, and, by para. 9 of sched. I to that Act, to have been received by her on Dec. 31, 1936, the end of the relevant accounting period. Apportioned income being, as was conceded, "profits" within the meaning of r. 16, it must, I think, follow from the wording of proviso (1) to that rule that this income had to be regarded as the profits of the husband. I do not forget that a proviso must be construed as such, nor yet that what I may call the double deeming necessitated by this application of r. 16 is a highly notional process. None the less, I think as a process it is described in terms sufficiently clear to leave no real doubt about the result. The terms of the proviso are mandatory—the apportioned income “shall be deemed the profits of the husband, and shall be assessed and charged in his name,” and not in the name of the wife. That being the position, what is the necessary effect on s. 21? Here attention may conveniently be focused on sub-s. (2) of that section and in particular on the part thereof which reads “shall be assessed upon that member in the name of the company,” for whichever construction prevails there will necessarily prevail at the other points where dispute may arise, including s. 19 (5) of the Act of 1936.

My Lords, having got this length it seems to me no longer possible to regard the conflict as merely one between the natural meaning of “member” as applied to a married woman living with her husband and the general proposition of income tax law that a husband living with his wife is assessable in respect of her profits. That general proposition has now, as it were, become specific and as much a part of sub-s. (2) as the words “shall . . . apply” can make it, for there seems no good reason why the intervening expression “with any necessary modification” should operate to alter the terms of proviso (1) to r. 16 in any material respect. Such a reason certainly cannot, in my opinion, be found in the words “in the name of the company” which occur in sub-s. (2). It was suggested in the course of the argument that these words were incompatible with the words in proviso (1) “shall be assessed and charged in his name,” but I do not think there is substance in this. Whatever the exact import of the words “in the name of the company” may be, the assessment under sub-s. (2) must also be on the individual and, therefore, in his name as well. If, then, the imperative terms of proviso (1) to r. 16 are, as I would hold, to be read into sub-s. (2), the tax on the apportioned income must be assessed on the husband and cannot be assessed on the wife, and the only way of accommodating the language of the sub-section to this state of affairs is to read “member” as the Crown contends. This, there is no denying, involves an interpretation which does not ride elegantly on the language of the enactment, but if I am right in my view as to the applicability and effect of r. 16, I see no escape from it.

On the contrary, there are to be found in the relevant legislation several further considerations which, to my mind, lend considerable support to this construction. These I regard as secondary rather than primary grounds for the conclusion I have reached, and I will, therefore, state them shortly. They may be enumerated as follows. (i) The contention of the respondents, if sound, would entirely stultify the purpose of s. 21 as regards the income apportioned to married women members living with their husbands, because the taxing Acts provide no means of compelling such members to make the return of total income without which surtax cannot be computed, or of assessing them separately from their husbands in the absence of an application by either spouse in that behalf. (ii) Unless the husband is assessed in respect of his wife's income, or there has been an application for separate assessment, there is no provision for the aggregation of the incomes of husband and wife which is necessary for the assessment of surtax. The respondents endeavoured to meet this difficulty by an alternative submission to the effect that r. 16 applied to the extent, but only to the extent, of procuring such aggregation. I do not think one can halt there. If r. 16 is applicable to that extent, it is, I think, impossible not to apply it completely and with the results I have mentioned above. (iii) Apart altogether from r. 16, it seems fairly clear that the true construction of s. 21 does not require that the word “member” should be read as referring to the same individual throughout it. As VISCOUNT SIMON, L.C., said in Penang and General Investment Trust, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (3) ([1943] 1 All E.R. 516), after a reference to the definition of “member” in sub-s. (7):

“I incline to think that, inasmuch as the apportionment is ‘amongst the members,' it would be legitimate for the Special Commissioners to apportion a proper fraction to the beneficiary in the first instance, if they already knew that the shareholder on the register was a bare trustee. Information as to this could be obtained under para. 11 of sched. I, but whether the Special Commissioners have the information, and act upon it, in the first instance, or not, it seems to me clear that an original apportionment to a trustee may properly be followed up by an assessment on the beneficiary."

Though this may not take the present matter any great distance it at least serves to indicate that the words "upon that member" in sub-s. (2) have a wider scope than might at first appear to be the case. (iv) An examination of the Income Tax Acts shows that proviso (1) to r. 16 (like its forerunner, s. 45 of the Income Tax Act, 1842) is the only means of effecting the substitution of husband for wife under charging provisions which are no less clearly referable in their terms to the wife than is the word "member" in the present case. Thus—tax under scheds. A and B "shall be charged on and paid by the occupier for the time being": see r. 1 of Case VII of sched. A, and r. 4 of sched. B. Tax under sched. D

" . . . shall be charged on and paid by the persons or bodies of persons receiving or entitled to the income in respect of which tax under this schedule is hereinbefore directed to be charged."

See r. 1 of the Miscellaneous Rules applicable to sched. D. And, again, tax under sched. E, r. 1, "shall be annually charged on every person having or exercising an office or employment of profit . . ." In all these cases, though the married woman living with her husband may be the occupier of the lands or tenements subject to assessment under sched. A or sched. B, or the person actually receiving and entitled to the income chargeable under sched. D, or having or exercising a particular office or employment of profit within the meaning of sched. E, it is on her husband and not on her that (in the absence of an application for separate assessment) the tax is charged. Rule 16 has always been regarded as justifying this procedure and nothing very different is asked of it by the Crown in this case. For these reasons I would allow the appeals and confirm the assessments.

Appeals allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the appellants); Churchill, Clapham & Co. (for the respondents).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

R.M.R. HOUSING SOCIETY, LTD. v. COMBS.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Singleton, L.J., and Vaisey, J.), November 29, 1950.]

Rent Restriction—"Obligation of the tenancy"—Undertaking by tenant to remain in employment of third party—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), sched. I, para. (a).

A tenancy agreement relating to a dwelling-house to which the Rent Restrictions Acts applied contained a clause providing that the tenancy was conditional on the tenant being and remaining in the employment of a third party and that the determination of that employment from any cause whatsoever should terminate the tenancy. The landlords and the company employing the tenant were associated companies, but neither company was acting as the agent of the other. The tenant left the employment, and the landlords claimed possession of the dwelling-house on the ground that the tenant had broken an "obligation of the tenancy" within the meaning of para. (a) of sched. I to the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933.

HELD: the words "obligation of the tenancy" in para. (a) of sched. I to the Act of 1933 referred to an obligation binding on the tenant in his capacity as tenant, as distinct from an obligation which was purely personal and collateral to the tenancy agreement; consequently, the undertaking by the tenant to remain in the employment of a third party was not an "obligation of the tenancy," within para. (a), but, even if it were, it would be inconsistent with the provisions of the Rent Restrictions Acts; and, therefore, the landlords were not entitled to possession.

[AS TO RESTRICTIONS ON THE LANDLORD'S RIGHT TO POSSESSION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 329-334, paras. 392-399; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 576-585, Nos. 7256-7348.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Barton v. Fincham, [1921] 2 K.B. 291; 90 L.J.K.B. 451; 124 L.T. 495; 85 J.P. 145; 31 Digest 579, 7280.
- (2) Remon v. City of London Real Property Co., [1921] 1 K.B. 49; 89 L.J.K.B. 1105; 123 L.T. 617; 31 Digest 556, 7032.
- (3) Artizans, Labourers and General Dwellings Co. v. Whitaker, [1919] 2 K.B. 301; 88 L.J.K.B. 859; 121 L.T. 243; 31 Digest 577, 7259.
- (4) Brown v. Draper, [1944] 1 All E.R. 246; [1944] K.B. 309; 113 L.J.K.B. 196; 170 L.T. 144; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) Bute v. Prenderleith, 1921 S.C. 281; 31 Digest 556, a.

APPEAL by the tenant from an order of His Honour JUDGE DALE, made at Aylesbury County Court on Sept. 21, 1950, granting the landlords possession of a dwelling-house to which the Rent Restrictions Acts applied, on the ground that the tenant was in breach of an obligation of the tenancy within the meaning of para. (a) of sched. I to the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933. The facts appear in the judgment of SINGLETON, L.J.

Hannay for the tenant.

D. C. Thompson for the landlords.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R.: I will ask SINGLETON, L.J., to deliver the first judgment.

SINGLETON, L.J.: This is an appeal by Mr. Ernest Addison Combs, the tenant of a house, 17 Meadow Close, Tring, Hertfordshire, against an order for possession made against him by the learned county court judge at Aylesbury at the suit of the landlords, R.M.R. Housing Society, Ltd.

The tenant came into possession of the house under an agreement dated July 2, 1948, and made between the landlords, of the one part, and the tenant, of the other part. The landlords are one of the associated Rothschild companies, as also is R.M.R. Engineering, by whom the tenant was to be employed. The agreement of tenancy sets out, in para. 1, that:

"The society in consequence of the employment of the tenant by R.M.R. Engineering of Brook Street, Tring, Herts . . . and for the purpose of enabling the tenant more conveniently and efficiently to perform the duties of the said employment but subject always to compliance with the condition hereinafter mentioned hereby lets and the tenant hereby takes the premises known as 17 Meadow Close, Tring, Herts., To hold the same from Saturday, July 3, 1948, from week to week until the condition hereinafter mentioned in para. 2 hereof shall cease to be satisfied or until the tenancy shall be determined in the manner hereinafter provided [at a weekly rent]."

Paragraph 2 of the agreement provides:

"This tenancy is conditional on the tenant being and remaining in the said employment and it shall be an obligation of the tenancy on the part of the tenant that he shall be and remain so employed. Determination of such employment from any cause whatsoever shall terminate the tenancy."

The only other material paragraph of the agreement is para. 5:

"Either party may terminate the tenancy at the end of the second or any subsequent week by giving to the other party two weeks' previous notice in writing expiring on a Friday Provided always that upon the event of the conditions mentioned in para. 2 hereof ceasing to be satisfied the tenancy shall thereupon terminate automatically without the need for either party to give any notice to the other."

The learned judge stated the reasons for his judgment in these terms:

"The defendant was employed by R.M.R. Engineering, a subsidiary Rothschild company, until June, 1950, when he left this employment at his own request in order, as he said, to better himself. He was then tenant of a house owned by the plaintiff landlords under a written agreement of July 2, 1948. One of the conditions of this agreement was that he should remain tenant only so long as he was in the employment of R.M.R. Engineering. After leaving this employment he continued in possession under s. 15 (1) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920. It was argued by counsel for the defendant that this condition of tenancy was inconsistent with the provisions of the Rent Acts, and that, therefore, sched. I, para. (a), to the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, did not apply. I did not accept this argument and held that the condition continued to be binding on the tenant under s. 15 (1) of the Act of 1920 and that the tenant had broken an obligation of the tenancy within the meaning of sched. I, para. (a), to the Act of 1933. After fully considering the question whether it was reasonable to make the order for possession, I found on the facts that it was so and ordered possession in six weeks."

The argument of counsel for the tenant in this court was that the case did not fall under sched. I, para. (a), of the Rent Act of 1933. Schedule I is in these terms:

"A court shall, for the purposes of s. 3 of this Act, have power to make or give an order or judgment for the recovery of possession of any dwelling-house to which the principal Acts apply or for the ejection of a tenant therefrom without proof of suitable alternative accommodation (where the court considers it reasonable so to do) if—(a) any rent lawfully due from the tenant has not been paid, or any other obligation of the tenancy (whether under the contract of tenancy or under the principal Acts), so far as the obligation is consistent with the provisions of the principal Acts, has been broken or not performed."

Counsel for the tenant said that in the circumstances of this case there was no obligation of the tenancy which had been broken or not performed, and that no order could be made under that part of the schedule. He submitted further that, if it could be said that the obligation to work or to continue working for R.M.R. Engineering was an obligation of the tenancy, that obligation was not consistent with the provisions of the principal Acts, and, consequently, that that part of the schedule did not apply. A

We were referred to a number of authorities. In Barton v. Fincham (1) this court had to deal with a case under s. 5 (1) of the Act of 1920, which was in terms very similar to those of para. (a) of sched. I to the Act of 1933. The provision was: B

"No order or judgment for the recovery of possession of any dwelling-house to which this Act applies, or for the ejection of a tenant therefrom, shall be made or given unless—(a) any rent lawfully due from the tenant has not been paid, or any other obligation of the tenancy (whether under the contract of tenancy or under this Act) so far as the same is consistent with the provisions of this Act has been broken or not performed . . ."

It was held in that case that the jurisdiction of the court to make an order for possession was restricted by the above enactment, that if the conditions on which alone an order could be made were not fulfilled an order could not be made in invitum notwithstanding any agreement of the parties to the contrary, and that, consequently, the landlord could not recover. The importance of that decision lies in words used by BANKES and SCRUTTON, L.JJ. BANKES, L.J., said ([1921] 2 K.B. 295): D

"The language used is so clear and precise that there is in my opinion no room for cutting down or restricting the operation of the section. The legislature has definitely declared that the court shall exercise its jurisdiction only in the instances specified in the section, and in no others."

The lord justice added (ibid., 296): E

"In my opinion s. 5 is an instance of a case where the legislature has in clear and unmistakable language restricted the jurisdiction of the court, and where no agreement between parties can give the court a jurisdiction which the legislature has said it is not to exercise. This is by no means the only statute in which the legislature has secured the object it had in view by limiting the exercise by the courts of their full jurisdiction."

SCRUTTON, L.J., said (ibid., 297): F

"The position of a tenant who, having agreed in his contract of tenancy to give up possession on a named day, holds over and stays in possession after that day, has been explained by this court in Remon v. City of London Real Property Co. (2), and I do not repeat it. It is enough to say that he becomes a statutory tenant at his own will and cannot without his consent be ejected either by peaceable entry or by the order of a court unless the conditions mentioned in s. 5 of the Act of 1920 are present and the court makes an order . . . if he is in possession and unwilling to give it up, possession can only be obtained by order of a court which order can only be made if certain specified facts are proved. One of these facts is that an obligation of the tenancy, so far as the same is consistent with the provisions of this Act, has been broken. This qualification was necessary, for every tenancy contains an obligation to deliver up possession at the end of the tenancy, of which obligation staying in possession is a G H breach. The qualification was not contained in the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (War Restrictions) Act, 1915, but was held, I think rightly, by ASTBURY, J., in Artizans, Labourers and General Dwellings Co. v. Whitaker (3) to be necessarily implied, as without it the whole sub-section would be meaningless. A tenant who agrees in the contract of tenancy to give up possession on a named day does not contract out of the Act, and the agreement does not prevent the provisions of the Act from applying, and it is difficult to see why an agreement to the same effect made after the contract of tenancy should have any better results."

In Brown v. Draper (4) LORD GREENE, M.R., said of a tenant ([1944] 1 All E.R. 248):

" . . . he cannot contract to give up his right to claim protection . . . "

The sole question in this appeal arises on the meaning of the words "obligation of the tenancy." If the tenant in the present case is shown to have broken an obligation of the tenancy, it was right to make an order for possession against him. Unless that was shown, it was not. The submission on behalf of the tenant was that no obligation of the tenancy was broken—in other words, that the undertaking, obligation, condition, covenant, or whatever one may call it, that the tenant should give up possession if he ceased to be employed by R.M.R. Engineering, was not an obligation of the tenancy. It was submitted that before one could have an obligation of the tenancy there must be an obligation arising out of the tenancy and relating to the subject-matter of the tenancy. In other words, that it must be binding on the tenant as tenant, and not merely something binding on him as an individual. In my view, that submission is right. If it was not so, a very wide breach would be made in the Rent Acts. The words "obligation of the tenancy" appear in para. (a) of sched. I, and there must be some purpose in them. The words are not "obligation of the tenant," but "obligation of the tenancy." That denotes that the obligation must be an obligation arising out of the tenancy itself. It is not enough to say that the tenant has broken some covenant or failed to fulfil some obligation which he undertook. There must be a breach of an obligation of the tenancy. Paragraph 2 of the agreement in its first part says that the tenancy is conditional on the tenant being and remaining in the said employment. There follow the words "and it shall be an obligation of the tenancy on the part of the tenant that he shall be and remain so employed." I think it would be better to describe that as an undertaking by the tenant or an obligation of the tenant. It is not strictly an obligation of the tenancy, and it does not become so merely by those words being inserted into the agreement. They are words taken from para. (a) of sched. I. Thus, it has not been shown that there was any breach of an obligation of the tenancy.

That is sufficient for the purposes of this appeal, but counsel submitted further that if one were to read para. (a) of sched. I in the way in which the landlords would have it read and the learned county court judge has read it, para. (g) of the schedule would become unnecessary. Paragraph (g) provides for the case of a landlord who has a workman working for him and lets to that workman a dwelling-house in consequence of the employment. In such a case, if the tenant ceases to be employed by the landlord, the landlord can obtain an order for possession if he shows that the dwelling-house is reasonably required by him for occupation as a residence for some person engaged in his whole-time employment, etc. It was argued that the landlord would be able to avoid having to give proof of this additional fact if a clause such as that in the present case was inserted in the agreement and it was held to have the effect given to it by the learned county court judge.

I do not consider that it has been shown that the landlords brought themselves within the provisions of para. (a) of sched. I, and, therefore, the order for possession ought not to have been made. The landlords were seeking to protect the houses they had because they were required for workmen employed on work for associated companies. In the circumstances of this case I do not think the method adopted succeeds. There is no suggestion that the one company was acting as the agent of the other. In my view, the appeal should be allowed.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R.: I am of the same opinion. Although we have heard no argument on it, I see no reason whatever to doubt the validity of that part of the learned judge's judgment in which he said that the making of an order, if he had power to make it, would be reasonable. Counsel for the landlords stated that there may be difficulties in the way of reaching a proper result by the way which was suggested by the court. That, however, is not to say that there may not be other means of achieving what, on the face of it, would seem, in such circumstances as those of this case, to be a fair result from the point of view both of the landlords and of the tenants, but for the purposes of our decision the case must, as I think, be examined on the footing that the employer was some third person in no way connected with the landlords. Further, it must never be forgotten that it has many times been laid down that in all cases of this kind there are two conditions which the landlord must satisfy—(i) that the court has jurisdiction to make the order, and (ii) that it is reasonable so to do. In the present appeal we are concerned only with the first condition, and it is no answer to an argument on that condition that the tenant would be protected by reliance on the second matter, i.e., of reasonableness only.

The relevant term of the lease here in suit is expressed so as to consist of a condition, an obligation, and a limitation. In so far as it is a limitation (i.e., in so far as it provides that the tenancy is to determine on the happening of a particular event) that is something outside para. (a) of sched. I altogether. It would wholly defeat the object of the Rent Acts if it were otherwise, for it is of the essence of the Rent Acts that, on the happening of the event which determines the contractual tenancy, nevertheless in certain circumstances the tenant is entitled to remain in possession. In so far as the clause consists of a condition or obligation, it is at least open to doubt whether such an obligation is enforceable at law at all, for it appears on the face of it to be an obligation to continue to serve a particular individual. Whatever be the answer to that question, however, for reasons which have already been stated and with which I agree, I think that the clause, in so far as it is a condition or obligation, is not within para. (a) because it is not "an obligation of the tenancy." I agree with counsel for the landlords that those words "obligation of the tenancy" must not be given a restricted or narrow meaning. They should be construed according to their ordinary sense, but, so construed, I take the phrase "obligation of the tenancy" to mean something binding on the tenant as such, i.e., in his capacity as tenant as distinct from an obligation purely personal and collateral to the contract of tenancy. I think the matter may be usefully tested—and it is a legitimate method of testing this particular form of lease—by considering what the position would be in the event of an assignment of the term during its contractual subsistence.

I also agree with SINGLETON, L.J., that if this obligation were an "obligation of the tenancy"—and I add that for present purposes I think no useful distinction can be made between that phrase in para. (a) and the phrase "terms and conditions of the original contract of tenancy" in s. 15 of the Act of 1920—I still think it is not an obligation consistent with the provisions of the principal Acts. It has been laid down in the authorities which SINGLETON, L.J., has quoted that parties to a tenancy cannot so contract that, although the conditions are present which, Parliament has declared, cause the Acts to apply to the premises, nevertheless those Acts shall not apply. If this condition was treated as effective, the result would inevitably be to produce a contracting out of the Act within the meaning of the formula which I have just given, and I think that the application of that formula provides the answer to the point counsel for the landlords urged, that here it was of the essence of the contract, it was indeed the basis of the contract, that cesser of the relevant employment should disentitle the tenant from the right to further occupation. As SINGLETON, L.J., has pointed out, if that is not an obligation inconsistent with the Acts, it will be apparent that in all cases where there is a landlord employer and a tenant employee—a common case—para. (g) of sched. I is, so to speak, wholly circumvented. Moreover, I can see no distinction in principle between a provision to the effect that the tenancy shall determine automatically on the tenant ceasing to be employed by A. B. and a provision that the tenancy shall determine automatically on the tenant receiving notice to quit. It would be possible to frame a clause which would, if the argument is right, render the Act wholly inoperative in every case that can be imagined, and then the parties would have done that which the courts have said they cannot do—contracted themselves out of the ambit of the Act.

In Bute v. Prenderleith (5), a case in the Inner House of the Court of Session, it was decided that, the true relationship between the Marquis of Bute and Mr. Prenderleith being that of master and servant, the occupation of the latter was a service occupancy and not a service tenancy. The Lord President (LORD CLYDE), however, in the course of his judgment, undoubtedly used language which seems to indicate that he thought s. 5 (1) (a) of the Act of 1920 might apply in a case between a landlord and a tenant if the tenant, having been in the employment of the landlord and having taken his tenancy on the terms that he continued to serve the landlord, then determined his contract of service. The Lord President appears to have thought that, if he had put it out of his power to perform his obligations as to service, he might not be able to rely on the Rent Acts because of the terms of s. 5 (1) (a). So far as I can see, however, the point in the present case was not adumbrated. The various considerations which we have had in mind are not indicated in the judgment, this part of it being purely obiter. Moreover, the decision related to the effect of the Act of 1920 and to a case where the landlord was the employer, which is not the present case. As at present advised, I am inclined to share the doubt which I think Mr. MEGARRY in his work on the RENT ACTS, 5th ed., p. 24, has entertained, but it is unnecessary to express any final view on the correctness or applicability of that decision because the circumstances were different. It certainly is not an authority which compels, or, as I think, advises, us, to decide otherwise than in the way SINGLETON, L.J., has suggested.

For these reasons, as well as those stated by SINGLETON, L.J., I think that this appeal must be allowed.

VAISEY, J.: For the reasons stated by my Lords, I agree that this appeal succeeds.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Wodehouse & Furneaux (for the tenant); Ellis & Ellis, agents for Horwood & James, Aylesbury (for the landlords).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

HAWKS v. McARTHUR AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Vaisey, J.), November 21, 22, 1950.]

Company—Private company—Charging order absolute on shares standing in name of judgment debtor—Transfers executed before date of order—Articles of company in regard to transfers not complied with—Shares still registered in name of judgment debtor—Rights of purchasers as against judgment creditor. A Execution—Charging order absolute—Shares in private company—Transfers executed by judgment debtor before date of order—Articles of company in regard to transfers not complied with—Shares still registered in name of judgment debtor—Rights of purchasers as against judgment creditor. B

By an agreement, made on Aug. 12, 1949, between M. and W. L. & Sons, Ltd., a private company, it was agreed that M. should resign from his office of director of the company, that he should receive a sum of money as compensation for loss of office, and that the company should find a purchaser for his five hundred ordinary shares of £1 each in the company at a price of £3 per share. On Sept. 7 F., the chairman of the board of directors, agreed to purchase three hundred of the shares and to hold them as beneficial owner if no other member of the company wished to purchase them, or, if any other member or members desired to exercise the right of pre-emption under art. 13 of the company's articles, to hold the shares as trustee for such member or members. On the same day R., the company's manager, entered into a similar agreement in respect of the remaining two hundred shares held by M. The company's articles contained stringent provisions restricting the transfer of shares. By art. 12 no shares should be transferred until the rights of pre-emption contained in art. 13 had been exhausted, and one of the requirements of art. 13 was that, on receiving the transfer notice from the vendor, the board should forthwith give notice of the intended transfer to all the members of the company, stating inter alia the price of the shares to be sold (such price to be agreed by the vendor and members, or, in default of agreement, to be fixed by the auditors), and invite each member to state in writing, within one month from the date of the transfer notice, whether he was willing to purchase any, and, if so, how many, of the shares. None of these provisions was complied with. On Sept. 16 M. executed a transfer of two hundred shares in favour of R., and on Sept. 21 he executed a transfer of three hundred in favour of F. R. and F. paid to M. the full purchase price for the shares, but the shares were still registered in the name of M. On Oct. 4, 1949, the plaintiff (who was also a member of the company) recovered judgment for £539 2s. 4d. and costs in an action against M., and was granted leave to proceed under the judgment. On the same day he obtained a charging order nisi on the shares in the company standing in M.'s name, and on Oct. 17 the charging order was made absolute. F. and R. claimed that by Oct. 4 the beneficial interest in the shares was in them and that M. had no interest therein on which the charging order could operate. C D E F G

HELD: notwithstanding the complete failure to comply with the company's articles in regard to the procedure to be followed before shares could be transferred, F. and R., having paid to M. the full consideration for the shares, had obtained equitable rights therein, and, as their rights accrued earlier than the equitable right of the plaintiff under the charging order, their rights must prevail over his claim. H

Principle in Gill v. Continental Gas Co., (1872) (L.R. 7 Exch. 332), applied.

Hunter v. Hunter ([1936] A.C. 222), distinguished.

[AS TO EFFECT OF CHARGING ORDER ON STOCKS AND SHARES, see HALSBURY, Halsham Edn., Vol. 14, pp. 126-129, paras. 201-204; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 21, pp. 651-653, Nos. 2298-2311.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Jeffryes v. Reynolds, (1882), 52 L.J.Q.B. 55; sub nom. Jeffryes v. Reynolds, Ex p. Reynolds, 48 L.T. 358; 21 Digest 654, 2329.
- A (2) Gill v. Continental Gas Co., (1872), L.R. 7 Exch. 332; 41 L.J.Ex. 176; 27 L.T. 424; 21 Digest 652, 2302.
- (3) Hunter v. Hunter, [1936] A.C. 222; 105 L.J.Ch. 97; 154 L.T. 513; Digest Supp.
- (4) Re Hafner, [1943] I.R. 426; 2nd Digest Supp.

B ADJOURNED SUMMONS asking inter alia (i) that an account be taken of what was due to the plaintiff from the first defendant under a charging order absolute, dated Oct. 17, 1949, and made in an action between the plaintiff and the first defendant; (ii) that the shares affected by the order be sold; and (iii) that the right to transfer the shares and to receive the dividends due or to accrue thereon be vested in the plaintiff or in the purchasers of the shares under the sale.

C The shares were five hundred ordinary shares of £1 each in a private company standing in the name of the first defendant. In August, 1949, the first defendant agreed with the company to sell his shares to a purchaser to be found by the company. On Sept. 16 he executed a transfer of two hundred of the shares to the second defendant, the manager of the company, and on Sept. 21 he executed a transfer of the remaining three hundred to the third defendant, the chairman of the board of directors, but the provisions laid down by the company's articles of association in regard to the transfer of shares were not complied with. The shares were still registered in the name of the first defendant, but the second and third defendants had paid in full the purchase money for them. Judgment in the action between the plaintiff and the first defendant was signed on Oct. 4, 1949. The charging order nisi was made on the same day, and on Oct. 17 it was made absolute. The second and third defendants contended that the beneficial interest in the shares was already vested in them before the charging order was granted, and that the first defendant had no interest in the shares on which the order could operate. The plaintiff contended that the whole property in the shares remained in the first defendant, as the purported transfers were completely void, the requirements of the company's F articles in regard to transfers not having been complied with.

Articles 11, 12, 13 of the company's articles of association were as follows:

G "11. The directors may in their absolute discretion and without assigning any reason therefor or without specifying any grounds therefor, decline to register any transfer of shares (whether fully paid up or not) and no transfer shall be registered which if registered would make the number of members exceed the limit hereinbefore prescribed, and cl. 19 of Table 'A' shall be modified accordingly.

"12. Save as in these presents otherwise provided no seven per cent. cumulative preference shares or ordinary shares in the capital of the company shall be transferred unless and until the rights of pre-emption hereinafter conferred shall have been exhausted.

H "13. (a) Every member or other person entitled to the said cumulative preference shares or ordinary shares (hereinafter called 'the vendor') who intends to transfer such seven per cent. cumulative preference shares or ordinary shares shall give notice in writing (hereinafter referred to as a 'transfer notice') to the board of directors of his intention. Such transfer notice shall specify the number and class of shares which the vendor desires to transfer and shall constitute the board his agent for the sale of the said shares in one or more lots at the discretion of the board to such members of the company as are hereinafter referred to at a price to be agreed upon by the vendor and such members of the company as are hereinafter referred to or in default of agreement at a price which the auditor or auditors of the company for the time being shall certify by writing under his or their hand to be in his or their opinion the fair selling value thereof as between a willing vendor and a willing purchaser. A transfer notice shall not be withdrawn except with the consent of the board. (b) Upon receipt of a transfer notice and the price being fixed as aforesaid the board shall forthwith give notice to all the members of the company (other than the vendor), stating the number class and price of the shares to be sold and invite each of them to state in writing within one month from the date of the transfer notice whether he is willing to purchase any and if so what maximum number of the said shares. (c) At the expiration of the said period of one month the board shall allocate the said shares (or such number thereof as shall have been sold as aforesaid) first to or amongst the member or members holding shares of the same class who shall have expressed his or their willingness to purchase the said shares as aforesaid and (if more than one) so far as practicable pro rata according to the number of shares of the class already held by them respectively and any balance of the said shares not accepted by the holders of shares of the same class shall be allocated to or amongst the other member or members who shall have expressed his or their willingness to purchase the said shares as aforesaid and (if more than one) so far as practicable pro rata according to the number of shares (irrespective of class) held by them respectively. No member shall be obliged to take more than the said maximum number of shares so notified by him as aforesaid. Upon any such allocation as aforesaid being made the vendor shall be bound on payment of the said price to transfer the shares so sold to such purchaser or purchasers. The purchaser or purchasers shall be registered as the holder of the said shares and he or they shall not be bound to see to the application of the purchase money, nor shall his or their title to the shares be affected by any irregularity or invalidity in the proceedings in reference to the sale. (d) In the event of any of the said shares remaining unsold at the expiration of the said period of one month the vendor may at any time within three calendar months thereafter transfer the shares not so sold to any person or persons whether approved by the board or not at any price; providing such transfer will not increase the number of members beyond the legal maximum for a private company."

Maurice Berkeley for the plaintiff.

The first defendant did not appear.

Raymond Walton for the second and third defendants.

VAISEY, J.: The plaintiff is the holder of a charging order affecting five hundred ordinary shares of £1 each in a private company called W. Lucas & Sons, Ltd., which stand in the name of, and were originally the property of, the first defendant, Mr. Theodore Hunter McArthur, who has not entered an appearance in these proceedings. He claims that that charging order operates on Mr. McArthur's interest in those shares, which, he says, is a complete interest, both legal and equitable. The second and third defendants, Mr. Roberts and Mr. Fraser, claim that the beneficial interest in the shares in question has passed to them as a result of transfers executed in their favour by Mr. McArthur in pursuance of certain agreements entered into between themselves and Mr. McArthur prior to the execution of those transfers, and they allege that Mr. McArthur had no interest in the shares at the date of the charging order on which the charge could operate.

On Oct. 4, 1949, the plaintiff recovered judgment against Mr. McArthur for a sum of £539 2s. 4d. and costs, and the total amount for which he signed judgment was £552 2s. 4d. At the same time he was granted leave to proceed under that judgment, and, on the same day, he obtained a charging order nisi on the shares in question to the amount of the judgment together with the costs of the application for the charging order. On Oct. 17 the charging order nisi was made absolute and it was ordered that the sum of six guineas, being the amount incurred on the application for the charging order, should be added to the sum of £552 2s. 4d., the total amount, therefore, being

A £558 8s. 4d. There is no question that the final judgment and the order making the charging order absolute are in order. The only question is what benefit, if any, the plaintiff can get out of it. He alleges that under the orders the five hundred shares stand charged for the payment of £558 8s. 4d. which carries interest from Oct. 4, 1949, the date of the charging order nisi, at four per cent. per annum. There is no question that the money has not been paid and it seems

B fairly obvious, too, that Mr. McArthur cannot pay it. On this summons the plaintiff asks (i) that an account be taken of what is due to him under the charging order absolute and for his costs in this action; (ii) that the shares be sold and the money to arise by such sale be lodged in court to the credit of this action subject to further order; (iii) that the right to transfer the shares and to receive the dividends due or to accrue due thereon be vested in him or

C in the purchasers of the shares under the sale directed pursuant to para. (ii); (iv) such further or other relief as may be necessary; and (v) the costs of the application.

I must first consider the position of the second and third defendants, Mr. Roberts and Mr. Fraser. They depose to facts which I may summarise very briefly as follows. They say that until Aug. 12, 1949, Mr. McArthur was

D managing director of W. Lucas & Sons, Ltd. On that date an agreement was made between him and the company the effect of which was that he should resign from his office of director, that he should receive £1,500 compensation for loss of office, and—this is the really material point—that the company should find a purchaser for his five hundred ordinary shares in the company (i.e., the shares in question) at a price of £3 per share. In pursuance of that agreement,

E and in conjunction, I think, with some agreement which must by necessary implication have been made between Mr. McArthur, on the one hand, and Mr. Roberts and Mr. Fraser, on the other hand, transfers of the shares in question were executed, as to two hundred of them in favour of Mr. Roberts, the transfer in that case being dated Sept. 16, 1949, and as to the remaining three hundred in favour of Mr. Fraser, the transfer in that case being dated Sept. 21, 1949.

F It is pointed out with truth that the dates of those two transfers are considerably earlier than the date of the charging order nisi.

There is, undoubtedly, a basic principle that a charging order only operates to charge the beneficial interest of the person against whom the order is made, and that it is not possible, for instance, to obtain an effective charging order over shares where the person against whom the order is made holds them as

G a bare trustee. The charging order affects only such interest, and so much of the property affected, as the person whose property is purported to be affected could himself validly charge. Jeffryes v. Reynolds (1) would seem superficially, to throw some doubt on that general basic proposition, but I think that the only effect of that decision is that the true owner of shares cannot, as a matter of procedure, discharge the charging order after it has been made absolute, and

H his remedy for asserting and establishing his true rights must be of some other character. For the general proposition it will be sufficient for me to refer to Gill v. Continental Gas Co. (2). The headnote, which I think is accurate, reads:

“In an action, under [the Judgments Act, 1838], s. 15, against a company for permitting the transfer of shares after notice of a charging order nisi, and before the making of it absolute, it is a good answer to show that the judgment debtor in whose name the shares stood had no beneficial interest in them.”

In that case the judgment debtor was nothing more than a bare trustee.

The evidence in this case is very unsatisfactory. In an affidavit by Mr. Fraser, sworn on Nov. 7, 1949, not in these proceedings, but in the King's Bench Division, Southport District Registry, in opposition to the application by the plaintiff to have the charging order nisi made absolute, some very loose statements are made. Mr. Fraser says:

"On or about Sept. 7, 1949, I agreed that I would purchase three hundred of the said shares at a price of £3 per share."

He does not, however, say with whom he agreed. Looking at the other sentences in the same paragraph, I think that he means to say that he agreed with the company to relieve it from its obligations under the agreement of Aug. 12, 1949, with Mr. McArthur, that he would himself become a purchaser of some of the shares. Then he says that on or about the same date a similar agreement was made by Mr. Roberts. There, again, I think he means an agreement between Mr. Roberts and the company. It is material to observe that Mr. Fraser was the chairman of the board of directors of the company and that Mr. Roberts was at the material times its manager. In his affidavit Mr. Fraser goes on to say:

"It was understood and agreed between me and the company that if no other member of the company desired to purchase any part of the said shares I should hold the same as beneficial owner and for my own account; if, on the other hand, any member or members should desire to exercise the option of pre-emption contemplated by . . . cl. 13 of the . . . articles, then I should hold the appropriate proportion of the said shares as nominee or trustee for such member or members . . ."

I must now deal with the stringent provisions in the articles of the company for restricting the transfer of shares. Article 11 empowers the directors, in their absolute discretion, to decline to register any transfer of shares. By art. 12 no share

" . . . shall be transferred unless and until the rights of pre-emption hereinafter conferred shall have been exhausted."

Article 13 contains an elaborate scheme for dealing with shares which are to be transferred or are proposed to be transferred. Among the requirements to be complied with is the following, viz., that, on receiving the transfer notice from the vendor, the board shall forthwith give notice of the intended transfer to all the members of the company, stating inter alia the price of the shares to be sold (such price to be agreed by the vendor and members, or, in default of agreement, to be fixed by the auditors), and invite each member to state in writing, within one month from the date of the transfer notice, whether he is willing to purchase any, and, if so, how many, of the shares. These requirements, however, were not complied with, having been either forgotten or overlooked.

The real question in this case, I think, is whether the alleged agreements (which, I think, I must consider to be the agreements between Mr. McArthur and Mr. Roberts and between Mr. McArthur and Mr. Fraser, respectively) operated so as to amount in equity to a transfer of the shares held by Mr. McArthur, as to two hundred of them to Mr. Roberts, and as to three hundred of them to Mr. Fraser, or whether the failure or neglect to follow the code laid down by arts. 11, 12 and 13 completely vitiates the whole transaction, so that the transfers are worthless and there has been a total failure of consideration for the moneys which were admittedly paid over by Mr. Roberts and Mr. Fraser to Mr. McArthur. It is suggested on behalf of Mr. Roberts and Mr. Fraser that, notwithstanding the complete failure to comply with the articles, the transfers and the antecedent agreements which must have been made—for one does not execute a transfer without a previous intention to do so—did, in fact, operate as a sale by Mr. McArthur to Mr. Roberts and Mr. Fraser of, at any rate, the beneficial interest in the shares—otherwise the result would be that Mr. Roberts and Mr. Fraser paid their money and got nothing for it. Hunter v. Hunter (3), a decision of the House of Lords, was cited to me as an authority for the conclusion that Mr. Roberts and Mr. Fraser got nothing for their money or from the transfers executed in their favour. I have, of course, endeavoured to accept the guidance afforded to me by that case, as it is my duty to do, but the facts there were not the same as in this case, and I think that the basic difference is that in Hunter v. Hunter (3), the sale was by a mortgagee. That essential difference is emphasised in Re Hafner (4), in which BLACK, J., in the court of first instance in Ireland, considered that the fact that Hunter v. Hunter (3) was dealing with a sale by a mortgagee was of the first importance, and that the case must be read with that characteristic in mind. There is a statement in LORD ATKIN's speech in Hunter v. Hunter (3) which might seem to be conclusive in favour of the plaintiff. LORD ATKIN said ([1936] A.C. 261):

"The effect of art. 17 in my opinion is to provide the means and the only means by which a member of the company can form an agreement for the sale of shares, which can only be constituted by the act of the secretary as agent for seller and purchaser declaring a contract to be concluded at the price fixed by the auditor. That was not done in this case, and in my opinion no rights arose between the bank and Harry Hunter under any contract of sale either equitable or legal."

LORD ATKIN meant, of course, "no rights either equitable or legal." Article 17, to which he referred, was the article in that case restricting transfer of shares.

I find the very greatest difficulty in seeing how I ought to apply the decision in Hunter v. Hunter (3) to the facts of this case. On general principles, in such circumstances as those of the present case where a man who has an interest in shares in a company receives something for the sale of those shares and executes under seal a transfer of those shares for that purpose, I cannot bring myself to suppose that Hunter v. Hunter (3) constrains me to hold that everything done in that transaction is a complete nullity. The facts here are curious. Whether Mr. Fraser and Mr. Roberts thought they were doing something by agreement with the company, of which they were officers, or whether they thought they were doing something by agreement with Mr. McArthur, I do not know. I think, probably, they thought that they were doing what they were doing under an agreement both with the company and with Mr. McArthur. The one thing, however, which seems to me to be important is that they paid Mr. McArthur the money, and I cannot bring myself to suppose that they got nothing by their bargain and that the whole property in the shares remained in Mr. McArthur, notwithstanding the transfers which had been executed and the money which he received. I should, however, have been content to come to the opposite conclusion because I think that there is something almost scandalous in the way in which Mr. Roberts, Mr. Fraser and Mr. McArthur all seem to have disregarded the articles of association, by which they and the other members of the company were bound. I think it very regrettable that this muddle, for which the plaintiff was certainly not responsible—although he was a shareholder in the company—should have resulted in all the litigation which has led up to the judgment which I am now giving.

Admittedly, Mr. McArthur is still the legal owner of the shares. Admittedly, the plaintiff's rights under this charging order are in the nature of equitable rights. And admittedly, the rights of Mr. Roberts and Mr. Fraser, if they have any rights, are also equitable rights. As I have come to the conclusion that Mr. Roberts and Mr. Fraser have some rights and that what they did was not a complete nullity, the question is whose rights should prevail. A not irrelevant circumstance is that the equitable rights of Mr. Roberts and Mr. Fraser precede the equities or quasi-equitable rights under the charging order. In my opinion, the rights of Mr. Roberts and Mr. Fraser had already accrued at the time the charging order was obtained, and I think, as between the merits (not moral merits, but legal merits) of the plaintiff and the defendants, the rights of the second and third defendants, Mr. Roberts and Mr. Fraser, must prevail over the claims of the plaintiff. As a result of my decision, the only thing I can do is to dismiss this summons. The result is, I suppose, to record my decision that the charging order is nothing but a charging order nisi. I propose, however, to dismiss the summons without costs, because I think that the trouble has arisen largely through the fault of Mr. Roberts and Mr. Fraser.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Pritchard, Englefield & Co., agents for W. & R. Hodge & Halsall, Southport (for the plaintiff); Slaughter & May (for the second and third defendants).

[Reported by H. McL. MORRISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. GRANT.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL (Lord Goddard, C.J., Hilbery and Parker, JJ.), December 5, 1950.]

Criminal Law—Sentence—Corrective training—Notice of previous convictions—Committal for sentence—Service of notice three days before sentence by quarter sessions—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), s. 23 (1).

The appellant pleaded Guilty before a court of summary jurisdiction to two charges of larceny, and the court committed him to quarter sessions for sentence under s. 29 (1) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1948. On the same day he was served with a notice of intention to prove previous convictions under s. 23 (1) of the Act. The appellant now appealed against the sentence imposed by quarter sessions on the ground that the notice did not comply with s. 23 (1) as it should have been served three days before the hearing by the court of summary jurisdiction.

HELD: an offender committed for sentence under s. 29 (1) was to be treated in all respects as though he had been committed for trial at quarter sessions and had then pleaded Guilty before that court, and, therefore, the notice of previous convictions, having been served on the appellant at least three days before the day on which he had been sentenced by quarter sessions, was good and the sentence passed on the appellant was valid.

APPEAL against sentence.

The appellant, Ronald Morrison Grant, pleaded Guilty to two charges of larceny before a court of summary jurisdiction at Swindon and was committed to quarter sessions for sentence. On the same day he was served with the notice of intention to prove previous convictions required by s. 23 (1) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1948. On Aug. 30, 1950, he was sentenced to two years' corrective training and appealed with the leave of the court on the ground that the notice was invalid because it had not been served three days before his appearance before the court of summary jurisdiction.

Huntley for the appellant.

E. R. Mills for the Crown.

[FOR THE CRIMINAL JUSTICE ACT, 1948, s. 21 and s. 23, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Continuation Vol., 1948, pp. 175, 178; and for s. 29, see ibid., Vol. 14, p. 1013.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) R. v. Sheridan, [1936] 2 All E.R. 883; [1937] 1 K.B. 223; 106 L.J.K.B. 6; 155 L.T. 207; 100 J.P. 319; Digest Supp.
- A (2) R. v. Grant, [1936] 2 All E.R. 1156; 106 L.J.K.B. 9; 155 L.T. 209; 100 J.P. 324; Digest Supp.

LORD GODDARD, C.J., delivered the following judgment of the court. The appellant pleaded Guilty before a court of summary jurisdiction at Swindon to two charges of larceny. The justices consented to deal with the case summarily, but, in view of the appellant's record, committed him to quarter sessions for sentence under s. 29 (1) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1948. The sentence passed by the appeal committee at quarter sessions was two years' corrective training. The point now taken on behalf of the appellant was this. Section 23 (1) of the Act of 1948 provides that notice of intention to prove previous convictions, with a view to showing that the offender is liable to be sentenced either to preventive detention or corrective training, must be served "three days before the trial." The appellant's contention was that he was "tried" by the Swindon justices and was only sentenced by quarter sessions and, therefore, as the notice was not served on him before the hearing before the Swindon justices, he could not receive a sentence of corrective training.

In the opinion of the court, it would be giving far too narrow, and a most unfortunate, construction to s. 29 (1) of the Act if that contention were upheld. It would mean that quarter sessions, which have to deal with many young offenders who have had two or three convictions recorded against them, could practically never sentence them to corrective training which has been introduced with a view to continuing for a definite period the sort of treatment which young men get at Borstal after they are no longer, by reason of their age, qualified for Borstal. Section 29 (1) provides that where there has been a conviction before a court of summary jurisdiction and the justices find that the record of the offender is such that he deserves a heavier sentence than they can give, they can commit him for sentence to quarter sessions. When he is so committed, he is, in the case of a county quarter sessions, dealt with by the appeal committee of those sessions. The reason for that procedure is well known. It was introduced to get rid of the effect of the two decisions of this court—R. v. Sheridan (1) and R. v. Grant (2)—in which the court was obliged to hold that, if an offender had been convicted by justices, they could not then commit him for trial, because when he got to trial he could plead autrefois convict. This new power has, therefore, now been given to justices so that if, when they have decided to convict after hearing the evidence, they feel that the sentence which they can impose is inadequate, they can commit the offender for sentence to quarter sessions. Section 29 (3) provides:

"Where an offender is so committed for sentence as aforesaid, the following provisions shall have effect, that is to say:—(a) the appeal committee or court of quarter sessions shall inquire into the circumstances of the case, and shall have power to deal with the offender in any manner in which he could be dealt with by a court of quarter sessions before which he had just been convicted of the offence on indictment."

In our opinion, that section clearly means that once an offender is committed for sentence to quarter sessions he is to be treated in all respects as though he has been committed for trial to quarter sessions and come before quarter sessions as a prisoner who has pleaded Guilty. It is also to be noticed that an express provision is inserted to provide for an appeal in such a case to this court. Section 29 (3) (d) provides:

"if the appeal committee or court of quarter sessions passes a sentence which the court of summary jurisdiction would not have had power to pass the offender may appeal against the sentence to the Court of Criminal Appeal as if he had been convicted on indictment; and the provisions of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, shall apply accordingly."

Everyone knows that an appeal against a conviction by justices does not come to this court. Counsel for the appellant relies on s. 29 (5), which provides:

"In relation to an offender committed for sentence under this section, sub-s. (1) of s. 23 of this Act shall have effect as if for the words 'by the verdict of a jury' there were substituted the words 'by the appeal committee or the court of quarter sessions, as the case may be, and not by the verdict of a jury'."

That sub-section is inserted because s. 23 (1) provides that, if the prisoner disputes the convictions of which notice has been given, that issue is to be tried by a jury, and it was sought to provide that where an offender was sent to quarter sessions for sentence the appeal committee or the court of quarter sessions should try the issue instead of it being tried by a jury. These provisions seem clearly to show that Parliament intended that every proceeding which took place before quarter sessions should be treated in exactly the same way as if the offender was being tried originally and not merely being dealt with on the question of sentence.

In our opinion, it is open to the police or other appropriate authority in such circumstances as those of the present case to serve notice of previous convictions at any time up to three days before the offender is brought before quarter sessions for sentence, and, if that is done, quarter sessions can pass any sentence open to them as the result of the previous convictions mentioned in the notices which have been served. We cannot hold in this case that "the trial" referred to in s. 23 (1) is the incomplete proceedings before magistrates. A "trial" is not complete until sentence has been passed or the offender has been ordered to be discharged.

The question whether the sentence was a sentence which ought to have been passed is another matter. We have more than once pointed out that a sentence of two years' corrective training, is, as a rule, inappropriate. A sentence of three years, which, after remission for good behaviour, means two years, is the least which is likely to be of any use. The appellant is a man of thirty-nine years of age, with seven previous convictions. His last sentence was twenty-one months' imprisonment for stealing a Post Office savings bank book and obtaining £100 by means of a forged instrument, four other offences being taken into consideration. We only refrain from increasing the sentence because the appeal was based, not on the ground of the length of the sentence, but on the contention that the sentence was one which quarter sessions had no power to pass. The sentence will be altered to one of two years' imprisonment, and, as we have held that the notices were properly served, there will also be an order under s. 22 (2).

Sentence varied.

Solicitors: Registrar, Court of Criminal Appeal (for the appellant); Tarry, Sherlock & King, agents for Messrs. Townsends, Swindon (for the Crown).

[Reported by H. McL. MORRISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

OPPENHEIM v. TOBACCO SECURITIES TRUST CO., LTD.
AND OTHERS.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Simonds, Lord Normand, Lord Oaksey, Lord Morton of Henryton and Lord MacDermott), November 2, 3, 6, December 13, 1950.]

Charity—Education—Public character—Public nature of bond between beneficiaries—Gift for the education of the children of past and present members of limited company.

On Mar. 24, 1930, J.P. and his wife, E.M.P., executed a settlement whereby they assigned to a trustee certain investments in the B.A. Co., Ltd. and certain real property to be held on certain trusts during the joint lives of the settlors and the life of the survivor of them and thereafter on trust to apply the income of the trust premises "in providing for or assisting in providing for the education of children of employees or former employees of B.A. Co., Ltd. . . . or any of its subsidiary or allied companies in such manner and according to such schemes or rules or regulations as the acting trustees shall in their absolute discretion from time to time think fit and also at the discretion from time to time of the acting trustees to apply all or any part of the corpus of the said trust for the like purposes." On Oct. 8, 1940, E.M.P. died and on June 26, 1947, J.P. died. In view of the perpetuity created by the settlement, the question arose whether the trust was charitable. The number of persons employed by B.A. Co., Ltd. and its subsidiary and allied companies exceeded 110,000.

HELD (LORD MACDERMOTT dissentiente): the common employment of the beneficiaries would not be a quality which constituted them a section of the community so as to afford to the trust the necessary public character to render it charitable, and, there being for this purpose no distinction between the employees and their children, the gift was void for perpetuity.

Re Compton ([1945] 1 All E.R. 198) and Re Hobourn Aero Components Ltd.'s Air Raid Distress Fund ([1946] 1 All E.R. 501), approved.

Re Rayner (1920) (122 L.T. 577), doubted.

Per LORD SIMONDS: It was at one time suggested that the element of public benefit was not essential except for charities falling within LORD MACNAGHTEN's fourth class "other purposes beneficial to the community." This is certainly wrong except in the anomalous case of trusts for the relief of poverty. It is not for me to say what fate might await the "poor relations" cases if in a poverty case this House had to consider them.

[AS TO GIFT FOR THE EDUCATION OF A PARTICULAR CLASS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 4, pp. 117, 118, para. 154; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 8, pp. 245-248, Nos. 51-73.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Compton, [1945] 1 All E.R. 198; [1945] Ch. 123; 114 L.J.Ch. 99; 172 L.T. 158; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Re Hobourn Aero Components Ltd.'s Air Raid Distress Fund, [1946] 1 All E.R. 501; [1946] Ch. 194; 115 L.J.Ch. 158; 174 L.T. 428; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Gilmour v. Coats, [1949] 1 All E.R. 848; [1949] A.C. 426; [1949] L.J.R. 1034; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (4) Jones v. Williams, (1767), Amb. 651; 27 E.R. 422; 8 Digest 244, 36.
- (5) Income Tax Special Purposes Comrs. v. Pemsel, [1891] A.C. 531; 61 L.J.Q.B. 265; 65 L.T. 621; 55 J.P. 805; 3 Tax Cas. 53; 8 Digest 241, 1.
- (6) Re Grove Grady, [1929] 1 Ch. 557; Digest Supp.
- (7) Re Drummond, [1914] 2 Ch. 90; 83 L.J.Ch. 817; 111 L.T. 156; 8 Digest 244, 28.

- (8) Re Rayner, (1920), 89 L.J.Ch. 369; 122 L.T. 577; 84 J.P. 61; Digest Supp.
- (9) Admiralty Comrs. v. Valverde (Owners), [1938] 1 All E.R. 162; [1938] A.C. 173; 107 L.J.K.B. 99; 158 L.T. 281; Digest Supp.
- (10) Hall v. Derby Sanitary Authority, (1885), 16 Q.B.D. 163; 55 L.J.M.C. 21; 54 L.T. 175; 50 J.P. 278; 8 Digest 243, 26.
- (11) Isaac v. Defriez, (1754), Amb. 595; 27 E.R. 387; 44 Digest 890, 7479.
- (12) Gibson v. South American Stores (Gath and Chaves), Ltd., [1949] 2 All E.R. 18; [1949] Ch. 572; [1949] L.J.R. 1228; affd. in part and revsd. in part, [1949] 2 All E.R. 985; [1950] Ch. 117; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (13) Spiller v. Maude, (1881), 32 Ch.D. 158 n; 8 Digest 348, 1412.
- (14) Re Gosling, (1900), 48 W.R. 300; 8 Digest 244, 27.
- (15) Re Buck, [1896] 2 Ch. 727; 65 L.J.Ch. 881; 75 L.T. 312; 60 J.P. 775; 8 Digest 262, 246.
- (16) Re Sir Robert Laidlaw's Will Trusts, (1935), unreported.
- (17) Verge v. Somerville, [1924] A.C. 496; 131 L.T. 107; sub nom. A.-G. for Australia v. Somerville, 93 L.J.P.C. 173; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by an "acting trustee" of a settlement made on Mar. 24, 1930, by John Phillips and his wife, Elizabeth Miller Phillips, from an order of the Court of Appeal dated July 4, 1949, affirming an order of ROXBURGH, J., dated Feb. 10, 1949.

Both in the Court of Appeal and at first instance the court's decision was formal, the question being regarded as concluded against the "acting trustee" by the decisions of the Court of Appeal in Re Compton ([1945] 1 All E.R. 198) and Re Hobourn Aero Components Ltd.'s Air Raid Distress Fund ([1946] 1 All E.R. 501). The relevant facts appear in the opinion of LORD SIMONDS, and are summarised in the headnote.

Pennycuick, K.C., and Arthur Bagnall for the appellant.

Russell, K.C., and Droop for the respondent, Barclays Bank, Ltd., personal representative of John Phillips.

Denys B. Buckley for the Attorney-General.

The House took time for consideration.

Dec. 13. The following opinions were read.

LORD SIMONDS: My Lords, once more your Lordships have to consider the difficult subject of charitable trusts, and this time a question is asked to which no wholly satisfactory answer can be given. On Mar. 24, 1930, John Phillips and Elizabeth Miller Phillips, his wife, executed a settlement whereof the respondent, Tobacco Securities Trust Co., Ltd., were and are the trustees, and thereby assigned to them certain investments in the British-American Tobacco Co., Ltd. (which I will call "the company"), and its subsidiary and allied companies and certain real estate in Trinidad (together with certain heritable property in Scotland as to which no question arises in this appeal) to be held on certain trusts during the lives of the grantors and the survivor of them and thereafter on trust to apply the income of the trust premises

"in providing for or assisting in providing for the education of children of employees or former employees of British-American Tobacco Co., Ltd. . . . or any of its subsidiary or allied companies in such manner and according to such schemes or rules or regulations as the acting trustees shall in their absolute discretion from time to time think fit and also at the discretion from time to time of the acting trustees to apply all or any part of the corpus of the said trust for the like purposes."

The expression "acting trustees" meant the grantors during their lives and the directors for the time being of the company, or, in the event of the re-construction or amalgamation of the company, such other persons as were therein mentioned, in which event a variation was made also in the beneficiaries under the trust. Elizabeth Miller Phillips died on Oct. 8, 1940, leaving John Phillips, her universal legatee and devisee. He died on June 26, 1947, and his will was duly proved by the respondent, Barclays Bank (Dominion, Colonial and Overseas). The probate value of the trust premises was over £125,000, including £2,000 which represented the proceeds of the property in Scotland. It appears that in Trinidad the English common law and doctrines of equity have been in force since 1848.

In these circumstances the question arose whether the trust that I have set out is a valid trust. It is clear that it creates a perpetuity. It is, therefore, invalid unless it can be supported as a charitable trust. The appellant, as one of the directors of the company, and, accordingly, an "acting trustee," contends in favour of its validity. The contrary is contended by the respondent bank, since in the event of invalidity there is a resulting trust of the trust premises to the estates of the grantors. No evidence was given of any connection of the grantors with the company except that John Phillips was clearly a large stockholder. It appears that the number of employees of the company and its subsidiary and allied companies was large. It exceeded 110,000. This question coming before ROXBURGH, J., in the Chancery Division, it was conceded, and he held, that, having regard to the decisions of the Court of Appeal in Re Compton (1), and Re Hobourn Aero Components Ltd.'s Air Raid Distress Fund (2), he was bound to declare the trust void except as to the property in Scotland, and on Feb. 10, 1949, he made an order accordingly. On appeal to the Court of Appeal the same view was taken and the appeal was dismissed. In neither court was more than a formal decision given. Your Lordships must look to the cases that I have cited for the reasoning which led to it.

Before I turn to these authorities I will make some preliminary observations. It is a clearly established principle of the law of charity that a trust is not charitable unless it is directed to the public benefit. This is sometimes stated in the proposition that it must benefit the community or a section of the community. Negatively it is said that a trust is not charitable if it confers only private benefits. In the recent case of Gilmour v. Coats (3) this principle was re-asserted. It is easy to state and has been stated in a variety of ways, the earliest statement that I find being in Jones v. Williams (4) in which LORD HARDWICKE, L.C., is briefly reported as follows ((1767) (Amb. 652)):

"Definition of charity; a gift to a general public use, which extends to the poor as well as to the rich . . ."

With a single exception, to which I shall refer, this applies to all charities. We are apt now to classify them by reference to LORD MACNAGHTEN'S division in Income Tax Special Purposes Comrs. v. Pemsel (5), and, as I have elsewhere pointed out, it was at one time suggested that the element of public benefit was not essential except for charities falling within the fourth class "other purposes beneficial to the community." This is certainly wrong except in the anomalous case of trusts for the relief of poverty with which I must specifically deal.

In the case of trusts for educational purposes the condition of public benefit must be satisfied. The difficulty lies in determining what is sufficient to satisfy the test, and there is little to help your Lordships to solve it. If I may begin at the bottom of the scale, a trust established by a father for the education of his son is not a charity. The public element, as I will call it, is not supplied by the fact that from that son's education all may benefit. At the other end of the scale the establishment of a college or university is beyond doubt a charity. "Schools of learning, free schools, and scholars in universities" are the very words of the preamble to the Charitable Uses Act, 1601 (43 Eliz. c. 4). So also the endowment of a college, university or school by the creation of scholarships or bursaries is a charity, and none the less because competition may be limited to a particular class of persons. It is on this ground, as LORD GREENE, M.R., pointed out in Re Compton (1) ([1945] 1 All E.R. 206) that the so-called "founder's kin" cases can be rested. The difficulty arises where the trust is not for the benefit of any institution either then existing or by the terms of the trust to be brought into existence, but for the benefit of a class of persons at large. Then the question is whether that class of persons can be regarded as such a "section of the community" as to satisfy the test of public benefit. These words "section of the community" have no special sanctity, but they conveniently indicate (i) that the possible (I emphasise the word "possible") beneficiaries must not be numerically negligible, and (ii) that the quality which distinguishes them from other members of the community, so that they form by themselves a section of it, must be a quality which does not depend on their relationship to a particular individual. It is for this reason that a trust for the education of members of a family or, as in Re Compton (1), of a number of families cannot be regarded as charitable. A group of persons may be numerous, but, if the nexus between them is their personal relationship to a single propositus or to several propositi, they are neither the community nor a section of the community for charitable purposes.

I come, then, to the present case where the class of beneficiaries is numerous, but the difficulty arises in regard to their common and distinguishing quality. That quality is being children of employees of one or other of a group of companies. I can make no distinction between children of employees and the employees themselves. In both cases the common quality is found in employment by particular employers. The latter of the two cases to which I first referred, the Hobourn case (2), is a direct authority for saying that such a common quality does not constitute its possessors a section of the public for charitable purposes. In the former case, Re Compton (1), LORD GREENE, M.R., had by way of illustration placed members of a family and employees of a particular employer on the same footing, finding neither in common kinship nor in common employment the sort of nexus which is sufficient. My Lords, I am so fully in agreement with what was said by LORD GREENE in both cases and by my noble and learned friend, then MORTON, L.J., in the Hobourn case (2), that I am in danger of repeating its purport without improving on their words. No one who has been versed for many years in this difficult and very artificial branch of the law can be unaware of its illogicalities, but I join with my noble and learned friend in echoing the observations which he cited ([1946] 1 All E.R. 510) from the judgment of RUSSELL, L.J., in Re Grove Grady (6) ([1929] 1 Ch. 582), and I agree with him that the decision in Re Drummond (7) "... imposed a very healthy check upon the extension of the legal definition of 'charity' ..." It appears to me that it would be an extension, for which there is no justification in principle or authority, to regard common employment as a quality which constitutes those employed a section of the community. It must not, I think, be forgotten that charitable institutions enjoy rare and increasing privileges, and that the claim to come within that privileged class should be clearly established. With the single exception of Re Rayner (8), which I must regard as of doubtful authority, no case has been brought to the notice of the House in which such a claim as this has been made, where there is no element of poverty in the beneficiaries, but just this and no more, that they are the children of those in a common employment. Learned counsel for the appellant sought to fortify his case by pointing to the anomalies that would ensue from the rejection of his argument. For, he said, admittedly those who follow a profession or calling—clergymen, lawyers, colliers, tobacco-workers and so on—are a section of the public, and how strange then it would be if, as in the case of railwaymen, those who follow a particular calling are all employed by one employer. Would a trust for the education of railwaymen be charitable, but a trust for the education of men employed on the railways by the Transport Board not be charitable? And what of service of the Crown, whether in the civil service or the armed forces? Is there a difference between soldiers and soldiers of the King? My Lords, I am not impressed by this sort of argument and will consider on its merits, if the occasion should arise, the case where the description of the occupation and the employment is in effect the same, where in a word, if you know what a man does, you know who employs him to do it. It is to me a far more cogent argument, as it was to my noble and learned friend in the Hobourn case (2), that, if a section of the public is constituted by the personal relation of employment, it is impossible to say that it is not constituted by a thousand as by 100,000 employees, and, if by a thousand, then by a hundred, and, if by a hundred, then by ten. I do not mean merely that there is a difficulty in drawing the line, though that, too, is significant. I have it also in mind that, though the actual number of employees at any one moment might be small, it might increase to any extent, just as, being large, it might decrease to any extent. If the number of employees is the test of validity, must the court take into account potential increase or decrease, and, if so, as at what date?

I would end, my Lords, where I began—by saying that I concur in the reasoning of the Court of Appeal in the Hobourn case (2), but there are certain points in the argument for the appellants about which I should say a few words. It was urged by counsel for the Attorney-General, who was allowed to address the House, that there was here a valid charitable trust created, since there was no private person who could sue to enforce the trust. I am not persuaded that this would be so, if the trust were otherwise enforceable, but, in any case, the test is not a valid one. If this trust is charitable, the Attorney-General can sue to enforce it. It does not follow that it is charitable because no one else can sue to enforce it.

I would also, as I have previously indicated, say a word about the so-called “poor relations” cases. I do so only because they have once more been brought forward as an argument in favour of a more generous view of what may be charitable. It would not be right for me to affirm or to denounce or to justify these decisions. I am concerned only to say that the law of charity, so far as it relates to “the relief of aged, impotent and poor people” (I quote from the Charitable Uses Act, 1601) and to poverty in general, has followed its own line, and that it is not useful to try to harmonise decisions on that branch of the law with the broad proposition on which the determination of this case must rest. It is not for me to say what fate might await those cases if in a poverty case this House had to consider them, but, as was observed by LORD WRIGHT in Admiralty Comrs. v. Valverde (Owners) (9) ([1938] 1 All E.R. 174):

“This House has, no doubt, power to overrule even a long-established course of decisions of the courts, provided it has not itself determined the question . . . but in general this House will adopt this course only in plain cases, where serious inconvenience or injustice would follow from perpetuating an erroneous construction or ruling of law.”

I quote with respect those observations to indicate how unwise it would be to cast any doubt on decisions of respectable antiquity in order to introduce a greater harmony into the law of charity as a whole. The appeal should, in my opinion, be dismissed with costs.

LORD NORMAND: My Lords, the trust is an educational trust, and, therefore, it satisfies one of the conditions for acceptance as a charitable trust. But there is another condition which must also be satisfied, namely, that it is a trust beneficial to the community or to a section of the community. No general rule has yet been formulated by which to distinguish trusts which have this essential element of public benefit and those which have not, and the valiant attempts of counsel to arrive at a rule have failed to convince me. I am, however, satisfied that the element of public benefit must be found in the definition of the class of persons selected by the truster as the objects of his bounty. That seems to me to follow from the principle that the trust purpose must be directed to the benefit of the community or a section of the community: TUDOR ON CHARITIES, 5th ed., p. 11, approved by LORD GREENE, M.R., in Re Compton (1). The truster may have selected a class of persons which forms an aggregate that is not a section of the community, and if he has done that the trust will fail for perpetuity. All depends on the attribute by which the selection of the class is determined. It is on the difficulty of defining the attribute or qualification which differentiates a section of the public from an aggregate of persons which is not a section of the public that all attempts to define the public element in charitable trusts have foundered.

I will confine myself to educational trusts. It is not obvious a priori that a trust for the education of persons having the common qualification that they have already had part of their education at a named school is public. Yet there is no doubt that such trusts are public charitable trusts and are among the most securely established charitable trusts known to the law. On the other hand, a trust for the education of the descendants of A.B., however numerous they may be, is not a charitable trust: Re Compton (1), per LORD GREENE, M.R., ([1945] 1 All E.R. 201). These difficulties come from the historical development of the law of charity. I remind your lordships of the observations of LORD SIMONDS in Gilmour v. Coats (3), that the law of charity has been built up, not logically, but empirically. It is this empirical development which has so often baffled efforts to reduce the law to systematized definitions. In the present instance this House has for the first time to declare whether a trust for the education of the children of the employees of named employers is a charitable trust. If there had been a long and uniform trend of authority in favour of receiving such a trust as a charity, I apprehend that your lordships would have been willing to decide the appeal in accordance with that trend, but, as I shall later show, the authorities are with one exception against the acceptance of trusts of this kind as a charity.

If the issue is to be decided on principle and without reference to authority the question is whether a class with the common attribute that the members are the children of the employees of the same employer is a section of the public or merely an aggregate of persons without public significance. The fact that the children of the employees and not the employees themselves are the beneficiaries does not help the appellants, for there is no public element in the relationship of parent and child. The common attribute that each parent has a contract of service with the same employer remains for consideration. A contract of service is in a high degree personal, and it constitutes a personal and private relationship between the parties. Whatever the number of the employees in the service of the same employer, each still stands independently in this personal and private relationship to the employer. For certain purposes they are in relationship to one another, the relation of common employment with the rights and duties which arise from that relationship. These are private rights and duties and have no public element, except the interest that the community has in the harmonious and efficient operation of its industries and commerce and in the securing of good and safe conditions of labour. But that interest is not concerned with the employees of particular employers as such, but with employees at large or employees generally in particular occupations and is not an element relevant to this issue. In principle I am unable to say that any public element can be born out of the several private contracts between a particular employer and his employees. The appellant would not boldly submit that when the common employer employed two servants the public element at once emerged. He said it was a question of degree and the courts must take account of the number of employees, the magnitude of the sum settled by the truster, the size of the employers' undertaking, the non-contractual personal relationships (or their absence) between the employer and his employees, and other circumstances. I am unable to find any logical principle in these submissions. If there is no public element to be found in the bare nexus of common employment, all attempts to build up the public element out of circumstances which have no necessary relation with it, but are adventitious, accidental and variable, must be unavailing when the truster has chosen to define the selected class solely by the attribute of common employment. I would add that the appellant's argument would lead to a degree of uncertainty in this branch of the law which only compelling authority or logical necessity would induce me to accept. It may be conceded that the distinction inherent in the view I have taken between an educational trust for the children of all employees in the tobacco industry (see Hall v. Derby Sanitary Authority (10)) and the present trust may appear to many over-refined and unpractical, but, unless it is accepted that all trusts for education are charitable, that is a criticism which cannot be avoided. If a line must be drawn between public trusts and trusts that are not public, there will always be marginal cases and the appearance of over-refinement.

Of the authorities Re Drummond (7), a case on the fourth of LORD MACNAGHTEN'S classes, is adverse to the appellant. Re Rayner (8) is the only case which supports the appellant's contention. It was assumed rather than decided by the same learned judge, EVE, J., who decided Re Drummond (7), that a bequest to the governors of a commercial company of shares in the company with a direction to apply the income to the education of children of persons who for five years and upwards had been in the employment of the company was a charitable trust. Both these cases were considered in Re Compton (1), and Re Drummond (7) was approved and Re Rayner (8) was disapproved. I respectfully agree with the comments of LORD GREENE, M.R., on both these cases ([1945] 1 All E.R. 204). Re Hobourn Aero Components Ltd.'s Air Raid Distress Fund (2) was also a case on LORD MACNAGHTEN'S fourth class. It decided that funds collected by the employees of a company for their own benefit were not a fund applicable for the benefit of the public or any section of the public because the purpose of the subscription was to benefit the subscribers themselves, but MORTON, L.J., discussed ([1946] 1 All E.R. 510, 511) the requirement that a purpose, to be charitable, must be directed to the benefit of the community or a section of the community with special relation to trusts for the benefit of employees of a particular company. With all that he said I respectfully agree. I, therefore, consider that to admit the present trust to the category of charity would be an innovation contrary alike to principle and to the trend of authority and on these grounds I would dismiss the appeal.

LORD OAKSEY: My Lords, I have had the advantage of reading the opinion of the noble Lord on the Woolsack and I agree with it.

LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON: My Lords, I have had the privilege of reading in print the opinions which have just been delivered by my noble and learned friends, LORD SIMONDS and LORD NORMAND. I agree with these opinions, but, as I was a party to the decisions of the Court of Appeal in Re Compton (1) and Re Hobourn Aero Components Ltd.'s Air Raid Distress Fund (2), it is, perhaps, appropriate that I should say a few words about these and certain other cases. Counsel for the appellant submitted that the observations of LORD GREENE, M.R., (with which I concurred) in Re Compton (1), and of myself in the latter case, in regard to trusts for the employees of a particular company, were ill founded. I have re-considered these observations with great care in the light of the argument submitted on this appeal, and I see no reason to qualify any of them.

In the last portion of his speech, my noble and learned friend on the Wool-sack referred to the "poor relations" cases, of which, perhaps, the most notable is Isaac v. Defriez (11). In Re Compton (1) LORD GREENE, M.R., considered these cases and observed ([1945] 1 All E.R. 206):

"The cases must at this date be regarded as good law although they are, perhaps, anomalous."

In the course of the argument, your Lordships' attention was called to a line of much more modern decisions which might possibly be described as the descendants of the "poor relations" cases. Recently, in Gibson v. South American Stores (Gath and Chaves), Ltd. (12), the Court of Appeal had to consider the trusts of a fund called "Employees' Health and Relief Fund" established by the defendant company. The board of the company had executed a deed vesting a fund in trustees and declaring (by cl. 3) that it was to be used for granting, at the discretion of the board, gratuities, pensions or allowances to beneficiaries. By cl. 4 it was declared that the class of beneficiaries included:

"all persons who in the opinion of the London board are or shall be necessitous and deserving and who for the time being are or have been in the company's employ or in the employ of any agents of the company or in the employ of [a subsidiary company] and the wives widows husbands widowers children parents and other dependants of any person who for the time being is or would if living have been himself or herself a member of the class of beneficiaries."

The Court of Appeal first held that, as a matter of construction, the trusts established in cl. 3 and cl. 4 were limited to necessitous beneficiaries. SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R., having stated the above decision, continued ([1949] 2 All E.R. 992):

"That left as the next point for discussion what, it appeared, might well be a question of law of great difficulty and no little importance. The question may, I think, be put thus: Under the law as it has now been established, and in the light of several recent decisions, both in this court and in the House of Lords, is a trust for a class of poor persons defined by reference to the fact that they are employed by some person, firm, or company, a good charitable gift, a good charitable trust, or does it fail of that qualification through the absence of the necessary public element?"

If one omits the word "poor" the question thus posed is, in substance, the same as the question which arises on the present appeal. The learned Master of the Rolls then went on to consider Spiller v. Maude (13), Re Gosling (14), Re Buck (15), and Re Laidlaw's Will Trusts (16), an unreported case decided by the Court of Appeal in 1935, and he felt constrained by the last mentioned authority to decide that the trust in Gibson's case (12) was a valid charitable trust, notwithstanding the limited nature of the class of beneficiaries. The element of poverty of the beneficiaries was present in each of the cases considered by the learned Master of the Rolls, and, therefore, each case fell into the first of the four classes of charitable trusts laid down by LORD MACNAGHTEN in Pemsel's case (5) ([1891] A.C. 583), whereas the present case falls into the second class. I think that for this reason your Lordships are of opinion that it is neither necessary nor desirable to express any view, on the present occasion, on the cases to which I have just referred. I am content to fall in with this opinion, only observing that they may require careful consideration in this House on some future occasion. I agree that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

LORD MACDERMOTT: My Lords, it is not disputed that this trust is for the advancement of education. The question is whether it is of a public nature—whether, in the words of LORD WRENBURY in Verge v. Somerville (17) ([1924] A.C. 499):

"... it is for the benefit of the community or of an appreciably important class of the community."

The relevant class here is that from which those to be educated are to be selected. The appellant contends that this class is public in character; the respondent bank (as personal representative of the last surviving settlor) denies this and says that the class is no more than a group of private individuals.

- A Until comparatively recently the usual way of approaching an issue of this sort, at any rate where educational trusts were concerned, was, I believe, to regard the facts of each case and to treat the matter very much as one of degree. No definition of what constituted a sufficient section of the public for the purpose was applied, for none existed, and the process seems to have been one of reaching a conclusion on a general survey of the circumstances and considerations regarded
- B as relevant rather than of making a single, conclusive test. The investigation left the course of the dividing line between what was and what was not a section of the community unexplored, and was concluded when it had gone far enough to establish to the satisfaction of the court whether or not the trust was public, and the decision as to that was, I think, very often reached by determining whether or not the trust was private. Now, if it is still permissible to conduct
- C the present inquiry on these broad, if imprecise, lines, I would hold with the appellant. The numerical strength of the class is considerable on any showing. The employees concerned number over 110,000, and it may reasonably be assumed that the children, who constitute the class in question, are no fewer. The large size of the class is not, of course, decisive, but, in my view, it cannot be left out of account when the problem is approached in this way. Then it
- D must be observed that the propositi are not limited to those presently employed. They include former employees (not reckoned in the figure I have given), and are, therefore, a more stable category than would otherwise be the case. And, further, the employees concerned are not limited to those in the service of the "British-American Tobacco Co., Ltd., or any of its subsidiary or allied companies"—itself a description of great width—but include the employees, in
- E the event of the British-American Tobacco Co., being re-constructed or merged on amalgamation, of the re-constructed or amalgamated company or any of its subsidiary companies. No doubt, the settlors here had a special interest in the welfare of the class they described, but, apart from the fact that this may serve to explain the particular form of their bounty, I do not think it material to the question in hand. What is material, as I regard the matter,
- F is that they have chosen to benefit a class which is, in fact, substantial in point of size and importance and have done so in a manner which, to my mind, manifests an intention to advance the interests of the class described as a class rather than as a collection or succession of particular individuals.

- Proceeding on the basis I have mentioned, I find no difficulty in distinguishing this trust from that considered by EVE, J., in Re Drummond (7). There the
- G class was narrowly defined by reference to the workpeople employed in a particular department in a particular business. I do not question the correctness of the decision that that was a trust for private individuals, and, therefore, not public in the relevant sense, but I do not think there is anything in the judgment of the learned judge to warrant the view that the conclusion he reached should prevail in all cases where, in the qualifications for admission to the class
- H of beneficiaries, there has somewhere to be found, it may be at one remove or more, the fact of employment by one of a number of designated employers. There is another difference to be noted between that case and the present one. Apart from the marked contrast in the scope of the respective trusts, the trust purpose in Re Drummond (7) was not, prima facie, within any of the well-known classes of legal charity. Here it is otherwise, for the trust is plainly one for the advancement of education. Had EVE, J., been able to hold in Re Drummond (7) that the trust was for the relief of poverty I think it is clear from his subsequent decision in Re Rayner (8) that he would have reached a different conclusion. It may be that in this respect the relief of poverty and the advancement of education do not stand on precisely the same footing. I confess I do not see why in principle there should be such a distinction, but, even if there is, it is none the less true to say that in both fields the actual work of the trust advances the public interest in some degree. If, then, the class of potential beneficiaries in an educational trust is substantial, and not obviously private in nature, I think one may reasonably commence, in the kind of investigation I am considering, by assuming, until the contrary appears, that the trust is for the benefit of the community.

The respondent bank, however, contends that the inquiry should be of quite a different character from that which I have been discussing. It advances as the sole criterion a narrower test derived from the decisions of the Court of Appeal in Re Compton (1) and Re Hobourn Aero Components Ltd.'s Air Raid Distress Fund (2). The basis and nature of this test appear from the passage in the judgment of the court in Re Compton (1) where LORD GREENE, M.R., says ([1945] 1 All E.R. 201):

"In the case of many charitable gifts it is possible to identify the individuals who are to benefit or who at any given moment constitute the class from which the beneficiaries are to be selected. This circumstance does not, however, deprive the gift of its public character. Thus, if there is a gift to relieve the poor inhabitants of a parish the class to benefit is readily ascertainable. But they do not enjoy the benefit when they receive it by virtue of their character as individuals but by virtue of their membership of the specified class. In such a case the common quality which unites the potential beneficiaries into a class is essentially an impersonal one. It is definable by reference to what each has in common with the others and that is something into which their status as individuals does not enter. Persons claiming to belong to the class do so not because they are A.B., C.D., and E.F., but because they are poor inhabitants of the parish. If in asserting their claim it were necessary for them to establish the fact that they were the individuals A.B., C.D., and E.F., I cannot help thinking that on principle the gift ought not to be held to be a charitable gift, since the introduction into their qualification of a purely personal element would deprive the gift of its necessary public character. It seems to me that the same principle ought to apply when the claimants, in order to establish their status, have to assert and prove, not that they themselves are A.B., C.D., and E.F., but that they stand in some specified relationship to the individuals A.B., C.D., and E.F., such as that of children or employees. In such a case, too, a purely personal element enters into and is an essential part of the qualification, which is defined by reference to something, i.e., a personal relationship to individuals or an individual which is in its essence non-public."

The test thus propounded focuses on the common quality which unites those within the class concerned and asks whether that quality is essentially impersonal or essentially personal. If the former, the class will rank as a section of the public and the trust will have the element common to and necessary for all legal charities, but, if the latter, the trust will be private and not charitable. It is suggested in the passage just quoted, and made clear beyond doubt in Re Hobourn (2), that, in the opinion of the Court of Appeal, employment by a designated employer must be regarded for this purpose as a personal and not as an impersonal bond of union. In this connection, and as illustrating the discriminating character of what I may call "the Compton test," reference should be made to that part of the judgment of LORD GREENE, M.R., in Re Hobourn (2) in which he speaks of the decision in Hall

v. Derby Sanitary Authority (10). He says ([1946] 1 All E.R. 509) that the latter case

"... was a trust for railway servants. It was said that if a trust for railway servants could be a good charity, why should not a trust for railway servants in the employment of a particular railway company be a good charity? The reason, I think, is that in the one case it would be it as a criterion of general applicability and conclusiveness. In the first place, I see much difficulty in dividing the qualities or attributes which may serve to bind human beings into classes into two mutually exclusive groups, the one involving individual status and purely personal, the other disregarding such status and quite impersonal. As a task this seems to me no less baffling and elusive than the problem to which it is directed, namely, the determination of what is and what is not a section of the public for the purposes of this branch of the law. After all, what is more personal than poverty or blindness or ignorance? Yet none would deny that a gift for the education of the children of the poor or blind was charitable, and I doubt if there is any less certainty about the charitable nature of a gift for, say, the education of children who satisfy a specified examining body that they need and would benefit by a course of special instruction designed to remedy their educational defects. But can any really fundamental distinction, as respects the personal or impersonal nature of the common link, be drawn between those employed, for example, by a particular university and those whom the same university has put in a certain category as the result of individual examination and assessment? Again, if the bond between those employed by a particular railway is purely personal, why should the bond between those who are employed as railwaymen be so essentially different? Is a distinction to be drawn in this respect between those who are employed in a particular industry before it is nationalised and those who are employed therein after that process has been completed and one employer has taken the place of many? Are miners in the service of the National Coal Board now in one category and miners at a particular pit or of a particular district in another? Is the relationship between those in the service of the Crown to be distinguished from that obtaining between those in the service of some other employer? Or, if not, are the children of, say, soldiers or civil servants to be regarded as not constituting a sufficient section of the public to make a trust for their education charitable? It was conceded in the course of the argument that, had the present trust been framed so as to provide for the education of the children of those engaged in the tobacco industry in a named county or town, it would have been a good charitable disposition, and that even though the class to be benefited would have been appreciably smaller and no more important than is the class here. That concession follows from what the Court of Appeal has said. But if it is sound, and a personal or impersonal relationship remains the universal criterion, I think it shows, no less than the queries I have just raised in indicating some of the difficulties of the problem, that the "Compton test" is a very arbitrary and artificial rule.

This leads me to the second difficulty I have regarding it. If I understand it aright, it necessarily makes the quantum of public benefit a consideration of little moment. The size of the class becomes immaterial and the need of its members and the public advantage of having that need met appear alike to be irrelevant. To my mind, these are considerations of some account in the sphere of educational trusts for, as already indicated, I think the educational value and scope of the work actually to be done must have a bearing on the question of public benefit.

Finally, it seems to me that, far from settling the state of the law on this particular subject, the "Compton test" is more likely to create confusion and doubt in the case of many trusts and institutions of a character whose legal standing as charities has never been in question. I have particularly in mind gifts for the education of certain special classes, such, for example, as the daughters of missionaries, the children of those professing a particular faith or accepted as ministers of a particular denomination, or those whose parents have sent them to a particular school for the earlier stages of their training. I cannot but think that in cases of this sort an analysis of the common quality binding the class to be benefited may reveal a relationship no less personal than that existing between an employer and those in his service. Take, for instance, a trust for the provision of university education for boys coming from a particular school. The common quality binding the members of that class seems to reside in the fact that their parents or guardians all contracted for their schooling with the same establishment or body. That the school in such a case may itself be a charitable foundation seems altogether beside the point and quite insufficient to hold the "Compton test" at bay if it is well founded in law.

My Lords, counsel for the appellant and for the Attorney-General adumbrated several other tests for establishing the presence or absence of the necessary public element. I have given these my careful consideration and I do not find them any more sound or satisfactory than the "Compton test." I, therefore, return to what I think was the process followed before the decision in Compton's case (1), and, for the reasons already given, I would hold the present trust charitable and allow the appeal. I have only to add that I recognise the imperfections and uncertainties of that process. They are as evident as the difficulties of finding something better, but I venture to doubt if it is in the power of the courts to resolve those difficulties satisfactorily as matters stand. It is a long cry to the age of Elizabeth and I think what is needed is a fresh start from a new statute.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: D. M. Oppenheim (for the appellant); Hugh-Jones & Flinn (for Barclays Bank, Ltd.); Treasury Solicitor (for the Attorney-General).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

PARIS v. STEPNEY BOROUGH COUNCIL.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Simonds, Lord Normand, Lord Oaksey, Lord Morton of Henryton and Lord MacDermott), October 26, 30, November 2, December 13, 1950.]

Master and Servant—Liability of master—Workman's special risk of injury—Garage fitter—Need to provide goggles—Workman with only one eye—Injury to other eye.

If, to the knowledge of his employer, a workman is suffering from a disability which, though it does not increase the risk of an accident occurring while he is at work, does increase the risk of serious injury if an accident should befall him, that special risk of injury is a relevant consideration in determining what precautions the employer should take in fulfilment of his duty to take reasonable care for the safety of each individual workman.

The appellant was employed as a fitter in the garage of the respondent borough council. To the knowledge of the respondents, he had the use of only one eye. While he was using a hammer to remove a bolt on a vehicle, a chip of metal flew off and entered his good eye, so injuring it that he became totally blind. The respondents did not provide goggles for the appellant to wear, and there was evidence that it was not the ordinary practice for employers to supply goggles to men employed in garages on the maintenance and repair of vehicles.

HELD: (i) the condition of the appellant's eyes, the knowledge of the respondents, the likelihood of an accident happening, and the gravity of the consequences if an accident should occur, were relevant facts to be taken into account in determining the question whether or not the respondents took reasonable precautions for the appellant's safety.

(ii) (LORD SIMONDS and LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON dissenting) in the circumstances the respondents owed a special duty of care to the appellant, and, whether or not goggles should have been supplied to two-eyed workmen engaged in the same work as the appellant, they should have been provided for the appellant, and the respondents' failure to provide them rendered them liable in negligence.

Decision of the COURT OF APPEAL ([1949] 2 All E.R. 843), reversed.

[AS TO MASTER'S DUTY AT COMMON LAW, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 22, pp. 187-194, paras. 313-328; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 34, pp. 194-220, Nos. 1580-1824.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Mackintosh v. Mackintosh, (1864), 2 Macph. (Ct. of Sess.) 1357; 36 Digest 55, 342 xv.
- (2) Northwestern Utilities, Ltd. v. London Guarantee & Accident Co., Ltd., [1936] A.C. 108; 105 L.J.P.C. 18; 154 L.T. 89; Digest Supp.
- (3) Daborn v. Bath Tramways Motor Co., Ltd. & Trevor Smithey, [1946] 2 All E.R. 333; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (4) Morton v. William Dixon, 1909 S.C. 807.
- (5) Wilsons and Clyde Coal Co., Ltd. v. English, [1937] 3 All E.R. 628; [1938] A.C. 57; 106 L.J.P.C. 117; 157 L.T. 406; Digest Supp.
- (6) Smith v. Baker & Sons, [1891] A.C. 325; 60 L.J.Q.B. 683; 65 L.T. 467; 55 J.P. 660; 36 Digest 95, 633.

APPEAL by the workman from an order of the Court of Appeal, dated Oct. 27, 1949, and reported [1949] 2 All E.R. 843, reversing a decision of LYNSEY, J., dated Apr. 11, 1949, in favour of the workman for £5,250 damages and costs. The Court of Appeal held that his employers, the respondents, Stepney Borough Council, were not negligent in failing to provide goggles for the workman, a man with only one effective eye, who, on May 28, 1947, while working in the respondents' garage, suffered an injury to that eye which caused total blindness.

Beney, K.C., Marven Everett, and J. R. B. Fox-Andrews for the workman. H. Edmund Davies, K.C., and A. L. Stevenson for the employers.

The House took time for consideration.

Dec. 13. The following opinions were read.

LORD SIMONDS: My Lords, this is an appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal setting aside a judgment of LYNSEY, J., in favour of the appellant for £5,250 damages and costs. On May 13, 1942, the appellant entered the service of the respondents as a garage hand in their cleansing department. He was then for all practical purposes blind in his left eye, having suffered serious injury in May, 1941, as the result of enemy action, but this fact was not known to the respondents at that time. On or about July 19, 1946, he was medically examined with a view to his becoming a member of the permanent staff and joining the superannuation scheme, and on July 22, 1946, the medical officer reported to a Mr. Boden, the respondents' public cleansing officer, that the appellant was not fit on account of his disablement to join the superannuation scheme. On May 16, 1947, he was given two weeks' notice expiring on May 30, 1947, to terminate his employment. I will assume that at this date the respondents had notice of his physical disability, including the blindness of his left eye. On May 28, 1947, the accident occurred which gave rise to the present action. The appellant was engaged in dismantling the chassis of a gulley cleaner, a type of vehicle generally used by local authorities for the cleansing and flushing of street gulleys. The vehicle had been raised about four and a half feet from the garage floor by means of a ramp. The appellant had to remove a U-bolt holding the springs of an axle, and, to release it, he hit the U-bolt with a steel hammer. As the result of his doing so a piece of metal flew off and entered his right eye with the disastrous consequence that he lost the sight of it altogether. On Aug. 8, 1947, he commenced his action against the respondents claiming damages for their negligence and breach of statutory duty. The respondents put in a defence denying negligence and raising an alternative plea of contributory negligence which has not been pursued. Nor has the appellant pursued his claim for breach of statutory duty. The single question is whether the appellant proved the negligence of the respondents, a question answered in the affirmative by LYNSEY, J., in the negative by the Court of Appeal.

What, then, was the negligence alleged by the appellant and denied by the respondents? It was that it was the duty of the respondents to supply the appellant with suitable goggles for the protection of his eyes while he was engaged in such work and to require him to use them. I can come at once to the crux of the matter. In the statement of claim this duty is pleaded as a general duty owed by the respondents to their employees engaged in this class of work. The appellant did not allege a particular duty owed to him by reason of his individual infirmity. At what stage this plea emerged is not very clear, but, having more than once read the judgment of LYNSEY, J., I share the view of LORD GODDARD, C.J., in the Court of Appeal that that learned judge decided the case on the ground that a special duty was owed to him as a one-eyed man, and it is clear that in the Court of Appeal and in this House this was the relevant plea. The first formal reason in the appellant's Case asserts the respondents' duty " . . . to exercise reasonable care not unnecessarily to expose the appellant to the risk of suffering the injurious results likely to follow an accident to his sound eye having regard to the fact that he was known by them to be a one-eyed man."

The issue, my Lords, is thus narrowed down, and I will say at once that I do not dissent from the view that an employer owes a particular duty to each of his employees. His liability in tort arises from his failure to take reasonable care in regard to the particular employee and it is clear that, if so, all the circumstances relevant to that employee must be taken into consideration. I see no valid reason for excluding as irrelevant the gravity of the damage which the employee will suffer if an accident occurs, and with great respect to the judgments of the Court of Appeal I cannot accept the view, neatly summarised by ASQUITH, L.J. ([1949] 2 All E.R. 845), that the greater risk of injury is, but the risk of greater injury is not, a relevant circumstance. I find no authority for such a proposition nor does it appear to me to be founded on any logical principle.

My Lords, the gravity of the injury is, however, only one of the relevant circumstances, and, while I cannot accept the judgment of the Court of Appeal which is based on the view that it is irrelevant, unlike the majority of your Lordships, I find it impossible to uphold the judgment of the learned trial judge. For he, I think, ignored a consideration which was essential to a proper determination of the duty of the respondents to the appellant. If the gravity of the damage is relevant, so also is the seriousness of the risk, and in the consideration of this question I think that the learned judge fell into error. As I have already said, it is difficult to be sure what was in the mind of the learned judge, for having stated (correctly, as I think) that the respondents owed a duty to the appellant individually, not to a class, he added:

"In this case the real question is whether the employers in adopting this system and not providing or requiring the use of goggles for the workers on this system were taking reasonable care to provide a suitable system of work and provide a suitable plant."

He then, however, without coming to any conclusion on this question, appears to decide in favour of the appellant on the ground of his particular disability, for he concludes by saying:

"I am satisfied here that there was, so far as this particular plaintiff was concerned, a duty on the employers to provide goggles and require the use of goggles as part of their system."

Your Lordships must be left in doubt what view the learned judge held on what he had described as the real question, yet it was, if not the real question, a matter of fundamental importance in determining what was the nature of the risk which was run by two-eyed and one-eyed men alike. It is a question which I will now consider.

My Lords, a study of the evidence leaves me in no doubt that an employer could not be held guilty of negligence if he did not generally provide goggles for the use of his employees engaged in this kind of work. Mr. Boden, to whom I have already referred, a witness of wide experience, was asked:

"Q.—Have you seen in work of this kind workmen wearing goggles to do such work? A.—Not in my experience. I have never seen any mechanic working in any of the repair shops that I have visited during that thirty-seven years wearing goggles doing that repair work."

A Mr. Reay, having served his time in the shops where he had neither himself worn nor seen others wearing goggles for such work, set up in business for himself. He was asked,

"Q.—When you were your own employer, did you wear goggles for such work? A.—No."

The appellant himself gave evidence, which, so far as it bears on the obviousness of the risk and corresponding duty, cannot be disregarded. I make nothing of the fact that he did not complain that goggles were not provided, for he might well hesitate to do so, but he was asked:

"Q.—Have you considered as to whether it was dangerous to do this sort of job without eye protection? A.—Well, we were always working through years doing just the same thing. It became natural to get in there without protection. Q.—You did not think about it? A.—We had been doing it for years and never thought of it."

It is true that he added that, if goggles had been provided and he had been told to use them, he would have done so, but this does not appear to carry the matter any further. For the appellant, a Captain Paterson said, in answer to the learned judge, that in the whole of his experience he had about a dozen times seen a man wearing goggles when he was using a hammer to knock a rusted bolt in dismantling a car, adding that that would be when working under a vehicle. It is not clear whether on these occasions the man was wearing goggles for fear of a splinter of metal piercing his eye or of grit or dirt falling into it. Mr. Parker, at the relevant time the mechanical superintendent of the respondents' cleansing department, while asserting that it was not normal practice to wear goggles for the work in question, said he had seen men who were working underneath a vehicle wearing goggles. That was "preferably if they were lying on their backs." Of the single instance that he could distinctly remember he assumed that the man was doing it to prevent dust getting in his eyes.

The evidence in regard to practice appears to me overwhelming, but however unlikely such an event may be in such an organised community as ours is to-day, it is possible that the practice, however widespread, is carried on in disregard of risks that are obvious. Let me, then, examine this aspect of the evidence. There was undisputed evidence that, when a piece of steel and particularly of steel corroded with rust is struck with a steel hammer, chips or splinters of steel may fly off. It could hardly be otherwise, but the question is: What is the risk. Captain Paterson, whom I have already mentioned, deposed to having had personal knowledge of about half-a-dozen eye injuries in the course of thirty-two years' experience, the first of them having taken place some six or seven years before. A Mr. Seeley, a fellow employee of the appellant, had a somewhat similar accident, though for him happily the consequences were trivial, at a date which could not be fixed whether before or after the appellant's accident. There is no reason to suppose that the respondents knew or ought to have known of Captain Paterson's experiences, and there was nothing else. On this evidence, my Lords, no other conclusion can be reached than that the respondents were not under a duty to provide goggles for their workmen engaged on this work at least if they were two-eyed men, and the reason why they were under no such duty was because the risk was not one against which a reasonable employer was bound to take precautions. It was from this premise that the inquiry should proceed, whether, nevertheless, in the case of a one-eyed man they were bound to do so. This clearly must depend on whether it should be manifest to the reasonable employer that in the case of a one-eyed workman the possible damage in the event of accident was so much graver than in the case of a two-eyed workman that in the former case he ought to take precautions though in the latter case he need not. I see no justification for such a conclusion. A two-eyed man might, if a splinter struck him in the eye, suffer an injury which in any scale would be considered very grave. He might even suffer injury in both eyes either by immediate damage to both or by the infection of one from the other. The eye which was left to him might have perfect vision or might be defective in a degree varying from the slightest imperfection to almost total blindness, but however grave, even calamitous, the damage that he suffered by the loss of one eye, the two-eyed man would have no remedy. The question, therefore, is not of a contrast between damage in the case of one man trivial and in the case of another very grave, but rather of an accident so serious in its consequence to any man whether one-eyed or two-eyed, that, if the risk of it was appreciable, it would be the clear duty of the employer to provide and enforce the use of proper precautions against it. Yet the risk was not guarded against, for it was regarded, and rightly regarded, as a risk which could reasonably be run, and this was so whatever the posture which the workman assumed in doing his job. Risk cannot be assessed in terms of scientific accuracy. One speaks of "conceivable" danger and "probable" danger and the boundaries are blurred. One must, I concede, have regard to the degree of injury that an accident may cause, a difficult task enough. Taking these things into consideration, and starting, as the learned judge did not, from the fact that, to use the familiar, though inapt, phrase, it was not part of the system of work to provide goggles for two-eyed men because the degree of risk did not demand that precaution in a reasonable employer, I do not think there was evidence on which it could fairly be held that the same reasonable employer was bound at his peril to provide goggles for one-eyed men. For these reasons I would dismiss this appeal, but, as the majority of your Lordships are in favour of allowing the appeal, the judgment of LYNKEY, J., on liability must be restored, and it will remain for the Court of Appeal to deal with the appellant's appeal on the quantum of damages.

LORD NORMAND: My Lords, this appeal involves a question of general importance affecting the common law duty which an employer owes to his employee. It is this. A workman is suffering, to the employer's knowledge, from a disability which, though it does not increase the risk of an accident's occurring while he is at work, does increase the risk of serious injury if an accident should befall him. Is the special risk of injury a relevant consideration in determining the precautions which the employer should take in fulfilment of the duty of care which he owes to the workman?

The appellant, when he entered the respondents' service in 1942, suffered from a permanent defect of the vision of his left eye which made him virtually a one-eyed man. In July, 1946, he was examined, at the instance of the respondents, by their medical officer. The purpose of the examination was to determine whether he was fit to be enrolled in the respondents' permanent staff. On July 22, 1946, the examining doctor reported the defect of the appellant's left eye to the head of the department in which the appellant was employed. The respondents must, therefore, be held to have known of the defect from that date. From 1942 till the accident the appellant worked as a fitter's mate in the garage of the respondents' cleaning department on the maintenance and repair of vehicles. On May 28, 1947, a large vehicle, used for cleaning sewers and gulleys, was brought into the garage to be stripped for examination. It was placed on a platform let into a pit in the floor from which it was raised, after the vehicle had been placed on it, to a height of about four to five feet above the floor level. When the platform was in this position the appellant set to work to strip the vehicle. To do this it was necessary for him to stand with his eyes level with or slightly below the part at which he was working. He first removed the nuts from the U-bolt which held the springs in place and cleared away the dirt from the U-bolt itself. He then used an ordinary hammer to knock out the rusty bolts. While he was doing this a fragment of metal was broken off and lodged in his right eye, which is in consequence now completely blind. The work which the appellant was doing on this occasion was similar to the work that he had been doing for the previous five years.

The appellant's case is that for this sort of work the respondents ought to have supplied him with goggles to protect his eyes. The respondents supplied goggles with tinted glasses to protect the eyes of welders against excessive light and they supplied goggles for men working on grinding machines, but they supplied no goggles for men employed on the maintenance and repair of vehicles. There was evidence from each side on the question whether it was usual for employers to supply goggles to men employed in garages on that sort of work. The weight of the evidence is decidedly against the appellant on that point. On the other hand, there is proof that individual men working under a vehicle in the respondents' garage did occasionally take a pair of goggles from a cupboard in the garage and wear them to protect the eyes, and that it was known to the respondents' responsible officials that dirt did sometimes get into the men's eyes and also that when bolts were removed pieces of metal might sometimes fly. Thus, according to the public cleansing officer, it was a common occurrence that men got dirt into their eyes, and one such accident is proved by the victim, but it is not clear whether it took place before or after the accident to the appellant. The appellant depones that dirt and grit fell on his face and into his hair when he was working under the vehicles, but he never complained about this, and never thought of the danger to his eyes.

LYNSKEY, J., in his judgment, made no reference to the evidence of the practice followed by other employers nor did he hold that the respondents ought to have supplied goggles to all the workers engaged on the same sort of work as the appellant. After mentioning the risk of pieces of metal flying out, and the position in which the men had to work with their eyes on a level with or below the part of the vehicle at which they were working (matters which apply to all the workmen), he emphasised the importance of the appellant's having, to the respondents' knowledge, only one useful eye. His conclusion is: A

"The result is, in my view, in this case on the evidence, that I am satisfied here that there was, so far as this particular plaintiff was concerned, a duty on the employers to provide goggles and require the use of goggles as part of their system."

In the Court of Appeal LORD GODDARD, C.J., said ([1949] 2 All E.R. 844): B

"The way that the learned judge has decided the case and the ground on which counsel for the workman has endeavoured to uphold the judgment is that as this workman had one eye only a greater duty was owed to him than was owed to other persons because the consequences of an accident would be so much more serious."

If I may respectfully say so, I think that the learned Lord Chief Justice correctly interpreted the judgment. The Court of Appeal reversed the judgment for reasons which are very clearly stated by ASQUITH, L.J. (ibid., 845): C

"The disability can only be relevant to the stringency of the duty owed to the workman if it increases the risk to which the workman is exposed. A one-eyed man is no more likely to get a splinter or a chip in his eye than is a two-eyed man. The risk is no greater, but the damage is greater to a man using his only good eye than to a man using two good eyes. The quantum of damage, however, is one thing, and the scope of duty is another. The greater risk of injury is not the same thing as the risk of greater injury, and the first thing seems to me to be relevant here." D

Whether that is a correct view is of considerable importance, for the ratio of the judgment will apply not only where the duty of care arises from the relationship of master and servant but in many other cases of alleged negligence. E

It is not disputed that the respondents' duty of care is a duty owed to their employees as individuals. The respondents contend, however, that, though it is not a duty owed to the employees collectively, they must take account in fulfilling the duty only of any disability that increases the risk of an accident's occurring. For that proposition no authority was cited, and, in my opinion, it is contrary to principle. The test is what precautions would the ordinary, reasonable and prudent man take? The relevant considerations include all those facts which could affect the conduct of a reasonable and prudent man and his decision on the precautions to be taken. Would a reasonable and prudent man be influenced, not only by the greater or less probability of an accident occurring but also by the gravity of the consequences if an accident does occur? In Mackintosh v. Mackintosh (1) LORD NEAVES, considering a case of alleged negligence in muir burning, said (2 Macph. (Ct. of Sess.) 1362): F

"... it must be observed that in all cases the amount of care which a prudent man will take must vary infinitely according to circumstances. No prudent man in carrying a lighted candle through a powder magazine would fail to take more care than if he was going through a damp cellar. The amount of care will be proportionate to the degree of risk run, and to the magnitude of the mischief that may be occasioned." G H

In Northwestern Utilities, Ltd. v. London Guarantee & Accident Co., Ltd. (2) LORD WRIGHT, dealing with the risk of grave damage which may be caused by gas escaping from a main, said ([1936] A.C. 126):

"The degree of care which that duty involves must be proportioned to the degree of risk involved if the duty should not be fulfilled."

The learned editor of SALMOND ON THE LAW OF TORTS, 10th ed., p. 438 f.n., similarly says:

"There are two factors in determining the magnitude of a risk—the seriousness of the injury risked, and the likelihood of the injury being in fact caused."

These are, in my opinion, accurate statements both of the law and of the ordinary man's conduct in taking precautions for his own safety.

"No reasonable man, handles a stick of dynamite and a walking-stick in the same way" see WINFIELD'S TEXTBOOK OF THE LAW OF TORT, 4th ed., p. 407.

The court's task of deciding what precautions a reasonable and prudent man would take in the circumstances of a particular case may not be easy. Nevertheless, the judgment of the reasonable and prudent man should be allowed its common every-day scope, and it should not be restrained from considering the foreseeable consequences of an accident and their seriousness for the person to whom the duty of care is owed. Such a restriction, if it might sometimes simplify the task of the judge or jury, would be an undue and artificial simplification of the problem to be solved. If the courts were now to take the narrow view proposed by the respondents the cleavage between the legal conception of the precautions which a reasonable and prudent man would take and the precautions which reasonable and prudent men do in fact take would lessen the respect which the administration of justice ought to command. To guard against possible misunderstanding it may be well to add here that the seriousness of the injury or damage risked and the likelihood of its being in fact caused may not be the only relevant factors. For example, ASQUITH, L.J., in Daborn v. Bath Tramways Motor Co., Ltd. & Trevor Smithey (3), pointed out that it is sometimes necessary to take account of the consequence of not assuming a risk.

I am unable, therefore, to reject the conclusion arrived at by LYNSKEY, J., on the ground on which the Court of Appeal proceeded, but that does not end the appeal. For there remains the question whether, assuming that the fact that the appellant was to the knowledge of the respondents a one-eyed man was a relevant circumstance, the judgment of LYNSKEY, J., was in accordance with the evidence. The kind of evidence necessary to establish neglect of a proper precaution was considered in Morton v. William Dixon (4) by LORD DUNEDIN, Lord President. That was an action by a miner against his employers alleging negligence in failing to take precautions against the fall of coal from the top of the shaft into the space between the side of the shaft and the edge of the cage. It was, of course, a Scottish case, but, in my opinion, there is no difference between the law of Scotland and the law of England on this point. The Lord President said (1909 S.C. 809):

"Where the negligence of the employer consists of what I may call a fault of omission, I think it is absolutely necessary that the proof of that fault of omission should be one of two kinds, either—to show that the thing which he did not do was a thing which was commonly done by other persons in like circumstances, or—to show that it was a thing which was so obviously wanted that it would be folly in anyone to neglect to provide it."

The rule is stated with all the Lord President's trenchant lucidity. It contains an emphatic warning against a facile finding that a precaution is necessary when there is no proof that it is one taken by other persons in like circumstances, but it does not detract from the test of the conduct and judgment of the reasonable and prudent man. If there is proof that a precaution is usually observed by other persons, a reasonable and prudent man will follow the usual practice in the like circumstances. Failing such proof the test is whether the precaution is one which the reasonable and prudent man would think so obvious that it was folly to omit it.

In the present case, as I have already said, the balance of the evidence inclines heavily against the appellant on the question of the usual practice of others, but that evidence necessarily dealt with the normal case when the employee suffers from no special disablement. In the nature of things there could scarcely be proof of what was the usual precautions taken by other employers if the workmen had but one good eye. Since LYNSKEY, J., did not deal with the evidence on practice and made no finding about the precautions which should be taken in the ordinary case and without reference to individual disability, I think that his judgment is essentially a finding that the supply of goggles was obviously necessary when a one-eyed man was put to the kind of work to which the appellant was put. The facts on which the learned judge founded his conclusion, the known risk of metal flying when this sort of work was being done, the position of the workman with his eyes close to the bolt he was hammering and on the same level with it or below it, and the disastrous consequences if a particle of metal flew into his one good eye, taken in isolation, seem to me to justify his conclusion. Even for a two-eyed man the risk of losing one eye is a very grievous risk, not to speak of the foreseeable possibility that both eyes might be simultaneously destroyed, or that the loss of one eye might have as a sequel the destruction of vision in the other. It may be said that, if it is obvious that goggles should have been supplied to a one-eyed workman, it is scarcely less obvious that they should have been supplied to all the workmen, and, therefore, that the judgment rests on an unreal or insufficient distinction between the gravity of the risk run by a one-eyed man and the gravity of the risk run by a two-eyed man. I recognise that the argument has some force, but I do not assent to it. Blindness is so great a calamity that even the loss of one of two good eyes is not comparable, and the risk of blindness from sparks of metal is greater for a one-eyed man than for a two-eyed man, for it is less likely that both eyes should be damaged than that one eye should, and the loss of one eye is not necessarily or even usually followed by blindness in the other. What precautions were needed to protect two-eyed men, and whether it could properly be held, in the teeth of the evidence of the usual practice, that goggles should have been supplied for them, were not questions which the learned judge had necessarily to decide. Therefore, though there might have been advantages of lucidity and cogency if the precautions needed for the protection of the two-eyed men had first been considered and the increased risk of damage to which the one-eyed man is exposed had been expressly contrasted, I would allow the appeal and restore the judgment of LYNSKEY, J.

LORD OAKSEY: My Lords, I agree entirely with the opinion just delivered by my noble and learned friend, LORD NORMAND.

The duty of an employer towards his servant is to take reasonable care for the servant's safety in all the circumstances of the case. The fact that the servant has only one eye, if that fact is known to the employer, and that, if he loses it he will be blind, is one of the circumstances which must be considered by the employer in determining what precautions, if any, shall be taken for the servant's safety. The standard of care which the law demands is the care which an ordinarily prudent employer would take in all the circumstances. As the circumstances may vary infinitely it is often impossible to adduce evidence of what care an ordinarily prudent employer would take. In some cases, of course, it is possible to prove that it is the ordinary practice for employers to take or not to take a certain precaution, but in such a case as the present where a one-eyed man has been injured it is unlikely that such evidence can be adduced. The court has, therefore, to form its own opinion of what precautions the notional ordinarily prudent employer would take. In the present case the question is whether an ordinarily prudent employer would supply goggles to a one-eyed workman whose job was to knock bolts out of a chassis with a steel hammer while the chassis was elevated on a ramp so that the workman's eye was close to and under the bolt. In my opinion, LYNSEY, J., was entitled to hold that an ordinarily prudent employer would take that precaution. The question was not whether the precaution ought to have been taken with ordinary two-eyed workmen and it was not necessary, in my opinion, that LYNSEY, J., should decide that question—nor did he purport to decide it, although it is true that he stated the question in one sentence too broadly. The risk of splinters of steel breaking off a bolt and injuring a workman's eye or eyes may be, and I think is, slight, and it is true that the damage to a two-eyed workman if struck by a splinter in the eye or eyes may be serious, but it is for the judge at the trial to weigh up the risk of injury and the extent of the damage and to decide whether, in all the circumstances including the fact that the workman was known to be one-eyed and might become a blind man if his eye was struck, an ordinarily prudent employer would supply such a workman with goggles. It is a simple and inexpensive precaution to take to supply goggles and a one-eyed man would not be likely, as a two-eyed man might be, to refuse to wear the goggles. LYNSEY, J., appears to me to have weighed the extent of the risk and of the damage to a one-eyed man, and I am of opinion that his judgment should be restored.

LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON: My Lords, it cannot be doubted that there are occupations in which the possibility of an accident occurring to any workman is extremely remote, while there are other occupations in which there is constant risk of accident to the workmen. Similarly, there are occupations in which, if an accident occurs, it is likely to be of a trivial nature, while there are other occupations in which, if an accident occurs, the result to the workman may well be fatal. Whether one is considering the likelihood of an accident occurring, or the gravity of the consequences if an accident happens, there is in each case a gradually ascending scale between the two extremes which I have already mentioned. In considering generally the precautions which an employer ought to take for the protection of his workmen it must, in my view, be right to take into account both elements, the likelihood of an accident happening and the gravity of the consequences. I take as an example two occupations in which the risk of an accident taking place is exactly equal. If an accident does occur in the one occupation, the consequences to the workman will be comparatively trivial; if an accident occurs in the other occupation the consequences to the workman will be death or mutilation. Can it be said that the precautions which it is the duty of an employer to take for the safety of his workmen are exactly the same in each of these occupations? My Lords, that is not my view. I think that the more serious the damage which will happen if an accident occurs, the more thorough are the precautions which an employer must take. If I am right as to this general principle, I think it follows logically that if A. and B., who are engaged on the same work, run precisely the same risk of an accident happening, but if the results of an accident will be more serious to A. than to B., precautions which are adequate in the case of B. may not be adequate in the case of A., and it is a duty of the employer to take such additional precautions for the safety of A. as may be reasonable. The duty to take reasonable precautions against injury is one which is owed by the employer to every individual workman.

In the present case it is submitted by counsel for the appellant that, although the appellant ran no greater risk of injury than the other workmen engaged in the maintenance work, he ran a risk of greater injury. Counsel points out that an accident to one eye might transform the appellant into a blind man, and this event in fact happened. A similar accident to one of his comrades would transform that comrade into a one-eyed man, a serious consequence indeed, but not so serious as the results have been to the appellant. My Lords, the Court of Appeal thought that the one-eyed condition of the appellant, known to his employers, was wholly irrelevant in determining the question whether the employer did or did not take reasonable precautions to avoid an accident of this kind. I do not agree. Applying the general principle which I have endeavoured to state, I agree with your Lordships and with LYNSEY, J., that the condition of the appellant was a relevant fact to be taken into account.

There still remains, however, the question whether the learned judge rightly came to the conclusion that there was "so far as this particular plaintiff was concerned, a duty on the employers to provide goggles and require the use of goggles as a part of their system." He thought, as I read his judgment and as the Court of Appeal read it, that there was no duty on the employers to provide goggles for two-eyed men who were employed on the same work as the appellant. With this latter view the Court of Appeal agreed, and I take the same view. The evidence given at the trial has already been analysed by my noble and learned friend on the Woolsack, and I shall only add that, although Captain Paterson had knowledge of about half-a-dozen eye injuries in the course of thirty-two years' experience, he did not say whether any of them was of a serious nature. The only other eye injury deposed to was that of Mr. Seeley. He was asked by the learned judge:

"Q.—Were you off work at all with your eye? A.—Oh no. Q.—Just that something got into your eye. A.—Yes, and I got it out."

My Lords, is it really possible to draw a distinction, on the facts of the present case, between a two-eyed man and a one-eyed man? If the employers were not negligent in failing to provide goggles for two-eyed men doing this work, during all the years prior to this accident, did they become negligent, so far as regards the appellant alone, as from July 22, 1946, when Mr. Boden, their public cleansing officer, became aware for the first time that the appellant had practically no vision in his left eye? The loss of an eye is a most serious injury to any man, and I can only see two alternatives in this case: (a) that the employers were negligent throughout in failing to provide goggles and insist on their use by all men employed in this type of work, or (b) that the risk of an eye injury to any man was so remote that no employer could be found negligent in failing to take these precautions. My Lords, I think the first alternative must be rejected. Applying the test laid down by LORD DUNEDIN in Morton v. William Dixon (4) already quoted by my noble and learned friend LORD NORMAND, I cannot find that the provision of goggles "was a thing which was commonly done by other persons in like circumstances." The evidence is conclusive to the contrary. Nor does the evidence support the view that it was "a thing which was so obviously wanted that it would be folly in anyone to neglect to provide it." Although I recognise that the one-eyed condition of the appellant was a factor to be taken into account, I think alternative (b) is correct. I cannot reach the conclusion that a one-eyed man, but not a two-eyed man, has a remedy against the employer for so serious an injury. I think it must be both or neither, and on the facts of the present case I agree with the conclusion of the Court of Appeal that the evidence does not establish any negligence on the part of the respondents. I would dismiss the appeal.

LORD MACDERMOTT: My Lords, the appellant entered the service of the respondents in 1942 as a fitter's mate or garage hand. He was then, in consequence of injuries received in an air raid, so blind in his left eye as to be a one-eyed man for all practical purposes. He was employed in the garage of the respondents' cleansing department and one of his duties was to assist in the dismantling of motor vehicles. On occasion this task, according to the usual practice of the garage, involved the use of a steel hammer to remove rusted parts such as bolts. There was a risk of chips of metal flying about when this procedure was followed, but the workmen engaged on it were not supplied with or required to use goggles or any other form of eye protection. On July 19, 1946, the appellant was medically examined on behalf of the respondents with a view to his becoming a member of the permanent staff and joining its superannuation scheme. This examination revealed the state of his left eye and, a further consequence of the appellant's war injuries, limited flexion and loss of power at the right elbow. From that date, if not earlier, the respondents must be taken to have been aware of the defect in the appellant's eye-sight. As a result of the report made by their medical officer the appellant was not accepted as a member of the permanent staff or allowed to join the superannuation scheme, but no further action appears to have been taken on foot of the report until May 16, 1947, when the appellant received notice terminating his employment on May 30, 1947. It is, I think, clear from the evidence that this notice was a consequence of the medical examination, but whether it would have been given had the appellant's left eye not been injured is not made plain. On May 28, two days before the expiry of the notice, the appellant was employed dismantling the chassis of what is known as a gulley cleaner. This vehicle had been raised on a ramp and the appellant was working underneath it when the accident, out of which this litigation arises, took place. The appellant, in an endeavour to remove a rusty U-bolt securing one of the rear springs, was striking it with a steel hammer when a piece of metal flew off and entered his good right eye, destroying the sight of it completely and making him almost entirely blind. It should be added that there was nothing in the evidence to suggest that the appellant's previous disabilities increased in any way the chances of an accident, such as that described, occurring.

The appellant's action for damages in respect of the injury thus sustained alleged negligence and breach of statutory duty on the part of the respondents. The latter cause of action was abandoned at an early stage and the negligence relied on was, to state the substance of the allegation, that the respondents had failed in their duty to the appellant in that he had not been provided with, and required to use, suitable goggles for the protection of his eyes during the work to which I have referred. At the trial LYNSKEY, J., found for the appellant. He held that the respondents, knowing that the appellant had only one useful eye, were, in the circumstances, under a duty to him to provide and require the use of goggles, and that they had failed in that duty. The Court of Appeal took a different view and ordered judgment to be entered for the respondents. This decision appears to have been based on two conclusions—first, that on the evidence there was no duty on the respondents to provide goggles for the ordinary, two-eyed workman engaged on this work, and, secondly, that there was, therefore, no such duty on the respondents in respect of the appellant because, though the consequences for him were more serious, the risk of the accident occurring was no greater in his case than it was in the case of his two-eyed fellows. The proposition underlying this second conclusion is succinctly stated by ASQUITH, L.J., in a passage which, I believe, represented the unanimous opinion of the court. It reads as follows ([1949] 2 All E.R. 845):

“The disability can only be relevant to the stringency of the duty owed to the workman if it increases the risk to which the workman is exposed. A one-eyed man is no more likely to get a splinter or a chip in his eye than is a two-eyed man. The risk is no greater, but the damage is greater to a man using his only good eye than to a man using two good eyes. The quantum of damage, however, is one thing, and the scope of duty is another. The greater risk of injury is not the same thing as the risk of greater injury, and the first thing seems to me to be relevant here.”

This view of the law raises a question of far-reaching importance for, if sound, it must, in my opinion, pervade, if not the whole domain of negligence, at least a very large part of it. It was, however, stated only in connection with the duty of care imposed on an employer of labour and it will be sufficient for present purposes to consider it in relation to that particular branch of the law and without engaging on the wider question of its compatibility with the concept of reasonable care.

My Lords, the general nature of the obligation resting on an employer regarding the safety of those who work for him under a contract of service is not in dispute. It is, in the words of LORD WRIGHT in Wilsons and Clyde Coal Co., Ltd. v. English (5) ([1937] 3 All E.R. 644):

“ . . . to take reasonable care for the safety of his workmen . . . ”

In Smith v. Baker & Sons (6) LORD HERSCHELL described the same duty somewhat more fully but without any material difference when he said ([1891] A.C. 362):

“ It is quite clear that the contract between employer and employed involves on the part of the former the duty of taking reasonable care to provide proper appliances, and to maintain them in a proper condition, and so to carry on his operations as not to subject those employed by him to unnecessary risk.”

It is no less clear that the duty is owed to the workman as an individual and that it must be considered in relation to the facts of each particular case. Now, if the law is as stated by the Court of Appeal, it means that this duty of reasonable care can be discharged without regard to the gravity of the harm which is likely to fall on the workman concerned. Reasonable care is, indeed, to be taken in respect of risk that may cause injury, but the requisite degree of care is determinable irrespective of the likely consequences for the particular workman. In short, where the risk of an injury-producing event is the same for all, the standard of reasonable care is the same towards all, and the foreseeable extent of the resulting injury in any given case becomes irrelevant to the issue of liability.

My Lords, this doctrine finds no support in authority, and is, in my opinion, entirely alien to the character of the relationship to which it has been applied by the Court of Appeal. For workman and employer alike such expressions as “ risk,” “ danger ” and “ safety ” would lose much of their everyday meaning if divorced from the results to life and limb. In this sphere they must surely, in the very nature of things, connote consequences as well as causes. If a bricklayer says that the risk is greater at the top of a building, he means that a slip there is more likely to bring him death or injury, and if he says that a particular form of scaffolding is dangerous or not safe, he means not merely that it may fall, but that those who use it may get hurt. What may happen to those engaged is no less important than how it may happen. It is the consequences that necessitate the precautions in this field. The habitual association of cause and effect in workshop and factory is, perhaps, nowhere more clearly recognised than in the nature of some of the safeguards in common use. Suitable goggles, for example, must be worn by those employed at grinding machines. The particles that fly upwards may strike the cheeks as readily as the eyes, but the eyes are protected and the cheeks are not because the eyes are delicate organs and the consequences of their being struck are likely to be serious. Again, special precautions to prevent electric leakage are the usual practice in places like wash-houses where those working are well “ earthed ” and a shock might prove fatal. Instances of this sort could be multiplied, but I think it is enough to say that the employer’s duty to take reasonable care for the safety of his workmen is directed—and, I venture to add, obviously directed—to their welfare, and for that reason, if for no other, must be related to both the risk and the degree of the injury. If that is so, and if, as was very properly conceded, the duty is that owed to the individual and not to a class, it seems to me to follow that the known circumstance that a particular workman is likely to suffer a graver injury than his fellows from the happening of a given event is one which must be taken into consideration in assessing the nature of the employer's obligation to that workman.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the Court of Appeal was wrong and that LYNSEY, J., was right regarding the relevance of the respondents' knowledge of the appellant's eye defect. It remains to consider whether the learned trial judge's finding of negligence is justified on the evidence. As I read his judgment he did not find that the respondents were under a duty to provide goggles for other workmen engaged on the same work who had, or might be taken as having, the use of both eyes. Whether the evidence would have warranted such a finding is, I think, a question, of some difficulty. On the one hand, the whole trend of the testimony indicates that it was not the general practice in garages and establishments of the kind to provide protection for the eyes in such circumstances. On the other, it is clear that the wearing of goggles would not have hampered the work in question, and there is, I think, material from which it might reasonably be inferred that, for men working underneath these vehicles and in close proximity to the parts they were stripping, the provision of suitable goggles would have been a sensible and obvious way of keeping falling dirt and flying particles out of their eyes. I incline to the view that a jury weighing these considerations would not be perverse in finding that it was the duty of the employers to make such provision. The point, however, is a balanced one and I will proceed on the assumption that the Court of Appeal was right on this aspect of the case and that the respondents were not under any general obligation of this kind. So assuming, the question then arises whether the additional element, the fact that the respondents knew that the appellant was a one-eyed man, made it proper to arrive at a different conclusion regarding their duty to him. In my opinion, it did. Not merely was the risk of this sort of accident occurring to those engaged on this work known; it was also known that that risk was fraught with much graver consequence for the appellant than for his two-eyed companions. His chances of being blinded were appreciably greater and blindness is an affliction in a class by itself which reasonable men will want to keep from those who work for them if there are reasonable precautions which can be taken to that end. To my mind, whatever may be said of the respondents' duty to their two-eyed employees, there was ample evidence to sustain the view that they failed in their duty to the appellant. I would allow the appeal and restore the finding as to liability of the learned judge.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: W. H. Thompson (for the workman); Thomas V. Edwards (for the employers).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

CONWAY v. GEORGE WIMPEY & CO., LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Cohen, Asquith and Denning, L.JJ.), December 4, 1950.]

Legal Aid—Security for costs—Plaintiff not “assisted person” when order first made—Subsequent grant of emergency certificate—Effect on order—Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949 (c. 51), s. 12 (2) (b) (ii).

On Nov. 6, 1950, an order for security for costs was made against the plaintiff who was then not an “assisted person”. On Nov. 16, 1950, he became an “assisted person”, an emergency certificate being granted him under the Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1950 (S.I. 1950, No. 1359), reg. 10 (1).

HELD: until the regulations envisaged by s. 12 (2) (b) (ii) of the Act of 1949 were made, in the absence of special circumstances an order for security for costs should not be made against an “assisted person”, and, therefore, the order which had been made would be discharged.

[FOR THE LEGAL AID AND ADVICE ACT, 1949, s. 12 (2) (b) (ii), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 18, p. 548.]

Case referred to:

- (1) Willé v. St. John, [1910] 1 Ch. 701; 79 L.J.Ch. 239; 102 L.T. 383; 42 Digest 258, 2919.

MOTION by the plaintiff to discharge an order made by the Court of Appeal, dated Nov. 6, 1950, that he should give security for the costs of his appeal. After the making of the order the plaintiff obtained an emergency certificate under the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949, and became an “assisted person”.

Seuffert for the plaintiff.

D. M. Scott for the defendants.

COHEN, L.J.: On Nov. 6, 1950, on the application of the defendants, this court made an order for security for costs in the present case. At that time the plaintiff was not an assisted person. On Nov. 16 an emergency certificate was granted to the plaintiff under the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949. His solicitors did not receive notice of that certificate until Nov. 20, which was the day of expiry of the time limit within which security had to be given. The plaintiff's solicitors then wrote to the defendants' solicitors asking whether they would agree that in those circumstances the order for security automatically lapsed, and, as the defendants' solicitors would not agree, the matter comes before us.

It appears from the decision in Willé v. St. John (1) that under the old procedure, the effect of the grant of a poor persons' certificate was to cause the order for security to lapse. COZENS-HARDY, M.R., in delivering his judgment, said ([1910] 1 Ch. 704):

“I start with the proposition, established centuries ago by statute and since developed by judicial decisions and now embodied in rules, that a person disabled by poverty is entitled to assert or defend his assumed rights without the liability to pay costs.”

Later, he said (ibid., 705):

“It is inherent in every such order that circumstances may arise which would render it unjust for the court to allow the order to operate according to its terms.”

It is true to say that under the old practice the effect of obtaining leave to conduct the proceedings as a poor person was to suspend an order for security for costs, but it does not necessarily follow that the procedure would be the same now that the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949, has come into force and the procedure with regard to poor persons has lapsed. The Poor Persons Rules have been repealed and no rules have taken their place. Moreover, as counsel for the defendants pointed out, it is plain from s. 12 (2) (b) (ii) of the Act that it is contemplated that in certain circumstances security will be given. Section 12 provides:

“(1) The Lord Chancellor may make such regulations as appear to him necessary or desirable for giving effect to this Part of this Act or for preventing abuses thereof. (2) Without prejudice to the foregoing subsection or any other provision of this Act authorising the making of regulations, regulations may—(a) make provision as to the proceedings which are or are not to be treated as distinct proceedings for the purposes of legal aid, and as to the apportionment of sums recoverable or recovered by virtue of any order for costs made generally with respect to proceedings treated as distinct; (b) regulate the procedure of any court or tribunal in relation to legal aid, and in particular make provision . . . (ii) as to the cases in which and extent to which a person receiving legal aid may be required to give security for costs, and the manner in which it may be given.”

I would add that there is a further difference—that, whereas under the poor persons procedure, if the poor person failed, the opposite party could not recover costs, by s. 2 (2) (e), (3) of the Act of 1949, there is a provision under which the court may order the assisted person to pay the costs of his opponent, though the amount which his opponent can recover is regulated. The matter is, therefore, not so plain under the Act of 1949 as it was under the Poor Persons procedure. None the less, until we get the guidance of the regulations which are indicated by the provisions in s. 12, to which I have referred (and no such regulations have yet been published), I think we must proceed on the basis that, generally speaking, and in the absence of special circumstances, it would be inappropriate to make an order for security for costs at a time when an emergency certificate is in force. In those circumstances, I think it is inappropriate that the order for security should stand. For these reasons, I think, in the present case, there being no special circumstances to which our attention has been directed, we should discharge the order made by the court on Nov. 6. On the other hand, I think it was perfectly proper for counsel for the defendants to come and ask for the guidance of the court, particularly as, so far as I know, there is no reported case on the subject. I think, so far as the costs are concerned, the costs of the parties should be costs in the appeal.

ASQUITH, L.J.: I agree.

DENNING, L.J.: I agree.

Order for security for costs discharged.

Solicitors: J. H. Milner & Son (for the plaintiff); Stanley & Co. (for the defendants).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re HUNTER (deceased). LLOYDS BANK, LTD. v. THE MISTRESS AND GOVERNORS OF GIRTON COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE, AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Vaisey, J.), November 23, 24, 1950.]

Will—Legacy—Destruction of object—Gift to hospital—Vesting of hospital in Minister of Health after death of testator, but before legacy paid over—National Health Service Act, 1946 (c. 81), s. 6 (1).

By his will, dated July 4, 1940, a testator, who died on Jan. 10, 1948, directed his executor and trustee to divide his residuary estate into twenty-two equal units. The testator gave one such unit "to the trustees of the Ingham Infirmary and South Shields and Westoe Dispensary" in memory of his father. On July 5, 1948, the National Health Service Act, 1946, came into force and the question arose in whom the right to receive the share of the testator's residuary estate was vested.

HELD: the testator's intention was to promote the carrying on the work of the institution and to commemorate his father, and, although the Act of 1946 had caused a fundamental change in the administration and ownership of the property of the institution, there was not such a difference that the object of the gift could be said to have failed, and the share must be paid to the appropriate management committee to be applied for the purposes of the institution.

[AS TO EFFECT OF CHANGE OF CIRCUMSTANCES AT DEATH, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 34, pp. 234, 235, para. 290; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 8, pp. 308-312, Nos. 895-901, 911-927.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Morgan's Will Trusts, [1950] 1 All E.R. 1097; [1950] Ch. 637.
- (2) Re Glass' Will Trusts, [1950] 2 All E.R. 953; [1950] Ch. 643.
- (3) Re Kellner's Will Trusts, [1949] 2 All E.R. 774; [1949] Ch. 46; 2nd Digest Supp.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine inter alia whether, on the true construction of the will of William Turner Hunter and having regard to the coming into force of the National Health Service Act, 1946, on July 5, 1948, the right to receive a share of the testator's residuary estate bequeathed to the trustees of the Ingham Infirmary and South Shields and Westoe Dispensary (a) was vested in the Minister of Health under s. 6 or s. 7 of the Act or otherwise, or (b) was vested in the South Shields District Hospital Management Committee under s. 7 of the said Act or otherwise; or whether the capital and income of the said share ought to be paid to the Newcastle-upon-Tyne Regional Hospital Board or the South Shields District Hospital Management Committee under s. 60 of the said Act; or whether the said share was held on some other, and, if so, what, trusts.

The Ingham Infirmary and South Shields and Westoe Dispensary was a voluntary hospital to which s. 6 of the Act of 1946 applied and was not designated by the Minister of Health as a teaching hospital or one of a group of hospitals so designated.

J. A. Armstrong for the plaintiff, the executor and trustee of the deceased's will.

F. B. Alcock for the Newcastle-upon-Tyne Regional Board and the South Shields District Hospital Management Committee.

Denys B. Buckley for the Attorney-General.

Beroë A. Bicknell, Winterbotham, McMullan, H. A. Rose, Droop and Sir Norman Touche for other defendants.

VAISEY, J.: I am inclined to agree that this case is not precisely covered by authority. It is not the same as ROXBURGH, J.'s case, Re Morgan's Will Trusts (1), nor is it exactly the same as Re Glass' Will Trusts (2). It is a simple gift to the trustees of a particular infirmary and dispensary of one of the twenty-two units into which the testator directed his residuary estate to be divided. I suppose in one sense there are not any trustees now, but it is obvious, especially with a will of this description, that the reception of the money by the trustee is mere machinery. The gift was really to the infirmary and dispensary, and the object of the gift was, I think, twofold—first, to promote the carrying on of the munificent work of healing conducted in this institution, and, secondly, to commemorate the testator's father who was a missionary.

The passing of the National Health Service Act, 1946, undoubtedly made a great and radical change from some points of view in the position of hospitals in general and this infirmary and dispensary in particular, but, although from many points of view the change was fundamental, from the point of view of an ordinary layman interested in the healing and care of the sick in the district in which he lived—the testator in this case lived in South Shields—and from the point of view of a man who was desirous of commemorating his deceased father in conjunction with a place where such munificent work was carried on, I do not think the difference is very great. There was undoubtedly at one time a feeling that the passing of the National Health Service Act, 1946, made a clean break with the past and that hospitals and dispensaries in the future were not to be like those in the past, but, from many points of view, that is a completely fallacious idea. Although counsel have pointed out grave differences from the administrative point of view—and from the point of view of the ownership of the property of these charities the change is a fundamental one—I do not think from the point of view of the testator making a gift of this kind there is such a difference as would justify me in saying that there is no object of his bounty or that his gift has failed.

I agree that there is no general charitable intent, but, apart from the particular institution and the work carried on there, I think it follows from the two cases which I have quoted and on general principles that here the gift does not fail, but must be applied by paying it to the appropriate management committee, the hospital board not objecting, to be applied for the purposes of the particular infirmary and dispensary, which, I understand, is admittedly still in the same building and carrying on, so far as those who come to it for its assistance are concerned, just as before the Act was passed.

Order accordingly. Costs of all parties as between solicitor and client to be taxed and paid out of the estate in due course of administration.

Solicitors: Ward, Bowie & Co., agents for George Scott & Son, South Shields (for the plaintiff); Sidney Pearlman, agent for Grunhut, Grunhut & Makepeace, South Shields; Shaen, Roscoe & Co.; Hewitt, Woollacott & Chown, agents for Scott, Meikle & Pool, Newcastle-on-Tyne; Boyce, Evans & Sheppard; Neave & Neave; and the Treasury Solicitor (for various defendants).

[Reported by H. McL. MORRISON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

LANGDON v. HORTON AND ANOTHER.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Singleton, L.J., and Danckwerts, J.), December 6, 7, 1950.]

Rent Restriction—Death of tenant—“Member of tenant’s family”—First cousins—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (1) (g).

At the date of the death of the statutory tenant of a dwelling-house to which the Rent Acts applied there were living with her, and had been so living for a period of twenty-nine years, two of her first cousins, the defendants, who were of substantially the same age as the tenant. In an action by the landlord for possession, HELD : first cousins were not “members of the tenant’s family” within the ordinary, popular meaning of those words, and, therefore, the defendants were not entitled to the protection of s. 12 (1) (g) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920.

Brock v. Wollams ([1949] 1 All E.R. 715), applied.

[AS TO STATUTORY TENANTS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 334, 335, paras. 400, 401, and 1950 Supplement; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 575, 576, Nos. 7226-7255.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Brock v. Wollams, [1949] 1 All E.R. 715; [1949] 2 K.B. 388; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Jones v. Whitehill, [1950] 1 All E.R. 71; [1950] 2 K.B. 204.
- (3) Gammans v. Elkins, [1950] 2 All E.R. 140; [1950] 2 K.B. 328.

APPEAL by the defendants from an order of His Honour JUDGE ARCHER, made at Hastings County Court, on Oct. 10, 1950, granting the landlord possession of a dwelling-house subject to the Rent Restrictions Acts. The facts appear in the judgment of SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R.

N. Lawson for the defendants, cousins of the deceased tenant.

L. A. Blundell for the landlord.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R.: On May 29, 1950, there died a Mrs. Mary Wakefield Prior, who, at the date of her death, was the statutory tenant of a dwelling-house within the compass of the Rent Acts, known as 33, Alma Villas, St. Leonard’s-on-Sea, Hastings. There were living with her then, and had been so living for twenty-nine years, two of her first cousins—two sisters, Miss Horton and Mrs. Selby, the defendants to the action. All three ladies were substantially of the same age. The question is whether, on the death of Mrs. Prior, the defendants can qualify for protection under the Rent Acts. That they can only do if it can be said of them that they are “members” of Mrs. Prior’s “family” within the meaning of s. 12 (1) (g) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920.

The word “family” is used here, if I may borrow the words used of the soldier in KING HENRY V, in a sense base, common and popular*. It is further established that the right approach is to consider whether, having regard to the facts, the defendants would qualify for protection by securing an affirmative answer to a question put in ordinary conversation by an ordinary man: “Were these ladies, at Mrs. Prior’s death, members of her family?” Observe that it is not sufficient to say that in some sense they and Mrs. Prior were all members of the same family. SINGLETON, L.J., pointed out early in the argument that the fact that for many years they had resided together cannot add much in this case, for under s. 12 (1) (g) residence constitutes a separate qualification. No doubt, as counsel for the defendants points out, the residence qualification had a limiting effect which would prevent the more extravagant results which otherwise were liable to flow from the construction he put forward. I think, however, that in posing the question, which I have taken from its original formulation in Brock v. Wollams (1), there may be two distinct and rather different classes of case. The first is where the only really relevant consideration is that of blood relationship or consanguinity. The second is whether, apart from or in addition to consanguinity, there are special circumstances which require an affirmative answer to the material question.

* Act IV, sc. 1 [PISTOL, addressing KING HENRY:] “. . . art thou officer? Or art thou base, common and popular?”

An illustration of the second class is Jones v. Whitehill (2). The claimant there was a niece by marriage of the statutory tenant, but she had by her conduct assumed, as it were, a filial character, and it was in the light of those facts that this court concluded that she qualified within para. (g). I am not sure that certain passages in my own judgment may not have suggested a wider extension of this formula than is justified. Accordingly, the judgment should be read as meaning that I was not expressing any view on the general question whether nephews and nieces as such were within the compass of the formula. Another example of the second class of case, is Brock v. Wollams (1), where the claimant was an adopted child. An adopted child is clothed with all the characteristics of a child so far as the outside world is concerned, though it has no connection in blood with the adopting parents.

The present case, I venture to think, is of the first class. It must be determined by considering whether first cousins of the same generation, as these two defendants are, of the statutory tenant can be within the intendment of this phrase "the tenant's family." The matter is, perhaps, largely one of first impression, and I think the learned judge came to the right conclusion, for, if the consanguinity test is satisfied in the present case, it will extend the formula to relations of every degree, and, indeed, would mean that we were substituting for the word "family" in para. (g) the word "relations."

I would add that in one or two of the earlier cases the question was raised whether this is not a question of fact? I am not saying whether or not in the present case or in other cases it is a question of fact. There is much to be said for the view that it is a matter of the construction of the paragraph. On the other hand, where, as here, a county court judge has plainly put to himself the right question, and it is a matter of suggesting the answer that an ordinary man would give to a question put in ordinary conversation, I am disposed to think that this court should be a little slow to reverse him. If it is the policy of the Act to protect persons in the occupation of their homes, I think it also, in general, is the policy of the Act to leave for the determination of the county court the numerous difficult problems requiring, as has been said in connection with the word "reasonable," the application of a broad, common-sense, man-of-the-world view. On these grounds, therefore, as the question posed by the judge was right, I should be slow myself to differ on a matter of this kind from his conclusion. However that may be, I am of opinion that the judge came to a right conclusion, and this appeal must be dismissed.

SINGLETON, L.J.: Let it be noted that the question is not whether all three of these ladies were members of the same family, but is whether the two defendants were members of Mrs. Prior's family. Prima facie, I should not have regarded a cousin as a member of the family of another cousin. Yet decisions of this court provided counsel for the defendants with material for argument.

In Jones v. Whitehill (2) the defendant, out of love and kindness, went to live with her aunt and her aunt's husband. The aunt died about eighteen months later, and the aunt's husband after another five months or so. The husband had been tenant of the house, and the court held that the defendant was a member of the tenant's family having regard to the fact that she went out of love and kindness to live with the tenant and his wife and look after them in their declining years. At first sight it is not easy to see how Mrs. Whitehill became a member of the tenant's family in whose house she lived for less than two years before he died and to whom she was not related by blood. It may be said that that decision is in accord with the test laid down by COHEN, L.J., in Brock v. Wollams (1) ([1949] 1 All E.R. 718), namely: Would an ordinary man, addressing his mind to the question whether the defendant was a member of the tenant's family, answer "Yes"? The test of COHEN, L.J., seems to me, if I may say so, apt to cover the case of a young relation, not born a member of the tenant's family, who is looked after from youth upwards by the tenant. Such a person may well be regarded as a member of the family, but the position is by no means the same if two middle-aged women decide to live together, or if one accepts an invitation to live in the house of the other, and they remain together for many years. In such a case I do not imagine that the ordinary man would regard the one as a member of the family of the other even if they were cousins.

Counsel for the defendants said that one must ask oneself, first, whether there is a relationship by blood or by marriage, and, if so, and if the one person is living with the other, would an ordinary man, addressing his mind to the question, answer that the one person was a member of the tenant's family? Counsel in that regard is adopting the test of relationship rather than the test laid down by Parliament. He was bound to admit that if for this purpose cousins could be regarded as members of the tenant's family, so must be half-cousins, or cousins twice removed, and, indeed, his argument went further. If one is to introduce the relationship test, cousins many times removed would have to be considered. That is not in accordance with the language of s. 12 (1) (g) of the Act of 1920.

In Gammans v. Ekins (3) ASQUITH, L.J., said ([1950] 2 All E.R. 141):

"Counsel for the landlord was right in saying that the material decisions limit membership of the same family to three relationships—first, that of children; secondly, those constituted by way of legitimate marriage between husband and wife; and, thirdly, relationships whereby one person becomes in loco parentis to another. Beyond that point the law has not gone."

Respectfully, I agree. Counsel for the defendants submitted that that was too narrow a view, and said that the three classes mentioned by the learned lord justice would not include brother and sister. I think they do, "first, that of children." One would look on them as children of the same parents. It seems to me in the present case that one must ask oneself: Were the two sisters members of their cousin's family? If they were not, they did not become so by living in her house for twenty-nine years. I do not see that one can say that a cousin is a member of another cousin's family merely because she is a cousin. They are members of the same family or stock in the sense that they have the same maternal grandparents, but that is all. The mere fact of cousinship does not make every cousin a member of another cousin's family. The fact that the defendants were residing with the tenant provides for one limb of s. 12 (1) (g) of the Act of 1920, but it cannot be said that they were members of her family even though they lived in the same house for many years. I agree that the appeal must be dismissed.

DANCKWERTS, J.: I also am of the same opinion. In Brock v. Wollams (1) COHEN, L.J., suggested that the meaning to be given to the word "family" in s. 12 (1) (g) of the Act of 1920 should be its popular meaning. That test has been approved in several decisions of this court, and it seems to me desirable that the application of that meaning should be maintained. How does that apply in the present case? There were three persons in this case living together who were of the same sex, of the same generation, and of approximately the same age. In my view, their consanguinity was not the decisive test. Rather they were living together for reasons of convenience, in which respect this case resembles that mentioned by ASQUITH, L.J., in Gammans v. Ekins (3), when he referred to the case of two old friends sharing a residence for purposes of convenience. It seems to me that, taking into account the ordinary meaning of the word "family," the present case no more falls within s. 12 (1) (g) than would the case to which ASQUITH, L.J., referred. I, therefore, also think that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Field, Roscoe & Co., agents for Herington, Willings & Penry-Davey, Hastings (for the defendants); Thomas Eggar & Son, agents for Young, Coles & Langdon, Hastings (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

EDWARDS v. EDWARDS.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Pilcher and Collingwood, JJ.), November 6, 7, 27, 1950.]

Divorce—Re-hearing—Jurisdiction of Divisional Court—Application after decree absolute—No error in court of trial—Procedural regularity—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 523/L/9), r. 36.

A Divisional Court of the Divorce Division has no jurisdiction to entertain, under r. 36 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947, after the pronouncement of a decree absolute in a divorce suit, an application by a party to the suit for an order for the re-hearing of the suit, if the decree absolute has been pronounced in circumstances of procedural regularity.

Woolfenden v. Woolfenden ([1947] 2 All E.R. 653) and Everitt v. Everitt ([1948] 2 All E.R. 545), distinguished.

Prince v. Prince ([1950] 2 All E.R. 375), explained.

[AS TO APPEAL FROM DECREE ABSOLUTE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 775, para. 1226.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Peek v. Peek, [1947] 2 All E.R. 578; [1948] P. 46; [1948] L.J.R. 833; affmd., [1948] 2 All E.R. 297; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Kemp-Welch v. Kemp-Welch and Crymes, [1910] P. 233; 79 L.J.P. 92; 102 L.T. 787; 27 Digest 442, 4543.
- (3) Woolfenden v. Woolfenden, [1947] 2 All E.R. 653; [1948] P. 27; [1948] L.J.R. 622; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (4) Everitt v. Everitt, [1948] 2 All E.R. 545; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) Craig v. Kanssen, [1943] 1 All E.R. 108; [1943] K.B. 256; 112 L.J.K.B. 228; 168 L.T. 38; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (6) Meier v. Meier, [1948] 1 All E.R. 161; [1948] P. 89; [1948] L.J.R. 436; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (7) Prince v. Prince, [1950] 2 All E.R. 375.
- (8) Petty v. Petty, [1943] 2 All E.R. 511; [1943] P. 101; 112 L.J.P. 97; 169 L.T. 224; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (9) Crosland v. Crosland, [1946] 2 All E.R. 91; [1947] P. 12; 175 L.T. 117; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (10) McPherson v. McPherson, [1936] A.C. 177; 105 L.J.P.C. 41; 154 L.T. 221; Digest Supp.
- (11) Marsh v. Marsh, [1945] A.C. 271; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (12) Manners v. Manners and Fortescue, [1936] 1 All E.R. 41; [1936] P. 117; 105 L.J.P. 26; 154 L.T. 271; Digest Supp.

APPLICATION by the wife for leave to apply out of time for the re-hearing of a petition for dissolution of marriage brought by her husband on the ground of desertion. In her notice of motion the wife contended that, though there had been no error at the hearing, she had been taken by surprise and had not received notice of trial. She also alleged that several matters relevant to the charge of desertion had not been brought before the court. The decree nisi was granted by Mr. Commissioner TEMPLE MORRIS, K.C., sitting at Newport on May 6, 1948, and it was made absolute on June 18, 1948. The facts appear in the judgment of PILCHER, J. A William Latey, K.C., and Lerrmon for the wife.

Rowlands for the husband.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 27. The following judgments were read.

PILCHER, J.: This is an application by a wife for leave to apply out of time for a re-hearing of an undefended suit in which, on May 6, 1948, her husband was granted a decree nisi by Mr. Commissioner TEMPLE MORRIS, K.C., on the ground of her desertion. The decree nisi was made absolute on June 18, 1948, and by her notice of motion the wife asks that this court, if satisfied that a re-hearing should be granted, should set aside the decree nisi and decree absolute granted to her husband. Her application is made under r. 36 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947, and she alleges that both the decrees were wrongfully obtained, although it is not suggested that any error was made by the judge who adjudicated on the suit. C

On Dec. 11, 1947, the husband filed a petition seeking the dissolution of his marriage on the ground of his wife's desertion. On Dec. 19, 1947, the petition was duly served on the wife by registered post together with a form of acknowledgment of service, forms of memorandum of appearance in duplicate, and a form of notice to appear. On Dec. 29 the wife completed and forwarded to the honorary secretary of the local poor persons' committee an application form to be permitted to defend the suit as a poor person. She completed the acknowledgment of service and the two duplicate forms of memorandum of appearance, and sent all these forms to the honorary secretary of the local poor persons' committee, a Mr. J. Alan Wilson, who also happened to be her husband's solicitor. She failed to send the form of notice to appear to the district registrar. Whether she ever completed this form is not known. If she did so, it may be that she also left this form with Mr. Wilson. On Feb. 19, 1948, she received a letter from Mr. Wilson in his capacity as honorary secretary of the poor persons' committee, stating that her application for a poor persons' certificate had been refused. In her completed memorandum of appearance the wife had written in answer to the question, "Do you intend to answer the petition?", the word "Yes." In her affidavit sworn in support of the present motion she says that, having handed all the papers in the case to Mr. Wilson, whom she knew to be her husband's solicitor as well as the honorary secretary of the poor persons' committee, she thought that her husband's petition would not be proceeded with until her defence was put in. She further states that she had no money to employ a solicitor. The next that she knew of the matter was when she read in a local paper of May 15 that on May 6 her husband had been granted a decree nisi. D E F G

It is clear that the wife was never notified that the case was to be tried. She had failed to comply with the instructions set out in the printed forms of memorandum of appearance and notice to appear and as a result the district registrar was unaware that she wished to appear and defend the case. Technically, and in fact, she had not entered an appearance, and, accordingly, she was not notified of the date of the hearing. It seems that Mr. Wilson had retained in the file dealing with the wife's application for a poor persons' certificate the duplicate forms of memorandum of appearance, in which the H wife stated that she wished to defend the suit, instead of returning these documents to the wife, as he should have done, or forwarding them to the district registrar.

On hearing that her husband had been granted a decree nisi, the wife consulted solicitors, who, on June 9, wrote a letter to the King's Proctor in which, after setting out the above facts, they said :

"The respondent wishes to do whatever she can to prevent the decree nisi being made absolute, as she emphatically denies having deserted her husband, and although the petition alleges desertion since June, 1940, it is also disclosed that on Sept. 14, 1942, the court of summary jurisdiction at Blackwood, Mon., had made an order against the petitioner on the ground of wilful neglect to maintain, and for payment of £2 5s. 0d. per week, and, what is of importance, states in para. 4 of the petition that there has been no resumption of cohabitation since the making of the said order. We are informed by Mr. Wilson that the commissioner at the hearing had before him a copy of the order of 1942, but we cannot say how far the evidence went to support the plea of desertion since 1940 in face of the order of 1942.

The respondent informs us that at a previous court at Abertillery, Mon., on May 16, 1940, an order had been made against the petitioner on the grounds of persistent cruelty and neglect to maintain, and we have that order before us, but presumably there has been a resumption of cohabitation or the order of 1942 would not have been necessary. The respondent also informs us that after the order of 1942 the collecting officer of the court had to take proceedings more than once to enforce payment of the order, which we believe is considerably in arrear. We are also informed by the respondent that since the order of 1942 the petitioner had frequently visited her house, and intercourse had taken place, but he never slept there, nor was it in any way a matrimonial home so far as he is concerned, and on some occasions he paid her a little more than the amount payable under this order. So far no attempt has been made to get the order of 1942 rescinded.

We are not aware of any steps we can take to prevent the decree nisi being made absolute as the suit was, in fact, undefended, and it seems to us that only an intervention by you can lead to a proper investigation of the grounds upon which the decree nisi was granted. Something must be done before June 17, and we shall be grateful if you will let us know as early as possible whether you think fit to intervene."

To that letter the King's Proctor replied that more evidence would be required before he could intervene. On being informed that the King's Proctor could take no action, the wife wrote a personal letter to the commissioner on June 14, 1948, which contains the following paragraph:

"Mr. Dauncey, solicitor, has been in communication with the King's Proctor. He said he wanted more evidence before he could intervene. There is not enough time to get evidence before Thursday, June 17, as I am given to understand my husband will then have the decree made absolute. He has also committed adultery. My eldest son died at 16½ years, that boy never had a chance with him, and the eldest boy now has bad nerves. In my desperation I decided to write to you, as this is a very bad case of cruelty. I shall be very grateful if you will order a re-trial."

In due course the commissioner answered this letter, saying in effect that the matter was out of his hands. On June 18 the decree nisi was made absolute.

In her affidavit the wife states that in his petition her husband had failed to set out, as he should have done, a series of magistrates' orders dating from July, 1939, which she had obtained on the ground of her husband's desertion and persistent cruelty. She also refers to her husband's association with another woman since 1942. She further states that from 1942 until Sept., 1945, although not living under the same roof as her, he visited her home and induced her to have marital intercourse with him. All these are matters which, if they had been brought to the attention of the commissioner, might well have influenced his mind and possibly led him to dismiss the husband's petition. At the date of the decree absolute the husband was still liable to pay maintenance for his wife and children under the magistrates' order of Sept. 14, 1942. On July 8, 1949, he applied to the magistrates to vary or discharge this order on the ground that since the date of the orders he had obtained a decree absolute against his wife. On this summons the amount payable under the order was reduced. In Oct., 1949, the wife took out a summons asking for the amount payable under the maintenance order to be increased. The husband took out a cross-summons asking for the order to be revoked, again on the ground that his marriage had been dissolved. The magistrates dismissed both summonses, whereupon the husband appealed to this court. The appeal was heard on Dec. 15, 1949, by a Divisional Court consisting of LORD MERRIMAN, P., and PEARCE, J., who varied the magistrates' order by discharging the order in favour of the wife while preserving that portion of the order which concerned the maintenance of the children.

In due course the wife applied for leave to file the present notice of motion. The application, being of an unusual nature, was referred to a Divisional Court consisting of LORD MERRIMAN, P., and HODSON, J. They gave leave to file the present notice of motion without prejudice to any question as to the wife being out of time in so doing.

It is not suggested that there was any error on the part of the commissioner in granting the husband a decree nisi on the evidence placed before him in what was, on the face of the papers, an undefended case in which no appearance had been entered. It is, in my opinion, equally clear on the undisputed facts, as they are now known, supplemented by the affidavit evidence of the wife, which for this purpose must be taken to be accurate, that this is a case in which this court would have had little hesitation in rescinding a decree nisi and ordering a new trial if application had been made under r. 36 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947, before a decree absolute had been pronounced. In this connection I need only refer to Peek v. Peek (1).

In the present case we are invited by the notice of motion to order a re-hearing of this divorce suit, and as a necessary incident to such an order to rescind, not merely a decree nisi, but a decree absolute. A decree absolute is a judgment in rem affecting the status of the parties. From the moment when it is pronounced either party to the dissolved marriage may, subject to any right of appeal, re-marry, and it is purely fortuitous that the husband in the present case has not re-married. In Kemp-Welch v. Kemp-Welch and Crymes (2) SIR SAMUEL EVANS, P., held that he had no jurisdiction to rescind a decree absolute on the motion of a co-respondent in the suit even on the ground that the verdict and decree nisi had been obtained by fraud. Counsel for the wife were only able to refer us to two decided cases in which the rescission of a decree absolute, once pronounced, had ever been ordered. In Woolfenden v. Woolfenden (3) the husband, against whom his wife had obtained a decree nisi, applied through his solicitors to the divorce registry for a decree absolute, and obtained a certificate that the decree nisi had been made absolute. This application was made before the earliest date upon which it was competent for the party against whom the decree nisi had been obtained to make such an application under s. 9 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937. The application made in the registry was, moreover, defective in form, and no notice of it was served on the wife. In those circumstances BARNARD, J., held that the decree absolute so obtained was a nullity.

In Everitt v. Everitt (4) a husband applied by motion to the Court of Appeal for leave to appeal against a decree absolute obtained by his wife, notwithstanding that the time for appeal had expired. The hearing of the motion was, by consent, treated as the hearing of the appeal. The husband's case was that he had never been served with the petition in the suit. The Court of Appeal invoked the assistance of the King's Proctor on the question whether they had jurisdiction, in the particular circumstances, to hear the appeal. After it had become apparent that the question of the jurisdiction of the court to entertain the appeal could not be solved until it was ascertained as a matter of fact whether the husband had or had not been served with the petition in the suit, the Court of Appeal themselves heard evidence directed to this point, and found as a fact that it was not established that the husband had ever been served with the petition. In this state of affairs the court held that the husband was not debarred by the provisions of s. 31 (1) (e) of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, from appealing against the decree absolute obtained by his wife, inasmuch as he had not had "time and opportunity to appeal from the decree nisi on which the order was founded." The court, accordingly, gave the husband leave to appeal out of time, allowed the appeal, ordered the decree nisi and decree absolute to be set aside, and directed a new trial.

In that case, the petition never having been served, the decrees obtained were mere nullities. The Court of Appeal was satisfied that there had been no error on the part of the judge at the trial, and in the course of his judgment LORD MERRIMAN, P., said ([1948] 2 All E.R. 548):

"On the face of it, therefore, it might seem that r. 36 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1944, covers this case, but there are two further points for consideration. First, whether, after a decree has been made absolute it is appropriate to describe an application to set it aside as an application for a re-hearing, or, in other words, whether r. 36 applies at all after a decree has been made absolute; and, secondly, however that may be, whether s. 31 (1) (e) of the Judicature Act, 1925, does not give a substantive right to appeal to the Court of Appeal from a decree absolute."

Later, after setting out the provisions of s. 31 (1) (e) of the Act of 1925, he said (ibid.):

"This provision, read positively, must mean that an appeal will lie from an order absolute for the dissolution of marriage in favour of a party who has not appealed from the decree nisi because he has not had the time and opportunity to do so. Manifestly, the lack of time and opportunity to appeal from the decree nisi may be due to a failure to serve the petition, so that the decree itself is a nullity: Craig v. Kanssen (5); but this need not be so. For example, a respondent who has been served may not have received notice of the hearing to which he is entitled if he has entered an appearance, and this, in turn, may be due either to a failure to give notice or to some accidental miscarriage. Or a respondent who has actually defended the suit may meet with an accident or be stricken with illness before he has been able to appeal. It is unnecessary to multiply examples. It seems to me that the legislature, in imposing this condition on the right to appeal against a decree absolute, cannot have intended to qualify it with reference to the nature of the particular circumstances in which the lack of time and opportunity to appeal against the decree nisi arose. In my opinion, this appeal from the decree absolute is placed by the legislature in a class by itself and is permitted whenever the statutory condition is fulfilled and not otherwise."

After referring to s. 184 (1) of the Judicature Act, 1925, which provides for the re-marriage of divorced persons, he said (ibid., 549):

"It may be that the legislature intended that a decree absolute could only be set aside by appeal to the Court of Appeal, and that to avoid uncertainty in connection with re-marriage, a motion to a judge under the inherent jurisdiction of the court and an application to the Divisional Court under r. 36 are alike ruled out."

This is, apparently, the first occasion on which the Divisional Court has been moved under r. 36 to order a re-hearing of a suit after decree absolute. It is also clear by inference that the Court of Appeal has jurisdiction under the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 31 (1) (e), to entertain an appeal even after decree absolute when the party against whom the decree nisi has been made has not had time or opportunity to appeal against such decree. As LORD MERRIMAN, P., points out in one of the passages I have quoted, there may be cases in which the party against whom the decree nisi has been pronounced, although served with the petition, has not received notification of the trial, and, perhaps, does not become aware that his case has been determined until after the decree absolute has been pronounced. The proceedings and the orders made in such circumstances could not be said to have been mere nullities, as in Everitt v. Everitt (4). Examples of cases of this type readily spring to the mind, in which it would be clear that there had been no error on the part of the judge and in which the party against whom the decree nisi had been pronounced could successfully move the Divisional Court for a re-hearing under r. 36, provided that no decree absolute had been pronounced. LORD MERRIMAN, P., in the passage I have quoted above, questions whether it is appropriate to describe an application to set a decree absolute aside as an application for a re-hearing, but leaves the point open, as it was not necessary to decide it in Everitt v. Everitt (4).

We were supplied with a transcript of the judgment delivered on Dec. 15, 1949, by the Divisional Court on the husband's appeal in the present case against the magistrates' refusal to discharge the maintenance order made in his wife's favour. At that hearing the Divisional Court were supplied with some at least of the information which we had before us as to the facts of the case. In the course of his judgment in that case LORD MERRIMAN, P., referred to the various courses which might be open to the wife, as follows :

"We are told that there were circumstances . . . which might conceivably . . . have led this court to listen sympathetically to an application under r. 36 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules to set aside a decree nisi. And although, of course, I am expressing no sort of opinion as to what would have happened if a prompt application had been made to the Court of Appeal after the pronouncement of the decree nisi, for by that time, of course, jurisdiction in this Division is ousted, and still less any sort of opinion about what may happen if any such application is now made to the Court of Appeal . . ."

In the above passage it is probable from the context that the word nisi is an error for absolute. Later in his judgment LORD MERRIMAN, P., said :

"Either this woman does or does not make an application to the Court of Appeal to set the decree absolute aside."

None of those observations by LORD MERRIMAN, P., was necessary for the decision of the point before the court, and he made it clear that he did not express any concluded opinion as to what action, if any, was open to the wife in this case to get the decrees pronounced set aside.

It is clear that, having been duly served with the petition, she cannot hope to contend successfully that the decrees pronounced in her husband's favour are mere nullities. It is equally clear on the admitted facts that she cannot hope to contend successfully that she has a right to appeal to the Court of Appeal against the decree absolute under s. 31 (1) (e) of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, because, on the admitted facts, she had abundant time and opportunity to appeal against the decree nisi if she had taken the appropriate steps. Meier v. Meier (6) decided that the Court of Appeal has no power under its inherent jurisdiction to set aside a decree absolute obtained in circumstances of procedural regularity. It is equally clear that this court has no such power.

A While I feel some sympathy with the wife, I do not forget that she is largely the author of her own misfortunes, because she either failed to read, or, if she read, failed to comply with, the instructions set out in the printed forms of memorandum of appearance and notice to appear. It was in the circumstances unfortunate that the King's Proctor, after receiving a full account of the facts, many of which are not now in dispute, did not feel able to intervene. It was also unfortunate that the wife's solicitors did not, before the decree nisi was made absolute, file a notice of motion for a re-hearing under r. 36. None of these matters, however, has any bearing upon the point we have to decide.

B In the recent case of Prince v. Prince (7) the Court of Appeal, affirming a decision of a Divisional Court of this Division, decided that r. 36 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947, was intended, or ought to be treated as having intended, to give or preserve to the Divisional Court the right to order a new trial or re-hearing in cases in which the parties would not in the ordinary course be entitled to appeal to the Court of Appeal. That case only dealt with the C situation obtaining before the pronouncement of a decree absolute. If it be permissible to draw any inference from the decision in Prince v. Prince (7), on what the situation might be after the pronouncement of decree absolute, it would seem that, inasmuch as the Court of Appeal has jurisdiction in an appropriate case to entertain an appeal after decree absolute, the jurisdiction of this court to entertain such an appeal is excluded.

D After careful consideration of all the authorities I am well satisfied that it is not competent to a party after the pronouncement of a decree absolute to apply successfully to this court under r. 36 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules for the re-hearing of a suit in which a decree absolute has already been pronounced in circumstances of procedural regularity. The wife's application in this case will, therefore, be dismissed.

E COLLINGWOOD, J.: It was conceded by counsel for the husband that, had the wife applied to the court for a re-hearing under r. 36 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947, before the decree had been made absolute, it would have been difficult to contend that she would not have been entitled to succeed. Having regard to the contents of her affidavit as to merits and the judgments

F in Petty v. Petty (8), and Peek v. Peek (1) I think this view was well-founded. It was, however, contended on behalf of the husband that, the decree having been made absolute, this court had no jurisdiction to make the order asked for.

The effect of a decree absolute, as affecting the right of a divorced person to re-marry, is set out in s. 184 (1) of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, which provides that:

G "As soon as any decree for divorce is made absolute, either of the parties to the marriage may, if there is no right of appeal against the decree absolute, marry again as if the prior marriage had been dissolved by death or, if there is such a right of appeal, may so marry again, if no appeal is presented against the decree, as soon as the time for appealing has expired, or, if an appeal is so presented, as soon as the appeal has been dismissed."

H Further, by s. 31 (1) (e) :

"No appeal shall lie . . . from an order absolute for the dissolution or nullity of marriage in favour of any party who having had time and opportunity to appeal from the decree nisi on which the order was founded, has not appealed from that decree."

The effect of a decree absolute was considered in Crosland v. Crosland (9). That was an application by the intervener to rescind a decree absolute after it had been pronounced by the judge in court, but before it had been filed in the registry, on the ground of the non-disclosure by the petitioner of his own adultery. WALLINGTON, J., said:

"I am quite satisfied . . . that when the judge in court has with his lips pronounced a decree absolute, there is an end of the matter, and that the steps which are taken subsequently to that pronouncement are merely ministerial acts which have no relation to the validity of the decree . . . The result . . . is that even though there may have been fraudulent concealment of vital facts throughout the whole of the proceedings of a petition, down to the very moment of the pronouncement of the decree absolute, when once the decree absolute has been pronounced the court is helpless; and the right of appeal is a limited right . . ."

These observations must clearly apply with equal force to the effect of a decree which became absolute under r. 40 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947, on the filing of the requisite notice of application in the registry.

The powers of the Court of Appeal in regard to setting aside a decree absolute were considered in Meier v. Meier (6). In that case a wife who had obtained a decree nisi obtained an order for security for her costs of an appeal by her husband, and the Court of Appeal directed that security be provided by a specified date, and that, in the event of failure by the husband to provide such security, the appeal should stand dismissed. Owing to a mistake on the part of the husband's solicitor, payment of the security was not made by the specified date, with the result that the appeal against the decree nisi stood dismissed and in due course the decree was made absolute. The husband applied to the Court of Appeal to set aside the decree absolute and reinstate the appeal. In dismissing the application SCOTT, L.J., after referring to the sections of the Judicature Act, 1925, which I have quoted, said ([1948] 1 All E.R. 162):

"The policy of Parliament requires that a decree absolute should be protected unless there is some ground on which the court could reasonably exercise its inherent jurisdiction to vary the order in the interests of justice."

SOMERVELL, L.J., said:

"The question is whether the court has jurisdiction to deprive a party of rights lawfully acquired under an order of the court in circumstances of the most complete regularity on the part of the party whom the court is asked to deprive of her rights. It may well be that there is inherent jurisdiction to do this, but . . . I should want specific authority on the point. There is no such authority, and that fact weighs very strongly against the submission that such a jurisdiction exists. In principle, I think it is impossible to imply such a jurisdiction . . ."

EVERSHED, L.J., said:

"... the present case is not merely concerned with the variation or the modification of the form of an order as such, but relates to a particular order under which, in the events which have happened, a pending appeal properly stood dismissed and the petitioner in the divorce proceedings acquired the status of a person in whose favour a decree absolute for divorce had been granted. To justify this court in taking the step of putting back the clock would require something more than a variation of its order under its inherent jurisdiction."

In McPherson v. McPherson (10) the respondent wife sought to have decrees nisi and absolute, which had been obtained against her by her husband in Alberta, set aside on the ground, inter alia, that at the trial of the divorce the proceedings had not been held in open court and that the resultant decrees nisi and absolute were null and void. It was held by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council that the result of this irregularity in procedure was not to render the super-vening decrees void, but voidable only, and that, as the time for appealing against the decree absolute had expired, and further, that the petitioner had acquired a new status by re-marrying, the decree absolute, though originally voidable, had become unassailable. Marsh v. Marsh (11) is a further illustration of the principle that where there has been a defect in procedure which has not caused a failure of natural justice, the resulting decree is voidable only, and not wholly void.

A In two cases only, apparently, has a decree absolute been rescinded. The first of them is Woolfenden v. Woolfenden (3), where the wife was granted a decree nisi on the ground of desertion. The husband applied for the decree to be made absolute, and his application failed to comply with the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947, r. 40 (3), under which it was made, in that there was no summons taken out, no notice whatever was served on the wife, and application was made before the expiration of the time required by s. 9 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937. The wife moved the court to treat the making of the decree absolute as a nullity, and to set aside the certificate under the seal of the registry. In his judgment, BARNARD, J., after referring to McPherson v. McPherson (10) as an instance of irregularity in procedure which rendered the decree voidable only, said ([1947] 2 All E.R. 655):

C “I have also been referred, by counsel for the wife, to Craig v. Kanssen (5) in which it was held ([1943] K.B. 256) that ‘... Failure to serve process where service of process is required renders null and void an order made against the party who should have been served. The court can set aside such an order in its inherent jurisdiction, and it is not necessary to appeal from it.’ LORD GREENE, M.R., after citing a number of authorities, stated (ibid., 262), in his judgment: ‘Those cases appear to me to establish that a person who is affected by an order which can properly be described as a nullity is entitled ex debito justitiae to have it set aside. In view of the fact that the husband has not complied with the statute, I have come to the conclusion that I cannot treat the making of this decree absolute as a mere irregularity, and I must treat it as a nullity.’

D [His LORDSHIP cited the extracts from the judgment of LORD MERRIMAN, P., in Everitt v. Everitt (4) which were cited by PILCHER, J. (ante, p. 68), and continued:] On July 8, 1949, after the decree in this case had been made absolute, the husband applied to the justices to revoke the order for maintenance which his wife had obtained against him in 1942, and this application having been refused, he appealed to the Divisional Court. We have had the advantage of seeing the transcript of the judgment in that appeal, which was heard on Dec. 15, 1949. In his judgment the learned President refers to the failure on the part of the husband to disclose in his petition the four appearances before the magistrates prior to that which he did disclose—the order of 1942—and he went on to say:

G “The fact remains that at the present time this decree absolute on the ground of desertion, with all the implications which follow from a finding of desertion, stands ... In my opinion, really it boils down to this simple point: either this woman does or she does not make an application now to the Court of Appeal to set the decree absolute aside.”

H We were referred to the decision of the Court of Appeal in Prince v. Prince (7). This was an appeal from the decision of the Divisional Court that that court had no jurisdiction to entertain an application for a re-hearing under r. 36 where the petitioner alleged that after the dismissal of his petition new evidence had been discovered tending to show that his wife had committed adultery. The Court of Appeal held that r. 36 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947, was intended, or ought to be treated as having been intended, to give or preserve to a Divisional Court the right to order a new trial or re-hearing in cases in which the parties would not in the ordinary course be entitled to go to the Court of Appeal. By the provision in the rule that an application for the re-hearing of a cause where "no error of the court at the hearing is alleged" shall be made to the Divisional Court of the Probate Division, it was intended to exclude all cases in which an aggrieved party might seek, upon application according to the ordinary general procedure of the Court of Appeal, to challenge as erroneous the conclusion of the judge at the trial or hearing in the court below.

I am unable to derive from the judgment of SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R., in that case support for the contention that this court has jurisdiction to rescind the decree absolute in the present case. In the present case it is not suggested that the decree absolute was a nullity, either by reason of failure to comply with statutory requirements which were conditions precedent to the right to the decree, as in Woolfenden v. Woolfenden (3), or as being the result of a procedural irregularity which caused a failure of natural justice, as in Everitt v. Everitt (4). So far as procedural requirements on the part of the petitioner are concerned, there is no ground for complaint. In my opinion, having regard to the judgments to which I have referred, there is no power in this court to set aside the decree absolute and order a re-hearing in the present case. I agree that the application should be dismissed.

Application dismissed without costs.

Solicitors: Kinch & Richardson, agents for W. Ebsworth, Bargoed (for the wife); Gibson & Weldon, agents for D. J. Treasure & Co., Pengam (for the husband).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

CLIFFORD v. CHARLES H. CHALLEN & SON, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Cohen, Asquith and Denning, L.JJ.), December 1, 4, 1950.]

Master and Servant—Duty of master—Provision of safe system of working—Dermatitis contracted through use of synthetic glue—Protective cream kept in store, but not in workshop—No insistence by foreman on its use.

A workman, who was employed by radio and piano manufacturers in their piano fitting shop, had to use synthetic glue in sticking pieces of wood together. It was well known that this glue could cause dermatitis if allowed to dry on the skin, and that a protective cream should be applied to the hands before starting work and that the hands should be washed if, during work, any glue got on to the skin. These precautionary measures were set out in a government notice on the danger of dermatitis from synthetic glue, and a copy of the notice was put up in the employers' radio cabinet shop, where the workman had been employed for the first six months of his service with the employers and where the protective cream was brought to the men and regularly used by them. The cream was kept in the factory store, to which the workmen had access, but none was kept in the piano fitting shop. The foreman of this shop did nothing to enforce the use of the cream or to encourage the men to use it, and none of them used it. The workman contracted dermatitis from using the glue and claimed damages from the employers on the ground that his injury resulted from their having failed to supply a safe system of working.

HELD: the protective cream should have been provided in the shop itself, and a system should have been established whereby the men used it in accordance with the government notice; by failing to take these measures, the employers were guilty of a breach of duty to the workman, and were liable to him in damages; but the workman was guilty of contributory negligence, and, therefore, the amount of damages should be borne by the parties equally.

Per COHEN, L.J.: "Where an employer is making use of a dangerous process, it is not enough for him to have available somewhere in the factory the appliances necessary to minimise the danger. The system of working must be one in which the appliances are available at the place where they are needed, and the man in charge of the work should be responsible for seeing, so far as he can, that the workers make use of the appliances provided."

Per DENNING, L.J.: "When [an employer] asks his men to work with dangerous substances, he must provide proper appliances to safeguard them, he must set in force a proper system by which they use the appliances and take the necessary precautions, and he must do his best to see that they adhere to it. He must remember that men doing a routine task are often heedless of their own safety and may become careless about taking precautions. He must, therefore, by his foreman, do his best to keep them up to the mark and not tolerate any slackness. He cannot throw all the blame on them if he has not shown a good example himself."

[AS TO MASTER'S DUTY TO PROVIDE A SAFE SYSTEM OF WORK, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 22, pp. 187-190, paras. 313-317; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 34, pp. 194-198, Nos. 1583-1623.]

Case referred to:

(1) Finch v. Telegraph Construction & Maintenance Co., Ltd., [1949] 1 All E.R. 452; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the workman from an order of SELLERS, J., dated June 22, 1950, dismissing an action by him against his employers claiming damages for negligence.

The workman contracted dermatitis from using synthetic glue at his work, and he contended that the employers had not taken sufficient precautions to prevent him contracting the disease. The learned judge held that the employers were not guilty of any breach of duty. The facts appear in the judgment of DENNING, L.J.

Edgedale, K.C., and C. J. A. Doughty for the workman.

Beney, K.C., and Stephen Chapman for the employers.

COHEN, L.J.: I will ask DENNING, L.J., to deliver the first judgment.

DENNING, L.J.: In 1949 the workman suffered from dermatitis, which was caused by his working with a synthetic glue while he was employed by the defendants, who are manufacturers of radio sets and of pianos. He used to get the glue on his hands when he was sticking pieces of wood together, and his case is that the employers did not take sufficient precautions to prevent him contracting dermatitis. The principal points that he makes are (a) that they did not provide a special protective cream called "barrier cream," and (b) that they did not provide running water for him to wash with.

The case raises questions of some importance as to the proper duty of employers in regard to the use of synthetic glue. This substance was much used during the war in the making of aircraft. It has special advantages over other glue because it can withstand extremes of climate, but it is likely to produce dermatitis if it is allowed to dry on the skin. In consequence, in 1943 a notice was issued by His Majesty's Stationery Office about the danger of dermatitis from synthetic glue. I do not know that the notice has any statutory effect. At any rate, we were not referred to any statute about it. I expect that it was originally put up in government workshops where aircraft were made, but the notice has since been recognised, both by the manufacturers of the glue and by outside employers who use it, as laying down the proper precautions which ought to be taken when synthetic glue is used. It affords, therefore, a safe basis on which the common law can build, because the courts will certainly have regard to any failure to take those precautions. The notice, so far as material, runs as follows:

"Dermatitis from glues (synthetic). Cautionary Notice. N.B. Glue must not be allowed to dry on the skin. Dermatitis is an inflammation of the skin starting with redness and irritation. Some of the ingredients of synthetic (chemical) glues and hardeners may cause dermatitis, but this can generally be avoided by taking the following precautions. Before starting work: (i) After washing, dry the hands and apply the special barrier preparation (skin protective) provided. Re-apply after each washing. At work: (ii) Roll the sleeves down and fasten them at the wrists; the arms are then protected. (iii) Never allow glue (especially if mixed with the hardener) to dry on the skin. Wipe it off at once with the damp swab provided. Wash using the special soap if the amount of glue on the skin is more than a trace."

In 1946 the workman went to the employers as a "trainee." He went into the radio cabinet shop for about six months, and then, for the remaining three years of his service with them, he was in the piano fitting shop where upright pianos were being fitted together. It was common knowledge in the works that there was a danger of skin disease from the use of the glue and that it was necessary to take precautions against it. The plaintiff himself knew of this danger and knew the precautions which should be taken. Indeed, in the radio shop where he first worked the government notice was put up, and he himself read it. In that shop barrier cream was provided. Women brought it from the store for the men to use, and there were two buckets of water to wash with. In the piano fitting shop, however, where the workman went after his first six months, the notice was not up, there was no barrier cream, and there was only one bucket of water. The barrier cream was kept in the factory store. The workman and the other men in the piano fitting shop could have got the cream from the store if they had wished, but in that shop none of them used it. A significant phrase was used by the foreman of the shop. When he was asked: "Was the barrier cream popular?" he said: "I do not think so. I was not a great believer in it myself." The foreman said that the one bucket of water in that shop got very dirty and he had to complain about it. He eventually got a second bucket, but the workmen used it for washing rags and so they reverted to one bucket for washing hands.

On those facts, the question is whether the employers fulfilled their duty to the workman. The standard which the law requires is that they should take reasonable care for the safety of their workmen. To discharge that duty properly an employer must make allowances for the imperfections of human nature. When he asks his men to work with dangerous substances, he must provide proper appliances to safeguard them, he must set in force a proper system by which they use the appliances and take the necessary precautions, and he must do his best to see that they adhere to it. He must remember that men doing a routine task are often heedless of their own safety and may become careless about taking precautions. He must, therefore, by his foreman, do his best to keep them up to the mark and not tolerate any slackness. He cannot throw all the blame on them if he has not shown a good example himself.

The first point is in regard to the barrier cream. Did the employers fulfil their duty by keeping it in the store and leaving it for the workmen to fetch it from the store if they wished? No containers were provided for fetching it. If a workman did not have a small tin or jar of his own, he could get the cream from the store on a piece of greaseproof paper and then take it back to the shop, and there apply it and so protect himself. None of them, however, did it in this shop. The foreman did not insist on it—as he said, he was not a great believer in it himself. In these circumstances, I cannot bring myself to believe that the employers fulfilled their duty to the workman. They should, at least, have done in the fitting shop the same as they did in the radio shop, namely, provide the barrier cream in the shop itself, and the foreman should have seen, as far as he could, that the workmen used it. The facts are rather like those in Finch v. Telegraph Construction & Maintenance Co., Ltd. (1), where workmen were left to ask for goggles if they wanted them, and DEVLIN, J., held that there was no proper system.

The second point is about the water. It was said that a bucket in the workshop was not sufficient, and that the employers should have provided running water in the shop itself. I do not think that the employers were guilty of any breach of the Factories Act, 1937, s. 42. That is one of the “welfare provisions” requiring that proper facilities shall be provided for washing, including soap and towels, and it is not one of the safety provisions. In this factory there was sufficient provision for ordinary washing purposes. There was a lavatory with wash-basins, soap and towels, where the workmen could wash. For ordinary welfare purposes the employers performed their duty. The only question with regard to the water is, therefore, whether the employers fulfilled their common law obligations. They provided a bucket in the workshop and the men were at liberty to change the water in the bucket by going down a few steps and getting hot water from a boiler outside. As it was very important that the men should wash off any glue from their hands before it got dry, I am not sure that the employers ought not to have provided running water actually in the shop, but, in view of the very close proximity of the boiler, I am not prepared to differ from the learned judge on the point.

I rest my judgment, therefore, on the barrier cream. It should have been provided in the shop itself, and a system should have been established whereby the men used it in accordance with the government notice. That not having been done, the employers were guilty of a breach of duty to their men, and it is a plain inference that that breach of duty was one of the causes of the dermatitis from which the workman suffered.

The remaining question is: Was the workman himself guilty of contributory negligence? The judge did not consider this question, because he thought that the employers had not been guilty of any breach of duty. I think that the workman was negligent. He knew that the glue was dangerous, and he knew what precautions ought to be taken, but he did not take them. He knew that he could get the barrier cream by going to the store, and yet he did not get it. The employers ought, no doubt, to have had it in the workshop, but I do not think that the workman can be acquitted of all responsibility on that account. The employers must take care of the men, but the men must also take care of themselves. The fact that all the men in the shop were negligent does not exempt any one of them from responsibility for his own negligence. The question then arises: In what proportion ought the workman and the employers to share responsibility? On the whole, I think that they should share it equally. The amount of damages which the judge has assessed should be borne by the parties equally.

COHEN, L.J.: I will ask ASQUITH, L.J., to deliver the next judgment.

ASQUITH, L.J.: I have come to the same conclusion as DENNING, L.J., has, and after similar hesitation. On balance, I think that, by a small margin, and subject to contributory negligence on his part, the workman has succeeded in discharging the burden on him of showing that his injury resulted from want of a safe working system on the part of the employers. The causes of my doubts were the following. (i) We start from a finding of fact that the workman had read the warning notice in the radio department which directed him, inter alia, to use barrier cream as a prophylactic when handling synthetic glue. (ii) As he knew when he was in the radio shop that this glue was a dangerous material, it is difficult to see how, or why, when he handled exactly the same glue in a different department of the same factory, he should have supposed that it should have lost its dangerous character and that the precautions enjoined were no longer necessary. There is, again, the fact that there was no difficulty, as he well knew, in procuring the barrier cream from the store. When all due allowance has been made for these factors, however, the foreman's evidence that he did nothing on his part to enforce or encourage the use by the men under his charge of this barrier cream, in which he admits he had no particular faith, seems to me to point to want of a safe working system. When some precaution is omitted which a safe working system would enjoin, and injury ensues to a workman of the kind which might be expected to ensue owing to the omission of that precaution, then there is a presumption that the injury did in fact result from the omission. Therefore, it seems to me that the workman has proved his case, but I feel no doubt whatever, for the reasons given by DENNING, L.J., that he was guilty of contributory negligence, and I agree with the proportion suggested for the apportioning of the responsibility.

COHEN, L.J.: I am of the same opinion. Where an employer is making use of a dangerous process, it is not enough for him to have available somewhere in the factory the appliances necessary to minimise the danger. The system of working must be one in which the appliances are available at the place where they are needed, and the man in charge of the work should be responsible for seeing, so far as he can, that the workers make use of the appliances provided. It seems to me, from evidence given on behalf of the employers, that they recognised that the man in charge should be responsible for seeing that the precautions indicated in the government notice were carried out, and it is quite plain from the evidence of the man in charge that he did not discharge that duty. For these reasons I agree that the appeal should be allowed and the order made as proposed by DENNING, L.J.

Solicitors: Shaen, Roscoe & Co. (for the workman); Goldingham, Wellington & Co. (for the employers).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

POTTS' EXECUTORS v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Simonds, Lord Normand, Lord Oaksey, Lord Morton of Henryton, Lord MacDermott), November 20, 21, December 14, 1950.]

Surtax—Settlement—Sums paid to settlor otherwise than as income—Body corporate connected with a settlement—Loans to settlor by body corporate—Payments made by company to third parties on behalf of settlor—Finance Act, 1938 (c. 46), s. 40 (3), s. 40 (5) (a) (i).

By the Finance Act, 1938, s. 40 (1), any capital sum paid, directly or indirectly, by trustees of a settlement to the settlor is to be treated as income of the settlor to the extent of the available income arising under the settlement. Section 40 further provides: "(3) For the purpose of this section, any capital sum paid to the settlor in any year of assessment by any body corporate connected with the settlement in that year shall be treated as having been paid by the trustees of the settlement in that year . . . (5) . . . in this section—(a) the expression 'capital sum' means—(i) any sum paid by way of loan or repayment of a loan; and (ii) any other sum paid otherwise than as income, being a sum which is not paid for full consideration in money or money's worth . . ."

On Mar. 31, 1939, P. made a settlement of a sum of money on his infant grandchildren, and on Apr. 25, 1939, the trustees of the settlement invested the money in the purchase from P. or his nominees of the whole of the issued share capital, save one share, of a company of which P. was governing director and which was admitted to be a "body corporate connected with the settlement" within the meaning of s. 40 (3). P. had had for many years prior to the settlement, and continued to have after the date of the settlement, an arrangement with the company whereby it paid various accounts on his behalf, such as certain charitable subscriptions, and tax, debiting his account in the company's books with the sums so paid, and crediting his account with director's fees and expenses due to him and payments which he made to the company in discharge of his indebtedness. In the tax years 1939-40 and 1940-41 the company made payments at P.'s request exceeding the available income of the settlement, and P.'s executors (P. having since died) were assessed to surtax in respect of the amounts so paid.

HELD (LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON dissentiente): on the true construction of s. 40 (5) (a) (i), the company did not make the payments in question "by way of loan" to P., and they did not, therefore, constitute a "capital sum" within s. 40 (3), and, although the words "directly or indirectly" were to be read into s. 40 (3), the words "paid to the settlor" were not thereby so enlarged as to include payment to some person other than the settlor for that person's own use and benefit.

Decision of the COURT OF APPEAL ([1949] 2 All E.R. 555), reversed.

Per LORD NORMAND: In a taxing Act designed to prevent tax evasion by affecting with liability to tax sums paid to a settlor otherwise than as income, it was obviously necessary to provide for the case when persons accountable to the settlor are interposed between the payer and the settlor for the purpose of disguising the transaction. That is a satisfactory explanation of the use of the words "directly or indirectly." There is, therefore, no reason for extending the meaning of "indirectly" so as to include payments to third parties which the settlor has an interest to make.

[FOR THE FINANCE ACT, 1938, s. 40, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 12, p. 414.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Westminster (Duke), [1936] A.C. 1; 104 L.J.K.B. 383; 153 L.T. 223; sub nom. Westminster (Duke) v. Inland Revenue Comrs., 19 Tax Cas. 490; Digest Supp.
- (2) Parsons v. Equitable Investment Co., Ltd., [1916] 2 Ch. 527; 85 L.J.Ch. 761; 115 L.T. 194; 7 Digest 49, 256.
- (3) Stott v. Shaw & Lee, [1928] 2 K.B. 26; 97 L.J.K.B. 556; 139 L.T. 302; Digest Supp.
- (4) Brooks & Co. v. Blackburn Benefit Society, (1884), 9 App. Cas. 857; 54 L.J.Ch. 376; 52 L.T. 225; 7 Digest 487, 199.
- (5) Partington v. A.-G., (1869), L.R. 4 H.L. 100; 38 L.J.Ex. 205; 21 L.T. 370; 18 Digest 35, 344.
- (6) B. S. Lyle, Ltd. v. Chappell, (1931), T.L.R. 562; revsd. on other grounds, [1932] 1 K.B. 691; Digest Supp.
- (7) Cuthbert v. Robarts, Lubbock & Co., [1909] 2 Ch. 226; 78 L.J.Ch. 529; 100 L.T. 796; 3 Digest 261, 788.

APPEAL by the taxpayers from an order of the Court of Appeal dated July 26, 1949, reported [1949] 2 All E.R. 555, allowing an appeal by the Crown from an order of SINGLETON, J., dated July 26, 1948, whereby he discharged assessments to surtax for the financial years 1939-40 and 1940-41 which had been confirmed by the Special Commissioners. The facts appear in the opinion of LORD SIMONDS, and are summarised in the headnote.

Grant, K.C., Talbot, K.C., and D. C. Miller for the taxpayers.
Pennyquick, K.C., and R. P. Hills for the Crown.

The House took time for consideration.

Dec. 14. The following opinions were read.

LORD SIMONDS: My Lords, this appeal raises a question on the Finance Act, 1938, s. 40, a section which has not previously been considered in this House. Before I refer to its provisions, I will state the relevant facts.

The late G. W. Potts was, until April, 1939, the owner of substantially the whole of the share capital of G. W. Potts, Ltd., which consisted of fifty thousand shares of £1 each. He was also governing director of the company receiving each year £5,000 as remuneration, and £1,500 for expenses. He had for many years before 1939 a current account with the company in which he was credited with his remuneration and expenses and debited with payments made by the company at his request sometimes to third parties and sometimes to himself. In 1936 he formed the Carron Trust, Ltd., a trust company with a capital of £100 divided into one hundred shares of £1 each. He held all these shares by himself or his nominees, but was not a director of the company. On Mar. 31, 1939, he, as settlor, executed a settlement of which Carron Trust, Ltd., was trustee and paid to that company as trustee £150,000 on trust to be invested at the trustee's sole discretion and to be held (subject to certain powers therein mentioned) on trust for accumulation for the benefit of four named infant grandchildren of the settlor in the manner therein mentioned. On Apr. 25, 1939, the trustee company as trustee of the settlement bought from the settlor or his nominees 49,999 fully paid shares of £1 each in G. W. Potts, Ltd., at £3 each. It has been throughout admitted that this company was a "body corporate connected with the settlement" within the meaning of the Finance Act, 1938, s. 40 (3).

I have said that the settlor had a current account with this company. It appears that at the end of 1935, after being debited with various sums, including subscriptions to charities, payments of tax and weekly cash drawings, he was in credit in the sum of £2,612 4s. 7d. which was carried forward to 1936. At the end of 1936 he was similarly in credit in the sum of £1,377; at the end of 1937 the account was exactly square; at the end of 1938 he had a credit of £1,316, but at the end of 1939, largely owing to the payment by the company on his behalf of a large sum for surtax, he was in debit in the sum of £8,850. At the end of 1940 the account was again square, but during that year the company had paid very large sums on his behalf, including £28,000 for surtax, and he was largely in debit until on Dec. 23, 1940, he paid £32,570 to the company. On the same day he resigned his directorship of the company. He was at all material times a rich man and had ample liquid resources to pay all that he owed to the company. It has not been suggested that the transactions between himself and the company were in any way colourable or a device for the evasion of tax. The only other fact that I need mention is that the company, whose primary business was that of meat salesmen, had power under cl. 3 (I) of its memorandum of association to make advances as well to any director as to customers and others with or without security and on such terms as the company might approve and generally to act as bankers for customers and others, and under cl. 3 (L) to invest and deal with the moneys of the company not immediately required in or on such securities and in such manner as might from time to time be determined in the absolute discretion of the directors. I mention these powers because on them, and particularly the first of them, the Crown relied.

It was in these circumstances that, the settlor having then died, additional assessments to surtax were made on his executors in the sum of £50,107 for the year ending Apr. 5, 1940, and in the sum of £19,924 for that ending Apr. 5, 1941. These figures were subsequently adjusted and became respectively £55,383 and £5,426 and, after a further adjustment, £50,583 and £5,470. The assessments were made on the footing that these sums represented capital sums paid directly or indirectly to the settlor by the trustee of the settlement. It is time then to turn to the section which is said to have such a result. No question arises in regard to the quantum of the assessment, the only matter in dispute being whether the sums, with which the settlor was credited in the current account already mentioned, were capital sums on which the section operated. It will be necessary, therefore, to refer to a few provisions only of the section.

The Finance Act, 1938, s. 40, so far as relevant provides:

“(1) Any capital sum paid directly or indirectly in any relevant year of assessment by the trustees of a settlement to which this section applies to the settlor shall—(a) to the extent to which the amount of that sum falls within the amount of income available up to the end of that year, be treated for all the purposes of the Income Tax Acts as the income of the settlor for that year; . . . (3) for the purpose of this section, any capital sum paid to the settlor in any year of assessment by any body corporate connected with the settlement in that year shall be treated as having been paid by the trustees of the settlement in that year. (5) . . . in this section—(a) the expression ‘capital sum’ means—(i) any sum paid by way of loan or repayment of a loan; and (ii) any other sum paid otherwise than as income, being a sum which is not paid for full consideration in money or money’s worth; . . .”

It is, as I have already said, admitted that the company is a “body corporate connected with the settlement” and it follows that the validity of the assessment to which I have referred depends on the nature of the relevant transactions between the settlor and the company. There was, in the first place, some argument whether the words “directly or indirectly” which occur in sub-s. (1) are to be read into sub-s. (3). In my opinion, they clearly are, for the purpose and effect of that sub-section are merely to substitute payment by a body corporate connected with the settlement for payment by the trustees of the settlement. In other respects the measure of liability is intended to be the same.

The question, then, is whether the sums with which the settlor was debited in current account with the company were capital sums paid directly or indirectly by the company to him. This they would be if they were sums paid to him by way of loan or repayment of a loan, or were sums paid to him otherwise than as income which were not paid for full consideration in money or money’s worth. These are true alternatives, and I will consider the latter first. I cannot doubt, and the matter was not seriously contested by the Crown, that, the sums in question having been paid at the request of the settlor and on his promise express or implied to repay, there was full consideration given by the settlor for the payment. Some suggestion was made that, inasmuch as there was no provision for payment of interest, there was not full consideration, but that was an arrangement which was, no doubt, convenient to both parties. Though latterly the company was largely in credit, in the earlier years it had been the other way about and no interest was charged against the company. In my opinion, this contention fails, and I turn to the question whether these sums were paid by way of loan directly or indirectly by the company to the settlor. The Special Commissioners held that the sums in question were “sums paid by way of loan.” They thought that if the company was called on to justify the payments they would have to rely on the power to lend money contained in cl. 3 (I) of the memorandum of association and said:

“The payments by the company direct to (for example) the Inland Revenue Commissioners for surtax are in substance merely a convenient method which avoided the necessity of the company paying to Mr. Potts and Mr. Potts then paying the Inland Revenue Commissioners."

There are, I think, sections in revenue Acts which justify a reference to the substance of a transaction, but there is danger in forgetting the words used by LORD TOMLIN in Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Westminster (Duke) (1) ([1936] A.C. 19) which are cited by SINGLETON, J., in this case. The question is not what the transactions between the settlor and the company in substance were, but whether they fell within the fair meaning of the section.

From the determination of the commissioners the taxpayers appealed by way of Case Stated to the High Court, and on July 26, 1948, SINGLETON, J., allowed their appeal, holding, in effect, that no capital sum within the meaning of the section was during the relevant years paid to the settlor. From his judgment the Crown appealed to the Court of Appeal who allowed the appeal and restored the decision of the commissioners. LORD GREENE, M.R., in whose judgment SOMERVELL and DENNING, L.JJ., concurred, took the view which I have already expressed as to importing into sub-s. (3) the words "directly or indirectly" and came to the conclusion ([1949] 2 All E.R. 561) that "... the various payments made by the company ... ought fairly to be regarded as money paid directly or indirectly by way of loan to Mr. Potts within the meaning of the sub-section."

He was, I think, partly at least led to this conclusion by considering the position of a bank which by meeting a customer's cheques when he is overdrawn is deemed to have lent him money.

My Lords, I have come to a different conclusion. Reading the definition into the sub-section, I must be satisfied that according to the fair meaning of the words these sums were sums paid by way of loan to the settlor directly or indirectly by the company. I do not think it matters whether the words "directly or indirectly" qualify the payment or the receipt. I will assume they qualify both or either. The question is still whether the conditions of the composite phrase are fulfilled—were the sums paid to the settlor by way of loan? I do not doubt that in certain contexts money paid at A.'s request to B. may be properly described as "paid to A.": see, e.g., Parsons v. Equitable Investment Co., Ltd. (2), per LORD COZENS-HARDY, M.R., ([1916] 2 Ch. 530). The explanation of this is to be found in the judgment of SHEARMAN, J., in Stott v. Shaw & Lee (3) ([1928] 2 K.B. 31):

"... if the legal or business or commercial effect of the transaction can be taken to be the same as that described in the bill of sale, then the courts will hold the consideration to be truly stated."

But this is not the way in which a taxing statute is to be read. I am not, in the construction of such a statute, entitled to say that, because the legal or business result is the same whether, on the one hand, I borrow money from the company and with it make certain payments, or, on the other hand, the company at my request makes certain payments on my implied promise to repay, therefore it is immaterial what words are in the statute if that result is attained. Nor, again, is it relevant that, where a bank allows its customer to overdraw, the customer is to be regarded as having borrowed from the bank to the extent of the overdraft, a proposition in regard to which no doubt can be entertained; see Brooks & Co. v. Blackburn Benefit Society (4) (9 App. Cas. 868). The company was not a bank, and it would, in my opinion, be an abuse of language, or at least the merest colloquialism, to speak of the transaction between the company and the settlor as a banking transaction. The fact that the objects for which the company was established included that to which I have referred does not, in my opinion, affect the question. That question remains as I have stated it, and my answer is that according to the ordinary fair meaning of the words the company did not pay any sums to the settlor by way of loan. It would in fact be as inapt to say that the company paid him sums by way of loans when he was in debit on the account as to say that he paid the company sums by way of loan when he was in credit. Some stress was laid on the distinction in the old forms of pleading between the plea for money lent to the defendant and the plea for money paid at the request of the defendant to a third party. I am not inclined to give much weight to this consideration, but it does indicate that there is at least a formal difference between the two transactions.

So far, my Lords, I have not specifically dealt with the word "indirectly." It is sufficient to say that it cannot so enlarge the meaning of the words "paid to the settlor" as to include payment to some other person than the settlor for his own use and benefit. I do not feel called on to determine positively what transactions it might be apt to cover. It may be that it is not apt to cover any that are not already covered by the normal meaning of the words "paid to the settlor." It was finally urged by learned counsel for the Crown that, if this appeal is allowed, an easy way of evading tax will be open to the taxpayer. This is an argument which is of no weight whatever. The question is: What is the fair meaning of words in a taxing Act? I have given my answer to it, and move that this appeal be allowed and the matter be remitted accordingly.

LORD NORMAND: My Lords, I shall not re-state the facts, nor repeat the provisions of the section on which the result of the appeal depends. The first and more difficult question is whether sums paid by the company to third parties by the settlor's request were within the meaning of the Act capital sums paid directly or indirectly to him by way of loan. These sums were either sums paid to the Inland Revenue in discharge of the settlor's tax obligations, or other sums of which subscriptions paid to charities were taken as typical. There were also sums which were paid to the settlor himself, but these were treated by the Special Commissioners as sums paid on account of the settlor's remuneration and expenses as the company's managing director. It is not suggested that the words "capital sums paid directly or indirectly to the settlor by way of a loan" have any special meaning imposed on them by the context. Each word must, if possible, be allowed its appropriate effect, yet it is the meaning of the whole expression, all the words being read together, that has to be found. The principles to be observed in applying the provisions of a taxing Act are stated by LORD CAIRNS in Partington v. A.-G. (5) (L.R. 4 H.L. 122):

"... as I understand the principle of all fiscal legislation, it is this: If the person sought to be taxed comes within the letter of the law he must be taxed, however great the hardship may appear to the judicial mind to be. On the other hand, if the Crown, seeking to recover the tax, cannot bring the subject within the letter of the law, the subject is free, however apparently within the spirit of the law the case might otherwise appear to be. In other words, if there be admissible, in any statute, what is called an equitable construction, certainly such a construction is not admissible in a taxing statute, where you can simply adhere to the words of the statute."

The Crown submitted that the payments made by request were capital sums paid indirectly to the settlor as loans. I shall refer presently to the authorities by which the submission was supported. But first I shall consider the meaning of the relevant words apart from authority. In my view, they are apt to cover payments made as loans to third parties through whom the payment reaches the settlor himself, but they are not apt to cover payments made to third parties who are not accountable to the settlor and are entitled to retain the sums as their own moneys. This is a taxing Act and its terms are not to be enlarged by reasoning that the same final result is achieved as by a loan made to the settlor followed by a payment made by him to the third party. The principle stated by LORD TOMLIN in the Duke of Westminster's case (1) is on this point conclusive. LORD TOMLIN said ([1936] A.C. 19):

" . . . it is said that in revenue cases there is a doctrine that the court may ignore the legal position and regard what is called 'the substance of the matter' and that here the substance of the matter is that the annuitant was serving the duke for something equal to his former salary or wages, and that, therefore, while he is so serving, the annuity must be treated as salary or wages. This supposed doctrine (upon which the commissioners apparently acted) seems to rest for its support upon a misunderstanding of language used in some earlier cases. The sooner this misunderstanding is dispelled, and the supposed doctrine given its quietus, the better it will be for all concerned, for the doctrine seems to involve substituting 'the incertain and crooked cord of discretion' for 'the golden and straight met wand of the law.' (4 Inst., 41)."

It would be inconsistent with this principle to accept the contention that the words should be extended to any payment made by the settlor's request to a third party which produces a pecuniary benefit to the settlor equivalent to the sum paid. It was said, however, that a payment made by the settlor's request to an agent or other person accountable to him is in law a payment made directly to the settlor and, therefore, that the word "indirectly" must have a wider significance than I have assigned to it. That is, with respect, to beg the question. In a taxing Act designed to prevent tax evasion by affecting with liability to tax sums paid to a settlor otherwise than as income, it was obviously necessary to provide for the case where persons accountable to the settlor are interposed between the payer and the settlor for the purpose of disguising the transaction. That is a satisfactory explanation of the use of the words "directly or indirectly." There is, therefore, no reason for extending the meaning of "indirectly" so as to include payments to third parties which the settlor has an interest to make whether in discharge of his legal liabilities or in furtherance of charities favoured by him. If that had been the intention, other words would have been added.

The Crown relied on Parsons v. Equitable Investment Co., Ltd. (2). In that case it was held that a sum of money borrowed on a bill of sale and paid by the grantor's request to a creditor or another person was properly described as a payment to the grantor. But the ground of this conclusion was not that a payment made to B. by A.'s direction is as matter of general law a payment to A., but that the requirement of the Bills of Sales Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882, s. 8, that the bill of sale shall truly set forth the consideration, had been construed in accordance with the principle that although "It is perfectly clear that, strictly understood, that statement was untrue": Stott v. Shaw & Lee (3), per SHEARMAN, J. ([1928] 2 K.B. 31, 30). In B. S. Lyle, Ltd. v. Chappell (6), another case relied on by the Crown, the rule of Parsons v. Equitable Investment Co., Ltd. (2) was applied in a moneylender's action to the statements in the moneylender's memorandum. To apply these cases in construing a taxing Act is again flatly inconsistent with the principle established by the Duke of Westminster's case (1). The court is not entitled to say that for the purposes of taxation the actual transaction is to be disregarded as "machinery" and that the substance or equivalent financial results are the relevant consideration. It may, indeed, be said that if these loose principles of construction had been liberally applied, they would in many instances have been adequate to deal with tax evasion and there would have been less frequent cause for the intervention of Parliament.

" . . . if the legal or business or commercial effect of the transaction can be taken to be the same as that described in the bill of sale, then the courts will hold the consideration to be truly stated,"

A I, therefore, hold that the payments made by the settlor's request to third parties were not payments made directly or indirectly to the settlor. It is not necessary to consider whether they were payments made by way of loan, but since the question was argued I will state my opinion. There is a real distinction between a loan to A. to enable him to pay his creditors and a payment to A.'s creditors made for the purpose of discharging his debts. It is a distinction recognised and taken advantage of both by commercial men and by others. But there are exceptions, e.g., in banking law payments to third parties are customers' loans if the account is overdrawn: Brooks & Co. v. Blackburn Benefit Society (4), Cuthbert v. Robarts, Lubbock & Co. (7). All the controversial payments in the present case appear as items in a current account described as a director's account. It is a fair inference that the payments, whether to the settlor himself or to third parties, were deemed by the company to be authorised by the power in the memorandum of association to make advances to directors and customers and generally to act as bankers for customers and others. Nevertheless, the account is not a banker's account with its customer. For example, the payments with which the settlor is credited are not loans to the company, as are the payments into the bank when the customer's account is not overdrawn; nor were any of the payments made for the purpose of granting credit required by the settlor, who had at all times liquid resources ready to pay all that he owed to the company. I, therefore, think that the payments in question were not payments by way of loan as that word is understood in common parlance and as it is used in s. 40.

D The Crown did not offer more than a perfunctory submission that the payments made to third parties were not paid for full consideration in money or money's worth. The consideration was, in my opinion, the services rendered by the managing director coupled with an implied obligation of repayment on demand. Further, there is no finding that the consideration was not full consideration, and I can find no ground for holding that full consideration was not given. Courts of law are not concerned with extrinsic circumstances, such as that the provisions of s. 40 as I have construed them are of little value because they may easily be evaded by those who have the will to evade them, or that persons who contract genuine loans or receive repayment of genuine loans without any purpose of evasion and without in fact evading any liability to tax are as likely to be taxed under s. 40 as persons who contrive elaborate schemes of pretended loans for the purpose of evasion. I would allow the appeal with costs.

E LORD OAKSEY: My Lords, I agree that this appeal should be allowed. The object of the Act, in my opinion, was to tax a settlor who obtained payment of capital sums from the trustees of his settlement or from companies connected with the settlement for which he had not given full consideration in money or money's worth; it cannot have been the object of the Act to tax him in respect of payments for which he had given full consideration. In these circumstances it appears to me that, if the words of the Act are fairly susceptible of a meaning which attains this object, they should be given that meaning rather than a meaning which goes beyond the object of the Act and leads to admitted injustice.

I The first question is whether the sums in question are capital sums within the meaning of s. 40 (5) (a). It was contended for the Crown that the sums paid by the company were sums paid by way of loan. In my opinion, in the particular circumstances of this case, the payments were not made by way of loan. They were made in accordance with the practice which had long existed by which the governing director of a company in which he had held all the shares directed or requested the company to make payments on his behalf as a matter of ordinary convenience. The company had never carried on a business of bankers or moneylenders, and it is not, in my opinion, a fair use of language to describe payments made for the governing director in such circumstances as loans. According to the argument for the Crown, whenever the governing director's account became in debit there was a loan by the company to him, and whenever it was credited with any sum thereafter until the account balanced there were repayments of loans. A

The second question is whether, even if the payments were made by way of loan, they were paid directly or indirectly to the settlor. None of them was in fact paid to the settlor, and from some of them the settlor derived no financial benefit since some of them were contributions to charities. Having regard to the object of the statute I think the words "paid directly or indirectly to the settlor" should be held to mean paid into the settlor's hands or into the hands of someone accountable to him. B

For my own part, I should also be prepared to decide the case on the ground that the true construction of s. 40 (5) (i) is that it refers only to sums paid by way of loan which are not paid for full consideration in money or money's worth and that in the present case the accommodation afforded to the appellant was given for full consideration in money or money's worth. C

LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON: My Lords, the charging sub-section in s. 40 of the Finance Act, 1938, is sub-s. (1). It begins:

"Any capital sum paid directly or indirectly in any relevant year of assessment by the trustees of a settlement to which this section applies to the settlor shall . . ."

Then follow the words which give rise to the charge to tax. The ambit of the sub-section is enlarged by sub-s. (3) which provides:

"For the purpose of this section any capital sum paid to the settlor in any year of assessment by any body corporate connected with the settlement in that year shall be treated as having been paid by the trustees of the settlement in that year."

The effect of this latter sub-section is to insert in sub-s. (1) immediately after the words "to which this section applies" the words "or by any body corporate connected with the settlement in that year." It is admitted by the appellants that G. W. Potts, Ltd. (hereafter called "the company") is such a company. The expression "capital sum" is defined by sub-s. (5) (a) as follows: F

"The expression 'capital sum' means—(i) any sum paid by way of loan or repayment of a loan; and (ii) any other sum paid otherwise than as income, being a sum which is not paid for full consideration in money or money's worth . . ."

Then follow some words which are immaterial for the present purpose. I agree with the Court of Appeal in thinking that para. (ii) has no application in the present case, and the relevant words are "any sum paid by way of loan." The question for decision may, therefore, be expressed as follows, reading sub-s. (1), sub-s. (3) and sub-s. (5) (a) (i) together and applying them to the facts of the present case: Were the sums paid out by the company in the relevant years of assessment, at the request of the settlor and on his promise to repay, "sums paid by way of loan directly or indirectly to the settlor"? This question can be sub-divided into two questions: (a) Were these sums paid by way of loan? (b) If so, were they paid directly or indirectly to the settlor? H

For the purpose of considering the first of these two questions, it is, I think, important to note the circumstances in which the sums under consideration were paid out by the company. To quote the Case Stated:

"For many years Mr. Potts had had a current account with the company. In these accounts Mr. Potts was credited with his remuneration as governing director and expenses and various payments were made by the company at Mr. Potts' request, some payments being to third parties (e.g., the Inland Revenue Commissioners for tax and charities) and some being payments to himself (cash drawings)."

It is argued on behalf of the taxpayers that where there is a current account, with payments out and payments in from time to time, it would be wrong to treat every payment out as a "loan" within s. 40 (5) (a) (i) and every payment in as a repayment of a loan. That case can be considered if and when it arises, but it is not the case now before your Lordships. The relevant period is from Apr. 5, 1939, to Apr. 5, 1941, and the details appear in the "director's account" for the period from Jan. 18, 1939, to Dec. 31, 1940: see exhibit E to the Case Stated. On May 5, 1939, the company paid the settlor's surtax amounting to £12,613 15s. 7d. The settlor's account was overdrawn before this payment was made and from that time on his account was never in credit. Between May 5 and Dec. 31, 1939, a large number of payments were made by the company at the request of the settlor. I need not pause to analyse them in detail at the moment, but they included payments of the settlor's income tax sched. E, various sums of cash paid to the settlor himself and a number of payments to charities. During this period the settlor paid nothing into the account. At the end of the year the settlor was credited with his director's fees, £5,000, and director's expenses, £1,500, and this left his account in debit to the amount of £8,850 7s. 7d. In 1940 further payments were made by the company at the request of the settlor, including surtax, £28,000, and income tax, £779 12s. 6d. On Dec. 23, 1940, when the settlor resigned his position as governing director, he was credited with director's fees and expenses from Jan. 1 to Dec. 23, 1940. This credit reduced his debit balance to £32,570 1s. 3d., and on Dec. 23, 1940, the settlor gave the company a cheque for that amount to balance the account.

I have mentioned these facts to show that on every occasion on which a sum was paid out by the company during the relevant period, it was in the nature of an overdraft. At the end of the year the settlor's director's fees and expenses were credited to him, and this had the effect of reducing the overdraft, but no sum was ever paid in by the settlor during the relevant period until he gave the company the balancing cheque of £32,570 1s. 3d. on Dec. 23, 1940. Whether or not it is accurate to describe the company as carrying on the business of banking, there is no doubt that during the relevant period the company supplied money to the settlor as and when he requested the company to do so and debited him with each of these amounts. The only difference between the procedure adopted by the company and the procedure adopted by a bank granting an overdraft is that the company did not apparently require any security, and did not charge any interest on the sums debited to the settlor. This is not surprising, as the settlor was a rich man and all the shares in the company except two were held by nominees for the settlor.

For the moment, I shall only deal with the substantial sums amounting to over £40,000, which the company paid out, at the settlor's request, in discharge of his liabilities for income tax and surtax. My Lords, I think that the sums so paid out cannot accurately be described as anything other than loans to the settlor. To quote LORD BLACKBURN in Brooks & Co. v. Blackburn Benefit Society (4) (9 App. Cas. 864):

"But they [bankers] are under no obligation to honour cheques which exceed the amount of the balance, or, in other words, to allow the customer to overdraw. Bankers generally do accommodate their customers by allowing such overdrafts to some extent; when they do so the legal effect is that they lend the surplus to the customer . . ."

For the sake of example I shall take the sum of £28,000 paid out in March, 1940, in discharge of the settlor's liability for surtax. That transaction can, I think, be accurately stated as follows: The settlor said: "Please pay my surtax; if you do pay it I promise to repay the sum on demand." When the money was paid to the Inland Revenue, it seems to me that it was lent to the settlor just as much as if the company had been a bank and had granted him an overdraft of that amount.

I now come to the second of the two questions already stated, viz.: Were the sums in question "paid directly or indirectly to the settlor"? In agreement with the Court of Appeal and the Special Commissioners, I think that they were so paid. It is argued on behalf of the taxpayers that no sum can be "paid to the settlor," even indirectly, unless it is either paid into his hands or reaches his hands through some agent who is accountable to him. I find myself unable to accept this argument. I think that a sum is paid to A.B., in the ordinary meaning of these words, if it is either paid into the hands of A.B. or into the hands of his duly authorised agent, and that the construction contended for by the taxpayers really gives no force to the words "directly or indirectly." I think that these words cover at least two types of payment—a payment direct to the settlor or his agent, and a payment, made at the request of the settlor, which confers a pecuniary advantage to the settlor equal to the sum paid, e.g., payment of a debt presently due from the settlor such as the income tax and surtax in the present case.

It seems to me that this construction accords with the intention of s. 40 as expressed by the words used therein, and the contrary view gives rise to some strange results. Let me assume that two rich men, X. and Y., each make a settlement of the kind to which the section applies, for instance, a settlement of a sum of £50,000 under which the income is to be accumulated so that no surtax attaches to that income. Assume further that both X. and Y. have other substantial income which attracts surtax and that they desire this surtax to be paid by the trustees of the settlement. X. says to the trustees: "Pay my surtax and I promise to repay you." Y. says to the trustees: "I need £10,000 in order to pay my surtax, give me a cheque and I promise to repay you." If the appellants' contention is correct, the payment to X will not come within s. 40 and the payment to Y. will come within it. This seems a very strange and capricious result, and, incidentally, it reveals an extremely simple way of making the section wholly ineffective. On the other hand, if my view is correct, X. has received payment by way of loan indirectly and Y. has received payment by way of loan directly within the meaning of the section and they will both equally be charged with tax. This is, I venture to think, a result which the legislature intended to achieve, and, in my view, it has been achieved by the words used in the section.

I do not think it right to detain your Lordships by considering in detail the other payments such as subscriptions to charities. If the view which I have expressed commends itself to your Lordships, there is no dispute between the parties as to the figures in the assessments; if your Lordships are of a contrary opinion, the assessments cannot stand. I would dismiss the appeal.

LORD MACDERMOTT: My Lords, the question here is whether the aggregate of certain sums paid by G. W. Potts, Ltd. (hereinafter called "the company") for and on behalf of the late Mr. G. W. Potts constituted (after certain deductions which need not be specified) a "capital sum paid directly or indirectly . . . by the trustees of a settlement . . . to the settlor . . ." within the meaning of those words as used in the Finance Act, 1938, s. 40 (1).

It was agreed that the company was a "body corporate connected with the settlement" mentioned in the Case Stated for the purposes of sub-s. (3) of that section, and, accordingly, that the payments in question, if otherwise within sub-s. (1), were to be treated as having been paid by the trustees of the said settlement of which Mr. Potts was the settlor. But it was in dispute whether the need to resort to sub-s. (3), in which the words "directly or indirectly" do not occur, had the effect of allowing those words to be ignored in applying sub-s. (1). I am satisfied that, on the true construction of the section, the expression "directly or indirectly" contained in sub-s. (1) forms a constant part of the enactment, whatever its effect may be, and I have, therefore, incorporated it in stating the question for decision. This leaves two matters for consideration: (i) Did the payments made by the company constitute a "capital sum" as defined by s. 40 (5) (a), and (ii) If so, was such capital sum paid to the settlor? It is only if the answer to both these queries is in the affirmative that the assessments under review can be upheld.

My Lords, I incline to the opinion that the sums paid by the company could not, in any event, be brought within sub-s. (5) (a) (ii). If they come within that sub-section at all it must, I think, be under para. (a) (i) and then only by virtue of that part thereof which reads "any sum paid by way of loan." Now, I entertain little doubt that in certain circumstances it may properly be said that, if A. out of his own moneys pays a sum to B. for and at the request of C., A. has paid the sum by way of loan, and by way of loan to C. in the sense, and only in the sense, that he has thereby created the relation of lender and borrower between himself and C. But this is not to say that all transactions of that kind are loans. They may be but incidents in some wider relationship, other than that of lender and borrower, and take, as it were, their colour from it. For example, a rent agent may have to pay rates and a solicitor may have to pay stamp duties for clients whose accounts are not in credit at the time of payment. But in the ordinary course of events I do not think it would occur to anyone, or be a correct use of language, to say that such disbursements were loans or made by way of loan. On the other hand, the kind of wider relationship to which I am referring may provide opportunity for transactions within it which are exceptional and beyond the normal scope of the relationship and which may properly be describable as loans and as nothing else. The true view must depend on the circumstances. In the present case no attempt has been made to explore the position with these considerations in mind. It may have been impossible to do so. But, whatever the reason, there is no distinction drawn between the relevant items in the accounts; big or little, fiscal or charitable, they are all treated alike. Accordingly, I think this first question can only be settled on an assumption of normality which, with debits ranging from "Dunhill—2s. 10d." to "surtax—£18,000" (vide exhibit E, director's account for 1940) seems to me to be assuming a good deal. For this reason and because, on the view I take of the rest of the case, it becomes unnecessary to do so, I do not propose to express any concluded opinion on this branch of the matter. I, therefore, proceed to the second question assuming, for the purpose, an affirmative answer to the first.

For the Crown it was submitted that whatever was paid to the order of the settlor was a payment to him within the meaning of sub-s. (1), and, in the alternative, that if a sum paid in that way was not paid directly to the settlor it was nevertheless paid indirectly to him. On the facts of this case I do not think there is room for this alternative argument. The relatively small amounts paid directly to Mr. Potts were well within his salary and may be left out of account. Of the other payments those that matter here were not made to Mr. Potts' agents or in some circuitous way designed to put the money under his control eventually. Had they been, the word "indirectly" might have had a part to play, for in that case the issue would be whether, as a matter of fact, payment had been made, one way or another, to the settlor. In short, as it appears to me, the words "directly or indirectly" bear only on the mechanics of payment in fact. But the issue under consideration has to be related to payments which moved from Mr. Potts and is really one of law and not of fact. It is whether a payment made by A. on behalf of C. to B. (which

B. is to retain as a gift or as in discharge of some obligation owed him by C.) is a payment by A. to C. within the meaning of sub-s. (1). As SIR RAYMOND EVERSHERD, M.R., observes, this question is largely one of first impression. Differing from him with great respect, I would answer it in the negative. A man who pays his creditor does not pay himself, and if his agent discharges the debt on his behalf the position in this respect surely remains the same. I think the natural meaning of the words "paid . . . to the settlor" signifies a payment that goes to the settlor, not one that goes away from him, and I see no good reason, either within s. 40 or without it, for substituting something else for the natural meaning. It was said for the Crown that it was no straining of language, where A. paid a sum to B. at C.'s request and for C.'s benefit, to say that A. had paid C. I cannot agree. The person paid is B. and no one else, and the consideration that the payment is advantageous to C. seems to me beside the point so far as concerns the construction of the material words. It was also urged that to hold against this last submission would be to make s. 40 so easy to circumvent that it would be useless for its purpose. That purpose, doubtless, was to prevent or discourage certain forms of tax evasion. But the section attempts this in a manner which may work great harm to innocent people, as by inflicting tax on the grossed-up amount of a loan so temporary that it might only be till the banks opened, or of a loan genuinely borrowed and as genuinely repaid to the settlor. Tax evasion often places the draftsman in great difficulty and it may not always be possible to avoid hurting the guiltless. But s. 40 seems capable of involving straightforward transactions to such a considerable extent that a decision which may encourage the substitution of something better need not be a matter for regret. I would hold, then, that no capital sum was paid to the settlor within the meaning of sub-s. (1), and for that reason I would allow the appeal and restore the order of SINGLETON, J.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Allen & Overy (for the taxpayers); Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

DARNELL v. MILLWOOD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Eversherd, M.R., Cohen and Singleton, L.JJ.), November 24, 1950.]

Rent Restriction—Alternative accommodation—"Suitable to the needs of the tenant and his family"—"Family"—Exclusion of housekeeper and her husband and child—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 3 (3) (ii).

The statutory tenant of a dwelling-house was a widower, and a married woman acted as his housekeeper, occupying, with her husband and child, part of the house. In proceedings for possession the landlord offered as alternative accommodation for the tenant a part of the house which was of an extent sufficient to accommodate the tenant, but not also to accommodate the housekeeper and her family.

Held: the housekeeper and her husband and child were not members of the tenant's "family" within s. 3 (3) (ii) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, and, therefore, in considering whether the alternative accommodation offered was suitable, the court could not take account of the needs of the housekeeper and her husband and child.

Standingford v. Probert ([1949] 2 All E.R. 861), applied.

[AS TO DISCRETION TO ORDER POSSESSION ON PROOF OF ALTERNATIVE ACCOMMODATION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, p. 332, para. 398; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 582-584, Nos. 7311-7330 and Digest Supp., and 2nd Digest Supp.]

Case referred to:

(1) Standingford v. Probert, [1949] 2 All E.R. 861; [1950] 1 K.B. 377; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the tenant from an order of possession made against him by His Honour JUDGE CROSTHWAITTE, sitting at the Liverpool County Court, dated July 25, 1950. The landlord offered alternative accommodation which the judge held to be suitable, and the tenant appealed on the ground that, though suitable for him personally, it was not suitable for the needs of his housekeeper and her husband and child who lived with him and should be counted as part of his "family" within the meaning of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, s. 3 (3).

Miss M. L. Williams for the tenant.

Gerson Newman for the landlord.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R.: This is an appeal on a short point arising under s. 3 (3) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933. The landlord brought proceedings in Liverpool County Court for possession of premises of which the tenant is, and was at the material date, admittedly the statutory tenant, and he sought to found the jurisdiction of the court on the offer of alternative accommodation consisting either of the ground floor of the same house, or, alternatively, of the first floor, subject to the condition that the requisite kitchen arrangements should first be installed. The judge thought that reasonable accommodation was offered, and he thought it reasonable to make the order which he did, which was for possession in three months' time.

The tenant is a widower aged sixty-eight years. He lost his wife in 1949, and, after a period during which his children looked after him, he arranged with a Mr. and Mrs. Starkey to come and live with him. They paid him 25s. a week, but Mrs. Starkey undertook the burden of doing the housework and generally looking after him and he paid all the household bills. That arrangement, financially speaking, was, perhaps, peculiar, but the substance of it was that Mrs. Starkey acted as housekeeper for the tenant, and in return got the benefit of accommodation in the premises.

The first point which arises is this. It is said that in the circumstances of this case Mr. and Mrs. Starkey and their child are to be regarded as members of the tenant's "family" within the meaning of s. 3 (3) (ii) of the Act of 1933. We have been referred to a number of cases, but I think it will be sufficient if I refer to Standingford v. Probert (1), a case arising under the same enactment, where COHEN, L.J., giving the leading judgment of this court, said that the question what was to be comprehended by the word "family" was, putting it briefly, to be answered by considering whether the individuals claiming to be within the scope of the term would be said so to be if the question were asked in ordinary conversation: Are they members of so-and-so's family? Applying that test, it seems to me that prima facie persons who are in a household as members of the householder's staff would not be within the phrase the householder's "family." It is true, as counsel for the tenant observed, that in some senses the word "family" might include or be synonymous with a "household," but the question is not whether the tenant and the Starkeys can be regarded as one family, but whether the Starkeys are members of the tenant's family. As regards Mrs. Starkey, her only qualification is that she lives in the same house as, and looks after, the tenant, and the qualification of the child and Mr. Starkey would have to be at one remove, because they were respectively the issue and husband of Mrs. Starkey. Applying the test laid down by COHEN, L.J., and without deciding whether in some circumstances a person who is, or primarily is, a housekeeper may not qualify under the section, I am of opinion that the county court judge was right to hold that these persons were not members of the tenant's family, and that, therefore, he had not to consider under the sub-section what was suitable accommodation for them as distinct from the needs of the tenant.

There is the second point, whether, having regard to the circumstances and certainly not forgetting the unhappy fact that the tenant has been left late in life without his wife, it is reasonable to make an order on the footing that he does not require the Starkeys to live with him. That, I think, is a question of fact. The judge obviously considered that point, and he said that he did not think that the tenant needed anyone living with him. He was not, for example, physically crippled, and, therefore, he could manage by getting daily help. It has been said many times in this court that the question what is reasonable is eminently a question of fact for the county court judge, and, unless it can be shown that he has misdirected himself by omitting some point of substance or by taking account of something which should not properly have been considered, it is not for this court to disturb the judge's findings. On neither head has the tenant satisfied the obligation that must always fall on an appellant from a county court, particularly where so much depends on matters of fact, and I, therefore, think that this appeal must be dismissed.

COHEN, L.J.: I agree.

SINGLETON, L.J.: I agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Potter, Sandford & Cosgrove, agents for W. T. Husband & Son, Liverpool (for the tenant); Leslie Black, Liverpool (for the landlord).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

NOTE.

PRATT v. RICHARDS AND OTHERS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Barry, J.), October 24, 25, December 1, 1950.]

Negligence—Building in course of construction—Liability of contractor and sub-contractor—Scaffolding erected by main contractor—Omission to provide guard-rail—Accident to workman employed by sub-contractor—Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1145), regs. 5, 24, 31.

ACTION for damages, tried at Norwich Assizes, by a widow on her own behalf and as administratrix of her husband's estate under the Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 to 1908, and the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934.

The deceased, Egerton Sidney Pratt, a tiler's labourer employed by the first defendant, died from injuries received by him owing to a fall from the platform of scaffolding, 15 feet 2 inches above the ground. He had been working on the sloping roof of a newly-built house and had descended to the edge of the roof with the intention of getting more material from the platform. He had placed one foot on the platform, which was three feet below the eaves, and was about to place the other when he lost his balance and fell. There was no guard-rail provided on the platform. The first defendant, J. N. Richards, was engaged on tiling the roof of the house in question which was being built by the second defendants, H. C. Greengrass & Sons, Ltd., who had entered into a sub-contract with the third defendants, the Marley Tile Co., Ltd., for the tiling. The third defendants in their turn had sub-contracted the work of laying the tiles, including the fixing of the battens and felts, which were supplied by the second defendants, to the first defendant. The scaffolding had been erected by the second defendants. The first defendant did not put in a defence. By their defences the second and third defendants denied that they were guilty of any breach of common law or of any statutory duty, and both pleaded that the accident was caused or contributed to by the negligence of the deceased. The second defendant alleged, alternatively, that the accident was attributable to negligence or breach of duty on the part of the first or third defendants or both of them.

The Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, which applied to the operations on the site, provide, by reg. 5, that suitable scaffolds shall be provided for all work that cannot be safely done on or from the ground, and, by reg. 24, that every side of a working platform or working place . . . "from which a person is liable to fall a distance of more than 6 feet 6 inches, shall be provided with a suitable guard-rail . . . to a height of at least 3 feet . . ." By reg. 31:

"Where work is done on the sloping surface of a roof and, taking into account the pitch, the nature of the surface, and the state of the weather, a person employed is likely to slip down or off the roof, then unless he has adequate handhold or foothold or is not liable to fall a distance of more than 6 feet 6 inches from the edge of the roof, suitable precautions shall be taken to prevent his so falling."

Cases referred to:

- (1) Horton v. London Graving Dock Co., Ltd., [1950] 1 All E.R. 180; [1950] 1 K.B. 421.
- (2) Heaven v. Pender, (1883), 11 Q.B.D. 503; 52 L.J.Q.B. 702; 49 L.T. 357; 47 J.P. 709; 36 Digest 8, 9.
- (3) Indermaur v. Dames, (1866), L.R. 1 C.P. 274; 35 L.J.C.P. 184; 14 L.T. 484; affmd., (1867), L.R. 2 C.P. 311; 36 L.J.C.P. 181; 16 L.T. 293; 31 J.P. 390; 36 Digest 35, 208.

Elton for the plaintiff.

The first defendant was not represented.

F. Whitworth for the second defendants.

Stephen Chapman for the third defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 1. BARRY, J., read a judgment, in which he found as facts that the accident would not have occurred if a guard-rail had been provided and that the deceased was not guilty of contributory negligence, and continued: At common law the first defendant was under a duty to take reasonable care to provide proper plant, appliances and equipment for the use of his workmen. His failure to ensure that the platform of this scaffold was provided with a guard-rail, as was required by the regulations, constituted, in my opinion, a neglect of this duty, which is personal to the employer, and the first defendant cannot escape from liability for the breach by showing that the scaffolding was erected and maintained by someone other than himself. The second defendants, as the principal contractors, admittedly erected the scaffold, and it is plain from the evidence that the scaffold was designed at the time of its erection, and continued to be so designed, for the purpose of the completing of the four houses, including the tiling of their roofs, by sub-contractors and their workmen. Thus, prima facie, they were required to comply with reg. 24 for the benefit, not only of their own employees, but for that of all workmen engaged upon the construction of the houses.

Before the decision of the Court of Appeal in Horton v. London Graving Dock Co., Ltd. (1) it might have been possible for the second defendants to argue that the absence of a guard-rail was not an unusual danger from the point of view of the deceased workman, and that, in consequence, the plaintiff could establish no breach of duty on their part to the deceased who was not in their employment but in the employment of their sub-contractors. I do not think that any such defence is now open to these defendants. They were the erectors and the occupiers of the scaffolding, and the relationship between them and the deceased workman was that of invitor and invitee. Moreover, as erectors and suppliers of the scaffolding which was to be used by sub-contractors and their workmen, it seems to me that they fall within the principle enunciated by SIR WILLIAM BRETT, M.R., in Heaven v. Pender (2), as modified and explained by the subsequent cases referred to by SINGLETON, L.J., in his judgment in Horton v. London Graving Dock Co., Ltd (1). In circumstances like those in the present case, the duties of the head contractor to persons employed by his sub-contractor are co-extensive with the duties owed by him to his own workmen. If the first defendant failed to take reasonable care to provide safe plant, appliances and equipment for the use of the deceased, it must follow that the second defendants failed to perform the similar duty which they owed to him. In consequence, I find that the second defendants are liable to the plaintiff at common law in addition to their liability to her under the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948.

Under the contract between the third and second defendants, the third defendants had no part in the design or erection of the scaffolding, which remained throughout in the occupation and under the control of the second defendants. The third defendants were neither the suppliers nor the occupiers of the scaffolding. They cannot be brought within either of the well-known principles enunciated in Heaven v. Pender (2) or Indermaur v. Dames (3), and the claim against them fails.

Judgment for plaintiff against first and second defendants for £1,950. Judgment for third defendants against plaintiff. Third defendants' costs of the action to be paid by second defendants.

Solicitors: Stephenson, Harwood & Tatham (for the plaintiff); Masons (for the second defendants); L. Bingham & Co. (for the third defendants).

F.A.A.

BIGOS v. BOUSTED.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Pritchard, J.), November 14, 17, 1950.]

Contract—Illegality—Frustration of contract by one party—Right of other party to relief—Agreement for Italian money to be made available in Italy, and to be paid for with English money in England—Share certificate deposited by defendant with plaintiff as security for payment—Right of defendant to recover share certificate.

In 1947 the defendant was anxious to send his wife and daughter abroad for the sake of the daughter's health. Owing to the restrictions on English currency which were then in force he was unable to obtain from the Treasury what he considered an adequate allowance to enable them to stay abroad sufficiently long for the visit to be of benefit to the daughter, and, on Aug. 25, 1947, he entered into an agreement with the plaintiff, in contravention of the Exchange Control Act, 1947, s. 1 (1), whereby the plaintiff agreed to make available £150 worth of Italian money for the wife and daughter in Italy within a week and the defendant promised to repay her with English money in England. As security for his promise, the defendant deposited with the plaintiff a share certificate for 140 shares in a company. On Aug. 28 the defendant's wife and daughter went to Italy, but the plaintiff failed to make any Italian money available for them, and on Oct. 13 they returned to England, sooner than they would have returned if they had had the money. The defendant then asked the plaintiff to return to him his share certificate, but she refused to do so. In an action by the plaintiff to recover the sum of £150 from the defendant on the ground that she had made a loan to him of that sum, the defendant denied the loan, set out the true facts of the transaction, and counter-claimed for the return of the certificate. The plaintiff abandoned her claim at the commencement of the hearing of the action, but the defendant proceeded with his counterclaim and contended that, although the contract was an illegal one, as it was still executory he was allowed a locus poenitentiae, and, therefore, he was entitled to claim the return of the certificate.

HELD: the reason that the illegal transaction was not carried out was due, not to any repentance on the part of the defendant, but to the frustration of the contract by the plaintiff, and, therefore, ~~as~~ the agreement relating to the deposit of the share certificate was one which sprang from the main illegal agreement and was tainted with the same illegality as that which attached to that agreement, and as the parties were in pari delicto at the time of making the agreement, the defendant was not entitled to seek the aid of the court to recover the certificate.

Scott v. Brown, Doering, McNab & Co. ([1892] 2 Q.B. 724), Alexander v. Rayson ([1936] 1 K.B. 169), and Berg v. Sadler & Moore ([1937] 1 All E.R. 637), applied.

Taylor v. Bowers (1876) (1 Q.B.D. 291), distinguished.

[AS TO ILLEGAL CONTRACTS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 7, pp. 173-177, paras. 248-250; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Replacement Volume 12, pp. 310-317, Nos. 2390-2444.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Scott v. Brown, Doering, McNab & Co., Slaughter & May v. Brown, Doering, McNab & Co., [1892] 2 Q.B. 724; 61 L.J.Q.B. 738; 67 L.T. 782; 57 J.P. 213; 12 Digest, Replacement, 267, 2060.
- (2) Taylor v. Bowers, (1876), 1 Q.B.D. 291; 46 L.J.Q.B. 39; 34 L.T. 938; 12 Digest, Replacement, 316, 2438.
- (3) Hastelow v. Jackson, (1828), 8 B. & C. 221; 2 Man. & Ry. K.B. 209; 6 L.J.O.S.K.B. 318; 108 E.R. 1026; 25 Digest 406, 95.
- (4) Bone v. Ekless, (1860), 5 H. & N. 925; 29 L.J.Ex. 438; 157 E.R. 1450; 12 Digest, Replacement, 317, 2443.
- (5) Kearley v. Thomson, (1890), 24 Q.B.D. 742; 59 L.J.Q.B. 288; 63 L.T. 150; 54 J.P. 804; 12 Digest, Replacement, 318, 2453.
- (6) Collins v. Blantern, (1767), 2 Wils. 341; 95 E.R. 847; 12 Digest, Replacement, 290, 2229.
- (7) Hermann v. Charlesworth, [1905] 2 K.B. 123; 74 L.J.K.B. 620; 93 L.T. 284; 12 Digest, Replacement, 317, 2444.
- (8) Alexander v. Rayson, [1936] 1 K.B. 169; 105 L.J.K.B. 148; 154 L.T. 205; Digest Supp.
- (9) Berg v. Sadler & Moore, [1937] 1 All E.R. 637; [1937] 2 K.B. 158; 106 L.J.K.B. 593; 156 L.T. 334; affg., [1936] 2 All E.R. 456; Digest Supp.

ACTION for the recovery of the sum of £150 as money lent, and COUNTER-CLAIM by the defendant for the return of a share certificate belonging to him and held by the plaintiff.

In 1947 the defendant was advised by his doctor to send his daughter, aged thirteen, abroad for as long as possible before the winter to avoid her having a recurrence of pleurisy, from which she had suffered during the three previous winters. Owing to the restrictions on English currency which were then in force, the defendant was able to obtain from the Treasury an allowance of only £75 for his wife, who would have to accompany the daughter abroad, and £40 for the daughter. On Aug. 25, 1947, the defendant, thinking that these sums would be insufficient to allow them to stay abroad as long as was necessary, entered into a verbal agreement with the plaintiff whereby the plaintiff agreed to make available in Rapallo, Italy, within a week, £150 worth of Italian money for the use of the defendant's wife and daughter, and the defendant agreed to pay this sum to the plaintiff in English money in England. Not having £150 in cash available at the time and not wishing to sell securities, he deposited with the plaintiff a share certificate for 140 shares in Victory Insurance Co., Ltd., as security for his promise to repay the £150. Both parties knew that the agreement was unlawful under the Exchange Control Act, 1947, s. 1 (1), and, to cover up the unlawful transaction and cloak it in the guise of a loan, the defendant signed a document, stating: "To Mrs. Bigos, 30 Hogarth Road, S.W.5. I, the undersigned, hereby declare and agree that I have deposited with you 140 ordinary shares . . . in the Victory Insurance Co., Ltd., to the intent that such shares shall constitute a continuing security to you for the payment of £150 owing by me to you for the period of one year from Aug. 25, 1947." The plaintiff signed a document, stating: "I, Mrs. Bigos, hold a certificate in the name of Richard Algernon Lyons Boustead for 140 shares in Victory Insurance Co., Ltd., numbers as noted." On Aug. 28, 1947, the defendant's wife and daughter went to Rapallo, but the plaintiff failed to provide any Italian money, and they returned to England on Oct. 13, 1947, much sooner than they would have done if the unlawful agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant had been carried out. The defendant then asked the plaintiff for the share certificate, but she refused to return it. On Sept. 19, 1949, the plaintiff issued a writ against the defendant, claiming the repayment of the sum of £150 which she alleged that she had lent to him. The special indorsement on the writ set out the terms of the document of Aug. 25, 1947, signed by the defendant. On Nov. 18, 1949, the defendant filed his defence and counterclaim. By his defence he denied that he had received a loan of £150 from the plaintiff and he set out in full the facts of the transaction between them in 1947. In his counterclaim he asked for the return of the certificate. On Mar. 15, 1950, the plaintiff joined issue on the defence, alleging that on Aug. 25, 1947, she had handed to the defendant 150 £1 notes and that the loan was to bear interest at five per cent., and she claimed to be entitled to retain the certificate. At the commencement of the hearing of the action counsel for the plaintiff informed the judge that he was unable to pursue his client's claim, and consented to judgment on the claim. He also offered to deliver up the certificate to the defendant, but without costs, on the counterclaim. The defendant refused that offer and the case proceeded on the counterclaim.

Henry Harris for the plaintiff.

Aarvold for the defendant.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 17. PRITCHARD, J., stated the facts and continued: This case raises questions of law which are important and not easy. I have come to the conclusion that the agreement relating to the deposit of the share certificate was one which sprang from and was the creature of the main illegal agreement and was tainted with the same illegality which attached to that agreement. Therefore, the question which I have to decide is: What does the law say to a person who seeks to recover property with which he has parted pursuant to an agreement which is tainted with illegality? The general rule was stated in 1892 by LINDLEY, L.J., in Scott v. Brown, Doering, McNab & Co. (1) in these words ([1892] 2 Q.B. 728):

"No court ought to enforce an illegal contract or allow itself to be made the instrument of enforcing obligations alleged to arise out of a contract or transaction which is illegal, if the illegality is duly brought to the notice of the court, and if the person invoking the aid of the court is himself implicated in the illegality."

In such a case the person resisting the claim possesses the advantage over the person making it, the maxim being in pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis.

There appears to be an exception to this rule which applies to cases in which it can be said that the parties are not in pari delicto, but this is not such a case.

A It could not be said to be such a case because it is obvious that when they made the agreement the defendant and the plaintiff were in pari delicto, which means that they were equally guilty. Each was making an agreement for the purpose which each desired to achieve, and, although the conduct of the plaintiff thereafter was despicable in the extreme, I think the point of time to which one has to look when one is deciding whether two people are in pari delicto is the time at which they enter into the illegal agreement. I am satisfied in this case that at that time these parties were in pari delicto.

It is contended, however, on behalf of the defendant that there is another exception to the rule which does apply to this case, the alleged exception being that, where the contract is still executory, a party is allowed what is called a locus poenitentiae, and may recover money or property delivered to the other party, provided that he takes proceedings before the illegal purpose has been substantially performed. With regard to this alleged exception, my attention has been drawn to certain authorities which I must now discuss. Counsel for the defendant relied chiefly on Taylor v. Bowers (2). In that case the plaintiff, who was financially embarrassed, entered into an unlawful agreement with one Alcock which was designed to defeat the rights of the plaintiff's creditors. The plaintiff made over his stock in trade to Alcock, who gave fictitious bills of exchange in the plaintiff's favour. Possession of the goods was given to Alcock, but no bill of sale was executed by the plaintiff. The defendant was one of the plaintiff's creditors and knew all about the unlawful agreement. After Alcock had removed the goods from the plaintiff's premises two meetings of creditors were held, but no compromise was effected, and at a later date Alcock executed a bill of sale of the goods to the defendant for the alleged purpose of securing the plaintiff's debt to the defendant, but the plaintiff did not know about that matter. The plaintiff then demanded the return of the goods from the defendant and Alcock, and brought an action against the defendant who was detaining the goods. It was held by the Queen's Bench Division and by the Court of Appeal that, the fraudulent purpose not having been carried out, the plaintiff was not relying on the illegal transaction, but was entitled to repudiate it and recover his goods from Alcock, and it was also held that, the defendant having no better title than Alcock, the plaintiff was entitled to succeed in his action against the defendant. In the Queen's Bench Division, COCKBURN, C.J., delivering the judgment of the court, said (1 Q.B.D. 295):

"In the present case nothing has been done to carry out the fraudulent or illegal object beyond the delivery of the goods to Alcock and their removal to Stafford. We put aside the bill of sale to the defendant, as the plaintiff was not a party to it, nor did it form part of the original arrangement. The next fact is, that before anything was done, and before the sale by auction, the plaintiff repudiated the whole transaction, and demanded back his goods from Alcock and the defendant. Under these circumstances, we think that the plaintiff is entitled to recover back his property from the defendant. The action is not founded upon the illegal agreement, nor brought to enforce it, but, on the contrary, the plaintiff has repudiated the agreement, and his action is founded on that repudiation. Now it seems to us well established that where money has been paid, or goods delivered, under an unlawful agreement, but there has been no further performance of it, the party paying the money or delivering the goods may repudiate the transaction, and recover back his money or goods. In Hastelow v. Jackson (3), LITTLEDALE, J., says (8 B. & C. 226): 'If two parties enter into an illegal contract, and money is paid upon it by one to the other, that may be recovered back before the execution of the contract, but not afterwards.' And in Bone v. Ekless (4), BRAMWELL, B., referring to Hastelow v. Jackson (3), says (29 L.J.Ex. 440): 'Clearly an authority to pay over money for an illegal purpose may be revoked before the money is paid over. In Hastelow v. Jackson (3) that proposition of law was laid down, although there the plaintiff had to prove, as part of his case, that he had entered into an illegal contract; he did not, however, seek to recover upon it . . . The law is in favour of undoing or defeating an illegal purpose, and is therefore in favour of the recovery of the money before the illegal purpose is fulfilled, not afterwards.' "

In the decision of the Court of Appeal the passage which is relied on by counsel for the defendant is from the judgment of MELLISH, L.J., where he said (ibid., 300):

"But the illegal transaction was not carried out; it wholly came to an end. To hold that the plaintiff is enabled to recover does not carry out the illegal transaction, but the effect is to put everybody in the same situation as they were before the illegal transaction was determined upon, and before the parties took any steps to carry it out. That, I apprehend, is the true distinction in point of law. If money is paid or goods delivered for an illegal purpose, the person who has so paid the money or delivered the goods may recover them back before the illegal purpose is carried out; but if he waits till the illegal purpose is carried out, or if he seeks to enforce the illegal transaction, in neither case can he maintain an action; the law will not allow that to be done."

Before I leave Taylor v. Bowers (2), I think it is important and instructive to look at a short passage from the judgment of JAMES, L.J., where he stated what it is, in these cases, into which the court ought to inquire. He said (ibid., 297):

"The question is a question of demerit on the part of the plaintiff on this point, and we have not to inquire upon this rule, and, according to my view, we have no right to inquire into any question of merit or comparative merit on the part of the defendant."

I think that that is important in this case because, if I have to decide this case on the merit, or on the comparative merit, of the defendant and the plaintiff, I should not have the least hesitation in deciding it in favour of the defendant, because I think that the plaintiff's case and her conduct are devoid of all merit in any regard whatever, but, bearing in mind what JAMES, L.J., said, I think what I have to consider in this case is purely and simply the demerit of the defendant, without comparing his conduct with that of the plaintiff.

Taylor v. Bowers (2) being relied on by counsel for the defendant in the first place, he then drew my attention to Kearley v. Thomson (5), in which there are some observations which seem to throw some doubt on the views expressed by MELLISH, L.J., in the earlier case. In Kearley v. Thomson (5) the defendants were solicitors who were acting for a petitioning creditor in bankruptcy proceedings. They had incurred costs which were to be paid out of the estate, but which had not been paid because the estate lacked assets. The plaintiff, a friend of the bankrupt, offered to pay to the defendants the costs which were owing if they would undertake not to appear at the public examination of the bankrupt and not to oppose his discharge. The defendants, after obtaining the consent of their client, agreed to what the plaintiff suggested, and received the money. They did not appear at the public examination, but, before any application was made for the discharge of the bankrupt, the plaintiff brought an action to recover back his money from the defendants. It was held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, the reason for the decision being that, as the defendants had refrained from appearing at a public examination, the illegal agreement to pervert the course of justice had been partly performed, and the partial performance of the agreement prevented the plaintiff from succeeding in his claim. The passage which is said to throw some doubt on the views of MELLISH, L.J., in Taylor v. Bowers (2) appears in the judgment of FRY, L.J., and it is an important passage because it recurs in numerous cases. In this passage FRY, L.J., said (24 Q.B.D. 745):

"As a general rule, where the plaintiff cannot get at the money which he seeks to recover without showing the illegal contract, he cannot succeed. In such a case the usual rule is potior est conditio possidentis. There is another general rule which may be thus stated, that where there is a voluntary payment of money it cannot be recovered back. It follows in the present case that the plaintiff who paid the £40 cannot recover it back without showing the contract upon which it was paid, and when he shows that he shows an illegal contract. The general rule applicable to such a case is laid down in the very elaborate judgment in Collins v. Blantern (6), where the Lord Chief Justice [WILMOT, C.J.] says (2 Wils. 350): 'Whoever is a party to an unlawful contract, if he hath once paid the money stipulated to be paid in pursuance thereof, he shall not have the help of the court to fetch it back again; you shall not have a right of action when you come into a court of justice in this unclean manner to recover it back.' To that general rule there are undoubtedly several exceptions, or apparent exceptions."

FRY, L.J., then discussed two exceptions, which do not concern this case, and continued (ibid., 746):

"There is suggested to us a third exception, which is relied on in the present case, and the authority for which is to be found in the judgment of the Court of Appeal in the case of Taylor v. Bowers (2). In that case MELLISH, L.J., in delivering judgment, says (1 Q.B.D. 300): 'If money is paid, or goods delivered for an illegal purpose, the person who has so paid the money or delivered the goods may recover them back before the illegal purpose is carried out.' It is remarkable that this proposition is, as I believe, to be found in no earlier case than Taylor v. Bowers (2), which occurred in 1867, and, notwithstanding the very high authority of the learned judge who expressed the law in the terms which I have read, I cannot help saying for myself that I think the extent of the application of that principle, and even the principle itself, may, at some time hereafter, require consideration, if not in this court, yet in a higher tribunal: and I am glad to find that in expressing that view I have the entire concurrence of the Lord Chief Justice [LORD COLERIDGE, C.J.]."

It should be noted that the decisions in Taylor v. Bowers (2) were in 1876, and not in 1867 as stated by FRY, L.J., in Kearley v. Thomson (5).

Kearley v. Thomson (5) appears to me to be easily distinguishable from Taylor v. Bowers (2) in that, whereas the reason for the decision in Taylor v. Bowers (2) was that nothing had been done in pursuance of the illegal agreement, in Kearley v. Thomson (5) the report makes it quite clear that the plaintiff failed because something had been done in pursuance of the illegal agreement, and, therefore, I do not regard Kearley v. Thomson (5) as in any way conflicting with the decision in Taylor v. Bowers (2), although, of course, the observations made by FRY, L.J., in Kearley v. Thomson (5) on the rule as laid down by MELLISH, L.J., in Taylor v. Bowers (2) deserve attention, and, as I pointed out, occur again in subsequent cases.

In 1905 the Court of Appeal considered this question again in Hermann v. Charlesworth (7), in connection with an illegal marriage brokerage contract.

The plaintiff in that case had promised to pay £250 to the defendant if and when he introduced her to a gentleman who should marry her. She also paid to the defendant £52 which was called "a client's fee." The defendant thereupon introduced her to several men, but no marriage took place, and eventually the plaintiff brought an action to recover the £52. The action was remitted to the county court where the county court judge gave judgment for the plaintiff on the ground that, although the contract was a marriage brokerage contract and, therefore, illegal, the parties were not in pari delicto, as the defendant, who was out for money, was more blameworthy than the plaintiff, who was out for a husband. The defendant appealed to the Divisional Court who took the view that the contract did not come within the mischief which the law attributes to marriage brokerage contracts and allowed the appeal. The plaintiff appealed to the Court of Appeal who took the view that the Divisional Court was wrong, and that the contract was an illegal contract. Therefore, it became necessary for them to discuss the question with which I am concerned in the present case, and they allowed the plaintiff's appeal, with the result that she recovered her £52. The reason which the Court of Appeal gave for their decision was that, the object of the contract being to bring about a marriage, it could not be performed in part, and, therefore, as nothing had been done in the performance of the contract, the plaintiff was entitled to recover the money back, although she had paid it under an illegal contract. The facts in that case were peculiar, but, on the whole, it appears to me that the reason for the decision seems to support Taylor v. Bowers (2) and to disregard the criticism of that case which was made by FRY, L.J., in Kearley v. Thomson (5).

➤ Lastly, Alexander v. Rayson (8) and Berg v. Sadler and Moore (9), two comparatively recent cases, were cited to me, and it was argued on behalf of the plaintiff that they seriously affect the authority of Taylor v. Bowers (2). In Alexander v. Rayson (8) the defendant, in 1929, rented a flat from the plaintiff at a rent of £1,200 a year, which was to include certain services. The plaintiff required the agreement for that letting to be in two documents. One document was the lease which contained a provision for certain services which were to be rendered by the lessor [the plaintiff], and the rent together with the benefit of the services was stated to be £450 a year. The other document, which provided for virtually the same services as those provided in the first document, stated that the consideration for those services should be £750 per year. The rent was paid quarterly, the defendant paying £300 in each quarter, i.e., at the rate of £1,200 a year, until Mid-summer, 1934. The defendant refused to pay £300 in respect of the quarterly instalment falling due on Sept. 29, 1934, because, as she alleged, the plaintiff had failed to provide the services which he had contracted to provide. She tendered, however, one quarter's rent under the lease, i.e., £112 10s., but the plaintiff claimed £300 under the two agreements. The plaintiff's purpose in having those two documents prepared was purely to deceive and to defraud the assessment committee who had to assess the rates of the premises. It was proved that that attempt failed because the assessment committee were not deceived, and, therefore, prevented themselves from being defrauded. In those circumstances, the Court of Appeal decided that the plaintiff could not maintain his action. The judgment of the Court of Appeal was prepared by ROMER, L.J., and read by SCOTT, L.J., and it contains a passage ([1936] 1 K.B. 190) which, it is said, seriously affects the authority of Taylor v. Bowers (2):

"Plaintiff's counsel further contended that inasmuch as the plaintiff had failed in his attempted fraud, and could therefore no longer use the documents for an illegal purpose, he was now entitled to sue upon them. The law, it was said, would allow to the plaintiff a locus poenitentiae. So, perhaps, it would have done, had the plaintiff repented before attempting to carry his fraud into effect: see Taylor v. Bowers (2). But, as it is, the plaintiff's repentance came too late—namely, after he had been found out. Where the illegal purpose has been wholly or partially effected the law allows no locus poenitentiae: see SALMOND AND WINFIELD'S LAW OF CONTRACT, p. 152. It will not be any the readier to do so when the repentance, as in the present case, is merely due to the frustration by others of the plaintiff's fraudulent purpose."

A The "others" referred to were the assessment committee, who were not parties to the illegal agreement, but who found out the purpose of that agreement in time to save themselves from being defrauded.

In Berg v. Sadler and Moore (9) the plaintiff was a tobacconist who had been a member of the Tobacco Association but had been put on the "stop list" of that association for a breach of its rules, and, as a result, he could not obtain
B supplies of cigarettes from members of the association. The plaintiff arranged with a member of the association called Reece, that Reece should order in his own name, but really on behalf of the plaintiff, cigarettes from the defendants, Sadler & Moore, who were members of the association. Reece did so, and the plaintiff sent his representative, accompanied by a representative of Reece, to receive the cigarettes from the defendants. The plaintiff's representative
C paid for the cigarettes with the plaintiff's money, but the defendants, being suspicious about the transaction, refused to deliver the cigarettes or to return the money which the plaintiff's representative had paid to them. Thereupon, the plaintiff sued the defendants for the return of the money. The case was tried, in the first instance, by MACNAGHTEN, J., who held that the plaintiff was guilty of an attempt to obtain the cigarettes by false pretences and that
D the court would not assist him to recover his money. The plaintiff appealed, but the decision of MACNAGHTEN, J., was upheld by the Court of Appeal. The judgments in the Court of Appeal contain some strong expressions of opinion as to what the courts ought to do in these and similar circumstances. LORD WRIGHT, M.R., based his judgment on Kearley v. Thomson (5), which he discussed at some length. He then said ([1937] 1 All E.R. 642):

E "FRY, L.J. [in Kearley v. Thomson (5)] goes on . . . to distinguish . . . Taylor v. Bowers (2), where recovery was allowed, as I understand the decision, on the ground that the illegal purpose had been abandoned, and that the plaintiff had so repented that he was not debarred from recovering what he had paid."

F That passage shows the importance which LORD WRIGHT, M.R., attributed to the decision in Taylor v. Bowers (2), and to the allegation of repentance on behalf of the plaintiff in that case, although it was not actually mentioned in the case itself. LORD WRIGHT, M.R., then said (ibid.):

G "Some such argument was put forward in this case, but I should like to add to the expression of opinion of FRY, L.J., on that point the observations which are contained in a judgment of this court in Alexander v. Rayson (8) . . ."

LORD WRIGHT, M.R., then cited the passage which I have already read from Alexander v. Rayson (8). ROMER, J., gave a very short judgment in Berg v. Sadler & Moore (9), but it does contain a principle. He said (ibid., 644):

H "I entirely agree, and, once the facts of this case are understood, it is abundantly plain that no court in this country would lift a finger to help the plaintiff to recover from the defendants the money which the plaintiff paid to them. The money was paid by the plaintiff to the defendants in the course, and for the purposes, of an attempt, on the part of the plaintiff, to defraud the defendants; the fact that, owing to the vigilance of the defendants, the attempt was frustrated is, in my opinion, wholly immaterial."

Finally, SCOTT, L.J., dealt with the matter, first, by setting out the passage from the original judgment of MACNAGHTEN, J., which was stated in very clear terms, and could leave no doubt as to what the learned judge meant. MACNAGHTEN, J., said ([1936] 2 All E.R. 461):

"I have no hesitation in saying that in this case Mr. Berg attempted, although the attempt failed, by deceit to induce a course of action on the part of the defendants, Messrs. Sadler & Moore, which would have been an action to their grave injury. If in fact they had supplied goods to Mr. Berg, he being on the 'Stop List', the consequences to them might have been consequences of a very serious character in their business. It seems to me that it is a plain case of . . . an attempt to obtain goods by false pretences, and it is nothing to the purpose to say that the fraudulent person who was attempting to commit that crime was in fact willing to pay to the persons he was attempting to defraud the full price of the goods. Now those being the facts as I find them to be, the question arises, can Mr. Berg under those circumstances, having paid this money with the intention of obtaining goods by this false pretence, now maintain an action in this court to recover the money? No case has been cited to me where the court has ever entertained any such action. If dishonest people pay money for a dishonest purpose, and then by good fortune the offence which they designed to commit is not committed, are they entitled in this court to come and ask for recovery of the money? In my opinion, they are not. It would be a bad example if this court were to entertain an action by a man for money dishonestly paid for the purpose of committing an offence against the criminal law, and he were allowed to claim from the court an order that the money should be repaid."

After quoting this passage, SCOTT, L.J., continued ([1937] 1 All E.R. 644):

"I entirely agree with that judgment, which I have adopted as my own. At the same time, I agree with what LORD WRIGHT, M.R., has said, that the facts of this case involve a slightly new application of the rule, but ubi eadem ratio ibi jus. The principle which forbids the assistance of the court to a plaintiff who asks it in order to effect a dishonest purpose extends, in my opinion, to the case of a request for the court's assistance in order to extricate himself from a pecuniary difficulty in which he has placed himself by an incomplete performance of a dishonest course of action."

I now have to consider how the authorities to which I have referred should be applied to the facts of the present case. I confess that there was a time when I thought it would be right to apply to the facts of this case the reasoning of the decision in Taylor v. Bowers (2), but, having considered all the authorities, I do not take that view. I think that what is to be extracted from the authorities may be stated as follows. I think that they show, first, that there is a distinction between what may, for convenience, be called the repentance cases, on the one hand, and the frustration cases, on the other hand. If a particular case may be held to fall within the category of repentance cases, I think the law is that the court will help a person who repents, provided his repentance comes before the illegal purpose has been substantially performed. If I were able, in this case, to take the view that the defendant had brought himself within that sphere of the authorities, it might well be that I would have been able to help him by saying that his repentance had come before the illegal purpose had been substantially performed, but I do not take that view. I think, however, that this case falls within the category of cases which I call the frustration cases, and that it is proper to regard it as in the same category as Alexander v. Rayson (8), and Berg v. Sadler & Moore (9), rather than as in the category of cases such as Taylor v. Bowers (2) and Kearley v. Thomson (5), and, to some extent, Hermann v. Charlesworth (7).

A In Alexander v. Rayson (8) the illegal contract was made between the plaintiff and the defendant. It was frustrated by third parties and, as there was no repentance by the plaintiff before the frustration by others of his fraudulent purpose, he was held disentitled to succeed. In Berg v. Sadler & Moore (9) the illegal contract was entered into between the plaintiff and a third party, and was frustrated by the defendants, and the plaintiff was held disentitled to succeed. In the present case the illegal contract was entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant. The defendant is in the position in which the plaintiff was in all the other cases which I have mentioned, and the performance of that illegal contract was frustrated by the other party to it, namely, the plaintiff. For that reason this is, I think, a frustration case and not a case of repentance.

B On the return of the defendant's wife and daughter from Italy the whole project fell to the ground. There was no repentance which caused the contract not to be carried out. The defendant desired that it should be carried out until the plaintiff failed to do so, and, when she failed, the plaintiff's wife and daughter had to return to England because, as the result of the plaintiff's failure, they could no longer afford to stay in Italy. By the plaintiff's failure the whole venture was frustrated, and, in those circumstances, I do not think that the reason for this illegal contract not having come to fruition was the repentance of the defendant. The reason was that the whole object of the contract was frustrated by the failure on the part of the plaintiff to provide the lira which she had contracted to provide in Italy. In those circumstances, I have come to the conclusion that the words of MACNAGHTEN, J., ([1936] 2 All E.R. 462) in Berg v. Sadler & Moore (9), which were cited with approval by D SCOTT, L.J., in the Court of Appeal, should be applied to this case:

E "If dishonest people pay money for a dishonest purpose, and then by good fortune the offence which they designed to commit is not committed, are they entitled in this court to come and ask for recovery of the money? In my opinion they are not. It would be a bad example if this court were to entertain an action by a man for money dishonestly paid for the purpose of committing an offence against the criminal law, and he were allowed to claim from the court an order that the money should be repaid."

F That is the view which I take in this case and, for those reasons, I have come to the conclusion that this is not a case where the defendant showed himself to be within the exception of which Taylor v. Bowers (2) is an example. In all the circumstances, I think that the defendant's counterclaim must fail, and, accordingly, there must be judgment for the defendant on the claim and his counterclaim must be dismissed.

Judgment for the defendant on the claim with costs. Counterclaim dismissed; no order as to costs.

Solicitors: Montague & Co. (for the plaintiff); Philip Conway, Thomas & Co. (for the defendant).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re BRASSEY'S DEED TRUSTS. COUTTS & CO. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Romer, J.), November 29, December 13, 1950.]

Estate Duty—Passing—Property deemed to pass—Policy of assurance—Premiums paid by trustees of settlement—Death of assured—Cesser of payment premiums—Claim on “slice” of capital to produce premiums—Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30), s. 2 (1) (b), s. 7 (7).

By a deed of appointment and re-settlement, dated Aug. 8, 1935, made between R.B., the life tenant, H.B., the remainderman, and trustees, certain investments and cash were directed to be held by the trustees on trust (i) as regards the cash, to make certain payments and to purchase from R.B. at their surrender value certain policies of assurance on his life, and (ii) as regards the investments, to retain or sell the same and re-invest the proceeds and out of the income of the investments and re-investments (thereinafter called “the trust fund”) to pay (inter alia) the premiums and other moneys necessary for keeping on foot certain policies of assurance (including those purchased from R.B.) and to pay the balance of the said income to H.B. during his life. At all times after the date of the re-settlement the premiums in respect of the policies on the life of R.B. were paid by the trustees. On Nov. 14, 1946, R.B. died, and estate duty was claimed under the Finance Act, 1894, s. 2 (1) (b), in respect of the “slice” of the trust fund required to produce the income necessary to pay the premiums on the policies on the life of R.B.

HELD: the persons expectantly interested on the death of H.B. had an interest within the meaning of s. 2 (1) (b) during R.B.'s lifetime in the income (and a corresponding interest in the capital) of the trust fund in that they were entitled to insist that the trustees apply part of the income in payment of the premiums, and, therefore, on the cesser of that interest on R.B.'s death a claim for estate duty arose under s. 2 (1) (b) to the extent of the beneficial interests arising, i.e., in respect of the capital value of the “slice” ascertained in accordance with s. 7 (7) of the Act of 1894.

[AS TO PROPERTY IN WHICH AN INTEREST WAS LIMITED TO CEASE ON THE DECEASED'S DEATH, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 13, p. 236, para. 226; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 21, pp. 9, 10, Nos. 34-42.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Westminster Bank, Ltd. v. A.-G., [1939] 2 All E.R. 72; [1939] Ch. 610; 108 L.J.Ch. 294; 160 L.T. 432; Digest Supp.
- (2) A.-G. v. Barclays Bank, Ltd., [1943] 1 All E.R. 181; affd., [1943] 2 All E.R. 123; [1943] K.B. 721; 112 L.J.K.B. 585; 169 L.T. 149; reversd. Barclays Bank, Ltd. v. A.-G., [1944] 2 All E.R. 208; [1944] A.C. 372; 113 L.J.K.B. 465; 171 L.T. 366; 2nd Digest Supp.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS under the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1933, s. 3, to determine the question whether, and to what extent, estate duty became payable in connection with the death of Robert Bingham Brassey under the Finance Act, 1894, s. 2 (1) (b), in respect of the cesser of the duty of the trustees of a settlement to pay the premiums on certain policies of assurance on the life of the deceased which were subject to the said settlement. The facts appear in the judgment.

Talbot, K.C., and R. Cozens-Hardy Horne for the trustees.

Upjohn, K.C., and J. H. Stamp for the Crown.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 13. ROMER, J., read the following judgment. This summons raises the question whether estate duty became payable on the death of Robert Bingham Brassey (hereinafter called “Captain Brassey”) by reason of the fact that certain trust income had to be, and was, applied in paying the premiums on some policies of assurance on Captain Brassey's life.

A By a disentailing deed, dated Aug. 6, 1935, and made between Captain B Brassey, of the first part, his son, Hugo Brassey, of the second part, and certain trustees, of the third part, the entailed interest of Hugo Brassey in the funds then subject to the trusts of a re-settlement which had been executed on June 3, 1897, was barred, and such funds were limited on such trusts and subject to such powers and provisions as Captain Brassey and Hugo Brassey should jointly appoint, with a limitation over in default of and subject to any such appointment. Under and by virtue of a deed of appointment dated Nov. 7, 1927, and made between Captain Brassey, of the one part, and Constance Marion Brassey (hereinafter called "Mrs. Brassey"), of the other part, and C a deed of appropriation dated Aug. 7, 1935, Mrs. Brassey, as the widow of Captain Brassey, became entitled on his death to a jointure rentcharge of £3,000 (or, in the event of her re-marriage, £1,500) per annum payable during the residue of her life and charged on the investments specified in sched. I to the deed next mentioned. On Aug. 8, 1935, a deed of appointment and re-settlement (hereinafter called "the 1935 re-settlement") was entered into by Captain Brassey, of the first part, Hugo Brassey, of the second part, and Coutts & Co. and Sir Henry Brassey, as trustees, of the third part. The effect of the 1935 re-settlement is sufficiently summarised as follows in the affidavit of Mr. Rowles sworn in support of the summons, and I will read para. 2 and para. 3 thereof, subject to certain slight omissions and alterations:

D " (2) (Clause 1) In exercise of a power conferred on hem by the disentailing deed therein mentioned the above-mentioned Robert Bingham Brassey (hereinafter called 'Captain Brassey') and Hugo Bulkeley Brassey (hereinafter called 'Hugo Brassey') irrevocably appointed that the investments specified in the first and second parts of sched. I thereto (subject to the jointure and portions therein mentioned) and the cash specified in the third part of the said schedule should be held by the plaintiffs and the E Right Honourable Henry Leonard Campbell Baron Brassey of Apethorpe (then and therein described as Sir Henry Leonard Campbell Brassey, baronet) as the then trustees thereof (hereinafter together called 'the trustees') upon such trusts and subject to such powers and provisions as Captain Brassey and Hugo Brassey should at any time or times thereafter by any deed or deeds revocable or irrevocable appoint and in default F of and subject to any such appointment upon the trusts and subject to the powers and provisions thereafter declared and contained concerning the same that was to say: (i) The trustees should pay and apply the said cash in manner following, namely: (a) The trustees should pay and provide for the commuted succession duties, stamp duties and costs therein mentioned. (b) The trustees should pay £8,000 to Hugo Brassey for his G own use and benefit. (c) The trustees should purchase from Captain Brassey for the sum of £11,000 or such larger sum as should represent the surrender value at the date of such purchase the policies on Captain Brassey's life specified in the first and second parts of sched. III thereto.
(d) The trustees should apply £46,000 (or such other sum as might be required for the purpose) in effecting or enabling Hugo Brassey to effect H in the names of the trustees a single premium endowment policy on the life of Hugo Brassey to produce the sum of £26,000 in ten years and £60,000 in twenty-six years. (e) The trustees should apply the sum of £6,000 in the purchase of a ten year annuity certain. (f) The trustees should apply the sum of £115,000 (or such other sum as might be required for the purpose) in effecting or enabling Captain Brassey to effect in the names of the trustees a single premium policy on Captain Brassey's life to produce the sum of £160,000 on the death of Captain Brassey. (g) The trustees should hold any balance as capital monies under the 1935 re-settlement. (ii) The trustees should forthwith convert the policies specified in the second part of sched. III thereto into fully paid-up policies. (iii) (a) The trustees should stand possessed of the investments thereby appointed (hereinafter called 'the appointed investments') upon trust to permit the same to remain as actually invested so long as the trustees should think fit or might at any time or times sell the same or any part thereof and should invest the moneys produced thereby and the moneys which might be received by the trustees in respect of the policies specified in sched. III thereto and the policies to be effected in pursuance of sub-cl. (i) (d) and (f) of this clause and any other capital moneys which might be received by the trustees in respect of the funds thereby appointed in the names of the trustees in or upon any investments thereby authorised with power to vary or transpose any investments for or into others of any nature thereby authorised. (b) The trustees should out of the income of the appointed investments and any moneys received by them as aforesaid and the investments for the time being representing the same respectively (thereinafter called 'the trust fund') and the annuity specified in sub-cl. (i) (e) of this clause pay the premiums and other moneys necessary for keeping on foot the policies on the life of Hugo Brassey specified in sched. II thereto (thereinafter called 'Hugo Brassey's life policies') and the policies specified in the first part of sched. III thereto so far as regards Hugo Brassey pursuant to the covenant by him in that behalf thereinafter contained and should hold the balance of the same income upon protective trusts for the benefit of Hugo Brassey during his life. (c) After the death of Hugo Brassey the trustees should stand possessed of the capital and future income of the trust fund and the said annuity in trust for all or such one or more exclusively of the others or other of the children or remoter issue of Hugo Brassey such children or issue to take vested interests not later than twenty-one years from the death of Hugo Brassey at such age or time or respective ages if more than one in such shares and with such trusts for their respective benefit and such provisions for their respective advancement either after the death of Hugo Brassey or during his life with his consent in writing and maintenance and education at the discretion of the trustees or of any other person or persons as Hugo Brassey should by deed or deeds revocable or irrevocable appoint and in default of and subject to any such appointment (d) In trust for all or any the children or child of Hugo Brassey who being male should attain the age of twenty-one years or being female should attain that age or marry and if more than one in equal shares . . . (f) If there should be no child of Hugo Brassey who being male should attain the age of twenty-one years or being female should attain that age or marry then subject to the trusts powers and provisions thereinbefore declared and contained and to the powers by law vested in the trustees and to every or any exercise of such powers the trustees should stand possessed of the trust fund and the said annuity for such person or persons and for such purposes as Hugo Brassey should by will or codicil appoint. (iv) Hugo Brassey might by any deed or deeds revocable or irrevocable executed prior to and in contemplation of any marriage or by will or codicil appoint that the income of the whole or any part of the trust fund and the said annuity should from and after his death be paid to any wife who might survive him during her life or any less period in such manner and subject to such conditions and restrictions as Hugo Brassey might think fit. (v) The trustees might from time to time by mortgage or sale of the trust fund or any part thereof raise any moneys not exceeding in the whole the sum of £20,000 and pay

A

B

C

D

E

F

G

H

or apply the same to or for the benefit of Hugo Brassey in such manner as the trustees should in their absolute discretion or with the sanction of the High Court of Justice think fit. (vi) In so far as the income derived from the investments appropriated in respect of the jointure therein mentioned should prove insufficient such jointure should stand charged on the corpus of such investments. (Clause 2) (a) The trustees should stand possessed of all moneys which might be received by them in respect of Hugo Brassey's life policies upon the trusts and subject to the provisions therein declared and contained in relation to the trust fund thereinbefore mentioned so far as the same were applicable and so as to form one fund therewith. (b) Hugo Brassey covenanted with the trustees that he would duly and punctually pay the premiums and other moneys (if any) necessary for keeping on foot Hugo Brassey's life policies and would forthwith deliver the receipt for every such payment to the trustees. (c) The trustees should not be chargeable or responsible for any omission or neglect to enforce any covenant thereinbefore contained in relation to any policy for the time being subject to the trusts thereof or to keep up or restore any such policy or effect any new policy pursuant to the provisions thereinbefore contained or for any such policy lapsing or becoming void by any means whatsoever. (3) The first and second parts of sched. I to the 1935 re-settlement contained particulars of the investments thereby settled (having a nominal value of over £100,000) and the third part of the said schedule specified the sum of £196,696 2s. 5d. cash. Schedule II contained details of two policies for £20,000 and £10,000 respectively on the life of Hugo Brassey at annual premiums of £305 16s. 8d. and £142 10s. 0d. respectively. The first part of sched. III contained details of policies on Captain Brassey's life for an aggregate sum of £40,000 at an aggregate yearly premium of £1,976 13s. 4d. and the second part of such schedule contained details of other policies on Captain Brassey's life which were to be converted into fully paid-up policies under cl. 1 (ii) of the 1935 re-settlement."

Captain Brassey died on Nov. 14, 1946. From the date of the 1935 re-settlement until the date of his death the annual premiums on the policies on Captain Brassey's life specified in the first part of sched. III to such re-settlement were paid by the trustees thereof out of the income of the trust fund and the balance of such income (subject since Captain Brassey's death to Mrs. Brassey's jointure) has been paid to Hugo Brassey. Hugo Brassey has been married twice, but has had no issue by either marriage, and has not exercised the power of appointment in favour of a surviving wife conferred on him by the 1935 re-settlement. In default of issue of Hugo Brassey who attain a vested interest under the 1935 re-settlement and of his exercising the testamentary power of appointment thereby conferred on him, the property comprised in such re-settlement will, as I understand it, devolve on three daughters of Captain Brassey as the residuary legatees under Captain Brassey's will.

Following on Captain Brassey's death, the Estate Duty Office claimed duty in respect of the slice of the trust funds required by the income thereof to pay the premiums on the policies of assurance specified in the first part of sched. III to the 1935 re-settlement. This is the claim which is now before me, and it is founded on the Finance Act, 1894, s. 2 (1) (b), which provides, so far as material, that property passing on the death of the deceased shall be deemed to include property in which the deceased or any other person had an interest ceasing on the death of the deceased, to the extent to which a benefit accrues or arises by the cesser of such interest.

Counsel for the plaintiffs argued that, on the death of Captain Brassey, there was no cesser of anybody's interest by reason merely of the fact that no further premiums fell to be paid in respect of the policies in question, and that in the absence of any such cesser the provisions of s. 2 (1) (b) of the Act have no application. So far as Hugo Brassey was concerned, they say that his interest in the trust fund remained as it was before, viz., a protected life interest. So, also, the interest of the remaindermen continued to be what it had been prior to Captain Brassey's death, viz., a right in reversion to the corpus of the fund. It was further contended that s. 2 (1) (b) is not concerned with interests in remainder, but is aimed at the cesser of interests in possession, and that this view receives support from the language of s. 7 (7), and that, so far as the remaindermen are concerned, they had no interest in possession prior to Captain Brassey's death, nor have they any such interest now.

It is, of course, quite true that the remaindermen neither had nor have any right to call on the trustees to transfer to them any part of the capital of the fund. That right was and is in suspense, and, if it constituted the only relevant interest of the remaindermen in the fund during Captain Brassey's lifetime, it could not be said that it ceased, either in whole or in part, on Captain Brassey's death. On analysis, however, I do not think it is accurate to say that that was the only right which the remaindermen possessed, for they were at all material times entitled as cestuis que trust to insist that the trustees should, during Captain Brassey's lifetime, apply a sufficient part of the income of the fund to payment of the premiums on the policies in question. In other words, they could compel the trustees temporarily to divert a proportion of the income away from the life tenant and apply it in the manner I have stated. This application of income would, of course, enure to their benefit in that it would result in an increase of the trust capital to which they would eventually succeed.

Accordingly, if the trustees, in disregard of their trust obligations, had paid the whole of the trust income to Hugo Brassey, there can be no doubt but that the court would, at the instance of the remaindermen, have intervened and compelled them to devote sufficient of the income to the maintenance of the policies. From this it follows, in my judgment, that the remaindermen had pro tanto an "interest" in the trust income and a corresponding "interest" in the property, i.e., the trust fund, of which that income was the fruit. I am unable to avoid the conclusion that this was an interest in property within the purview of s. 2 (1) (b) or that that interest ceased on the death of Captain Brassey; and, in my view, the fact that the right was vested in the remaindermen in their capacity of reversioners is of no real materiality. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that it is not permissible to split up the rights of the remaindermen and, by doing so, to identify some immediate interest and isolate it from their title to possession of the property, which was reversionary and nothing else. I cannot, however, accept this contention. The fact that the remaindermen's right to the possession and the enjoyment of the property was and is future does not and cannot alter the further fact that a right to insist on income being applied to premiums (like a right to enforce accumulation, as to which see Westminster Bank, Ltd. v. A.-G. (1), is a valuable ancillary right which confers an immediate interest in the property from which the income is derived.

Accordingly, I hold that the remainderman has an interest in the trust fund which ceased on Captain Brassey's death and that duty became then exigible if a benefit accrued or arose by the cesser of such interest. As to this, it seems to me that benefits accrued or arose in various ways. The policy moneys fell in, to the advantage both of the remaindermen and of Hugo. Hugo's income was no longer diminished by the payment of premiums, and Captain Brassey's widow became entitled to receive her jointure. It, therefore, appears to me that in this respect also the case falls within s. 2 (1) (b) of the Act, and that duty is payable on the footing prescribed by s. 7 (7), viz., on the capital value of the slice of the trust funds which was required by the income thereof to pay the premiums on the policies in question, and, if this is so, it was conceded by counsel for the plaintiffs that, having regard to the decision of WROTTESLEY, J., in A.-G. v. Barclays Bank, Ltd. (2), he must accept in this court that such slice has to be ascertained by comparing the gross income required to produce, after deduction of tax, the net amount of the premiums with the gross income of the trust funds.

Declaration accordingly. Costs of both parties to be taxed and paid out of the trust fund.

Solicitors: Norton, Rose, Greenwell & Co. (for the plaintiffs); Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. SIDMOUTH RENT TRIBUNAL. Ex parte SELLEK.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Hilbery and Parker, JJ.), December 7, 1950.]

Rent Control—Reduction of rent—House converted into flats—Flat first rated as separate hereditament at £80—No apportionment of assessment of dwelling-house—Jurisdiction of tribunal—Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (c. 40), s. 1 (1).

In July, 1947, a house situated elsewhere than in London, the rateable value of which was £70, was converted into four self-contained flats one of which was let to the tenant at £200 a year. On Mar. 27, 1948, the flats were separately rated, the flat in question being assessed at £80, subsequently reduced to £64. No application was made to the county court under s. 12 (3) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, to apportion the rateable value of the house to determine that of the flat, but the tenant applied under s. 1 (1) of the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, to determine the reasonable rent for the flat, stating in his application that the rateable value was £64. This figure was not challenged by the landlord, and the rent tribunal reduced the rent. On an application by the landlord for an order of certiorari to bring up and quash the determination of the tribunal, Held: in the absence of an apportionment by the county court under s. 12 (3) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, of the rateable value of the whole house, the only rateable value of the flat which could properly have been placed before the rent tribunal was that at which it was first assessed, viz., £80, and, as that assessment was in excess of the limits laid down by s. 3 (1) (c) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939, the tribunal had no jurisdiction and certiorari must issue.

[FOR THE LANDLORD AND TENANT (RENT CONTROL) ACT, 1949, s. 1 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 13, p. 1094.]

Case referred to:

(1) Langford Property Co., Ltd. v. Batten, [1950] 2 All E.R. 1079.

Motion by the landlord, Eleanor Annie Sellek, for an order of certiorari to bring up and quash a determination of the Sidmouth Rent Tribunal whereby they reduced the rent of a flat. The flat was one of four created on the conversion of a house, the rateable value of which, on Apr. 1, 1939, was £70. No apportionment of that assessment had been made to the flat. For the tribunal it was contended that, as the rateable value of the whole house was within the limits laid down by the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939, s. 3 (1) (c), the flat also must be within those limits, and, therefore, the tribunal had jurisdiction to make an order reducing the rent. The facts are stated in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

N. R. King for the landlord.

J. P. Ashworth for the tribunal.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: Counsel for the applicant moves for an order of certiorari to bring up and quash a determination of the Sidmouth Rent Tribunal by which they reduced the rent of a flat situate at Aldenham House, near Sidmouth. The flat had been let to the tenant, Brigadier Sidney Noel Rice, at a rent of £200 a year, and he applied to the rent tribunal for a determination what rent was reasonable for it, stating in his application that the rateable value of the flat was £64 a year. If that had been so, the tribunal would have had jurisdiction. The figure of £64 was not challenged by the landlord, it being the rateable value of the flat at the time when the notices were served bringing the case before the tribunal. If the rateable value at the relevant time had been more than £75 a year, the flat would have been outside the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939, and the tribunal would have had no jurisdiction. They were led to believe, however, by both parties, in error, that the rateable value was £64. A

Aldenham House was formerly one house used as a boarding-house. In July, 1947, it was converted into four self-contained flats. When the house stood as one entity the rateable value was £70 a year. The flats were not separately rated until Mar. 27, 1948, and then the flat in question was rated as a separate hereditament at £100 gross and £80. At that figure it was outside the Act of 1939, and, therefore, not a flat that could be referred to the rent tribunal under the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949. The fact that at a later date the rateable value was reduced to £64 is immaterial. B C D

Section 7 (2) of the Act of 1939 provides:

“In relation to any dwelling-house of which the rateable value on the appropriate day was not on that day separately assessed, any reference in the preceding provisions of this Act to the rateable value on the appropriate day shall be construed as a reference to such proportion of the rateable value on that day of the property in which the dwelling-house is comprised as may be apportioned to the dwelling-house by the county court in accordance with the provisions of s. 12 (3) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920.” E

By s. 7 (1) “the appropriate day” means, as regards London, Apr. 6, 1939, and, as regards the remainder of the country, Apr. 1, 1939. Section 7 (3) provides: F

“In relation to any dwelling-house first assessed after the appropriate day, any reference in the preceding provisions of this Act to the rateable value on the appropriate day shall be construed as a reference to the rateable value on the day on which the dwelling-house was first assessed.” G

This flat was first assessed on Mar. 27, 1948, but counsel for the tribunal has argued that the only thing to which one can have regard under s. 7 (2) is the rateable value at the appropriate day, and, therefore, as the flat is only part of the original house and the original house was assessed at £70, this part of the original house must necessarily be assessed at less than £70. In other words, he contends that, as the flat has been carved out of a house which, on Apr. 1, 1939, was assessed at £70, it follows that the rateable value of the flat must be considered, for our present purpose, as a proportion of that £70, and, therefore, within the Act of 1939. H

Where a tribunal has a property referred to it, its rateable value must be proved. If the only assessment of that property is £100 on the appropriate day or when it was first assessed, £100 is prima facie the rateable value of the property. If, however, the property is part of a house that has been rated, then it must be proved that the rateable value of the whole has been apportioned by the county court judge. It is not enough to say that if the parties had gone to the county court judge, he must have assessed the property at less than £100 or £75, as the case may be. The words in s. 7 (2) of the Act of 1939

A "a reference to such proportion of the rateable value on that day [i.e., Apr. 1, 1939] . . . as may be apportioned to the dwelling-house by the county court" are, I think, conclusive. The county court must do the apportionment. The word "may" is not used there in contradistinction to "must." It is used because the sub-section is dealing both with the present and the future. The B county court may be asked to apportion at any time.

With regard to the contention of counsel for the tribunal that, as the rateable value of the whole house on Apr. 1, 1939, was only £70, it follows that the rateable value of this flat, which has been carved out of the house, must be less, I think it extremely doubtful—though it is not necessary for us positively to decide the point—in view of the recent decision of the House

C of Lords in Langford Property Co., Ltd. v. Batten (1), whether, if the county court judge had apportioned the rateable value, he must have found it to be less than £70. It is probable that if that point comes up directly for decision, it will be held that on an application for apportionment the county court judge can consider whether the conversion of a house into flats is not to create a number of new entities altogether, rather than that it is a mere matter of structural

D alteration or improvement. A new entity could, I think, be created though the four walls of the house remained the same. Therefore, I do not think we can speculate about what the county court judge might have found, still less what he would have been bound to find, if the present case had gone before him. I prefer to base my decision entirely on the fact that, as there had been no apportionment here, the only rateable value which could have been put before

E this tribunal was that at which this flat was first assessed, viz., £100 gross and £80 rateable value. For these reasons, although there is no blame attaching to the tribunal, who were unintentionally misled, certiorari must issue.

HILBERY, J.: I agree. When the tenant made his application to the rent tribunal, he presented it in relation to the dwelling-house which he was occupying, which was a self-contained flat. At that time, in stating what was

F the rateable value, he should have put in the rateable value as on the "appropriate date." The argument of counsel for the tribunal, in effect, is that the tribunal had jurisdiction to make the apportionment which a county court judge has to make so as to ascertain a rateable value which would give them jurisdiction. That seems to me to be an impossible contention. Under

G s. 12 (3) of the Act of 1920 the county court judge is the tribunal which alone can make the apportionment. Among other matters he will, as my Lord has pointed out, have to consider whether, in the particular circumstances of the case, the entity in respect of which he is asked to make the apportionment is not a new entity altogether. I agree that certiorari should issue.

PARKER, J.: I would decide this case on the strict construction of H s. 7 (2) of the Act of 1939, the question being: What do the words "may be apportioned" mean? Do they mean that it is a condition precedent that the rateable value shall be apportioned by the county court judge, or not? If one tests the question by assuming that Aldenham House, while a boarding-house, had a rateable value of, say £150 a year, it is conceded that it would be necessary that there should be first an apportionment by the county court. In other words, in that case the words "as may be apportioned" must be read "shall be apportioned by the county court." If that is the true construction of those words in such a case, it must apply equally in the present case where the rateable value was only £70 a year. For those reasons I agree that certiorari should issue.

Order for certiorari granted. No order as to costs.

Solicitors: Vivash Robinson & Co., agents for Michelmores, Davies & Bellamy, Sidmouth (for the landlord); Solicitor, Ministry of Health (for the tribunal).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

NOTE.

Re ANTIGEN LABORATORIES, LTD.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Roxburgh, J.), November 13, 1950.]

Company—Oppression—Petition for order regulating conduct of company's affairs—Need to state nature of relief sought—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 210 (1).

B

PETITION by a shareholder for an order under s. 210 of the Companies Act, 1948, which provides:

"(1) Any member of a company who complains that the affairs of the company are being conducted in a manner oppressive to some part of the members (including himself) or, in a case falling within s. 169 (3) of this Act, the Board of Trade, may make an application to the court by petition for an order under this section. (2) If on any such petition the court is of opinion—(a) that the company's affairs are being conducted as aforesaid; and (b) that to wind-up the company would unfairly prejudice that part of the members, but otherwise the facts would justify the making of a winding-up order on the ground that it was just and equitable that the company should be wound-up; the court may, with a view to bringing to an end the matters complained of, make such order as it thinks fit, whether for regulating the conduct of the company's affairs in future, or for the purchase of the shares of any members of the company by other members of the company or by the company and, in the case of a purchase by the company, for the reduction accordingly of the company's capital, or otherwise."

C

D

E

The prayer of the petition asked: (i) that an order might be made for regulating the conduct of the company's affairs in future; (ii) or that such other order, whether directing investigation into the company's affairs or otherwise, might be made as in the premises should be just.

F

Salt, K.C., and E. L. Gardner for the petitioner.

Raymond Walton for the company.

ROXBURGH, J.: From the prayer of the petition as presented, it is impossible to know what the petitioner wants. A petitioner seeking relief under s. 210 ought to state in the prayer of the petition in clear terms the general nature of the relief sought, whether it be by the appointment of a director or of some other kind. The prayer need not contain as much detail as the court would require on the drawing up of the order, or as much as is requisite in a draft minute. It must, however, contain enough to leave no doubt what the petitioner desires the court to do. The petitioner must take the responsibility of stating specifically what he wants. The specimen Form 5A in the Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1949, points in that direction. I shall give leave to amend the petition as asked, and to apply to fix a day for the hearing of the petition.

G

H

Solicitors: Alexander Pollock (for the petitioner); Stannard, Bosanquet & Michaelson (for the company).

R.D.H.O.

MILLS v. BRYCE.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Somervell, Jenkins and Birkett, L.J.J.), November 21, December 4, 1950.]

Rent Restriction—Death of tenant—Claim by daughter to remain in possession—Contractual tenancy—Premises let below standard rent—Increase of rent demanded by landlord and paid by tenant—No notice of increase served—Increase to a figure still below standard rent—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 3 (2), s. 12 (1) (g).

The standard rent of a dwelling-house to which the Rent Restrictions Acts applied, as determined by reference to a letting on July 3, 1939, was £58 10s. per annum exclusive of rates, which were payable by the tenant who was then in occupation. On July 6, 1942, the premises were let to B. at a monthly rent of £6 10s., i.e., £78 per annum, the landlord undertaking to pay the rates which, at that time, amounted to £28 7s. On that date, the standard rent was, therefore, £86 17s., i.e., £58 10s. (rent of original letting) plus £28 7s. (rates), and, therefore, the letting to B. was at a rent below the standard rent. On subsequent increases in the rates, the landlord demanded, and the tenant paid, the amount of the increases, and, on the occasion of a decrease, the landlord reduced his demand correspondingly. The rent demanded by the landlord, including the increases in the rates, did not at any time exceed £86 17s., and the landlord did not serve notices of increase in accordance with s. 3 (2) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920. On May 4, 1950, B. died. A notice to quit was served on him shortly before and expired shortly after his death. The defendant, his daughter, who had been residing with him for more than six months immediately preceding his death, claimed to be entitled to remain in possession by virtue of s. 12 (1) (g) of the Act of 1920, which protects a member of the tenant's family provided that the tenant was a statutory tenant at the date of his death.

HELD: an addition to the rent corresponding with an increase in rates which did not carry the rent above the standard rent did not require a notice of increase within s. 3 (2) of the Act of 1920; since no notice of increase had been served and since the increases, when demanded, were, in fact, paid, the tenancy remained contractual down to the date of the tenant's death; and, therefore, at the time of his death B. was not a statutory tenant and the defendant was not entitled to claim the protection of s. 12 (1) (g) of the Act of 1920.

[AS TO STATUTORY TENANTS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 334, 335, paras. 400, 401, and 1950 Supplements; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 575, 576, Nos. 7226-7255, and Supplements.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Aston v. Smith, [1924] 2 K.B. 143; 93 L.J.K.B. 733; 131 L.T. 565; 31 Digest 570, 7175.
- (2) Baxter v. Eckersley, [1950] 1 All E.R. 139; [1950] 1 K.B. 480.
- (3) Winchester Court, Ltd. v. Miller, [1944] 2 All E.R. 106; [1944] K.B. 734; 114 L.J.K.B. 152; 171 L.T. 150; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (4) Asher v. Seaford Court Estates, Ltd., [1950] 1 All E.R. 1018; [1950] A.C. 508.
- (5) Phillips v. Copping, [1935] 1 K.B. 15; 104 L.J.K.B. 78; 152 L.T. 175; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the landlord from an order of His Honour JUDGE TYLOR, K.C., made at Southampton County Court on July 4, 1950, whereby he refused to grant to the landlord possession of a flat subject to the Rent Restrictions Acts.

The flat in question was let in July, 1939, at an annual rent of £58 10s., exclusive of rates, and that letting determined its standard rent. In July, 1942, the flat was let to the tenant at an inclusive rent of £78. The rates at that date amounted to £28 7s., so that the landlord would have been entitled to let the flat at £86 17s. (i.e., £58 10s. plus £28 7s.). On subsequent increases in the rates, the landlord demanded, and the tenant paid, the amount of the increases, and on the occasion of a decrease in the amount of the rates the landlord reduced his demand accordingly. At no time did the rent demanded and paid exceed £86 17s. The landlord did not serve any notices of increase. On the death of the tenant, in May, 1950, his daughter, the defendant, who had been residing with him for more than six months up to the date of his death, claimed the protection of s. 12 (1) (g) of the Act of 1920 as a member of the tenant's family. The learned county court judge took the view that notices of increases of rent were necessary to support the increases demanded by the landlord and paid by the tenant; that the landlord was estopped from denying that he had served the notices; and that the notices would have operated as notices to quit terminating the contractual tenancy, so that the tenant was a statutory tenant at the date of his death, and the defendant, accordingly, was entitled to remain in possession. On appeal by the landlord, it was contended on behalf of the defendant that the effect of s. 2 (3) of the Act of 1920, which permits an increase of rent in respect of a transfer to a landlord of any liability previously borne by the tenant, was exhausted when the inclusive rent was first fixed at £78 per annum, with the result that the landlord was thenceforward entitled to that inclusive rent and no more and could claim no addition thereto except by way of permitted increase under s. 2 (1) (b), and on service of the prescribed notice under s. 3 (2). The facts appear in the judgment of SOMERVELL, L.J.

Robert Hughes and Stansfeld for the landlord.
McCarraher for the defendant.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 4. The following judgments were read.

SOMERVELL, L.J.: In this case the landlord seeks possession of a flat which is admittedly within the Rent Restrictions Acts. The defendant is a Miss Bryce, the daughter of a previous tenant, Major Bryce. The flat was let to Major Bryce on July 6, 1942. In February, 1949, Major Bryce went to hospital. He died on May 4, 1950. A notice to quit was served on him shortly before and expired shortly after his death. The defendant claims to retain possession as a tenant within s. 12 (1) (g) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920. The sole point before us is whether Major Bryce was a contractual or a statutory tenant at his death. If the former, on authorities which need not be referred to, the defendant cannot claim the protection of s. 12 (1) (g). If the latter, she can.

Section 2 of the Act of 1920 deals with permitted increases in rent. It provides inter alia that the rent may exceed the standard rent by an amount not exceeding any increase in the amount of rates payable by the landlord: s. 2 (1) (b). Section 3 (2) provides that these "permitted" increases shall not be recoverable unless a notice in writing is served in the form contained in sched. I to the Act, or substantially in that form. It has been decided in Aston v. Smith (1) that, if the rent is increased in accordance with this procedure, the tenant ipso facto becomes a statutory tenant. In Baxter v. Eckersley (2) a landlord demanded and obtained increases of rent to which he was entitled only if he served the statutory notices to which I have referred. No notices had been served. The tenant died, leaving a widow who claimed the protection of the Acts which she was entitled to do if her husband had become a statutory tenant. In the proceedings the landlord claimed, and obtained, an order for the increased amount of the rent for use and occupation. He sought, however, to rely on the invalidity of his demands for the increased rent for the purpose of saying that the tenancy had remained a contractual tenancy. It was held that he could not in one and the same proceedings obtain two forms of relief based on inconsistent premises.

A I can state very shortly the nature of the issue here. Over the period of the tenancy increases of rent were demanded and paid, to cover the landlord's increased liability for rates. No notices were served. Counsel for the landlord submitted that notices were not necessary as the increases left the rent below the standard rent. Counsel for the defendant submits that notices were necessary and that Baxter v. Eckersley (2) applies. The learned judge so held, and, deciding the other points in the defendant's favour, made no order for possession.

B The flat in question in Southampton was let to a Mr. Gilbertson on July 3, 1939, at a rent of £58 10s., the tenant having to pay rates. This is the tenancy determining prima facie, at any rate, the standard rent. Later, the flat was let on the basis of the landlord bearing the rates. Section 2 (3) of the Act of 1920 provides inter alia that

C " . . . any increase of rent in respect of any transfer to a landlord of any burden or liability previously borne by the tenant where, as the result of such transfer, the terms on which any dwelling-house is held are on the whole not less favourable to the tenant than the previous terms, shall be deemed not to be an increase of rent for the purposes of this Act."

D In Winchester Court, Ltd. v. Miller (3), approved in the House of Lords in Asher v. Seaford Court Estates, Ltd. (4), it was held that the word "tenant" in the sub-section included a former tenant the demise to whom fixed the standard rent. As rates fluctuate it seems to me to follow that the application of s. 2 (3) to a case such as this results in a fluctuating standard rent. I will take a rent of £50, the tenant bearing the rates in the demise which settles the standard rent. The landlord assumes the burden of rates at a time when rates are £20. A subsequent letting of £70 will be on terms not less favourable to the tenant than the previous terms. If rates fall to £15 the rent must be reduced or the terms will be less favourable. If they rise to £25 a letting at £75 would be a letting at the standard rent. Mr. Gilbertson gave up his tenancy and on July 6, 1942, the landlord let to Major Bryce, the landlord undertaking to pay the rates. The rates were at that time £28 7s. The standard rent was, therefore, in my opinion, at that date £58 10s. plus £28 7s., that is £86 17s. The landlord let to Major Bryce at £6 10s. a month, that is for £78 per annum. That was below the standard rent. During the continuance of Major Bryce's tenancy, there were, I think, three increases and one decrease of rates. When the rates increased, the landlord claimed an increase of rent to cover the increase of rates, and when they were reduced he conceded a reduction. The position as found by the learned county court judge was that the landlord represented the increases as increases in respect of rates which she was entitled to make and Major Bryce submitted. The rents as so adjusted were always below the rent permitted by the application of the "transfer of burden" sub-section.

F The position when a landlord lets below the standard rent was considered in Phillips v. Copping (5). In that case on the expiration of a tenancy at a rent below the standard rent, the landlord served a notice increasing the rent to the standard rent and adding thereto permitted increases. It was held that he could do so. MAUGHAM, L.J., said ([1935] 1 K.B. 23):

" . . . there is nothing to show that the common law right of the landlord to terminate an existing tenancy and to fix the rent for the new tenancy at the standard rent is taken away."

It seems, therefore, clear that the landlord here could have served a notice to quit and offered a fresh tenancy at the standard rent, which was some £8 higher than the rent she charged. It also seems clear that the parties could have agreed the increases which the landlord demanded. The learned county court judge found that Major Bryce never agreed to a modification of the tenancy agreement and he states the position as I have summarised it above. He draws the conclusion that this made necessary the service of statutory notices. I do not regard the case as an easy one, but I have come on both points to a different conclusion.

I agree that a lawyer familiar with the decision in Phillips v. Copping (5) would have put the matter more explicitly than did the landlord here. Taking the judge's findings, it was substantially accurate to say that the increases were increases which the landlord was entitled to make. If Major Bryce had insisted on the formality of a notice to quit, the landlord might have considered his rights and demanded more than he did, in fact, demand. I think the proper conclusion is that Major Bryce, by paying the rent, really did agree to a variation. In any event, I do not think that the statutory notices under s. 3 (2) of the Act of 1920 were required. The main scheme of the Act, as appears from s. 1, is to make irrecoverable any amount in excess of permitted increases over the standard rent. The opening words of s. 2 (1) dealing with permitted increases refer to the amount by which the rent may exceed the standard rent. The opening words of s. 3 (2): "Notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary . . ." indicate that the necessity for notices does not apply to increases below the standard rent which, as Phillips v. Copping (5) shows, the parties can agree. On the most technical view of the transaction, the utmost that could have been suggested was that the landlord obtained the increase by a misrepresentation which was plainly an innocent misrepresentation. He said: "I am entitled to demand this increase." He should have said: "By serving a notice to quit I can demand this increase if you wish to remain a tenant." By using the word "misrepresentation" I am not suggesting that it was such a misrepresentation as would have given the tenant any legal rights. That point does not arise. For these reasons I have come to the conclusion that the tenancy remained a contractual tenancy, and the appeal must be allowed.

JENKINS, L.J.: I agree. The crucial question in this case is whether Major Bryce's tenancy of the flat had become statutory or was still contractual at the date of his death. This question is not free from difficulty, but I think the right answer is that the tenancy was then still contractual.

The standard rent of the flat, as determined by reference to the letting to Mr. Gilbertson on July 3, 1939, was £58 10s. per annum exclusive of rates, which were payable by the tenant. It follows that on the letting to Major Bryce in 1942 it was open to the landlord to charge whatever "exclusive" rent she pleased not exceeding £58 10s. per annum, the tenant remaining liable for rates, or, at her option, to assume the liability for rates and make a corresponding addition to the rent charged as "inclusive of rates." In the latter alternative the addition to the rent, provided it did not exceed the contemporary amount of the rates for which liability was assumed by the landlord, would, under the "transfer of burden" provisions contained in s. 2 (3) of the Act of 1920, be deemed not to be an increase in rent for the purposes of the Rent Acts. Further, I think it was open to the landlord on the letting to Major Bryce to assume liability for rates and provide for periodical fluctuations in their amount by charging an "inclusive" rent not exceeding in total annual amount £58 10s. plus the amount of the rates from time to time payable by the landlord, as this arrangement would be on the whole not less favourable to the tenant than the previous terms, inasmuch as he would be out of pocket in "inclusive" rent no more than would have been payable under the terms of Mr. Gilbertson's tenancy in the form of "exclusive" rent plus rates, and the requirements of s. 2 (3) of the Act of 1920 would thus be automatically satisfied year by year whatever the rates might amount to. It does not, however, appear from the evidence that the agreement as to rent on the letting to Major Bryce included any provision as to subsequent variations in the amount of the rates. The rent agreed seems to have been simply £6 10s. per month inclusive of rates, which were to be paid by the landlord. This, however, was well within s. 2 (3) of the Act of 1920, since £6 10s. per month equals £78 per annum and the rates then amounted to £28 7s., so that the rent less the amount attributable to rates was at the rate of only £49 13s. per annum, as compared with the £58 10s. rent plus liability for rates under the terms of the Gilbertson tenancy.

The difficulty arises as regards the subsequent increases in rent from time to time made to correspond with the subsequent increases in rates. After allowing for these increases the rent from time to time charged was always well within the yearly figure arrived at by adding to the "exclusive" standard rent of £58 10s. the amount of the rates from time to time payable by the landlord. It would, therefore, seem to follow, again applying s. 2 (3) of the Act of 1920, that there was here no increase in rent for the purposes of the Rent Acts. It is, however, argued on behalf of the defendant that the effect of s. 2 (3) was exhausted when the "inclusive" rent was first fixed at £6 10s. per month. Thenceforward, it is said, the landlord was entitled to that inclusive rent and no more, and could claim no addition on account of increased rates except by way of permitted increase under s. 2 (1) (b), and on service of the prescribed notice under s. 3 (2) which would have had the effect of converting the tenancy from a contractual to a statutory one. The fallacy in this argument, however, is that it treats the "inclusive" rent of £6 10s. per month as if it had been the standard rent, which it was not. The standard rent here in question was £58 10s. per annum exclusive, and the landlord could charge any rent she chose, not exceeding that amount plus the amount of the burden assumed by her in respect of rates. If, on the occasion of each of the increases in rent with which we are here concerned, there had been a change of tenant and a new agreement with such tenant for payment of the increased rent, I apprehend the agreement would have been perfectly lawful so far as the Rent Acts were concerned, for the amount charged, after allowing for the transfer of burden to the landlord in the shape of rates, would have been well within the standard rent, if the burden transferred is to be measured, as I think it should be (see Asher v. Seaford Court Estates, Ltd. (4)), by reference to the terms of the Gilbertson tenancy.

If the increases here made were open to any objection, it was not, I think, that the Acts precluded them from being made except as permitted increases in the standard rent and after service of the prescribed notice, because, if I am so far right, they were not increases in the standard rent at all. The objection (if any) was, as it seems to me, that the landlord, having agreed once and for all an "inclusive" rent of £6 10s. per month, had thereafter to pay the rates whatever they might amount to, and could not as a matter of contract demand any increase because the rates happened to go up. This purely contractual objection cannot, so far as I can see, avail the defendant. The increases, when demanded, were in fact paid. It may be this was done under a mistake as to the terms of the agreement. It may be that it was done because irrespective of the legal rights it was recognised as reasonable that the tenant should bear any increase in rates. One is tempted to think (especially in view of the decrease in rent allowed on one occasion when the rates were reduced) that the true agreement between the parties may have been that the tenant should bear any increase and take the benefit of any reduction in the rates. Of that, however, there is no evidence.

Whatever the true explanation of Major Bryce's acquiescence in those increases may have been, the fact, in my view, remains that the amount he paid never exceeded the amount which, so far as the Rent Acts were concerned, he could lawfully agree to pay—that is, the standard "exclusive" rent plus the amount of the burden in the shape of rates transferred to the landlord. Looking at the substance of the matter, he was never out of pocket more than he would have been if he had paid the "exclusive" standard rent of £58 10s. and borne the rates himself. In fact, he was in pocket by comparison.

Accordingly, I agree that the tenancy remained contractual down to the date of Major Bryce's death, with the result that as the notice to quit had not then expired the defendant cannot claim the benefit of s. 12 (1) (g) of the Act of 1920 and that the appeal should, therefore, be allowed.

BIRKETT, L.J.: I have had the advantage of reading both the judgments which have been delivered, and as they cover so completely anything I would have wished to have said, and as I am in complete agreement with them, I do not desire to add anything more.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: White & Leonard, agents for Hallett, Martin & Lebern, Southampton (for the landlord); Carter & Barber, agents for Ewing, Hickman & Clark, Southampton (for the defendant).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

DALEY v. DIGGERS, LTD. AND ANOTHER.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Hilbery, J.), November 29, December 6, 1950.]

Legal Aid Costs—Assisted person—Right to costs when successful—Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949 (c. 51), s. 1 (7) (b).

The writ in an action for damages for negligence was issued on Jan. 18, 1950, the plaintiff being at the time an ordinary, self-supporting litigant. On Oct. 11, 1950, he was granted a certificate entitling him to legal aid under the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949, and so became an "assisted person" under that Act. On Nov. 14 judgment was given for him for £500 against the first defendants, and the action was dismissed against the second defendants. The learned judge found that it was reasonable for the plaintiff to join the second defendants in the action and ordered the costs of the second defendants to be paid direct to them by the first defendants. The first defendants claimed that, as an assisted person was not personally liable for costs, the plaintiff should have no costs from and after the date when he became an assisted person, or, alternatively (having regard to the remuneration allowed to counsel and solicitors under sched. III, para. 1 (1) and para. 2 (1), to the Act), that he should have only eighty-five per cent. of his costs from that date.

HELD: (i) on the true construction of s. 1 (7) (b) of the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949, the court, in considering whether in the exercise of its discretion it should award costs to a successful party, should completely disregard the fact that that party was an "assisted person," and, therefore, the plaintiff would be awarded the costs of the action against the first defendants.

(ii) as the costs of the second defendants were ordered to be paid direct to them by the first defendants, the Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1950, reg. 17 (1), which would require the court to hold an inquiry into the "assisted person's" means if an order for costs was made against the "assisted person," did not apply.

[FOR THE LEGAL AID AND ADVICE ACT, 1949, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 18, p. 532.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Harold v. Smith, (1860), 5 H. & N. 381; 29 L.J.Ex. 141; 157 E.R. 1229; sub nom. Harrold v. Smith, 1 L.T. 556.

(2) Gundry v. Sainsbury, [1910] 1 K.B. 645; 79 L.J.K.B. 713; 102 L.T. 440; 42 Digest 126, 1207.

ACTION for damages for personal injuries.

The plaintiff was a servant of the first defendants, Diggers, Ltd., who were doing some work at the premises of the second defendants, the Co-operative Wholesale Society, Ltd., under a contract with the second defendants. During the course of his employment, the plaintiff met with an accident by falling through an asbestos roof at the premises of the second defendants, and he brought an action against the first defendants for breach of statutory duty and for negligence and against the second defendants for general breach of duty, for breach of the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, and for negligence in failing to warn him of the danger. The writ was issued on Jan. 18, 1950, and on Oct. 11, 1950, the plaintiff, who was until then an ordinary litigant, was granted a certificate entitling him to legal aid under the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949. The action was heard at Chelmsford Assizes on Nov. 13 and 14 when HILBERY, J., gave judgment for the plaintiff against the first defendants and dismissed the action against the second defendants. The learned judge reserved the question of costs for argument before him in London. The first defendants contended, inter alia, that the plaintiff should have no costs from the date when he became an assisted person. This report deals only with the judgment on costs.

W. M. F. Hudson for the plaintiff.

Boileau for the first defendants.

Berryman, K.C., and Tudor Evans for the second defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 6. HILBERY, J., read the following judgment. On Nov. 14 last, at the conclusion of the hearing of this case, I found in favour of the plaintiff as against the first defendants, and, having stated that, if I had been able to find for the plaintiff without attributing any blame and responsibility for the accident to him, I should have awarded him the sum of £2,000, I found that the plaintiff was himself three-quarters to blame and responsible for his accident, and, therefore, directed that my judgment would be in his favour for £500. The question then arose what order should be made as to costs, and I reserved that question for argument before me in London.

The writ in this action was issued on Jan. 18, 1950, and all the proceedings were conducted with the plaintiff carrying the ordinary responsibilities of a self-supporting plaintiff until Oct. 11, 1950. On that date the plaintiff was granted a certificate under the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949, entitling him, broadly speaking, to have his costs of solicitor and counsel and his disbursements paid for him out of the Legal Aid Fund. As I have said, the plaintiff succeeded in this action in establishing the liability of the first defendants to pay him damages to the extent of that fraction for which the first defendants were held liable, after a division of the responsibility for the plaintiff's accident between them and the plaintiff, and the question which is now to be decided is: "To what costs, if any, is the plaintiff entitled from and after the date when he became an assisted person under the Act?"

The unsuccessful defendants in this action have submitted that the plaintiff should either have no costs from and after the date when he became an assisted person under the Act, or, alternatively, that he should only have eighty-five per cent. of his costs from and after that date. There is no doubt about the principle on which, in the past, the courts of common law have awarded costs to a successful litigant. They have been awarded as being "as or in the character of an indemnity." In the words of BRAMWELL, B. (5 H. & N. 385) in Harold v. Smith (1):

"Costs as between party and party are given by the law as an indemnity to the person entitled to them: they are not imposed as a punishment on the party who pays them, nor given as a bonus to the party who receives them."

Those words were quoted with approval in the Court of Appeal by COZENS-HARDY, M.R., in Gundry v. Sainsbury (2), when the Master of the Rolls said of costs ([1910] 1 K.B. 649):

"They are not a complete indemnity, but they are only given in the character of an indemnity."

As an assisted person under the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949, the plaintiff has not been liable personally for costs, and, therefore, it is argued, he cannot be granted something in the character of an indemnity against a liability which he has not incurred. As a matter of principle, and apart from statute, this contention would seem to be well-founded. As an assisted person the plaintiff has not been under any personal liability for his costs incurred in establishing his claim against the first defendants, and, the court being apprised of that fact, he can have no claim to an award of costs, since such an award would issue on the basis of its being an indemnity to him against a liability which in fact has never been for him an existent liability.

It is necessary, therefore, to examine the Act to see what express provisions are made in it about costs and, if possible, to discover the intention of the Act with regard to costs where the assisted person succeeds in his claim and also where such a person fails. The first section which bears on the subject is s. 1 (7) (b), which is in the following terms:

"Save as expressly provided by this Part of this Act or by regulations made thereunder . . . (b) the rights conferred by this Part of this Act on a person receiving legal aid shall not affect the rights or liabilities of other parties to the proceedings or the principles on which the discretion of any court or tribunal is normally exercised."

The fact, therefore, that the plaintiff is receiving the legal aid conferred by that part of the Act, is, in the first place, not to affect the liability of the other parties to the proceedings, i.e., the liability of a defendant, or, in the second place, the principles on which the discretion of the court is exercised. Costs have always been in the discretion of the court and become a liability of a party to the suit only after the court in the exercise of its discretion has awarded them. The second part of the sub-section does, therefore, directly apply to the question of costs to be awarded, either to or against an assisted person. If the discretion to award them should normally be exercised in a particular case so as to make the defendant liable for them, then they become a liability of a party to the proceedings other than the assisted person and the first part of the sub-section comes into operation. Since the second part of the sub-section, after the disjunctive, expressly provides that the principles on which the discretion of the court is to be exercised, i.e., the principles in matters of discretion, are not to be affected by the fact that a party is a legally assisted person, the intention of the section would seem to be that, when it comes to the exercise of the discretion over costs, the court should not allow itself to be affected by the fact that the plaintiff is an assisted person.

Thus construed, the section is in harmony with other provisions of the Act. For example, the Act seems to contemplate that the court in some cases will make orders for the payment of costs against an assisted plaintiff, and might make them for the full amount of the defendant's costs in the exercise of the court's discretion if it were left to act on the ordinary principles, unless the Act expressly provided otherwise. To limit the assisted plaintiff's liability for the successful defendant's costs to something below that which the court, exercising its discretion on ordinary principles, might order him to pay, the Act, therefore, expressly provides by s. 2 (2) (e) that:

" . . . his liability by virtue of an order for costs made against him with respect to the proceedings shall not exceed the amount (if any) which is a reasonable one for him to pay having regard to all the circumstances, including the means of all the parties and their conduct in connection with the dispute."

The Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1950 (S.I. 1950, No. 1359), reg. 17 (1), provides as follows:

"Where an order for costs is made against an assisted person, then, subject to the provisions of the next following paragraph of this regulation— (a) the determination of the amount of his liability for costs in accordance with s. 2 (2) (e) of the Act shall, save as is hereinafter provided, be made at the trial or hearing of the action, cause or matter and be final; (b) in determining the amount of the assisted person's liability, his dwelling-house and household furniture and the tools and implements of his trade shall be left out of account to the like extent as they are left out of account in the determination by the board of his disposable income and disposable capital; (c) in determining the amount of the assisted person's liability, any certificate, emergency certificate, notice or affidavit which may have been filed under the provisions of reg. 15 shall be evidence of the facts stated therein . . ."

At the same time the Act seems to contemplate that orders will be made for the payment of the full costs of an assisted person who succeeds, just as if he were an ordinary litigant, and s. 6 (5) and s. 6 (6) provide as follows:

"(5) Subject to this Part of this Act, a solicitor who has acted for a person receiving legal aid shall be paid for so acting out of the legal aid fund, and any fees paid to counsel for so acting shall also be paid out of that fund. (6) The sums payable under the last foregoing sub-section to a solicitor or counsel shall not exceed those allowed under sched. III to this Act."

Under sched. III, where the proceedings (other than certain matrimonial suits) are in the Supreme Court or the House of Lords, the sums payable out of the fund to counsel, under para. 1 (1), are only eighty-five per cent. of counsel's fees, and the sums payable to the solicitor, under para. 2 (1), are eighty-five per cent. of the solicitor's profit costs and the full amount of his disbursements. Section 6 (9) of the Act provides:

"Nothing in this section shall prejudice s. 1 (7) (b) of this Act, and in particular—(a) sub-s. (6) and sub-s. (7) of this section shall not affect the sums recoverable by virtue of an order for costs made in favour of a person who has received legal aid or of an agreement for costs so made which provides for taxation; and (b) for the purpose of any such order or agreement, the solicitor who acted for the person in whose favour it is made shall be treated as having paid any counsel's fees."

Section 6 (9), expressly referring, as it does, to s. 1 (7) (b) and to s. 6 (6) and s. 6 (7), is in terms saying that, although in litigation in the Supreme Court a solicitor for an assisted person will only have a right to eighty-five per cent. of his profit costs and his counsel will only have a right to eighty-five per cent. of his fees, none the less the court is to disregard this fact when exercising its discretion to award costs to a successful litigant who is an assisted person, and is to exercise that discretion on ordinary principles.

If the true construction of s. 1 (7) (b) were that the court should exercise its discretion on the ordinary common law principle when deciding whether or not to award costs to a successful assisted litigant, and, therefore, would award nothing because that assisted litigant had been under no liability for his own costs, there would have been no need for s. 6 (9). There would be no question whether the plaintiff should be awarded more than eighty-five per cent., since a successful assisted litigant would not be awarded any costs at all. Furthermore, it is noticeable that by s. 2 (2):

“Where a person receives legal aid in connection with any proceedings . . . (d) any sums recovered by virtue of an order . . . for costs made in his favour with respect to the proceedings shall be paid to the legal aid fund.”

Section 3 (7) provides:

“References in this section to the net liability of the legal aid fund on any person's account in relation to any proceedings refer to the aggregate amount of the sums paid or payable out of that fund on his account in respect of those proceedings to any solicitor or counsel and not recouped to that fund by sums which are recovered by virtue of an order or agreement for costs made in his favour with respect to those proceedings.”

The last part of this sub-section obviously envisages an award of costs to a successful litigant. That is not consistent with a construction of s. 1 (7) (b) which would result in the court denying an order for costs to a successful assisted litigant because he was an assisted person and had, therefore, been under no liability himself for costs.

These provisions in the Act to which I have called attention lend support to the construction which I have put on s. 1 (7) (b), namely, that, in considering whether in the exercise of its discretion the court should award costs to the successful assisted person, the court should altogether disregard the fact that the successful plaintiff is an assisted person under the Act. The alternative contention of the first defendants, viz., that the costs to be awarded to the plaintiff as an assisted litigant should be limited to the eighty-five per cent. of the solicitor's profit costs and the eighty-five per cent. of the fees to counsel for which alone the legal aid fund has undertaken liability, is covered, in my opinion, by what I have already decided to be the proper construction of s. 1 (7) (b). I, therefore, enter judgment for the plaintiff against the first defendants for £500 and costs, and I enter judgment for the second defendants against the plaintiff.

As there was uncontradicted evidence before me that the first defendants suggested to the plaintiff that he should seek a remedy against the second defendants—in other words, that he should sue them—because the first defendants, it was said, were not financially strong at that time, I cannot say that it was not reasonable for the plaintiff to join the second defendants in this action, though it is true that, as against each of the defendants a completely different cause of action in tort was alleged and relied on. For many years past in such circumstances the court has ordered the costs of the successful defendant to be paid direct by the unsuccessful defendant instead of ordering those costs to be paid by the plaintiff and added to the amount of his damages recovered against the unsuccessful defendant. Since I am of opinion that the joinder in this case was reasonable, and since in those circumstances, according to the established present-day practice, the court makes the costs of the successful defendant the responsibility of the unsuccessful defendant and not of the plaintiff, I make that order in this case, that is to say, I order the costs of the second defendants to be paid direct to them by the first defendants. As I make the order for these costs against the first defendants and that order connotes that they are the party responsible for them, the Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1950, reg. 17 (1), which would require me to hold an inquiry into the plaintiff's means if I were making an order for costs against him, does not apply. I am not making an order for costs against him but against the first defendants. This may seem artificial; it is. But so is, and always has been, the order for one defendant to pay another defendant's costs where two defendants have been joined in the action and the plaintiff has succeeded against one and failed against the other.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Turner, Martin & Symes, Ipswich (for the plaintiff); E. P. Rugg & Co. (for the first defendants); Fred Hollis (for the second defendants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

GREGORY v. FORD AND OTHERS.

[NOTTINGHAMSHIRE SUMMER ASSIZES (Byrne, J.), July 6, 1950.]

Master and Servant—Contract of service—Implied term—Performance of statutory duty—Servant not required to perform illegal act—Permitting vehicle to be used on road without policy of insurance in force—Accident caused by servant's negligence—Liability of employer for damages—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 35 (1).

On Oct. 11, 1948, owing to the negligence of the third defendant, a motor lorry, owned by the first and second defendants and driven by the third defendant, their servant, came into collision with a motor-cycle driven by the plaintiff, as a result of which the plaintiff suffered injury. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendants the plaintiff was awarded £4,075 damages and costs. The first and second defendants held a policy of insurance against third-party risks in respect of the lorry, but it was subject to certain conditions, one of which was not complied with at the time of the accident, with the result that the lorry was not then covered by the policy. In third party proceedings the first and second defendants claimed that they were entitled to an indemnity from the third defendant in respect of the damages and costs awarded to the plaintiff, and the third defendant claimed damages from the first and second defendants, alleging (a) a breach of their statutory duty to him under the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 35 (1), to keep the lorry insured against third-party risks and so provide him with an indemnity from the insurance company, and (b) breach of an implied term of his contract of service that the lorry should be so insured.

HELD: (i) s. 35 (1) did not cast on an employer any duty in relation to his servant to insure against third-party risks a vehicle driven by the servant, and, therefore, the first and second defendants were not liable to the third defendant for breach of statutory duty by reason of their failure to have the lorry covered against third-party risks at the time of the accident.

(ii) there was, however, an implied term in a contract of service that the servant should not be required to do an unlawful act; accordingly, it was an implied term in the third defendant's contract with the first and second defendants that they would comply with the provisions of s. 35 (1) of the Act of 1930; and he was entitled to recover against them the amount of the damages and costs which he was liable to pay to the plaintiff.

(iii) although the accident was caused by the negligence of the third defendant, the fact that the damages fell on the first and second defendants was due, not to the third defendant's negligence, but to a breach of their duty under s. 35 (1), and, therefore, their claim to be indemnified by the third defendant failed.

[FOR THE ROAD TRAFFIC ACT, 1930, s. 35 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 23, p. 636.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Tattersall v. Drysdale, [1935] 2 K.B. 174; 104 L.J.K.B. 511; 153 L.T. 75; Digest Supp.

(2) Monk v. Warbey, [1935] 1 K.B. 75; 104 L.J.K.B. 153; 152 L.T. 194; Digest Supp.

(3) Blows v. Chapman, [1947] 2 All E.R. 576; 112 J.P. 8; 2nd Digest Supp.

THIRD-PARTY PROCEEDINGS in an action for damages for negligence.

The plaintiff was injured in a collision between his motor cycle and a lorry, which belonged to the first and second defendants and was being driven by the third defendant, a servant of the first and second defendants. BYRNE, J., found that the accident was caused by the negligence of the third defendant and awarded to the plaintiff £4,075 damages and costs against the defendants. The lorry was the subject of an insurance policy against third-party risks, but at the time of the accident it was not covered by the policy. The first and second defendants claimed an indemnity against the third defendant in respect of the damages and costs awarded to the plaintiff, as the accident was due to the third defendant's negligence. The third defendant contended that, in failing to have the motor lorry insured against third-party risks at the time of the accident, the first and second defendants were liable to him in damages (a) for breach of their statutory duty under the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 35 (1), and (b) for a breach of an implied term in their contract of service with him. The issue of negligence was determined by BYRNE, J., at Derby Assizes on June 14, 1950, when the learned judge gave judgment for the plaintiff. Some of the evidence in the third-party proceedings was given at Derby Assizes on June 15, and the proceedings were then adjourned to Nottingham Assizes. The facts appear in the judgment.

Vaughan, K.C., and H. G. Talbot for the plaintiff.

Elwes, K.C., and J. G. S. Hobson for the first and second defendants.

G. Terrell for the third defendant.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 6. BYRNE, J., read the following judgment. The third defendant, Thomas Francis Hill, claims damages from the first and second defendants for breach of statutory duty by them and for breach of an implied term of his contract of service with them. The first and second defendants, Thomas Ford and Harold Ford, claim that they are entitled to an indemnity from the third defendant in respect of damages and costs which have been awarded to the plaintiff, David Edward Gregory. These proceedings arise out of an accident which occurred on Oct. 11, 1948, when a lorry owned by the first and second defendants and driven by their servant, the third defendant, collided with a motor cycle driven by the plaintiff. That issue has been determined, I having found that the accident was caused by the negligence of the third defendant and having awarded the plaintiff £4,075 damages and costs against the defendants.

The following facts were established to my satisfaction in the third-party proceedings. (i) The first and second defendants used the lorry which was involved in the accident for the purpose of conveying milk produced by them to the premises of the Milk Marketing Board. (ii) When the accident occurred the first and second defendants were, by an agreement dated Dec. 2, 1942, made between them and the Milk Marketing Board, engaged in conveying milk for reward from Woolton Rectory Farm to the premises of the Milk Marketing Board, and they were also conveying to the Milk Marketing Board milk which they had produced. (iii) At the material time the lorry owned by the first and second defendants was the subject of an insurance policy subscribed by Trident Motor Policies. One of the general exceptions to that policy is that the underwriters shall not be liable for any accident, injury, loss, damage or liability, caused, sustained or incurred while the vehicle is being driven by any person who is not within the "persons or classes of persons entitled to drive" specified in the current certificate of insurance, or is being used otherwise than within the "limitations as to use" specified in that certificate. (iv) The certificate of insurance specifies that the classes of persons entitled to drive are (a) the policy holder, and (b) any person in the employ of the policy holder. It further specifies that the limitations as to use are for purposes in connection with the policy holder's business and that the vehicle is not to be used for conveying goods for reward. (v) The third defendant was within the persons or classes of persons entitled to drive, but the vehicle was being used for conveying goods for reward and thus was outside the limitations as to use. It is conceded on behalf of the first and second defendants that at the time of the accident the lorry was not covered by the policy of insurance.

On behalf of the third defendant it is contended that there was a breach by the first and second defendants of the statutory duty imposed on them by the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 35 (1), to keep the lorry driven by him insured against third-party risks and that, as a result of that breach of statutory duty, he has lost the indemnity from the insurance company for damages for which he is liable as the result of his negligence. The Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 35 (1), provides:

"Subject to the provisions of this Part of this Act, it shall not be lawful for any person to use, or to cause or permit any other person to use, a motor vehicle on a road unless there is in force in relation to the user of the vehicle by that person or that other person, as the case may be, such a policy of insurance or such a security in respect of third-party risks as complies with the requirements of this Part of this Act."

Section 35 (2) provides a penalty in the case of a person who acts in contravention of this sub-section. It is to be observed that the statute imposes no duty on the servant to insure and that the primary duty to insure is on the employer. It is clear, however, from s. 35 that, if a vehicle is used on a road in contravention of s. 35, both the driver and the owner are guilty of an offence, and lack of knowledge on the part of the driver of the terms of the insurance policy or of the fact that one was not in existence will, in the event of a prosecution, afford him no defence. Thus, the statute contemplated the servant as being one of the persons who could be injured by a breach of statutory duty by the employer in view of the fact that it imposed on him an equal duty.

It appears to me to be necessary to consider the object of the statute. In Tattersall v. Drysdale (1), GODDARD, J., said ([1935] 2 K.B. 181):

"[The Road Traffic Act, 1930,] was aimed at the protection of the public by providing that there should be a body of insurers behind every driver of a car."

With that observation I respectfully agree. Monk v. Warbey (2) is authority for the proposition that a person who is injured by the negligent driving of a motor car which is not the subject of insurance against third-party risks can sue the owner of the motor car for breach of statutory duty, but, so far as I am aware, there is no authority for the proposition that s. 35 (1) casts on the employer a statutory duty in relation to his servant, and, having regard to the object of the statute, I do not think that it does.

The third defendant further contends that it was an implied term of his employment that the first and second defendants should at all times keep the lorry insured against third-party risks. It seems to me that, when a person is employed to drive a lorry, there must be an implied term in the contract of service that the servant shall not be required to do an unlawful act. If that be so, it appears to me to follow that it is an implied term of the contract that the employer will comply with the provisions of the statute. There is no evidence before me that the third defendant knew that the policy of insurance did not cover the errand on which he was engaged at the time of the accident. In Blows v. Chapman (3), a Divisional Court considered whether a servant who had been convicted of an offence under s. 35 (1) of the Act of 1930, should be disqualified, under s. 35 (2), from holding a licence, and SINGLETON, J., said ([1947] 2 All E.R. 577):

"It is not, I think, the duty of a workman to ask his employer each day: 'Is this vehicle insured?'"

In my view, there was an implied term in the contract of service that the employer would comply with the statute, from which it would follow that the servant would be indemnified by insurers for any damage caused by his negligence. I have, therefore, come to the conclusion that on this ground the third defendant is entitled to succeed. A

The first and second defendants claim an indemnity from the third defendant. A servant is, of course, liable at the suit of his master for damage which is the result of the servant's negligence, but in this case, although the third defendant was negligent, it is owing to the breach of statutory duty by the first and second defendants that the damages in respect of which they claim indemnity fall on them. For that reason, in my view, their claim fails. It follows that there will be a declaration that the third defendant is entitled to recover against the first and second defendants the amount of the plaintiff's damages and costs. B

Order accordingly. C

Solicitors: Flint, Bishop & Barnett, Derby (for the plaintiff); Fraser, Brown, White & Pears, Nottingham (for the first and second defendants); Mee & Co., Retford (for the third defendant).

[Reported by MISS GWYNEDD LEWIS, Barrister-at-Law.]

D

PRESTON-JONES v. PRESTON-JONES.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Simonds, Lord Normand, Lord Oaksey, Lord Morton of Henryton and Lord MacDermott), November 6, 7, December 14, 1950.]

Divorce—Adultery—Proof—Period of gestation—Three hundred and sixty days—Standard of proof—Facts within judicial knowledge. E

The husband was absent from the United Kingdom from Aug. 17, 1945, to Feb. 9, 1946. On Aug. 13, 1946, the wife gave birth to a normal child, and the husband brought a petition for dissolution of marriage on the ground of her adultery, the charge being based on the fact that a period of three hundred and sixty days elapsed between Aug. 17, 1945, and Aug. 13, 1946, from which, it was alleged, it followed that the child must have been conceived in adultery. F

HELD: (i) though a finding of adultery against a wife might have the effect of bastardising her child that did not mean that a degree of proof of adultery was required such as in a scientific inquiry would justify the conclusion that such and such an event was impossible. No higher proof was demanded than that the fact should be established beyond reasonable doubt, and in the present case all the court could demand was that it should be established beyond all reasonable doubt that a child born three hundred and sixty days after a particular coitus could not be the result of that coitus. G

Head v. Head (1823) (Turn. & R. 138), applied.

(ii) (LORD NORMAND dubitante and LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON dissentiente) the court was not entitled to assume judicial knowledge that a child born three hundred and sixty days after the last coitus between husband and wife was not the child of the husband; the court must have regard to the evidence; and (LORD OAKSEY dissentiente) on the evidence in the present case it was proved beyond reasonable doubt that the husband was not the father of the child, and he was entitled to a decree. H

Gaskill v. Gaskill ([1921] P. 425); Wood v. Wood ([1947] 2 All E.R. 95); and Hadlum v. Hadlum ([1948] 2 All E.R. 412), criticised.

M.-T. v. M.-T. & Official Solicitor ([1949] P. 331), approved by LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON.

[AS TO THE PERIOD OF GESTATION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 663 n.; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, p. 298, Nos. 2753, 2754, and Digest Supp., and 2nd Digest Supp.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Russell v. Russell, [1924] A.C. 687; 93 L.J.P. 97; 131 L.T. 482; Digest Supp.
- (2) Head v. Head, (1823), Turn. & R. 138; 37 E.R. 1049; 3 Digest 359, 11.
- (3) Bosvile v. A.-G., (1887), 12 P.D. 177; 56 L.J.P. 97; 57 L.T. 88; 3 Digest 362, 42.
- (4) Burnaby v. Baillie, (1889), 42 Ch.D. 282; 58 L.J.Ch. 842; 61 L.T. 634; 3 Digest 367, 81.
- (5) Gaskill v. Gaskill, [1921] P. 425; 90 L.J.P. 339; 126 L.T. 115; 27 Digest 298, 2753.
- (6) Wood v. Wood, [1947] 2 All E.R. 95; [1947] P. 103; [1948] L.J.R. 784; 111 J.P. 428; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (7) Hadlum v. Hadlum, [1948] 2 All E.R. 412; [1949] P. 147; [1949] L.J.R. 341; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (8) M.-T. v. M.-T. & Official Solicitor, [1949] P. 331; [1949] L.J.R. 378; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (9) Williamson v. M'Clelland, 1913 S.C. 678; 50 Sc. L.R. 469; 1 S.L.T. 289; 3 Digest 398, 328q.
- (10) Gray v. Gray, [1919] 1 Sc. L.T. 163;
- (11) Banbury Peerage Case, (1811), 1 Sim. & St. 153; 57 E.R. 62; 3 Digest 362, 35.
- (12) Morris v. Davies, (1837), 5 Cl. & Fin. 163; 7 E.R. 365; 3 Digest 359, 12.
- (13) Ginesi v. Ginesi, [1947] 2 All E.R. 438; 111 J.P. 521; affd., [1948] 1 All E.R. 373; [1948] P. 179; [1948] L.J.R. 892; 112 J.P. 194; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (14) Loveden v. Loveden, (1810), 2 Hag. Con. 1; 161 E.R. 648; 27 Digest 296, 2730.
- (15) Mordaunt v. Moncreiffe, (1874), L.R. 2 Sc. & Div. 374; 43 L.J.P. & M. 49; 30 L.T. 649; 39 J.P. 4; 27 Digest 384, 3770.

APPEAL by the husband from an order of the Court of Appeal ordering the re-trial of his petition for dissolution of marriage on the ground of his wife's adultery and CROSS-APPEAL by the wife.

Sir Godfrey Russell Vick, K.C., Mars-Jones and Scholfield for the husband. Middleton, K.C., and H. V. Brandon for the wife.

The House took time for consideration.

Dec. 14. The following opinions were read.

LORD SIMONDS: My Lords, your Lordships have to consider an appeal by the petitioner in a divorce suit whom I will call "the husband" and a cross-appeal by the respondent in that suit whom I will call "the wife." By his appeal the husband submits that an order of the Court of Appeal, so far as it directed that the cause should be re-heard, should be set aside and that in lieu thereof a decree for dissolution of his marriage with the wife should be made. The wife, by her cross-appeal, submits that the order of the Court of Appeal should be set aside and the judgment of Mr. Commissioner BLANCO WHITE, whereby the suit was dismissed, should be restored.

The husband was married to the wife on Apr. 14, 1941, at Brymbo in the county of Denbigh. Jean, a child of the marriage, was born on Apr. 15, 1942. On Aug. 13, 1946, a second child was born to the wife. The husband, alleging that this child was not his child and founding on the circumstances of his birth a charge of adultery against the wife, on Nov. 8, 1946, presented a petition to the High Court for the dissolution of his marriage. He alleged that the child was conceived at some date between Aug. 29, 1945, and Feb. 13, 1946, and that during the whole of that time he was without, but the wife was within, the United Kingdom, and that the child must, therefore, have been conceived as the result of an act of adultery. The petition was first heard by His Honour Commissioner BURGIS, who dismissed it. The husband appealed to the Court of Appeal and that court allowed the appeal on the ground that the commissioner had largely decided the case on evidence given by the wife which under the rule in Russell v. Russell (1) was inadmissible, set aside the order of the learned commissioner and directed the petition to be re-heard before another judge. I do not think it necessary to make any further reference to this first hearing.

The petition was re-heard on Mar. 24, 1949, by Mr. Commissioner BLANCO WHITE. On the evidence adduced before him the commissioner expressed himself as satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the husband was not in the United Kingdom between Aug. 17, 1945, and Feb. 9, 1946, and that the child born on Aug. 13, 1946, and weighing eight and a quarter pounds was, apparently, normal in every way and could not have been begotten as the result of intercourse on or after Feb. 9, 1946, the day on which the husband returned to the United Kingdom. The commissioner admitted in evidence certain letters written by the wife—to use his own words—“for what they were worth as evidence of conduct only, but not as evidence for any declarations in them bearing directly on the point whether the child born on Aug. 13, 1946, was legitimate or not.” It is clear that the commissioner was not influenced in favour of the husband by these letters, but came to the conclusions of fact which I have stated in spite, rather than because, of them. I do not propose to make any further reference to them except to say that they appear irrelevant to the issue which has now to be determined, and that, with great respect to the learned lords justices who thought otherwise, I can see nothing in their admission in the circumstances in which they were admitted which is fairly open to criticism. The question which then presented itself to the commissioner was whether the fact that at least three hundred and sixty days elapsed between the last possible intercourse between husband and wife and the birth of the child, together with the medical evidence, put it beyond reasonable doubt that the child was not the child of the husband. This question he answered in the negative. It is, I think, clear that he did not consider that he would be justified in finding that adultery had been committed merely on the ground of the lapse of time without medical evidence and he found the medical evidence that was adduced unsatisfactory.

The husband appealed from the order of the commissioner to the Court of Appeal, which, on July 22, 1949, set it aside and ordered that the cause be re-heard before a judge of the High Court if possible. From the order of the Court of Appeal this appeal and cross-appeal have been brought. BUCKNILL, L.J., with whom ASQUITH, L.J., agreed, expressed himself thus:

“The commissioner in his judgment said it appeared to be a pure question of law whether three hundred and sixty days is an impossible period without any satisfactory scientific evidence to that effect. I myself do not see the case in that light, but rather as a case where the court must balance the probabilities one against the other. On the one hand, there is a very great improbability, I will not put it any higher, of a woman, three hundred and sixty days after coitus, giving birth to a normal full-time child of eight and a quarter pounds without any difficult labour, and after a pregnancy which, according to the wife, was not unduly prolonged, but on the contrary was cut short. As against this high improbability one has the fact that the wife has put forward the case of a visit by the husband to her in November, a case which the commissioner has not accepted. If the matter rested there I should be in favour of allowing this appeal."

- A BUCKNILL, L.J., however, found in the admission of the letters to which I have referred a sufficient reason for ordering a re-hearing instead of granting a decree. I have already indicated that, in my opinion, the admission of the letters and the course taken in regard to them did not in any way prejudice the wife, and I do not think that BUCKNILL, L.J., was justified in the course that he took. It would appear from the passage that I have cited from his judgment that, apart from this consideration, he would have thought fit to grant a decree, notwithstanding the criticism of the medical or scientific evidence which had led to the commissioner refusing to do so. DENNING, L.J., dissented. He took the view that the child was obviously conceived in November, 1945, and once it was proved that the husband had not been in England since August the irresistible inference was that it was conceived in adultery. He said:

- C "In the absence of any evidence on the matter I should have thought that according to the ordinary knowledge of mankind a three hundred and sixty day normal baby is impossible, and the courts should not assert that it is possible unless there is direct medical evidence to that effect. None was produced in this case, nor in any other case so far as I know."

- D It appears, then, that DENNING, L.J., did not rely on any medical evidence that was given in the case, but thought proper to assume judicial knowledge of the material facts. This is what is intended by his reference to the "ordinary knowledge of mankind."

- E It is plain, that these appeals raise a question of peculiar difficulty, which I may state in this way: "If a husband proves that his wife has given birth to a normal child three hundred and sixty days after he could have had intercourse with her and no proof of any adulterous intercourse by her is given, what, if any, further evidence is required that the child is not his child?"
- F Let me first get one difficulty out of the way. A question was raised as to the standard of proof. The result of a finding of adultery in such a case as this is in effect to bastardise the child. That is a matter in which from time out of mind strict proof has been required. That does not mean, however, that a degree of proof is demanded such as in a scientific inquiry would justify the conclusion that such and such an event is impossible. In this context at least
- G no higher proof of a fact is demanded than that it is established beyond all reasonable doubt: see Head v. Head (2). To prove that a period of so many days between fruitful coition and the time of conception is in a scientific sense impossible is itself, I suppose, a scientific impossibility. The utmost that a court of law can demand is that it should be established beyond all reasonable doubt that a child conceived so many days after a particular coitus cannot be the result of that coitus. I would add that since writing this opinion I have had the advantage of reading that of my noble and learned friend, LORD MACDERMOTT, and concur in what he says on this matter.

- H The question, then, that I have posed resolves itself into two parts. First, is it permissible for the court to assume judicial knowledge that beyond all reasonable doubt a normal child born three hundred and sixty days after the last coitus between husband and wife is not the child of the husband? Secondly, if not, was there evidence in the present case which the learned commissioner should have accepted as justifying that conclusion? On the first question it has never, I think, been doubted that the court has judicial knowledge of the normal period of human gestation, though that period has from time to time been differently stated—e.g., two hundred and seventy to two hundred and seventy five days in Bosville v. A.-G. (3) (12 P.D. 183), two hundred and seventy three to two hundred and eighty days in Burnaby v.

Baillie (4) (42 Ch.D. 296). Two doubts, however, at once obtrude themselves. First, the word "normal" has been used, and the use of it suggests that there may be an abnormal period. Can the court altogether, and, if not altogether, within what limits, disregard the abnormal, and, fastening on the normal as that of which alone it has judicial knowledge, find as a fact that adultery has been committed if the period of gestation has been abnormal and no evidence to explain it has been adduced on one side or the other? Secondly, while the court has judicial knowledge of the normal period of gestation, i.e., the period between conception (by which I mean the union of the male and female cells), and birth, can it ignore the fact which in recent cases has been brought to its notice that there may be that interval between coitus and conception to which I have already referred. In other words, even assuming that the court could without evidence refuse to hold that a normal child was born three hundred and sixty days after conception, could it without evidence refuse to entertain the possibility of a thirty, sixty or ninety day interval between coitus and conception? These doubts that I have raised are, of course, different aspects of the same problem.

I have great sympathy with the view expressed by DENNING, L.J. It would, I think, appear a fantastic suggestion to any ordinary man or woman that a normal child born three hundred and sixty days after the last intercourse of a man and a woman was the child of that man, and it is to me repugnant that a court of justice should be so little in accord with the common notions of mankind that it should require evidence to displace fantastic suggestions. As so often occurs in human affairs, however, the difficulty lies in drawing the line. I cannot disregard the fact that in Gaskill v. Gaskill (5), VISCOUNT BIRKENHEAD, L.C., held that in the then state of medical knowledge a period of three hundred and thirty one days could not be regarded as impossible; that in Wood v. Wood (6) LORD MERRIMAN, P., in the absence of any medical evidence came to the same conclusion in regard to a period of three hundred and forty-six days; and that in Hadlum v. Hadlum (7) a period of no less than three hundred and forty-nine days was not regarded as impossible. I must, I think, however reluctantly, come to the conclusion that an additional period of eleven days, making three hundred and sixty days in all, ought not to be regarded as making the vital difference so that the court can without any further evidence regard adulterous intercourse as proved beyond all reasonable doubt. I do not ignore that in M.-T. v. M.-T. & Official Solicitor (8), ORMEROD, J., held that a lapse of three hundred and forty days between coitus and the birth of a normal healthy baby was impossible, but he did so on the evidence of Sir Eardley Holland, a distinguished specialist in this branch of medicine, who said that he had never heard of an authentic case of an interval of twenty-one days between coitus and fertilisation such as had been suggested as a possibility in Gaskill v. Gaskill (5) before modern methods of examination were available, or even of an interval of fourteen days which had been referred to in Hadlum v. Hadlum (7).

I come, then, to the second branch of the question that I posed which concerns the evidence in this case. It is clearly a matter which may be of importance in other cases also. Your Lordships would, I think, regard it as undesirable that the burden should be imposed on litigants in this class of case of adducing evidence of the character which in Gaskill v. Gaskill (5), VISCOUNT BIRKENHEAD, L.C., thought it expedient for the Attorney-General to call for the assistance of the court. That may be unavoidable where medical evidence in regard to the period is called by the respondent; there is nothing to prevent a case becoming the battle-ground of experts. I am dealing, however, with such a case as that out of which this appeal arises, in which the substantial issue between the parties was whether the husband had, at what was considered the relevant times, any opportunity of intercourse with his wife and no question of an abnormal period of gestation had been raised until the trial and then only by the commissioner himself.

A In this case the only medical evidence was that of William Glyn Evans whose qualifications were M.D., Edinburgh, and a Diploma of Public Health. He was, it seems, a general practitioner, but there was no evidence of his age or experience. He did not attend the mother in childbirth, but first saw her when he examined the baby on Oct. 12, 1946. He formed the view (which is not contested) that the child was a normal full-time child at birth, and, being told that he was born on Aug. 13, 1946, he expressed the opinion that the "probable date of conception was on or about Nov. 6, 1945." He added: "But allowing for an extension, say of twenty days—it has been known—it would bring it to the second or third week of October." There was some confusion what was the extension which he regarded as possible, but at a late stage in his evidence he made it clear. "What I mean," he said, "when I say twenty days is that you allow twenty days for the gestation. The usual gestation is two hundred and eighty days, but it has been known to go to three hundred days." He gave the latest day of conception as Nov. 6, and said it would be "very extraordinary" if the child was conceived after that date. At the end of his examination-in-chief the commissioner himself intervened and I think it asked to set out the material questions and answers. The commissioner asked:

"Q.—What you are saying is that after a woman becomes pregnant her periods might go on? A.—That is so occasionally. Once or twice it has been known they do have periods afterwards. Q.—Is it possible for the live spermatozoa to get tucked away in some crevice in the vagina or the mouth of the uterus? A.—Or in the tubes. But then you do not get a natural . . . Q.—Spermatozoa do live a very long time do not they? A.—Yes, as long as they are in the body, yes. Q.—Are there not any crevices in the vagina and the mouth of the womb where spermatozoa might lodge? A.—No, my Lord, because the secretions would destroy the spermatozoa after a time. They would live in the fallopian tube which is a tube going from the uterus to the ovary. They do sometimes live there and develop and you get a pregnancy in the tube, but in the vagina they would not live more than a few days at the most. Q.—I have heard Sir Bernard Spilisbury speak about a case where he found the corpse of a woman who had been drowned for three weeks with live spermatozoa in the vagina. You say that could not happen in a live woman? A.—I should think it could, but I should think it would be very unlikely that it would ever get into the uterus."

This matter was not pursued in cross-examination by counsel for the wife, but at the end of the re-examination the commissioner again intervened:

G "Q.—What is the maximum period in your view from the time of sexual intercourse to the time of the impregnation of the ovum? A.—I cannot give an opinion on that. I should think a few hours, but I have never studied that aspect."

H The question, as I see it, is whether the court ought to accept this evidence as adequate to justify a finding that beyond all reasonable doubt the child was not the child of the husband. I have no hesitation in answering this question in the affirmative. I do not say that the onus probandi shifts because the period is not a "normal" one, but I think that the onus is a light one and is easily discharged when the period diverges largely from the normal. Here the court had the advantage of hearing a medical practitioner whose training and everyday working practice must have made him familiar with the ordinary problems of gestation and birth. He had not studied the problem of the "maximum period from the time of sexual intercourse to the time of the impregnation of the ovum," but it is sufficiently clear from his earlier answers that, while recognising the possibility of some interval between coitus and fertilisation, he regarded as impossible an interval which would defer the birth of a normal child to three hundred and sixty days after coitus. That he was, I think, entitled to say as a matter of competent medical opinion without having made a special study of the subject. In these circumstances the commissioner was not, I think, justified in disregarding his evidence. He was, as I have said, entitled as a matter of judicial knowledge to know that, just as there is a "normal" period of gestation, so there are "abnormal" cases. He was not entitled, however, to set his own view of possible or probable abnormality, whether derived from the decided cases or from other sources, against the evidence that he heard. If, indeed, it had been legitimate for him to do so, I do not understand how he could disregard the evidence given by Sir Eardley Holland in M.-T. v. M.-T. & Official Solicitor (8). In my opinion, therefore, the commissioner, having found the facts as I have already stated them, should have acted on the medical evidence that was given in the case and made a decree for divorce. I move that the appeal of the husband be allowed, the cross-appeal of the wife dismissed, and the cause be remitted to the High Court in order that the proper decree may be made.

LORD NORMAND: My Lords, this is an action of divorce on the ground of adultery. The husband is the petitioner. There has been already one re-trial and the Court of Appeal has by a majority ordered a second re-trial. Against this order the husband has appealed and the wife has cross-appealed. Both parties are anxious to avoid a second re-trial, the husband maintaining that on the evidence he is entitled to a decree nisi of dissolution of the marriage, and the wife maintaining that the judgment of the commissioner dismissing the action should be restored. DENNING, L.J., dissented in the Court of Appeal and was prepared to grant a decree nisi. The majority, BUCKNILL, L.J., and ASQUITH, L.J., would have been in favour of granting a decree, but found it difficult to do so because certain letters written by the wife, from which an inference unfavourable to her might be drawn, had been read to the commissioner without the wife's having had an opportunity of explaining them. The reason for that was that counsel were restrained from putting questions lest they should be thought to infringe the rule laid down in Russell v. Russell (1). BUCKNILL, L.J., and ASQUITH, L.J., were, I think, influenced in favour of ordering a new trial by the expectation that the rule would be abrogated by legislation before a new trial could take place. I respectfully agree with the Court of Appeal that it would be unjust to the wife to allow these letters to be used against her. If it is possible, however, without injustice to either party to arrive at a decision of the case on the other evidence, leaving the letters altogether out of account, that is the course which ought to be taken. For a second re-trial would be a hardship both for the husband and for the wife, and it might work injustice because the lapse of time since the events to be investigated might result in loss of evidence.

The salient facts are simple. On Aug. 13, 1946, the wife gave birth without prolonged or difficult labour to a normal full-term child weighing eight and a quarter pounds. The commissioner was satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the husband was abroad from Aug. 17, 1945, till Feb. 9, 1946, and that the wife was throughout that period resident in this country. There is no evidence against the wife of any suspicious relations with any other man or of any looseness of conduct or that she was anything but a respectable and hard-working woman. The submission for the husband is that the child, born on Aug. 13, 1946, must have been conceived in adultery. His counsel relied on the child's weight and development at birth, the date of the birth three hundred and sixty days after the husband's departure from this country in August, 1945, and six months after his return, and the evidence of Dr. Evans a general practitioner who examined the child on Oct. 12, 1946. He relied also on the way in which the defence had been conducted. The last matter may be conveniently dealt with at this stage. The wife at the trial adduced certain witnesses to speak to a visit paid to her by the husband in the late autumn of 1945. The dates given by the witnesses are vague, but there can be no doubt that the purpose in adducing them was to show that the husband and the wife were, or might have been, together at a date which would naturally account for the child's birth on Aug. 13, 1946. This evidence was disbelieved by the commissioner. It was said also that the case had been conducted by the wife on the footing that the only question was whether the wife and the husband might have been together in October or November, 1945. This is, however, a point on which the recollection of counsel to some extent differed and I would, therefore, disregard it.

In divorce proceedings it is for the petitioner to prove the case whether the action is defended or not, and though the putting forward of a false defence may destroy the respondent's credibility that in itself does not establish the truth of the petitioner's case. Apart from that objection of principle, it would in the circumstances of this case be unjust to the wife to infer or assume that the false defence is tantamount to an admission of guilt. If it is possible that a child may be born three hundred and sixty days after coitus and if that was what had, indeed, happened, the departure from the normal course of things is so extraordinary that the mother, conscious of innocence but believing herself the victim of a sport of nature, might, despairing of establishing the true defence, allow herself to palter with the truth, and might induce others closely connected with her to lend themselves to prevarication or worse. If it is proper to exclude the letters written by the wife and the way in which the case was conducted, there remains the evidence of the dates of birth and of the husband's absence and the evidence of Dr. Evans.

The possibility that a full-term child born on Aug. 13, 1946, could have been the fruit of a coitus which took place as late as Feb. 9, 1946, may be disregarded. I do not think that evidence is required to prove that that is not possible, but, if it is required, it is given by Dr. Evans who says that the latest date of conception of this child according to the date of its birth and its weight was Nov. 6, 1945. Accordingly, the only question is whether the child could be the result of a coitus which took place as early as Aug. 17, 1945, or three hundred and sixty days before birth. If the only period to be considered were the period of gestation, I have myself no doubt that ordinary men and women would unhesitatingly say that a three hundred and sixty days gestation is beyond the limits of what is possible, and a court of law could so decide without evidence. So far, at least, judicial knowledge may be allowed to reach. In this case Dr. Evans gave evidence in answer to a question put to him by the commissioner that the ultimate, by which he meant the earliest, date of conception was about Oct. 23, 1945. If evidence were required, there it is.

It appears from the cases cited by the commissioner and the Court of Appeal that the Divorce Court has in the present century entertained the question whether before impregnation there may not be a period during which the spermatozoa after insemination may maintain life in the female genital tract and after an indefinite lapse of time enter the uterus and impregnate the ovum.

This new aspect of the rule pater est quem nuptiae demonstrant has given rise to great difficulties, which have hitherto been solved by evidence in each particular case. The evidence in other cases, of course, cannot competently be used in this case, but it is unsatisfactory to find that in one case (Hadlum v. Hadlum (7)), three hundred and forty-nine days were found not to be too long, and that in another case (M.-T. v. M.-T. & Official Solicitor (8)), in the same year three hundred and forty days were found to be excessive. This was the result of the differing evidence of medical men in the two cases. When doctors disagree the courts cannot claim such judicial knowledge about the viability of spermatozoa in the female body and the limit of time after which they would be unable to enter the uterus as would enable them to fix the precise time after coitus within which conception can take place and beyond which it cannot take place. In Wood v. Wood (6), LORD MERRIMAN, P., said ([1947] 2 All E.R. 96):

"It may be said to be impossible to know where to draw the line, yet it can plainly be seen that one case or another must be on the wrong side of any line that can possibly be drawn."

In Williamson v. McClelland (9), a filiation case, the Lord President (LORD DUNEDIN) said (1913 S.C. 680) that in such a case he thought himself entitled to consider the possible duration of gestation.

"in the light of what had been said by learned judges in other cases and of what one knows to be the opinion of experts as disclosed in medical books," and not to restrict himself to the evidence of the single medical witness in the case. I am satisfied that the Lord President would not have allowed himself this latitude in an action of divorce, for Scottish law has always allowed in filiation cases a latitude of probation which it has not allowed even in ordinary actions. His conclusion, however, is of interest in the present case for it deals with the issue of proof or disproof of paternity on general lines and agrees closely with the opinion of LORD MERRIMAN. The Lord President said (ibid.):

"It is absolutely clear that neither in law nor in medical science is it possible to fix an actual number of days as the extreme period of gestation. In certain systems of law the matter has been dealt with by statute, and a limit has been arbitrarily fixed, but in our system there is no such limit. That does not lead to the conclusion that a period might not be submitted to the consideration of the court of such length that the court would refuse to hold that the parentage had been proved. The court is left free to deal with each case as it occurs."

In another Scottish case, Gray v. Gray (10), LORD BLACKBURN thought that the onus should be on the defendant to prove that a gestation of three hundred and thirty-one days was possible. It will be observed that in these two cases it was the period of gestation that was being considered, and so far as I am aware the Scottish courts have not specifically had to consider whether there might be a period between coitus and conception nor how long such a period might be.

I have felt great doubt whether the House ought not to say that, though it is not possible to draw the line at an actual number of days, three hundred and sixty days is too long a period, unless evidence of medical knowledge is adduced by the wife to show the contrary. We have, however, the testimony of Dr. Evans, and it is, in my judgment, sufficient for the disposal of the case. I can deal with it briefly because it has already been analysed by LORD SIMONDS. The doctor said that the spermatozoa could not live in the vagina for more than a few days and still be able to enter the uterus. In answer to a further question he said that he was not able to say what was the maximum period which might elapse between coitus and impregnation because he had never studied that aspect. Because he gave this answer the commissioner treated his evidence as valueless and indicated that he would not be satisfied by anything short of the evidence of an "academic specialist." I think that the commissioner has misunderstood Dr. Evans. A medical man may not know what the maximum period may be and yet be able to say that according to existing medical knowledge and belief it cannot be more than a few days. That, I think, is the effect of Dr. Evans' testimony. In the Court of Appeal BUCKNILL, L.J., said:

"Surely the practical experience of a general medical practitioner is likely to give him a valuable working knowledge of what is normal in such cases, and if he has never known of a case where spermatozoa remain alive and fertile in the female for over two months before fertilising the ovum such an absence of experience has a definite practical value."

A This observation of the learned lord justice is, if anything, an understatement of the effect of the authorities. In Gaskill v. Gaskill (5) VISCOUNT BIRKENHEAD, L.C., stated the principle on which a judge should act in coming to a conclusion of fact on the possible duration of the period between coitus and birth. He had considered first the relevant authorities, and, in particular, the opinion of the judges in the Banbury Peerage Case (11), and the judgment of LORD LYNDHURST, L.C., in Morris v. Davies (12), from which he made extensive citations which it is needless to repeat. He summed up the result thus ([1921] P. 434):

"I can only find her guilty if I come to the conclusion that it is impossible, having regard to the present state of medical knowledge and belief, that the petitioner can be the father of the child."

C The existing state of medical science and belief is the standard which has been since applied. In M.-T. v. M.-T. & Official Solicitor (8), the evidence of the medical witness spoke of what happens "as a rule" and "normally" and of the absence of his knowledge of any case in which so long a period as twenty-one days had elapsed between coitus and impregnation. That evidence rightly, in my opinion, satisfied the learned judge who tried the case.

D In the present case the commissioner, if he had proceeded on the evidence and not on his own speculations of what may be possible, and if he had not misdirected himself that he should not be satisfied without the evidence of a scientist, could not reasonably have arrived at any other conclusion than that the child was not the child of the husband. There can be no suggestion that the wife's case has been prejudiced by excluding from consideration the letters written by her or the false defence put forward to her. There can, therefore, be no injustice to her on that score in granting a decree nisi. I am for allowing the appeal and granting to the husband the remedy for which he petitions.

LORD OAKSEY: My Lords, the wife has twice been successful in the courts of first instance and now for the first time she is by your Lordships' House to be found guilty of adultery and her child is, in effect, to be bastardised.

F She is a wife against whose marital conduct nothing has been said or suggested except that her child was born three hundred and sixty days after her husband had access to her. In such circumstances the law, as I understand it, has always been that the onus on the husband in a divorce petition for adultery is as heavy as the onus which rests on the prosecution in criminal cases. That onus is generally described as being a duty to prove guilt beyond reasonable

G doubt, but what is reasonable doubt is always difficult to decide and varies in practice according to the nature of the case and the punishment which may be awarded. The principle on which this rule of proof depends is that it is better that many criminals should be acquitted than that one innocent person should be convicted. The onus in such a case as the present, however, is founded, not solely on such considerations, but on the interest of the child and the H interest of the State in matters of legitimacy since the decision involves not only the wife's chastity and status but in effect the legitimacy of her child: see Russell v. Russell (1).

This appeal not only involves the application of the rule of proof in such a case as the present. It also involves difficult questions as to the facts of which the court should take judicial notice. The cases to which reference has already been made have decided that the birth of a child many days after the normal period of gestation and up to as many as three hundred and forty-nine days after access of the husband did not prove adultery. It is important, I think, to consider carefully what taking judicial notice of facts means. It cannot, in my opinion, mean assuming the truth of a fact in issue, for that would be to beg the question. Doubtless there are some facts almost universally accepted of which, if not denied and put in issue, the court can take judicial notice, but it is essential to be certain of the fact of which you assume the truth. As LORD SIMONDS has pointed out, to take judicial notice of the fact that the normal period of gestation is two hundred and seventy or two hundred and eighty days, apart from its own vagueness, affords little or no assistance when the question is what is the greatest abnormal period of gestation. In one sense the court takes judicial notice of the decisions in other cases, but it does not, unless bound by the decisions, assume their correctness. As to the evidence given and the facts found therein the court, no doubt, takes notice of the fact that the evidence was given and certain facts were found, but not in the strict sense of taking judicial notice or assuming that they are correct. In the present case it was the main question in issue whether the wife's child was the result of an abnormal period between coitus and birth, and the court could not, in my opinion, assume judicial knowledge of the length of that period nor is your Lordships' House bound by the decisions in the cases cited on the possible length of that period. On the other hand, it seems to me that great weight must be attached to the decision of VISCOUNT BIRKENHEAD, L.C., in Gaskill v. Gaskill (5), proceeding as it did on medical evidence specially called by the Attorney-General. DENNING, L.J., in the Court of Appeal, took judicial notice of other matters—which he described as the facts of nature—which appear to me to conflict with these decisions and of which I, at any rate, have no knowledge.

In my opinion, it is necessary, as VISCOUNT BIRKENHEAD, L.C., held, for a husband or the court in such a petition as the present to call medical evidence that the child could not, according to the medical opinion of the day, be the child of the husband. The question is, therefore, whether such evidence was called in this case. The evidence of Dr. Evans did not satisfy the commissioner and I must say does not satisfy me. Even in a criminal case, apart altogether from any question of legitimacy, if such evidence had been given in a case entirely dependent on medical considerations, I should not have allowed the case to go to the jury.

The question in this case and the question in the cases above referred to was whether there are abnormal cases in which birth may take place many days beyond the ordinary period of gestation either because spermatozoa can live after coitus and before conception or for other unspecified reasons. It is a question of medical science on which I imagine much must have been written and many opinions held by the most eminent medical authorities. Yet Dr. Evans does not refer to any authorities and when asked: "What is the maximum period, in your view, from the time of sexual intercourse to the time of the impregnation of the ovum?" he answered, "I cannot give an opinion on that, my Lord. I should think a few hours, but I have never studied that aspect, my Lord." Now that aspect was in this case, as it must have been in the other cases in which a period of three hundred and thirty-one days to three hundred and forty-nine days between coitus and birth was in question, the crucial aspect of the matter, and to hold that such evidence discharges the onus which rests on the prosecution in criminal cases or on any party who seeks to prove illegitimacy is, in my respectful opinion, to depart altogether from the practice in such cases. If a man wishes to divorce his wife and to stigmatise with bastardy her child born during their marriage it seems to me a small thing to require that he should call a medical witness who has an opinion on the main question at issue. Such cases as this do not arise every day and if there were any case of real hardship from the point of view of expense I think the court should call expert evidence as VISCOUNT BIRKENHEAD, L.C., did, but in the present case, the husband having already failed at two hearings, I am in favour of allowing the cross-appeal and dismissing his petition.

LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON: My Lords, in my view, the commissioner ought to have granted to the appellant a decree nisi for the dissolution of his marriage on the ground of the adultery of the respondent with a man unknown.

- A The husband called evidence which satisfied the commissioner that the husband was not in this country between Aug. 17, 1945, and Feb. 9, 1946. He also called the midwife who attended the wife when she gave birth to a male child at 8.15 a.m. on Aug. 13, 1946. The commissioner clearly accepted the uncontradicted evidence of the midwife that the child was a full-time child weighing eight pounds, four ounces, that the child was a normal one and that there was no question of the child being "forced into the world." He was satisfied that the child could not have been the result of intercourse between the husband and the wife in February, 1946. There remained only two possibilities—that the child was the result of intercourse between the husband and the wife three hundred and sixty days before his birth, or that the wife committed adultery during her husband's absence from this country.
- B In addition to the evidence just mentioned, the husband called Dr. Evans, whose evidence has already been set out by LORD SIMONDS. Apart from formal questions as to her name and address, the wife was asked only one question by her counsel: "Have you ever committed adultery?" and she answered: "No, sir." Three witnesses were called on her behalf, her mother, her sister and a Mr. Mulhern, and they gave evidence to the effect that the husband was home on leave between August and Christmas, 1945. The commissioner did not believe the evidence of these three witnesses.
- C What was the burden of proof upon the husband, and did he discharge it by the evidence to which I have briefly referred? Section 178 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, in the form which it now takes by reason of s. 4 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, provides, so far as material, that:
- D

- E "(1) On a petition for divorce it shall be the duty of the court to inquire, so far as it reasonably can, into the facts alleged and whether there has been any connivance or condonation on the part of the petitioner and whether any collusion exists between the parties and also to inquire into any countercharge which is made against the petitioner. (2) If the court is satisfied on the evidence that—(i) the case for the petition has been proved . . . the court shall pronounce a decree of divorce . . ."
- F

- In Ginesi v. Ginesi (13) the Court of Appeal, after a survey of the authorities, held that a petitioner must prove adultery "beyond reasonable doubt." In my view, the burden of proof is certainly no heavier than this, and counsel for the husband did not contend that it was any lighter. Assuming that this burden lay on the husband, did he discharge it? The husband proved that the birth took place three hundred and sixty days after the end of his leave in August, 1945, and that the birth was a normal one. If one adds to this the evidence of Dr. Evans, I am of opinion that the husband amply discharged the burden of proof on him. I would add that the commissioner did not say that he believed the wife's statement that she had never committed adultery. He dismissed the petition because, as he said: "I am not satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that adultery has been committed." I think that he applied the right test, but that he ought to have been so satisfied.
- G
- H

Certain letters written by the wife were read to the commissioner and were considered by the Court of Appeal. BUCKNILL, L.J., said:

"They seem to me to be adverse to her credibility and tend to prove that her husband was not the father of her child."

I see no reason to differ from this observation, but I have entirely disregarded these letters in forming my conclusion in this case, as your Lordships have heard no argument as to whether they were or were not admissible in evidence. Counsel for the husband was content to submit that the case was proved without them.

So much for the case now before your Lordships' House, but I go further, in the hope that my views may meet with your Lordships' approval and may be of assistance in other cases. In my opinion, the court is entitled to take judicial notice of the fact that the normal period from fruitful coitus to birth does not exceed two hundred and eighty days. That is one of the ordinary facts of nature as to which no evidence is required. If a husband proves that a child has been born three hundred and sixty days after he last had an opportunity of intercourse with his wife and that the birth was a normal one, and if no expert evidence is called by either side, I am of opinion that the husband has proved his case beyond reasonable doubt. As to the possible period of time between coitus and conception, to which the commissioner attached so much importance, if evidence is given in any case hereafter that this period may be substantial, it will, of course, be duly taken into account by the judge before whom it is given. In the present case I cannot find that any evidence was given which should have raised any reasonable doubt in the mind of the commissioner, and if it had been legitimate for him to consider the latest medical evidence in any reported case, the evidence of Sir Eardley Holland, a past president of the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists and consulting gynaecologist to the London Hospital, is to be found in M.-T. v. M.-T. & Official Solicitor (8) ([1949] P. 332). Sir Eardley said, inter alia, that the spermatozoa did not as a rule remain capable of effecting fertilisation for more than two or three days after being deposited in the female genital tract. Fertilisation normally took place at the time of insemination, that is, of coitus, and he had never heard of an authentic case of an interval of fourteen days between coitus and fertilisation which had been referred to in the evidence given in Hadlum v. Hadlum, Sir Eardley's evidence certainly gives no support to the theory that an interval of three hundred and sixty days between coitus and birth is even a remote possibility.

The burden of proving adultery is, of course, on the petitioner, but there must surely come a time when a husband is entitled to say: "Having regard to the ordinary course of nature and to the interval between intercourse and birth, there is no reasonable doubt that my wife has committed adultery. It is for her to raise a reasonable doubt, if she can, by calling expert evidence." I am glad to note that this view coincides with the view expressed by LORD BLACKBURN in the Scottish case of Gray v. Gray (10). It may be said: "If three hundred and sixty days is enough, why not three hundred and fifty, three hundred and forty, three hundred and thirty, or three hundred and twenty days, or less?" For my part, I think that in the absence of any expert evidence on either side, an interval of three hundred and twenty days should be enough to satisfy the court. I select that particular interval because I think that forty days beyond the upper limit of the normal period puts the matter beyond reasonable doubt, if the birth is proved to be a normal one and no further evidence is offered on either side. Evidence of loose conduct on the part of the wife might well lead a court to regard a shorter interval, coupled with such evidence, as proving adultery beyond reasonable doubt.

There are, however, cases in which a longer interval than three hundred and twenty days has been held insufficient to prove adultery. In Gaskill v. Gaskill (5) the interval was three hundred and thirty-one days. VISCOUNT BIRKENHEAD, L.C., who tried the case sitting as a judge of first instance, said, in regard to the wife ([1921] P. 434):

"I can only find her guilty if I come to the conclusion that it is impossible, having regard to the present state of medical knowledge and belief, that the petitioner can be the father of the child. The expert evidence renders it manifest that there is no such impossibility. In these circumstances I accept the evidence of the respondent, and find that she has not committed adultery, and accordingly I dismiss the petition."

A In Gaskill v. Gaskill (5) the birth was far from being a normal one, but I think that VISCOUNT BIRKENHEAD, L.C., placed too heavy a burden of proof on the husband. It is not the law to-day, in my view, and with all respect to VISCOUNT BIRKENHEAD, L.C., I do not think it was the law in 1921, that a husband is bound to prove that he cannot possibly be the father of the child, and I do not think that Morris v. Davies (12), cited by VISCOUNT BIRKENHEAD, L.C., established the strict rule which he laid down. In Wood v. Wood (6) the interval between cohabitation and birth was three hundred and forty-six days and in Hadlum v. Hadlum (7) it was three hundred and forty-nine days. In each of these cases the court refused the husband a decree, and I gather that in each case the court took the view that the husband must prove that he could not possibly have been the father of the child. In M.-T. v. M.-T. & Official Solicitor (8), ORMEROD, J., had to try an issue as to the paternity of a child born three hundred and forty days after the husband had gone overseas. C Medical evidence was given which satisfied the judge that the husband could not have been the father of the child. The judge said nothing as to the burden of proof, and I think that his decision was beyond criticism.

D I have already stated my view as to the position when no expert evidence is given on either side. When such evidence is given it must, of course, be weighed with care to ascertain whether the husband has proved his case beyond reasonable doubt. I think that the cases of Gaskill v. Gaskill (5), Wood v. Wood (6), and Hadlum v. Hadlum (7), put an unwarranted and increasing burden on a husband who seeks to prove his wife's adultery. If these decisions were right, a husband would have to incur the expense of calling expert medical evidence in every case in which a child was born to his wife ten months or more after he last had intercourse with her. And even if he did call such evidence, absolute impossibility is a matter which is almost, if not quite, incapable of proof. I agree with the motion proposed from the Woolsack. E

LORD MACDERMOTT: My Lords, I do not find anything to further the husband's appeal either in the letters written by the wife or in the manner in which her case was conducted at the re-trial. Excluding these matters and F excluding also, as one must on the undisputed findings of the commissioner, any possibility of the husband having had access to his wife between Aug. 17, 1945, and Feb. 9, 1946, or of the child being conceived on or after the latter date, the evidence relevant to the appeal and cross-appeal is confined to— (a) that establishing the fact that the wife was delivered of a normal full-term child, without unusual difficulty, on Aug. 13, 1946, or three hundred and sixty G days after the last relevant opportunity of intercourse with her husband; (b) the medical testimony adduced by the husband; and (c) the wife's denial of adultery.

H The duty of the court on hearing a petition for divorce is, in so far as material, to pronounce a decree if "satisfied on the evidence" that the case for the petition has been proved, and to dismiss the petition if not so satisfied: see s. 178 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, as amended by s. 4 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937. The standard of proof to be observed by the court in exercising this jurisdiction was the subject of controversy in the present case. For the husband it was accepted that the adultery alleged had to be proved beyond reasonable doubt. For the wife, on the other hand, it was submitted that, as the result of a finding of adultery would, in effect, be to bastardise the child, the petitioner, in order to succeed, would have to go further and show that it was impossible for him to be the father. This, in my opinion, is putting the onus too high. Though VISCOUNT BIRKENHEAD, L.C., in Gaskill v. Gaskill (5) said ([1921] P. 434):

“ I can only find her guilty if I come to the conclusion that it is impossible, having regard to the present state of medical knowledge and belief, that the petitioner can be the father of the child,”

I do not think he intended to set up the proposition advanced here on behalf of the wife. VISCOUNT BIRKENHEAD, L.C., had previously indicated his unqualified acceptance of the views expressed by LORD LYNDBURST, L.C., in Morris v. Davies (12), and I do not find in that case or in the Banbury Peerage Case (11), also referred to by VISCOUNT BIRKENHEAD, L.C., warrant for the contention put forward by the wife. The evidence must, no doubt, be clear and satisfactory, beyond a mere balance of probabilities, and conclusive in the sense that it will satisfy what SIR WILLIAM SCOTT described in Loveden v. Loveden (14), as “ the guarded discretion of a reasonable and just man,” but these desiderata appear to me entirely consistent with the acceptance of proof beyond reasonable doubt as the standard required. Such, in my opinion, is the standard required by the statute. If a judge is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt as to the commission of the matrimonial offence relied upon by a petitioner as ground for divorce, he must surely be “ satisfied ” within the meaning of the enactment, and no less so in cases of adultery where the circumstances are such as to involve the paternity of a child.

On the other hand, I am unable to subscribe to the view which, though not propounded here, has had its adherents, namely, that on its true construction the word “ satisfied ” is capable of connoting something less than proof beyond reasonable doubt. The jurisdiction in divorce involves the status of the parties and the public interest requires that the marriage bond shall not be set aside lightly or without strict inquiry. The terms of the statute recognise this plainly, and I think it would be quite out of keeping with the anxious nature of its provisions to hold that the court might be “ satisfied,” in respect of a ground for dissolution, with something less than proof beyond reasonable doubt. I should, perhaps, add that I do not base my conclusions as to the appropriate standard of proof on any analogy drawn from the criminal law. I do not think it is possible to say, at any rate since the decision of this House in Mordaunt v. Moncreiffe (15), that the two jurisdictions are other than distinct. The true reason, as it seems to me, why both accept the same general standard—proof beyond reasonable doubt—lies not in any analogy, but in the gravity and public importance of the issues with which each is concerned.

The next question is whether the commissioner should have been satisfied, on the material to which I have referred, that the wife had committed adultery. I agree that he should. To get to the real issue it will be convenient to refer first to several connected matters in order to get them out of the way. The commissioner applied the correct standard of proof and kept it before him throughout. He also kept in mind that the wife had denied on oath that she had committed adultery, but he does not say that he accepted her denial, and I think it is clear from his judgment that the doubts which led him to dismiss the petition arose on the husband's case, and that, had it been fortified with the expert testimony which the commissioner found lacking, he would not have regarded the denial as sufficient to prevail against it. Further, it is plain that the commissioner was satisfied that the period of actual gestation was normal. This, and what was for him the real point of difficulty, are indicated clearly in the passage in his judgment where he says:

“ I have no reasonable doubt that the ovum from which that child was produced was impregnated somewhere about the normal period before that child was born. The doubt in my mind is as to the period which is the longest period that is practicable between the time of coitus and the time of impregnation of the ovum, and that is a scientific question."

A Had Dr. Evans, the husband's medical witness, sworn that he had made a scientific study of that particular question and that the period between a fruitful coition and the resulting conception must, at longest, be a matter of weeks and not of months, then, as I understand his judgment, the commissioner would have been relieved of his doubt and would have given a decree, for the interval running from Aug. 17, 1945, to the date of conception was one of between two and three months on any reckoning. Dr. Evans, however, did not speak in those terms and it is obvious that the commissioner did not regard his testimony of value on the point that was troubling him. As he says in his judgment:

B "I do not know how long spermatozoa will remain alive in the tucks and crannies of the female genital tract. I have got no medical evidence on the subject."

C Counsel for the husband challenged the ruling of the commissioner on two main grounds. First, he said that the evidence of Dr. Evans (who admittedly is a competent general practitioner and a credible witness) proved enough to preclude any reasonable doubt on the point on which the husband's case founded. And, secondly, he submitted that what he contended was the impossibility of a normal child being born three hundred and sixty days after coition was a fact of which judicial notice ought to be taken. After a careful
D consideration of Dr. Evans' testimony I am satisfied that the first of these contentions is sound. Dr. Evans gave the probable date of conception as on or about Nov. 6, 1945, and was not asked anything by counsel, either in his examination-in-chief or on cross-examination, as to an interval between connection and fertilisation. His answers on that subject were made to questions asked by the commissioner. This part of the evidence I need not repeat. It
E has already been set out in the opinion just delivered by LORD SIMONDS. I entirely agree with what he has said regarding the substance and effect of this testimony, and, in particular, its adequacy, in the circumstances of this case, as proof beyond reasonable doubt that the husband was not the father of the child. I would only add two observations. One is that I find nothing in the authorities to suggest that, in the present state of knowledge on this
F particular matter, the final and convincing word must necessarily be that of "an academic specialist"—the term used by the commissioner—to the exclusion of medical evidence based on practical experience and the learning and literature of the profession on the subject. The other is that Dr. Evans' last answer—that in which he replied with a diffident: "I should think a few hours", when asked as to the maximum interval between intercourse and impregnation—
G has to be read with his earlier answers; and from those I take it to have been his definite opinion that spermatozoa would not live long in the genital tract on account of its secretions, and that if they survived for as much as three weeks they would be very unlikely ever to get into the uterus. The result, in my opinion, must be that, even if one were to discard the witness's "few hours" as hesitant, the maximum period that could be substituted, therefore,
H would, at most, be one of weeks and not months.

As this conclusion is enough to dispose of the appeal and cross-appeal I do not propose to deal at length with the second and, as it seems to me, more difficult submission advanced on behalf of the husband. Apart from the medical evidence altogether, was his case proved beyond reasonable doubt by the normal delivery of a normal child three hundred and sixty days after the relevant coition? There is no doubt that judicial notice will be taken of the fact that, in the ordinary course of nature, delivery occurs in or about nine months after fruitful intercourse. And it is, I think, no less clear that judicial notice will also be taken of the fact that the normal period is not always followed in nature and that the actual period may on occasion be considerably less or considerably more, but the law of this country has not fixed limits of deviation from the normal period in the sense that more than a certain period or less than a certain period is to be deemed impossible, or impossible until the contrary is proved. The question which then arises—I refer from now on only to periods longer than the normal—is whether the court, without instruction on the matter, may ever regard an abnormally long period as impossible and, if so, at what point of time this may be done. I do not think it open to doubt that a time must come when, with the period far in excess of the normal, the court may properly regard its length as proving the wife's adultery beyond reasonable doubt, and decree accordingly. As has so often been pointed out, the difficulty is to know where to draw the line. The reported cases naturally tend to creep up on each other and there is little sound guidance to be gleaned from authority. If a line has to be drawn I think it should be drawn so as to allow an ample and generous margin, for it may be as difficult for the wife to prove a freak of nature as for anyone else, and it need hardly be added that before acting on the length of the period due regard must be paid to any other relevant evidence. I do not, however, find it possible to go further and lay down any hard and fast rule capable of general application. In my opinion, there is nothing in the testimony here, or in the facts of which judicial notice may be taken, to justify fixing a specific period and holding that, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, anything more would, but anything less would not, prove adultery beyond reasonable doubt. If, in the light of a full and exhaustive inquiry, the line could be thus fixed, it might well be that the period of three hundred and sixty days would come near or even cross it. However that may be, I am not prepared to decide this case merely on the fact that a period of that duration has been established. I prefer to relate my conclusion to the evidence as a whole and, for the reasons already given, I think it should have satisfied the learned commissioner beyond reasonable doubt. I would, therefore, allow the appeal and dismiss the cross-appeal.

Appeal allowed. Cross-appeal dismissed. No order as to costs.

Solicitors: Edward Mackie & Co., Ealing (for the husband); Jaques & Co., agents for Cyril Jones, Son & Williams, Wrexham (for the wife).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

HARROWBY (EARL) v. SNELSON AND ANOTHER.

[STAFFORDSHIRE AUTUMN ASSIZES (Cassels, J.), November 25, December 1, 1950.]

Intestacy—Intestate tenant—Notice to quit—Issue before grant of letters of administration—No service on President of Probate Division—Service on persons in occupation—Notice addressed to tenant's "executors . . . and to all others whom it may concern"—Grant of letters of administration before date of operation of notice to quit.

On Mar. 25, 1948, a farm and premises were let orally to one F.S. on a yearly tenancy. On Dec. 1, 1948, F.S. died intestate, and on Jan. 5, 1949, the landlord, by his agent, served a notice to quit on Mar. 25, 1950, on the defendants who resided on the premises, one of them being the widow of F.S. The notice to quit was addressed to "the executors of the late F.S. and to all others whom it may concern," and referred to the farm as being "now in the occupation" of the defendants. No notice was served on the President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court in whom, under s. 9 of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, the estate of F.S. had vested at the time of the service of the notice on the defendants. On Mar. 5, 1949, a grant of letters of administration was made to the defendants who continued in occupation and managed the property.

HELD: (i) since the President was not in possession and had no responsibility for the rent the notice to quit could be validly served on the defendants notwithstanding that the legal estate had vested in the President.

Rees d. Mears v. Perrot (1830) (4 C. & P. 230), applied.

(ii) since the farm was in the occupation of the defendants and under their management after the tenant's death, the form of address of the notice to quit did not render it invalid.

(iii) if the defendants were not trespassers, they could only manage the farm as agents for the President, and, therefore, the notice was effective since a notice to the agent was a notice to the principal.

(iv) since the notice was still operative on Mar. 5, 1949, when the defendants were granted administration the notice was valid on that ground also, and, therefore, the landlord was entitled to possession.

[AS TO POWERS OF ADMINISTRATION BEFORE GRANT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 14, pp. 175-177, paras. 276-281; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 23, pp. 65-70, Nos. 484-535.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Rees d. Mears v. Perrot, (1830), 4 C. & P. 230; 172 E.R. 683; 31 Digest 453, 5998.

(2) Sweeny v. Sweeny, (1876), I.R. 10 C.L. 375; 31 Digest 453, q.

(3) Tanham v. Nicholson, (1872), L.R. 5 H.L. 561; 31 Digest 454, 6013.

(4) Smith v. Mather, [1948] 1 All E.R. 704; [1948] 2 K.B. 212; [1948] L.J.R. 1209; 2nd Digest Supp.

(5) Fred Long & Sons, Ltd. v. Burgess, [1949] 2 All E.R. 484; [1950] 1 K.B. 115; 2nd Digest Supp.

ACTION FOR POSSESSION.

After the death intestate of one Fred Snelson, the tenant of an agricultural property, notice to quit was served by the landlord on the defendants, who were in occupation of the property. The notice was not addressed to the defendants by name, but to "the executors of the late F. Snelson and to all others whom it may concern." At the time of the service of the notice, the legal estate vested in the President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division, but no notice to quit was served on him or on the Treasury Solicitor. Before the date when the notice served on the defendants began to operate, the defendants, who had remained in occupation, were granted letters of administration of the tenant's estate. It was contended for the defendants that, the legal estate being vested in the President until the grant of administration, the notice should have been served on him, and, for that reason and because of its form of address, that the notice served on the defendants was bad in law and did not have the effect of terminating the tenancy. The facts appear in the judgment.

R. E. Megarry and D. P. Draycott for the landlord.

Myntett for the defendants, administratrices of the deceased tenant.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 1. CASSELS, J., read the following judgment. The landlord, the owner of the house, buildings, lands, premises, and all other the hereditaments thereto belonging known as New Buildings Farm, Gayton, Staffordshire, seeks to recover possession from the defendants, the administratrices of the deceased tenant. A notice, dated Jan. 5, 1949, was sent to the farm addressed:

"To the executors of the late F. Snelson and to all others whom it may concern."

The defendants contend that the notice was bad in law, was not served on the probate judge, and was ineffective to determine the tenancy.

The facts of the case are not in dispute. On Mar. 25, 1948, the farm and premises were let orally to one Fred Snelson, farmer, who continued yearly the tenancy of this and another farm which he had occupied for about ten years. On Dec. 1, 1948, he died intestate. On Jan. 5, 1949, notice to quit, signed by T. W. Knowles, as agent for the landlord, the Earl of Harrowby, was, by registered letter, addressed to "the executors of the late F. Snelson and to all others whom it may concern," and reads as follows:

"I do hereby as agent to, and for and on behalf of your landlord, the Right Honourable John Herbert Dudley, Earl of Harrowby, give you notice to quit and deliver up possession of the house, buildings, lands, premises, and all other the hereditaments thereto belonging known as New Buildings Farm, situate at Gayton, in the county of Stafford, now in your occupation, on Mar. 25, 1950, or at the expiration of the current term of your tenancy. This notice is given by reason of the fact that the tenant, with whom the contract of tenancy was made, has died within three months of the service of this notice."

On Mar. 5, 1949, grant of administration was made to the defendants, the first defendant being the widow of the deceased, who both resided in the house and controlled the farm. No notice was sent to the President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court or to the Treasury Solicitor. After the death of F. Snelson his widow failed to obtain the consent of the landlord to her continuing the tenancy, but she and her co-defendant remained in occupation and still do so.

The sole question is whether or not the notice to quit is effective to enable the landlord to gain possession. By s. 9 of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925:

"Where a person dies intestate, his real and personal estate, until administration is granted in respect thereof, shall vest in the probate judge in the same manner and to the same extent as formerly in the case of personal estate it vested in the ordinary."

This law goes back many centuries, and the only new thing about it is that the "probate judge," which, by s. 55 (1) (xv) of the Act of 1925, means the President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court, is substituted for the ordinary or bishop. It is submitted on behalf of the landlord that the notice to quit, actually served in the present case, is not vitiated either by the omission to serve it on the President or by the manner in which it was addressed. It is submitted on behalf of the defendants that this notice to quit is absolutely bad and does not have the effect of determining the tenancy, that the interest of the deceased was vested from his death in the President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division until the grant of administration, and that the notice should have been served on the President or his agent or servant.

The attention of the court has been called to several authorities. In Rees d. Mears v. Perrot (1) the tenant from year to year died and a regular notice to quit was served on the widow who remained in possession. LITTLEDALE, J., at the Hereford Assizes held that the landlord might recover in ejectment, unless it were shown that some other person, and not the widow, was the executor or administrator of the tenant, and that it was not incumbent on the landlord to show that the widow was either executrix or administratrix.

Rees d. Mears v. Perrot (1) received consideration in Sweeny v. Sweeny (2), where the headnote reads as follows:

"A tenant from year to year died intestate, and, no administration being taken out, his widow continued in possession and paid the rent;

the landlord served a notice to quit on her, and, on its expiration, he, with her assent, entered into an agreement with a new tenant for a letting of the premises, in pursuance of which the new tenant entered and paid rent; subsequently a son of the deceased tenant took out administration to him, and brought an ejectment as administrator to recover possession: Held (FITZGERALD, B., dissenting), that the service of the notice to quit on the widow, the person in possession, was sufficient, in the absence of a legal personal representative of the deceased tenant, to determine the tenancy which had been in him, and was effectual for such determination even as against the legal personal representative subsequently raised; and that, therefore, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover possession."

DOWSE, B., said (I.R. 10 C.L. 379):

"Since the decision of Rees v. Perrot (1), it has been accepted as settled law that, on the death of a tenant from year to year, the landlord is not bound to raise a personal representative to the deceased tenant as a condition precedent to the determination of the tenancy by a notice to quit: he can, in the absence of a personal representative, treat the party in possession as the tenant to all intents and purposes. The reason given for this by some is that any person holding the possession or assuming the ownership of the land may be treated as assignee of the tenant's interest . . . It may be urged with greater force that Rees v. Perrot (1) and the cases following it have been decided upon the law of estoppel, and that the defendant being in possession and acting as tenant in the absence of a personal representative will not be allowed, while he holds the land, to defeat the landlord in applying to that land one of the legal incidents of a yearly tenancy, viz., the right to determine it by a notice to quit."

Later the learned baron said (ibid., 382):

"Why in the case of a tenancy from year to year should the death of the tenant, which determines an ordinary tenancy at will, prevent the landlord from resorting to his legal rights and serving his notice to quit? Why should he be placed in a worse position by the death of the tenant than he would have been in if the tenant had lived? What the landlord has to deal with is the estate—that is, the yearly tenancy itself. When the tenant is dead the landlord should be entitled to treat the person he finds in possession as the representative of the estate, and deal with him and it accordingly. This I think is the real principle by which Rees v. Perrot (1) is to be supported. It is much more satisfactory to support that decision in this way than by raising presumptions of an assignment, or by a strained application of the law of estoppel. Rees v. Perrot (1) so understood becomes an authority here."

PALLES, C.B., in a concurring judgment said (ibid., 394):

"In my opinion, we should be doing violence to the intention of the parties to a contract for a tenancy from year to year by holding that the tenancy cannot be determined except during the existence of a legal tenant; and if I am right in this, I can see no person upon whom it is more reasonable to hold that the notice should be served than the person who is in possession of the lands the subject of the tenancy."

It is to be observed that in the case I am now deciding the landlord, through his agent, on July 4, 1949, informed the defendants that he had let the farm as from Mar. 25, 1950, to another farmer and asked who would be acting on their behalf in the matter of outgoing valuations.

It seems from Tanham v. Nicholson (3) that a notice is well served if it is delivered to an agent with implied authority to receive documents of such a description, and it was contended here that the defendants should be treated either as the agents of the President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division or as executors de son tort because they were exercising control over the property of the deceased tenant. It is further contended by the landlord that, although his notice to quit was dated Jan. 5, 1949, when the defendants were granted administration, there were still twenty days to run before Mar. 25, 1949, when the notice would begin to operate for its full and proper length, namely, one year.

Was the notice served on the right persons? The Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, s. 92 (3), provides for the service of any notice under the Act on the agent, and the landlord contends that this was a service on the person in control of the property. This notice was addressed: "to the executors of the late F. Snelson." The landlord says that an administrator is comprehended in the word "executors": see SIR WILLIAM HOLDSWORTH'S "HISTORY OF ENGLISH LAW," 4th ed., vol. III, p. 566; and, further, that the phrase "to all whom it may concern" are saving words, and, if the notice did reach somebody whom it did concern, then it was correctly addressed.

The defendants rely on Smith v. Mather (4) where the contractual tenant of a house within the Rent Restrictions Acts died intestate. Her son and daughter were living with her at her death. No letters of administration having been taken out, the estate vested, in accordance with s. 9 of the Act of 1925, in the President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division, on whom the landlords proceeded to serve notice duly terminating the contractual tenancy, thereafter bringing proceedings for possession against the deceased tenant's children. It was held in that case that the due notice served on the President was valid and was the proper procedure in such circumstances for giving effect to the landlord's right to determine: see the judgment of SOMERVELL, L.J. ([1948] 1 All E.R. 706).

The defendants also rely on Fred Long & Sons, Ltd. v. Burgess (5), another case in which notice to quit was given to the President of the Probate Division. That case raised the question of relation back. There the contractual tenant died and her sons continued to live in the house. The landlords served a notice to quit on the President and started an action for possession against the sons. When the case reached the county court the sons' solicitors asked for and were granted an adjournment in order that one of the sons might take out letters of administration. The grant was obtained, and at the adjourned hearing the county court judge held that, by reason of the doctrine of relation back, the deceased's tenancy from the date of her death vested in the administrator who was entitled to hold over as statutory tenant. The Court of Appeal reversed the decision and held that the doctrine of relation back did not apply. There again, it is to be observed, a notice to quit was given to the President of the Probate Division. BUCKNILL, L.J., said ([1949] 2 All E.R. 487):

"I think that on principle and historically the vesting of the estate in the President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division is a positive act with some legal substance. Normally the court, formerly composed of the probate judge, appoints a person or persons to deal with the property of the intestate through a grant of administration, but I see no reason why in a case of necessity the President should not have legal power to give directions about the property. If he cannot do so, no one can. That is why the property is vested in him. If the President's position is such as I have indicated, I think he must have the legal capacity to receive a valid notice to quit, and such notice, after the proper lapse of time, has full legal effect. If no grant of administration has been made, there is no person other than the President to whom the notice to quit can validly be given. At any date subsequent to the death of the intestate a grant of administration may be made. There is no time limit in this matter. If a grant made years after the death is to make invalid the notice to quit validly given to the President, confusion and uncertainty will prevail and injustice may be done to those who have acted on the assumption that the notice to quit given to the President had full legal effect."

The defendants place great stress on the sentence: "If no grant of administration has been made, there is no person other than the President to whom notice to quit can validly be given."

A The last two cases deal with instances where notice to quit has been given to the President. In the present case I have to deal with the situation where notice to quit has not been given to the President. I think the circumstances here are different. The landlord has had his farm and premises occupied by persons who were either executors de son tort in that they were managing the farm, or they were trespassers. I have not to deal with merits, only with rights. B The President is not in possession. He has no responsibility for the rent. The estate of the deceased is merely vested in him. The landlord is not deprived of all rights over the property merely because his tenant has died intestate. The landlord still remains landlord. By way of illustration, with great respect, I repeat the observations of BUCKNILL, L.J.: "There is no time limit in this matter." Does that mean that if a tenant, living alone, seriously ill, attended C by relative or friend, dies intestate, that relative or friend can take possession of the house immediately on the death; and the landlord cannot succeed in an action for ejectment against the relative or friend because he did not give notice to the President? I do not think so. This may be an extreme illustration, but in these days of housing shortage it is not unthinkable.

D It is said that this notice is bad because it is not addressed to the tenant. I am unable to agree. It was addressed to the executors and "to all others whom it may concern," and referred to the farm "now in your occupation." The defendants were concerned, and the farm was in their occupation and under their management. They had no rights. Death had determined the tenancy of the husband of the first defendant. The defendants, in November, E 1949, acted on the notice to quit, for, following the custom of the landlord's estate, they paid the last two quarters' rent in advance instead of in arrear.

There are two further grounds on which this notice to quit may be held to be valid. The estate of the deceased under the tenancy, for what it was worth, was vested in the President and the defendants were occupying and managing it. If they were not trespassers, they could only manage the farm as agents F for the President, and a notice to the agent is a notice to the principal. The second is that the notice to quit was still operative on Mar. 5, 1949, when the defendants were granted administration.

It may sound harsh that the widow of a farmer on his death should be ejected from the farm. In the present case the widow has remained in possession for nearly two years since the death. The reason why this notice was given so soon after the death was that the landlord, holding the view that the widow G would not make a satisfactory tenant of this holding from the agricultural point of view, had regard to (i) the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, s. 24 (1), which restricts the operation of notices to quit and gives the tenant the right to serve a counter-notice, and (ii) to s. 24 (2) (g) which excepts from the restrictions of sub-s. (1) the case where

H "the tenant with whom the contract of tenancy was made had died within three months before the date of the giving of the notice to quit, and it is stated in the notice that it is given by reason of the matter aforesaid."

Hence the concluding words of the notice in this case:

"This notice is given by reason of the fact that the tenant with whom the contract of tenancy was made, has died within three months of the service of this notice."

I hold that the landlord is entitled to an order for possession.

Judgment for the landlord with costs.

Solicitors: Haslewood, Hare & Co., agents for H. Wallace-Copland, Stafford (for the landlord); Hand, Morgan & Co., Stafford (for the defendants).

[Reported by MISS GWYNEDD LEWIS, Barrister-at-Law.]

Re SMITH'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS. EXECUTOR TRUSTEE AND AGENCY CO. OF SOUTH AUSTRALIA, LTD. AND OTHERS v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Danckwerts, J.), December 12, 13, 1950.]

Estate Duty—Exemption—Government securities—Beneficial ownership of persons neither domiciled nor ordinarily resident in United Kingdom—Life tenant under settlement domiciled and ordinarily resident in United Kingdom—Remaindermen domiciled and ordinarily resident outside United Kingdom—Exemption on death of life tenant—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1915 (c. 89), s. 47—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1931 (c. 49), s. 22 (1).

The Finance (No. 2) Act, 1915, s. 47, and the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1931, s. 22 (1), provide that securities may be issued by the Treasury with a condition that neither the capital nor the income shall be liable to any taxation, present or future, so long as the securities are in the beneficial ownership of persons who are neither domiciled nor ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom.

Certain funds, the subject of three inter vivos settlements, included holdings of four per cent. funding loan, 1960-90, and 3½ per cent. war loan, 1952 or after. The funding loan had been issued with a condition of exemption under s. 47 of the Act of 1915. The war loan had been issued, with a condition of exemption under s. 47 of the Act of 1915, as five per cent. war loan, 1929-47, which was subsequently converted into 3½ per cent. war loan, 1952 or after. The life tenant died domiciled and ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom, and the trust funds passed on her death to persons some of whom were domiciled and ordinarily resident in Australia. Estate duty was claimed on the funds, including the four per cent. funding loan and the 3½ per cent. war loan.

HELD: at the time when the claim for estate duty arose, i.e., immediately following the death of the life tenant, the beneficial ownership in the funds had passed to the persons next entitled under the settlements, and, therefore, in so far as those persons were neither domiciled nor ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom, the funding loan and the war loan were exempt from estate duty under s. 47 of the Act of 1915 and s. 22 (1) of the Act of 1931.

Re Augusta Magan ([1922] 2 I.R. 208), applied.

[AS TO SECURITIES FREE OF TAXATION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 13, p. 261, para. 260.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Hughes v. Bank of New Zealand, [1936] 3 All E.R. 975; 106 L.J.K.B. 309; 156 L.T. 153; affd., [1938] 1 All E.R. 778; [1938] A.C. 366; 107 L.J.K.B. 306; 158 L.T. 463; 21 Tax Cas. 472; Digest Supp.

(2) Re Augusta Magan, [1922] 2 I.R. 208.

(3) Sudeley (Lord) v. A.-G., [1897] A.C. 11; 66 L.J.Q.B. 21; 75 L.T. 398; 61 J.P. 420; 21 Digest 122, 917.

(4) Corbett v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1937] 4 All E.R. 700; [1938] 1 K.B. 567; 107 L.J.K.B. 276; 158 L.T. 98; 21 Tax Cas. 449; Digest Supp.

(5) Re Demarest's Settlement Trusts, [1940] Ch. 661; 109 L.J.Ch. 136; 163 L.T. 122; 2nd Digest Supp.

A

ADJOURNED SUMMONS under the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1933, s. 3, to determine inter alia whether certain holdings of funding loan and war loan devolving under settlements in connection with the death of the life tenant (who was domiciled and ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom) on persons some of whom were domiciled and ordinarily resident outside the United Kingdom were liable to estate duty, having regard to the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1915, s. 47, and the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1931, s. 22 (1). The relevant facts appear in the judgment.

B

Milner Holland, K.C., and J. A. Wolfe for the plaintiffs, the trustees of the settlements and the will and codicil.

C

Upjohn, K.C., and J. H. Stamp for the Crown.

D

DANCKWERTS, J.: The question which I have to decide arises in regard to property subject to the trusts of three settlements dated respectively July 30, 1907, June 19, 1913, and Feb. 25, 1914, and the matter is also affected by the trusts of the will and the second codicil of Robert Barr Smith, who was the settlor in the settlements, and who died on Nov. 20, 1915. I need not go into the provisions of the settlements in any detail, because the question can be very simply expressed by a reference to an event which happened, viz., the death of a Mrs. Braund on Oct. 17, 1946. Certain portions of the funds included in those settlements, of which the plaintiffs are the trustees, passed on Mrs. Braund's death, she being the life tenant under the trusts, to persons some of whom are alleged to be resident in Australia. Mrs. Braund, the life tenant, on the other hand, died domiciled and resident in the United Kingdom.

E

The question which I have to consider is limited to certain securities forming part of the investments included in those settlements, being 3½ per cent. war loan, 1952, which is a conversion of five per cent. war loan, 1929-47, and four per cent. funding loan, 1960-90, and the question is whether, in the events which have happened, those securities are free from liability to estate duty on the occasion of Mrs. Braund's death. The matter arises under the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1915, and the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1931, there being similar provisions in each case in substance, though the wording is slightly different. Section 47 of the Act of 1915 provides:

F

G

H

"The Treasury may, if they think fit, during the continuance of the present war and a period of twelve months thereafter, issue any securities which they have power to issue for the purpose of raising any money or any loan with a condition that neither the capital nor the interest thereof shall be liable to any taxation, present or future, so long as it is shown in manner directed by the Treasury that the securities are in the beneficial ownership of persons who are neither domiciled nor ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom, and securities issued with such a condition shall be exempt accordingly."

The Act of 1931 provides, by s. 22:

"(1) Any securities issued by the Treasury under any Act may be issued with the condition that—(a) so long as the securities are in the beneficial ownership of persons who are not ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom, the interest thereon shall be exempt from income tax; and (b) so long as the securities are in the beneficial ownership of persons who are neither domiciled nor ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom, neither the capital thereof nor the interest thereon shall be liable to any taxation present or future."

It appears that the Act of 1931 is the one which may be material in respect of the securities which were converted into the 3½ per cent. war loan, 1952. It is claimed by the plaintiffs that, in so far as, on Mrs. Braund's death, these securities passed from the deceased tenant for life, who was a resident in this country, to persons beneficially entitled who are not resident in the United Kingdom, those exemptions from tax apply.

Before I pass on I should deal with the prospectus relating to the issue of the securities in question. There are three prospectuses in question, but the provision is more or less the same in each case, so that I do not think I need read each of them. Taking the issue of five per cent. war loan, 1929-47, there is a paragraph in the prospectus in the following terms:

"Stocks and bonds of these loans and the dividends payable from time to time in respect thereof, will be exempt from all British taxation, present or future, if it is shown in the manner directed by the Treasury that they are in the beneficial ownership of a person who is neither domiciled nor ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. Further, the dividends payable from time to time in respect of stock and bonds of these loans will be exempt from British income tax, present or future, if it is shown in the manner directed by the Treasury that the stock or bonds are in the beneficial ownership of a person who is not ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, without regard to the question of domicile. Where a bond belongs to a holder entitled to exemption under these provisions the relative coupons will be paid without deduction for income tax or other taxes, if accompanied by a declaration of ownership in such form as may be required by the Treasury."

One observes that in the prospectus, for the words "so long as" the Treasury have substituted the words "if it is shown." Whether that makes any real difference I do not know. I think it is the terms of the statute which may be more accurately expressed as regards income tax, because there one is referring to a continuing period rather than to a particular event. At any rate, it is clear that s. 22 of the Act of 1931 is an exempting provision and that to secure exemption the persons claiming it must show that they are within the terms of the provision.

The view taken officially by the Inland Revenue Commissioners is stated in GREEN'S DEATH DUTIES, 2nd ed., p. 632:

"Exemption, so long as the property is in a particular ownership, is more appropriate to income tax than to death duties, which relate to a change of ownership. The official view is that regard must be had, on the death of an absolute owner or a life tenant, only to his domicile, etc., and not to the domicile, etc., of the living beneficiaries."

That, it appears, is a convenient way of dealing with the matter, because it is easy to ascertain the domicile and residence of the deceased person—the commissioners are concerned with that for other purposes—and it is also contended that that obviously is correct having regard to the intention of the statute, which, it is said, is to induce persons not resident in the United Kingdom to invest their money in these particular securities for the benefit of this country. I am entitled, it appears, to consider the intention of the statute, and in that connection I am referred to Hughes v. Bank of New Zealand (1) ([1936] 3 All E.R. 984), per LORD WRIGHT, M.R., but the difficulty is to be sure what really was the intention in certain respects of the legislature in passing these provisions.

A Claims for estate duty, of course, arise on the death of the life tenant—at that moment and not before—and it is said on behalf of the plaintiffs that that is the cause, and the result of estate duty being leviable must follow the cause. On the other hand, it is said on the part of the Inland Revenue Commissioners that the events are simultaneous, the death, the passing, and the liability to duty, and that they all occur at the moment of time when the life tenant dies. One thing occurs to me to be fairly clear, and that is that it is not until the life tenant is dead that there can be any passing or any charge to duty. It is not the life of the life tenant, but the life tenant's death which attracts the duty in question, and so long as the life tenant is still alive, even though he or she be in extremis, no claim for duty can be made. It is only when the person in question has expired that the property passes and the liability to estate duty then arises.

B It seems to me that, though from one point of view one may regard those events as occurring simultaneously, in fact, from a common-sense point of view one must treat them as being in some sort of sequence. It seems to me that, on any view, the ownership of the life tenant cannot be the test, because, as I have said, when the event occurs the life tenant has gone. The question is: C What happens then? It was suggested by counsel for the Crown that there might be no person beneficially owning the property at the moment when death duties arose because of the simultaneous occurrence of death, passing, and liability to duty. I do not think that that is really the correct way to look at the matter. It seems to me that the death is the cause, as counsel for the plaintiffs suggested, and then that cause gives rise to a passing and a liability for duty, and, therefore, though conceivably there is a simultaneous occurrence D from one point of view, there is some slight, almost imperceptible, period of time before the liability to estate duty arises.

E In that view I receive some support from a decision of PALLES, C.B., in an Irish case, Re Augusta Magan (2). The question in that case was not on the same section as that in the present case. It arose on the Finance Act, 1894, s. 12 (2), which dealt with duty on settled property, and was whether the property was to be considered as settled at the moment of a life tenant's death. The position was that theoretically she might have children during her life and that on her failure to have issue she became absolutely entitled to the property concerned. Therefore, it was correct to say that during her lifetime the property was settled, but after her death, when the question had been decided whether F she could have children or not, the property was unsettled, and the question then was whether, for the purpose of the estate duty arising on the passing on her death, the property was settled or not. PALLES, C.B., said ([1922] 2 I.R. 210):

G “Now, as long as Miss Magan was alive, notwithstanding her age, and the fact that she had never been married, the law contemplated the possibility of her having issue. Her issue, had there been such, would have taken under the will of her mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Georgiana Magan, and therefore during the life of Miss Augusta Magan, and up to the moment of her death, the property in my view was ‘settled’ within the meaning of the Finance Act. But at the moment of her death the possibility of there being issue ceased. At and from that moment no person could take under H the mother's will save Miss Magan herself; and therefore I hold that, upon and from the moment of her death, the property ceased to answer the description of being ‘settled.’ Thus arises a question of some nicety: was the property ‘settled’ when it passed from Miss Magan at the moment of her death? I am of opinion that it was not. The two events—death and the passing of property—took place, in point of time, at the moment; but in nature one preceded the other. The passing of the property was the effect of the death; the death was the event upon which it passed, and in nature the event must precede the effect which is to ensue upon it. This is so, not only metaphysically, but it is a recognised principle of our law."

Then he refers to cases which are collected in VINER'S ABRIDGMENT OF LAW AND EQUITY, 2nd ed., vol. 14, pp. 447, 448. Now, it seems to me that that is, at any rate, the sensible view, if I may say so with respect, and one which I ought to apply in the present case.

There are, however, said to be certain difficulties produced by such a view which must compel me to consider that the intention of the statute is defeated unless I give effect to the view, put forward on behalf of the Crown, that the tenant for life's interest in the property is the one which has to be considered. It is said that unless estate duty is cleared from the estate of the tenant for life the intention of the section must necessarily be defeated. The sections refer to the capital as well as to the interest not being taxable under the Act. As is said in GREEN'S DEATH DUTIES, it is much easier to apply these provisions to income tax than it is to apply them to estate duty. Indeed, I think it was said at one stage that estate duty was the only tax on capital which could have been in the consideration of the legislature when the section was passed. That, of course, is not quite accurate, because at the date when each of these sections were passed there was another death duty—legacy duty—which would be very material with regard to capital or securities of this kind. Further, though so far there had not been at that date any tax of the kind, the sections refer to taxation both present and future, and it was always a possibility that there might be a capital levy of some kind imposed by the legislature to which the sections could refer.

It is said by counsel for the Crown that estate duty is a tax in respect of which the nature of the person succeeding is irrelevant and that, therefore, the beneficial interests are not material because the event which attracts the duty is the passing of property from one person to another. Obviously that is true, but in this case that argument does not carry very great weight because, first, there is the case of legacy duty in which the relationship of the deceased to the person to succeed is material, and, secondly, we are dealing here with two sections which in their terms are concerned with beneficial ownership. Therefore, whatever may be the general nature of estate duty, the court and the Inland Revenue are here compelled to consider the beneficial interest of the persons concerned.

The further argument which was put forward was one based on the difficulties which arise in the case of a testator who is absolutely entitled and who disposes of his property by will, unlike this case, where the settlor had disposed of his property inter vivos, so that on the tenant for life's death in the present case there was no difficulty about probate or administration of an estate and the property simply passed from one beneficiary to another set of beneficiaries. It is pointed out that, where property is disposed of by will, if these investments fell into the residuary estate and were not disposed of specifically, there is no person who could claim a beneficial interest in the property in question. It has been held, of course, for certain purposes, in such cases as Sudeley (Lord) v. A.-G. (3) and Corbett v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (4) ([1937] 4 All E.R. 704), that while the residuary estate is being administered the persons who will eventually, if the estate is solvent, obtain the property cannot claim that any particular asset of the estate is theirs or that the income of any particular asset is theirs. Therefore, it is said, on the death of the testator, at the moment when the charge to estate duty accrues, there is no person who could claim the benefit of these sections, because there is no person who is beneficial owner of the securities in question. Those difficulties require consideration, and there is no doubt that an awkward situation may arise in the case of a residuary estate which includes securities of this kind when the residue is given to non-residents.

It may be that when that question has to be considered by the courts, the courts will have regard to the substance of the matter and will not think for this purpose that it is necessary to adhere to the strict rule which is laid down in such cases as Sudeley v. A.-G. (3).

A In the case of a specific gift it is also said that there are difficulties, because even specifically bequeathed property is liable to be taken in an application for payment of debts and the beneficiary has no absolute right to the specifically bequeathed property at the date of the testator's death, and, further, that an assent is necessary, though in the case of an assent to a specific legacy the rule is, I think, that the assent dates back to the moment of death. The difficulties are not so great in the case of a specific legacy because the position is that the beneficiary to whom the property is specifically bequeathed has the real ownership in the asset in question, subject to the risk that it may be required—and, therefore, may be taken from him—for the purpose of paying the creditors of the estate, but that, again, is a case which I have not to consider here. It was argued very strongly that these difficulties do show that the legislature must have had in mind the particular case of an absolute owner of the securities, who would be hindered in procuring the advantages of the sections for the persons who succeed him on his death. It seems to me that C that is not at all conclusive. The fact that there are difficulties with regard to other cases does not necessarily dispose of the matter if I conceive that the case which I have to consider fits the words of the section. Further, one knows that in a matter which is complicated, as this case is, providing for exemption from taxation, even though the nature of such duty as estate duty is well known, the intention of the legislature is not always successfully carried out. D However that may be, it seems to me that in the present case the passing of the securities in question to beneficiaries who are resident outside the United Kingdom does fall within the terms of the exempting sections, and, therefore, there is a relief from duty in these cases and the claim of the plaintiffs succeeds.

E I should mention that I was referred also to Re Demarest's Settlement Trusts (5). That case appears to be the only decision on the sections in question, but it was not of much assistance to me in deciding the present case. There had been a gift made within three years before the date of the testator's death, which, therefore, was normally subject to estate duty on the death of the deceased. The question was whether the donee, being resident in the United Kingdom, could claim the benefit of the exemptions merely because the donor was a person who was resident or domiciled outside the United Kingdom. It F seems to me plain that the answer must have been the one which the court gave—that he was not exempted because both before and after the death of the deceased the securities in question were owned by a person who was resident in the United Kingdom. That seems to me to be a very clear case, and all that can be said that is useful for the purpose of the present case is that it does show that the sections may be concerned with persons other than the original G investor and that estate duty is a relevant matter. In Demarest's case (5) it did not matter whether one regarded the owner before the moment of the deceased's death or immediately after the deceased's death, because it was the same person in each case, and, therefore, the difficulties which I have to consider did not arise.

Order accordingly. Crown to pay costs as between party and party.

Solicitors: Freshfields (for the plaintiffs); Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

STAGG v. BRICKETT.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Somervell, Denning and Birkett, L.JJ.), November 15, 16, December 4, 1950.]

Rent Restriction—Standard rent—House first let furnished—Purchase of furniture by tenant during occupation—Subsequent letting unfurnished—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (1) (as amended by Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), sched. 1).

In December, 1940, the landlord let to one C. a dwelling-house furnished at a rent of 25s. a week. In February, 1941, C. bought the furniture in the house for £50, £40 being paid at once and it being agreed that the balance should be paid by weekly instalments of 5s. Shortly afterwards the rent was reduced to 20s. a week because C. could not afford to pay 25s. as well as the weekly instalment for the furniture. After a few weeks C. left the premises, and in June, 1941, the landlord let the house unfurnished to the present tenant at a rent of £3 10s. a week. On an application by the tenant to fix the standard rent, HELD: (i) to ascertain whether a contractual letting was furnished or unfurnished the position must ordinarily be decided as at the time when the tenancy begins.

Jozwiak v. Hierowski ([1948] 2 All E.R. 9) and Bowness v. O'Dwyer ([1948] 2 All E.R. 181), applied.

(ii) if, on applying that test, it is found that the house was let furnished at the beginning of the tenancy, it will thereafter retain the status of a furnished tenancy throughout the tenancy notwithstanding subsequent variations in the quantity or value of the furniture or the amount of the rent, but fundamental alterations regarding these matters will change the character of the letting and so entitle the tenant to the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts.

Observation of ASQUITH, L.J., in Welch v. Nagy ([1949] 2 All E.R. 868), discussed.

(iii) in the circumstances of the present case, including the brevity of C.'s occupation and the fact that when he left the premises he had not finished paying for the furniture, the purchase of the landlord's furniture by C. could not be regarded as so fundamental as to change the furnished letting into an unfurnished letting, and, accordingly, the letting to the present tenant was the first letting and £3 10s. a week was the standard rent.

Brown v. Robins ([1943] 1 All E.R. 548) and Seabrook v. Mervyn ([1947] 1 All E.R. 295), distinguished.

[AS TO STANDARD RENT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, p. 312, para. 369; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 564-566, Nos. 7117-7132, and Digest Supp., and 2nd Digest Supp.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Signy v. Abbey National Building Society, [1944] 1 All E.R. 448; [1944] K.B. 449; 113 L.J.K.B. 486; 170 L.T. 238; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Insall v. Nottingham Corpn., [1948] 2 All E.R. 232; [1949] 1 K.B. 261; [1949] L.J.R. 156; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Jozwiak v. Hierowski, [1948] 2 All E.R. 9; [1948] L.J.R. 1643; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (4) Bowness v. O'Dwyer, [1948] 2 All E.R. 181; [1948] 2 K.B. 219; [1948] L.J.R. 1774; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) Welch v. Nagy, [1949] 2 All E.R. 868; [1950] 1 K.B. 455; 2nd Digest Supp.

- (6) Brown v. Robins, [1943] 1 All E.R. 548; 168 L.T. 340; 2nd Digest Supp.
 (7) Seabrook v. Mervyn, [1947] 1 All E.R. 295; 2nd Digest Supp.
 (8) Artillery Mansions, Ltd. v. Macartney, [1948] 2 All E.R. 875; [1949] 1 K.B. 164; [1949] L.J.R. 405; affg., [1947] 1 All E.R. 686; [1947] K.B. 594; 2nd Digest Supp.
 (9) Prout v. Hunter, [1924] 2 K.B. 736; 93 L.J.K.B. 993; 132 L.T. 193; 31 Digest 557, 7040.
 A (10) Macmillan & Co., Ltd. v. Rees, [1946] 1 All E.R. 675; 175 L.T. 86; 2nd Digest Supp.
 (11) Roberts v. Jones, [1946] 2 All E.R. 678; [1947] K.B. 221; [1947] L.J.R. 606; 176 L.T. 33; 2nd Digest Supp.
 (12) Davies v. Warwick, [1943] 1 All E.R. 309; [1943] K.B. 329; 112 L.J.K.B. 245; 169 L.T. 130; 2nd Digest Supp.
 B (13) Chamberlain v. Farr, [1942] 2 All E.R. 567; 112 L.J.K.B. 206; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the landlord from an order of His Honour JUDGE LEON, made at Wandsworth County Court on June 29, 1950, whereby he fixed the standard rent of a house at 147, Kew Road, Richmond, at 25s. per week. The facts are set out in the judgment of SOMERVELL, L.J.

R. E. Megarry for the landlord.

L. A. Blundell for the tenant.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 4. The following judgments were read.

D SOMERVELL, L.J.: In these proceedings the tenant applied to the registrar of Wandsworth County Court to fix the standard rent of 147, Kew Road, Richmond, under s. 11 of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923. She became a tenant of the premises unfurnished in June, 1941, at a weekly rent of £3 10s., which she has since paid. Her present claim is that the standard rent of 25s., on the basis that the premises were "first let" at that sum within the definition in s. 12 (1) (a) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920.

E The registrar's findings of fact were not disputed. The landlord bought the premises in October, 1940, for £900. In December, 1940, they were let by him to a Mr. Cockram for 25s. a week. This was found to be a furnished letting at its inception. It was decided in Signy v. Abbey National Building Society (1) that the rent for such a letting is not to be taken either gross or after apportionment as the standard rent for the purpose of the definition. After Cockram had gone into possession he agreed to buy the furniture comprised in the original letting. This agreement was concluded in February, 1941. The price was £50, £40 was paid down and the balance was to be discharged by payments of 5s. a week. The application proceeded on the basis that the rent remained unchanged for a week, at any rate. It was then reduced to 20s. because Cockram found that he could not afford to pay 25s. per week in addition to the 5s. a week for the furniture. Cockram was the mace-bearer of the borough of Richmond, and as such had living accommodation at the Town Hall. That accommodation was destroyed, as was also his furniture, by enemy action. G The landlord was a councillor of the Richmond Council. There is, at any rate, indication of a charitable motive in the landlord's willingness to take 20s. instead of 25s., as stated above. The same motive may have entered into the original offer. If, however, there was an unfurnished letting within the definition, this is immaterial: Insall v. Nottingham Corpn. (2).

H The relevant provisions are, first, the definition in s. 12 (1) (a) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, which reads as follows:

"The expression 'standard rent' means the rent at which the dwelling-house was let on Aug. 3, 1914*, or, where the dwelling-house was not let on that date, the rent at which it was last let before that date, or, in the case of a dwelling-house which was first let after Aug. 3*, the rent at which it was first let."

The proviso I do not think assists. The question whether a letting is a furnished letting is governed by s. 3 (2) (b) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939, which is applicable here, and s. 10 (1) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923. Section 3 (2) reads:

"The principal Acts shall not, by virtue of this section, apply— . . . (b) save as is expressly provided in the said Acts, as amended by virtue of this section, to any dwelling-house bona fide let at a rent which includes payments in respect of board, attendance or use of furniture."

Section 10 (1) of the Act of 1923 is as follows:

"For the purposes of proviso (i) to sub-s. (2) of s. 12 of the [Act of 1920] (which relates to the exclusion of dwelling-houses from the principal Act in certain circumstances), a dwelling-house shall not be deemed to be bona fide let at a rent which includes payments in respect of attendance or the use of furniture unless the amount of rent which is fairly attributable to the attendance or the use of the furniture, regard being had to the value of the same to the tenant, forms a substantial portion of the whole rent."

Counsel for the tenant submitted that there was an unfurnished letting at 25s. a week when the furniture was bought. If so, it is not disputed that that was the first letting which would determine the standard rent. Counsel for the landlord submitted that the whole of the letting to Cockram is to be disregarded as being a furnished letting. On this basis it is not disputed that the first unfurnished letting was to the tenant at £3 10s., which would be the standard rent. Both sides rely on decisions of this court, and one of the questions is whether those decisions can be reconciled. The registrar decided in favour of the landlord. On appeal to the county court judge, that decision was reversed and the landlord appeals to this court.

Counsel for the landlord relied first on Jozwiak v. Hierowski (3). In that case, which was one of a weekly tenancy, the rent paid and the furniture supplied varied. Both increased over the period of the tenancy, but there was no evidence to relate the one increase to the other. ASQUITH, L.J., reading the judgment of the court, said ([1948] 2 All E.R. 10):

"It is not clear whether progressive rises in the rent were provided for when first the contract of tenancy was entered into or whether from time to time the quantum of rent was revised by agreement to keep pace with the tenant's increased capacity to pay and also with the accession of new increments of furniture placed at his disposal."

There was, as may well be the case here, a charitable motive, which as the court said, "did not make for precision." The court held on these facts that (ibid.)

" . . . the relevant date on which to compare the part of the rent attributable to the use of furniture with the whole rent is the time when the original contract of tenancy is made."

The claim was one for possession, and not for determination of the standard rent. The result, however, is that, if the original letting was furnished, a tenant could not obtain the protection of the Acts by showing that the amount of the rent attributable to furniture had ceased to be substantial at the date when proceedings were taken owing to increase of rent, as in that case, or owing to diminution of furniture. The principle as there laid down was expressly approved as a decision binding on this court in Bouness v. O'Dwyer (4). That case raised other points which might have been made the basis of the decision, but, in a considered judgment, the principle as stated in the sentence I have cited was, as I have said, approved and applied.

* By the combined effect of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939, s. 9 (4) and sched. I, and the Defence (Commencement of Enactments) Order, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 1135), Sept. 1, 1939, was substituted for Aug. 3, 1914, in respect of dwelling-houses, such as that in the present case, to which the pre-1939 Rent Acts did not apply.

A The present case differs from Jozwiak v. Hierowski (3) in that here it is not a question of more or less furniture. The tenant purchased all the furniture. Such a case was considered in Welch v. Nagy (5) by ASQUITH, L.J., in the course of his judgment. In that case the tenant had taken a lease of certain furnished premises for a year. Towards the end of the year he bought the furniture. There was no evidence as to any negotiations as to any variation of the existing tenancy, apart from the change in the position brought about by the purchase. ASQUITH, L.J., said ([1949] 2 All E.R. 871):

B “In my view, if during the currency of a single lease, which is originally a lease of a substantially furnished house, the tenant buys all the furniture, the effect is not, while that lease is still on foot, to convert the tenancy into an unfurnished one for the purpose of the Rent Restrictions Acts.”

C I agree with the submission of counsel for the tenant that on the facts of that case a conclusion on that point was not necessary for the decision, and it is, at any rate, not clear whether the other members of the court based themselves on it. In my opinion, however, if Jozwiak v. Hierowski (3) is binding on us, what ASQUITH, L.J., said follows. The question as between a furnished and unfurnished letting is whether a substantial portion of the rent is attributable to furniture. If an inquiry fell to be made at the date when proceedings were brought, as Jozwiak v. Hierowski (3) decided it did not, a decision that a substantial portion of the rent was not attributable to furniture would make it an unfurnished letting, that is, in the same category as if no furniture at all had been let. It may well be that the tenant in a case such as Welch v. Nagy (5) would not think it worth while to seek to re-open the question of rent for the remaining period of his tenancy. In such an event it would be quite illogical to treat the figure arrived at on a furnished basis as the standard rent. On this point I have come to a conclusion different from that at which the county court judge arrived. I do not think the fact that we are concerned with a weekly tenancy makes any difference. Such a tenancy, unless terminated by notice or surrender, continues as a tenancy. The decision in Jozwiak v. Hierowski (3) was based on this principle.

F If these decisions are binding on us, it seems to me clear that the landlord must succeed. Counsel for the tenant submitted that they are inconsistent with Brown v. Robins (6) and Seabrook v. Mervyn (7). These were not cited in the cases to which I have already referred. I will deal with Seabrook v. Mervyn (7) first. The letting there was originally a furnished letting. The landlord decided to remove the furniture and served a notice to quit so as to enable her to do so. It was held to be unnecessary to decide whether this was a valid notice. After that there were negotiations, some oral, some in writing. The tenant expressed a wish to stay on, bringing in her own furniture. There was evidence of oral discussion about rent, the landlord saying in her evidence it was to be the same. The court held that what had taken place amounted to a variation of the tenancy agreement in that the furniture was no longer to be included therein and the letting must be treated as unfurnished and the tenant was protected. In Brown v. Robins (6) there were again negotiations and letters. A quantity of furniture covered by the agreement which had been signed was excluded. The court may, I think, have proceeded on the basis that it must be treated as excluded ab initio, in which case the decision would not help the present tenant.

It is unfortunate that Seabrook v. Mervyn (7) was not cited in Jozwiak v. Hierowski (3), but I do not think they are irreconcilable. The combined effect seems to me to be this. If there is an original furnished or unfurnished letting, variations in the furniture supplied, or in the rent, do not, in themselves, alter the character of the letting which is, prima facie, determined for the period of the tenancy at the time when the original contract of tenancy was made. If, on the other hand, there is evidence of a variation consequent on the change in the furniture position, the question of the rent, having regard to that change, being included in the negotiations, then regard is had to the position as at that date. If in Seabrook v. Mervyn (7) the landlord had agreed to a reduction of the rent because no furniture was being supplied, it would have been very artificial not to regard it as an unfurnished letting. It was said that the principle in Jozwiak v. Hierowski (3) might lead to difficulties if the tenancy was a long time ago. The rule, admittedly, was a rule of convenience, and, with respect, it seems to me to justify that description. In any case, I regard it as binding on this court. Applying the law as so laid down to the facts of this case, it seems to me that neither the purchase of the furniture, in itself, nor anything that took place during the short remainder of Cockram's tenancy, precludes the application of the principle in Jozwiak v. Hierowski (3). The actual purchase was, it seems, in the same category as that in Welch v. Nagy (5) to which ASQUITH, L.J., referred. The subsequent lowering of the rent to 20s. was consequent, not on the change in the furniture position, but on the tenant's inability to pay.

I will refer to one or two other points which were mentioned in the course of the argument to show that I have not overlooked them. The registrar considered whether the fact that this was a weekly tenancy made any difference. He decided that it did not, because the original tenancy was not determined by notice or surrender. I agree with this finding, nor was it, I think, challenged. The submission of counsel for the tenant was that the purchase of the furniture ipso facto made the letting an unfurnished one for the purpose of applying the definition. Counsel for the landlord relied on Artillery Mansions, Ltd. v. Macartney (8). That case dealt with what portion of the rent was attributable to services, which are covered, as is furniture, by s. 10 (1) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923. There had been an assignment, and the question was whether the "value . . . to the tenant" within that section was to be determined by reference to the position of the original tenant or to that of the assignee. The court held that it was the value to the original tenant. Jozwiak v. Hierowski (3) was not referred to, but the decision seems to me to be in line with the principle there laid down.

There was a question at one stage of the argument whether counsel for the landlord had conceded that after the purchase of the furniture Cockram became entitled to the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts. On this basis counsel for the tenant argued, as it seemed to me, with force, that, if there was a protected tenant, there must be a standard rent. A concession by counsel could not affect the construction of the Acts. Counsel for the landlord, after some discussion, submitted that, if his argument as to standard rent succeeded, this did not necessarily imply that Cockram might not have been protected from eviction if he had held over after his tenancy had been determined. That issue can be dealt with if it ever arises. I find it difficult to see how, on the basis of the submission of counsel for the tenant, Cockram could have claimed to be a protected tenant.

Counsel for the tenant referred to Prout v. Hunter (9). There a flat had been let to the defendant unfurnished and sub-let by her furnished. The landlord served notice to quit on the defendant, who claimed the protection of the Acts. The defendant, as pointed out by SARGANT, J., had never been an occupying tenant. It was held that the flat must be considered with reference to its actual occupation at the time when proceedings were brought as being a dwelling-house let furnished, and, therefore, outside the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts. There is a statement in the judgment of BANKES, L.J., which was relied on, that the material time to consider the status of the house is when the landlord seeks to obtain possession. That case is clearly distinguishable on its facts, but it is worth noting that in Bouness v. O'Dwyer (4) the court clearly had in mind that "the general rule under the Acts" points to the date when the landlord seeks to enforce his rights as the date when the status is to be determined.

In my opinion, therefore, on the authorities, the house was "first let" within the definition of standard rent when it was let to the present tenant. The standard rent is, therefore, £3 10s., and the appeal must be allowed.

- B DENNING, L.J.: The question for decision is: What is the standard rent of the house? Is it the 25s. at which it was let to Mr. Cockram? Or the £3 10s. at which it was let to Mrs. Stagg, the present tenant? This was a house which was first let after Sept. 1, 1939. It comes, therefore, within the provisions of the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949. Under that Act either landlord or tenant can ask the rent tribunal to determine what is a reasonable rent for the tenant to pay for the house. Neither side has yet asked the tribunal to determine that question, because there is a prior question, which is before us to-day, namely: What is the standard rent, £3 10s. or 25s.? The tribunal can lower a standard rent, but not raise it. If £3 10s. is the standard rent and is too much, the tribunal can reduce it to a reasonable rent, and that will be the standard rent, but if 25s. a week is the standard rent and is too little, then the tribunal cannot raise it to a reasonable amount. If 25s. is the standard rent, the tenant is entitled to keep the house at that figure, no matter that it is an unreasonably low rent, and she is also entitled to recover some £200 from the landlord. So it is very vital to determine what is the standard rent.

- The standard rent is the rent at which the house was "first let." In one sense, of course, 25s. was the rent at which this house was first let, but it has long been settled that it is not every first letting which fixes the standard rent. It must be a letting which is material for the purpose. Thus, a furnished letting is not material: Signy v. Abbey National Building Society (1); nor is a business letting: Macmillan & Co., Ltd. v. Rees (10); nor is the letting of a cottage which is subject to the Housing (Rural Workers) Acts, 1926-1942: Roberts v. Jones (11). Those lettings must be ignored in determining the standard rent. On the other hand, there are many exceptional lettings which do fix the standard rent. Thus, a letting made thirty years ago may fix the standard rent: Davies v. Warwick (12); and so may a letting at an uneconomic rent; Chamberlain v. Farr (13); or one at a preferential rent: Insall v. Nottingham Corpn. (2).

- G The difficulty in the present case is that the letting started off as a furnished letting, but, in the course of it, the tenant bought the furniture. What is the position then? The cases are difficult to reconcile, but I think they come to this. To see whether a contractual letting is furnished or unfurnished for the purposes of the Rent Acts, the position must ordinarily be tested as at the time when the tenancy commenced. That is the time as at which the court must decide whether the amount of rent fairly attributable to the use of the furniture forms a substantial portion of the whole rent. If, on applying that test, it is found that the house is let furnished at the beginning of the tenancy, it will thereafter retain the status of a furnished house throughout the tenancy, notwithstanding subsequent fluctuations in the quantity or value of the furniture or of the amount of the rent: Jozwiak v. Hierowski (3); and, conversely, if it is found to be let unfurnished at the commencement, it will ordinarily retain thereafter the status of an unfurnished house, notwithstanding subsequent fluctuations: Bowness v. O'Dwyer (4); cf. Artillery Mansions, Ltd. v. Macartney (8).

The rule that it is necessary to look at the commencement of the tenancy is not, however, an absolute rule, because changes may occur which are not mere fluctuations, but are so fundamental as to reverse the character of the letting. For instance, if there is a furnished letting, and, after it has started, the landlord removes the whole, or substantially the whole, of his furniture and the tenant brings in his own, it may well take on the character of an unfurnished letting so as to entitle the tenant to the protection of the Acts: Brown v. Robins (6) and Seabrook v. Mervyn (7). Applying the principle of those cases, I should think that, if the tenant buys all the furniture in the house from the landlord the letting may very well thereafter take on the character of an unfurnished letting, and the tenant will be protected by the Acts. I know that ASQUITH, L.J., in an obiter dictum in Welch v. Nagy (5), spoke as if it could not change its character in that way, but I cannot go all the way with him there. Suppose, for instance, in this case that the letting had continued for some years after Cockram bought the furniture, he paying 25s. a week all the time, I should have thought it plain that he would have become protected by the Rent Acts. Once he bought the furniture, he could have removed it the next day, or re-sold it, or exchanged it for other furniture, or destroyed it, without the landlord being able to say him nay, and still he would have remained tenant of the house. It would clearly have been an unfurnished letting and he would be protected from eviction. That follows from Seabrook v. Mervyn (7), a decision of this court which is binding on us, and with which I fully agree. If once it is conceded that in that case Cockram would have been protected from eviction, it follows inevitably that the standard rent would be 25s., for, if Cockram had asserted his right to stay in the house after the contractual tenancy had come to an end, there can be no doubt that he would only have had to pay 25s. a week. There would, indeed, be no other figure which could be suggested to be the standard rent.

In this particular case, however, I cannot regard the purchase of the furniture by Cockram as having so fundamental an effect as to change the character of the letting. It is not as if Cockram stayed on for any length of time after buying the furniture. He only stayed on a few weeks and he had not fully paid for the furniture when he left. He was still paying the weekly instalments of 5s. for it. He started off paying 25s. a week for the house furnished, and he ended by paying 25s. a week for it with the same furniture still there. The furniture had become his, no doubt, but it was not fully paid for, and I cannot help thinking that the letting retained the same character throughout. It was simply a case of giving a man a roof over his head for a short time after he was bombed out and letting him have furniture to use, because he had lost all his own, and he only paid what he could afford. The letting started off as a furnished letting, and there was no such fundamental change as to reverse the character of it. The rent of 25s. was rent fixed for a furnished letting and it never lost that character. It was, therefore, not the standard rent. Once the 25s. is discarded as immaterial, it follows that the standard rent is £3 10s., for that was clearly material. I agree, therefore, that the appeal should be allowed.

BIRKETT, L.J., stated the facts and continued: The question which arises is whether the standard rent is 25s. per week or £3 10s. per week, bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the Rent Restrictions Acts and the relevant decisions thereof. The fact that the landlord was moved by considerations of sympathy or kindness when letting the furnished premises to Mr. Cockram, or when he sold him the furniture and left the rent unaltered, or reduced it to 20s. per week, on the authority of Insall v. Nottingham Corpn. (2) is irrelevant for the decision what is the standard rent. Equally, if this was a furnished letting to Mr. Cockram originally, and thereafter it never changed its essential character, that letting to Mr. Cockram can be disregarded too, on the authority of Signy v. Abbey National Building Society (1). There is no doubt that the original letting to Mr. Cockram was the letting of furnished premises, and the time of the original contract of tenancy is the material time to consider. The real question before us is whether the sale of the furniture to Mr. Cockram in the course of the tenancy in February, 1941, altered the tenancy from a furnished tenancy to an unfurnished tenancy for the purpose of fixing the standard rent.

At first sight, it seems a natural and a logical thing to say that, if there is an original furnished letting, and then a purchase of the whole of the furniture, and a continuance of the tenancy, the tenancy is at once transformed from a furnished letting to an unfurnished letting from the date of the purchase, and, if this unfurnished letting is the first letting after the appropriate date, then the amount of the rent must be taken to be the standard rent. I do not, however, think the matter can be disposed of as simply as this, in view of the cases decided in this court. Jozwiak v. Hierowski (3) decides that, if the letting was originally a furnished letting, subsequent variations in the quantity or value of the furniture will not necessarily alter the essential character of the letting. It seems to be equally clear from Seabrook v. Mervyn (7) that, if the essential character of the letting is changed (and this, it would seem, must be decided on the facts of the particular case), a letting, which at the commencement of the letting was a furnished letting, may become an unfurnished letting for the purposes of the Acts. The principle underlying Jozwiak v. Hierowski (3) was followed in Welch v. Nagy (5), and it was there held that, although in the course of a tenancy which was originally a furnished tenancy the tenant actually bought the furniture, nevertheless on the whole of the facts of the case the furnished tenancy was not converted into an unfurnished one. The authorities would seem to combine to say that the exact facts of each case must be considered before deciding whether any such essential change has taken place. Looking at the undisputed facts of this case, at the date of the commencement of the tenancy it was a furnished letting. Mere variation in the quantity or value of the furniture would not be enough to change its essential character, and I do not think that the purchase of the furniture in this case, with its very special and peculiar circumstances, changed the essential character of the tenancy. The original character was retained throughout the short tenancy of Mr. Cockram. In this connection, it is not unimportant to observe that, when the change in the ownership of the furniture occurred, there does not seem to have been any thought of changing the amount of the rent payable or of making any change whatever, and the reduction of the rent by 5s. a week was not made consequent on the change itself, but was merely a concession to the poverty of Mr. Cockram. It follows from all this that, in my view, the first unfurnished letting was the letting to the tenant in June, 1941; at the weekly rent of £3 10s. per week. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the county court judge came to a wrong conclusion, understandable enough in the face of decisions which might seem, at first sight, to be irreconcilable, and the appeal must be allowed.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Dixon, Ward & Co. (for the landlord); Piesse & Sons, agents for Abbot, Sturgess & Co., Richmond (for the tenant).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

HINCKLEY URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. WEST MIDLANDS GAS BOARD.

Affirmed. C.A. post, p. 788.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Lloyd-Jacob, J.), November 16, 17, December 13, 1950.]

Gas—Nationalisation—Financial adjustment—Power of local authority to apply surplus revenue in aid of general rate—Unappropriated profit of working period up to vesting date—Liability of area gas board to remit—Gas Act, 1948 (c. 67), s. 19 (1), s. 56 (2).

The Gas Act, 1948, s. 19 (1), provides that where a local authority have before "the vesting date" (May 1, 1949) made arrangements for the making of financial adjustments, as between the accounts of the gas undertaking of the local authority and any other account of the local authority, in respect of any transaction or matter affecting both their functions as a gas undertaker and other functions of the authority, and in pursuance of those arrangements any amounts would, but for the Act, have fallen on or after the vesting date properly to be debited or credited in the accounts of the gas undertaking and credited or debited in some other account of the local authority, the area board concerned shall pay those amounts to the local authority or be entitled to receive those amounts from the authority as the case may be. Section 56 (2) of the Act provides in effect that all local enactments in force at the vesting date and applicable to any statutory gas undertakers shall as from the vesting date have effect as if for references to the undertaker there were substituted references to the appropriate area board: "Provided that any such local enactment which provides for the regulation of charges made by the undertaker and any other such local enactment which is inconsistent with or rendered redundant by the provisions of this Act shall cease to have effect, as from the vesting date, so, however, that this proviso shall not be taken as affecting any local enactment which contains special provisions for the protection of any person or class of persons and is not rendered redundant by the provisions of this Act."

Until the vesting date a local authority supplied gas to a certain area, and on that date their undertaking became vested in the defendant board under the Gas Act, 1948, s. 17 and s. 18. In their accounts for the last accounting period up to the vesting date the local authority included £30,178 12s. 7d. as unappropriated profit (which amount was unascertained at the vesting date). Under the Hinckley Local Board Gas Act, 1880, s. 43 (as amended by the Hinckley Gas Order, 1922, and the Hinckley Gas Order, 1928) the local authority had the option, if there was surplus revenue not required to be retained as a working balance, to apply the surplus to price reduction or in aid of the general rates of their area. Over the sixty years of their working, the local authority had transferred approximately £10,000 to the general rate fund. In the circumstances which occurred, the local authority had neither the occasion nor the opportunity to consider the application of the surplus of the last working period up to the vesting date to any purpose other than rate aid, and they sought to recover the admitted surplus (viz., £30,178 12s. 7d.) from the defendants, expressing the intention, if successful, to carry the amount to the credit of their general rate fund.

HELD: the unappropriated profit did not vest in the defendants subject to any obligation as to its disposal either (i) under s. 19 (1), because no appropriation had been determined on before the vesting date, or (ii) under s. 56 (2), because s. 43 of the Act of 1880 was inconsistent with or was rendered redundant by the Act of 1948 and was not saved by the exception to the proviso to s. 56 (2) which must be read as intended to preserve provisions which relieved persons from liability or default and not those prescribing the regular manner in which the funds of the undertaking were to be administered, and, therefore, it was unnecessary to decide whether any such obligation required the remission claimed by the local authority.

[FOR THE GAS ACT, 1948, s. 19 and s. 56, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 886, 935.]

A ACTION by the Hinckley Urban District Council, who until May 1, 1949, had been gas undertakers for their area, claiming from the West Midlands Gas Board, the present gas undertakers for the area, a sum representing unappropriated profits for a period of thirteen months up to May 1, 1949. The facts and relevant statutory provisions are set out in the judgment.

Capewell, K.C., and Keen for the plaintiffs.

Heald, K.C., and J. P. Ashworth for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

B Dec. 13. LLOYD-JACOB, J., read the following judgment. The plaintiffs seek to recover from the defendants the sum of £30,178 12s. 7d., which amount represents the profit derived from the operation of the undertaking for the supply of gas carried on by the plaintiffs during the last accounting period up to May 1, 1949, on which date the undertaking became vested in the defendants under the provisions of the Gas Act, 1948, s. 17 and s. 18. C This accounting period extends from Apr. 1, 1948, until Apr. 30, 1949, and includes, in addition to the yearly period of normal working, an additional month. The accounts for this period, in the form of an annual account and a separate account for April, 1949, were prepared for and adopted by the plaintiffs in October, 1949, subject to audit, and the amount now claimed is D agreed to represent the unappropriated profit properly included in such accounts. The basis on which these accounts were prepared differed in only one particular from the basis previously obtaining, in that a figure for "unbilled" gas was included. In the normal operation of the undertaking the reading of meters and the collection of coins from pre-payment meters was not timed to coincide precisely with the plaintiffs' financial year or its regular divisions, with the consequence that at any particular accounting date the cost of producing and E distributing such outstanding "unbilled" or "unread" or "un-metered" gas would not be balanced by appropriate receipts.

F With the gradual growth of the undertaking over the years, the value of gas "unbilled" at the close of each financial year had increased so as to form a substantial hidden reserve, amounting by May, 1948, to some £12,000, but the inclusion in a balance sheet of a properly estimated value for such gas would, in my judgment, have been justified in any period, and was essential in a final period of working, and this is in accord with the suggestions offered by the defendants to local authorities such as the plaintiffs when the defendants were anticipating taking-over.

G The rights and obligations of the plaintiffs in respect of this gas undertaking derive from the Hinckley Local Board Gas Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vic. c. clvii), as amended by the Hinckley Gas Order, 1922 (S.R. & O. 1922, No. 608) and the Hinckley Gas Order, 1928 (S.R. & O. 1928, No. 512). For the purposes of these proceedings, the only material provisions are s. 43 of the Act of 1880 (as amended by the Order of 1922) and art. 25 of the Order of 1928, which replaces s. 44 of the Act of 1880. For convenience of reference, the expressions s. 43 and s. 44 are hereinafter used, but the reference must be I understood to relate to the provisions in respect of (a) accounts and application of receipts, and (b) deficiency in receipts, respectively, which were operative during the twenty years preceding the take-over by the defendants.

Section 43 provides:

"From and after the transfer the local board shall keep accounts in respect of their receipts and expenditure on capital account under this Act and accounts in respect of their receipts and expenditure on revenue account under this Act separate from each other, and from all their other accounts, and shall, save as hereinafter otherwise expressly provided, apply all moneys from time to time received by them in respect of the undertaking (except borrowed money, and except money produced by the sale of superfluous lands), as follows, (that is to say,) 1stly. In payment of the working and establishment expenses, and costs of the maintenance of their gasworks and the undertaking; 2ndly. In payment of their costs, charges, and expenses of and incidental to the collecting and recovery of gas rents and rates, and of the borrowing of money under this Act. 3rdly. In payment of the interest on the said loans of the company (if any) which shall be outstanding at the time of the transfer according to their several priorities; 4thly. In the payment of the interest on the Hinckley Local Board Gas Debenture Stock issued under or in pursuance of this Act; 5thly. In the payment of the annual sums due on annuity certificates, interest on debentures, and interest on money borrowed under or for the purposes of this Act; 6thly. In providing the requisite sinking fund and annual appropriations, and for securing the discharge of or in paying off the Hinckley Local Board Gas Debenture Stock issued under or in pursuance of this Act; 7thly. In providing the sums annually required for paying off debentures in accordance with the provisions of this Act, and the requisite sinking fund and annual appropriations, and otherwise for securing the discharge of loans borrowed under or for the purposes of this Act; 8thly. In setting apart if the council think fit a yearly sum not exceeding ten pounds per centum of the said moneys from time to time received by them as aforesaid for the purpose of forming a reserve fund to provide for any extraordinary expenditure in connection with the gas undertaking; 9thly. In improving and extending the gasworks and mains, and in payment of any charges and expenses for the time being paid out of the general district rate in respect thereof; And they may if they think fit carry forward to the credit of the revenue account of their gas undertaking for the next succeeding year for the purpose of providing a working balance any sum not exceeding £5,000 and subject thereto shall either carry to the district fund any surplus or balance remaining in any year or apply the same in reduction of the price charged by them for the supply of gas."

There follows a proviso which is not pertinent to the action. The expression "district fund" is to be understood, since the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925, as a reference to the general rate fund.

Section 44 (as substituted by art. 25 of the Order of 1928) provides:

"Any deficiency in the revenues and receipts of the council on account of the undertaking to make any of the payments or provide any of the funds to which the moneys received by them in respect of the undertaking are applicable under the provisions of s. 43 (accounts and application of receipts) of the Act of 1880 as amended by s. 32 (reserve fund) of the Order of 1922 shall be from time to time made good out of the general rate in such manner as the council may from time to time determine: Provided that the general rate shall not without the consent of the Minister of Health be applicable to meet any such deficiency unless all persons supplied with gas by the council have been charged for the same the maximum prices authorised by art. 15 of this Order throughout the period during which such deficiency shall have arisen."

This latter section is material only to indicate a contingent liability, in certain circumstances, on the general ratepayers to make good losses incurred in the working of the gas undertaking. No such circumstances ever arose, the credit balance carried forward in the preceding year for all the seven instances of a loss in working being found sufficient to meet the deficiency.

So far as concerns s. 43 it will be noted that it specified the purposes to which the receipts from the gas undertaking were to be applied, and it provided that, if there remained a surplus or balance in the opinion of the plaintiffs not required to be retained as a working balance, the plaintiffs had an option either to apply the amount to price reduction or to transfer it for rate aid. Over the sixty odd years of working, approximately £10,000 has been transferred to the general rate fund.

Before the vesting date, the plaintiffs had not considered the question of disposing of the surplus, if any, for the period Apr. 1, 1948, to Apr. 30, 1949. In the circumstances which have happened, the plaintiffs, as from May 1, 1949, have had neither occasion nor opportunity to consider the application of the surplus of the last working period of the gas undertaking to any purpose other than for rate aid, and, if so applied, it would represent approximately 3s. 4d. in the pound on the rateable value of property in the area. By this action they seek to recover the admitted surplus from the defendants (to whom the assets of the gas undertaking have been transferred) and they express the intention, if successful, to carry the amount to the credit of their general rate fund.

It becomes necessary, therefore, to examine the terms of the Gas Act, 1948, to ascertain to what extent, if at all, the plaintiffs retain any right to, or to the disposition of, any funds forming part of the assets of the undertaking after the date when the provisions of that Act became effective. The general purposes of the Act included the transfer to area gas boards of property, rights, obligations and liabilities of gas undertakers and other persons: see Part II, s. 15 to s. 40 inclusive; and it is not in dispute that on May 1, 1949, pursuant to the provisions of s. 17 and s. 18 of the Act and the Gas (Vesting Date) Order, 1949 (S.I. 1949, No. 392), made thereunder, the property, rights, obligations and liabilities of the plaintiffs wholly or mainly relating to their gas undertaking became vested in the defendant board. Immediately prior to such vesting there was included within the property a sum, not then ascertained, of the surplus of unappropriated profit from the operation of the gas undertaking since its previous accounting date, which sum was later ascertained to be the amount herein claimed.

Two questions, therefore, arise: (i) Did this property vest subject to any obligation as to its disposal, and (ii) If yes, does such obligation require the remission of the amount claimed to the plaintiffs? As to the first of these, apart from the general obligations resting on the area boards contained in Part I of the Act, which can for present purposes be disregarded, there are two sections which are directly relevant, s. 19 and s. 56. Section 19 provides:

"(1) Where a local authority have before the vesting date made arrangements for the making of financial adjustments, as between the accounts of the gas undertaking of the local authority and any other account of the local authority, in respect of any transaction or matter affecting both their functions as a gas undertaker and other functions of the authority, and in pursuance of those arrangements any amount would, but for this Act, have fallen on or after the vesting date properly to be debited or credited in the accounts of the gas undertaking of the local authority and credited, or, as the case may be, debited, in some other account of the local authority, the area board in whom property, rights, liabilities and obligations of the local authority vest by virtue of this Act shall, subject as hereinafter provided, pay those amounts to the local authority or be entitled to receive those amounts from the authority, as the case may be, at the times at which, but for this Act, those amounts would have fallen to be debited or credited in the accounts of the gas undertaking of the local authority: Provided that this sub-section shall not apply in relation to any apportionment of establishment charges between the accounts of the gas undertaking and other accounts of the local authority. (2) The said area board and the local authority may agree or the Minister of Health, may, on the application of either party in default of such agreement, determine that, having regard to the circumstances in which any such arrangements were made and the circumstances arising under this Act, the last preceding sub-section shall not apply to those arrangements or shall apply thereto with such modifications as to the payments to be made by the board or the local authority as may be so agreed or determined, and the said sub-section shall have effect subject to any such agreement or determination. Any other question arising under the last preceding sub-section as to the payments to be made thereunder shall, in default of agreement, be determined by the Minister of Health. (3) Any payment made by the said area board or the local authority under the preceding provisions of this section which would, but for this Act, have been debited or credited as a capital payment shall be deemed to be a capital payment, and any other such payment shall be deemed to be an annual payment."

Sub-section (4), which is not material, deals with arrangements made as to loans or advances.

The appropriation of surplus profit of the gas undertaking to the relief of rates would, in my judgment, be an arrangement for the making of financial adjustments as between the accounts of the gas undertaking of the local authority and another account of the local authority, and it would be in respect of a matter affecting their functions both as a gas undertaker and as a local authority. If, therefore, such an appropriation had been determined on before the vesting date, but no actual adjustment made before the transfer of the assets of the gas undertaking, this section would apply, and the assets would be charged with the obligation to implement such adjustment subject to agreement, or in default thereof, to determination by the Minister. As no such appropriation had, in fact, been made the subject of arrangements prior to the vesting date, it does not avail the plaintiffs.

Section 56 (1) imposes on area boards certain obligations in connection with gas supply. Sub-section (2) provides:

"All local enactments in force at the vesting date and applicable to any statutory undertakers, except enactments applicable to any electricity boards, local authorities or composite companies otherwise than in relation to their gas undertakings, shall as from the vesting date have effect— (a) as if for references to the undertaker there were substituted references to the area board in whom property, rights, liabilities and obligations of the undertaker vest by virtue of this Act; (b) as if for any references (however worded and whether expressed or implied) to the gas undertaking or any part thereof or to the limits of supply of the undertaker or any part thereof there were substituted a reference to so much of the business carried on by the area board as corresponds to that undertaking or part thereof or, as the case may be, a reference to the area comprised in the said limits of supply immediately before the vesting date or part thereof; and shall also have effect, as from such date as may be prescribed, which may be prior to the making of the regulations but not to the vesting date, with such other adaptations and modifications (if any) as may be prescribed, being adaptations and modifications required in consequence of the provisions of this Act: Provided that any such local enactment which provides for the regulation of charges made by the undertaker and any other such local enactment which is inconsistent with or rendered redundant by the provisions of this Act shall cease to have effect, as from the vesting date, so, however, that this proviso shall not be taken as affecting any local enactment which contains special provisions for the protection of any person or class of persons and is not rendered redundant by the provisions of this Act."

The Hinckley Local Board Gas Act, 1880, was in force at the vesting date and was applicable, so that as from the vesting date sub-s. (2) (a) would cause the substitution of the defendants for the plaintiffs in the operation of that Act, subject to the effect of the proviso to the sub-section. Section 43 of the Act of 1880 provides for the regulation of charges made by the undertaker (and, even if it did not specifically so provide, it would, in my judgment, be proper to hold that the scheme for distribution of profits contained in the section was inconsistent with the Gas Act, 1948), so that, unless it is saved by the exception for protective clauses, s. 43, notionally amended by the substitution of the name of the defendants for that of the plaintiffs, would cease to have effect as from the vesting date.

Is it so saved? The reference to "special provisions for the protection of any person or class of persons" is not, in my view, apt to describe the regular, prescribed manner in which the funds of the undertaking are to be administered, however much such administration may provide benefits to the ratepayers or gas users as a class. It must rather be read as intended to preserve the operation of a statutory provision which relieves a person or class of persons from liability or default, of which s. 39 of the Act of 1880 is an instance. It follows, therefore, that as from the vesting date s. 43 ceased to have effect, and that there rests on the defendants no obligation or liability to deal with any assets taken over by them from the plaintiffs in accordance with its provisions.

Some indirect support for this conclusion is, in my judgment, to be derived from s. 19 and s. 37 of the Gas Act, 1948. Section 19 has already been referred to, and s. 37, in effect, qualifies the statutory right of the local authority, between Feb. 10, 1948, and the vesting date, to apply its trading surpluses. It would be strange to find that an Act which limited the freedom of a local authority in the exercise of its statutory duty pending take-over and made special provisions for implementing the decisions of a local authority not fulfilled at the date of take-over should preserve the freedom of the local authority to make any effective decision after the date of take-over in relation to property which had vested. The answer, therefore, to the first question must be that the whole property in the gas undertaking of the plaintiffs vested in the defendants subject to the general obligations under s. 56 (1) of the Act of 1948 (which are common to all area boards), but not subject to any obligation as to the specific disposal of any part of it.

The second question does not, therefore, arise, and it becomes unnecessary to decide whether, had the provisions of s. 43 of the Act of 1880 remained operative, but exercisable by the defendants, the plaintiffs could have required such exercise to be in favour of a grant to the general rate fund. On the hypothesis of these provisions continuing, the whole rights of allocation among the various objects set out in the section would prima facie continue, and the restriction to the residuary purpose which would now characterise the exercise of the power by the plaintiffs would not, it would appear, be necessarily imposed by circumstances on the defendants. Nor am I concerned to decide how, should the position be other than as I have stated it, the crediting of the amount claimed to the general rate fund could have been secured by an order of this court.

Action dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Lees & Co., agents for J. G. S. Tompkins, Hinckley (for the plaintiffs); Sherwood & Co., agents for A. C. Croasdale, Birmingham (for the defendants).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

BODDINGTON v. WISSON

Dictum of SIR RAYMOND EVERSHERD, M.R., at p. 169, applied. COATES v. DIMENT, post, p. 890.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., ~~WIGMORE, L.J., and~~ Vaisey, J.), December 1, 4, 1950.]

Agriculture—Agricultural holding—Notice to quit—Consent of Minister not obtained—Notice given before, but expiring after, date of revocation of regulation requiring consent—Effect of revocation—Interpretation Act, 1889 (c. 63), s. 38 (2)—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 62 (4A)—Defence Regulations (No. 3) Order, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 336), art. 1.

On Oct. 8, 1947, the landlord of an agricultural holding served on the tenant a notice to quit on Oct. 11, 1948. Under reg. 62 (4A) of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, the notice was "null and void" unless the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries consented in writing thereto. No written consent of the Minister was obtained by the landlord. On Mar. 1, 1948, reg. 62 (4A) was revoked by the Defence Regulations (No. 3) Order, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 336).

HELD: (i) apart from the provisions of the Interpretation Act, 1889, the effect of the revocation of reg. 62 (4A) was that that regulation must be treated as having been non-existent ab initio.

(ii) the words of s. 38 (2) of the Act of 1889 were not appropriate to preserve the effect of reg. 62 (4A) in relation to the notice in question, and, therefore, the notice was valid and the landlord was entitled to possession.

[FOR THE DEFENCE (GENERAL) REGULATIONS, 1939, reg. 62 (4A), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 40, p. 1420; FOR THE INTERPRETATION ACT, 1889, s. 38 (2), see ibid., Second Edn., Vol. 24, p. 229.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Kendrick's Agreement, [1948] 2 All E.R. 101; [1948] Ch. 430; [1948] L.J.R. 1332; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Kestell v. Langmaid, [1949] 2 All E.R. 749; [1950] 1 K.B. 233; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the tenant from an order of His Honour JUDGE LAWSON CAMPBELL, made at Biggleswade County Court on Oct. 3, 1950, whereby he held that a notice to quit an agricultural holding given before, but expiring after, the revocation of reg. 62 (4A) of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, was effective, although no consent in writing of the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries had been obtained by the landlord. The facts appear in the judgment of SIR RAYMOND EVERSHERD, M.R.

Gordon Hardy for the tenant.

T. H. K. Berry for the landlord.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSHERD, M.R.: On Oct. 8, 1947, the landlord gave to the tenant a notice to quit his agricultural holding on Oct. 11, 1948. At the time when the notice was given there was in operation reg. 62 of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, passed by virtue of the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939. Paragraph (4A) of that regulation, as it stood at the relevant date, was in these terms:

"Where the whole or any part of an agricultural holding is subject to a contract of sale made since Sept. 3, 1939, or has been sold in pursuance of a contract of sale made since that date, any notice to quit that holding or any part thereof given to the tenant so as to expire at any time after the end of the year 1941 shall be null and void: Provided that this paragraph shall not apply to any notice if (whether before or after the giving thereof) the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries consents in writing thereto."

In the present case the holding was sold under a contract made since Sept. 3, 1939. Therefore, by virtue of that regulation the notice to which I have alluded was null and void (whatever those words on their true construction mean), subject to the proviso or condition that the notice could be rendered fully effective for all purposes, assuming it was otherwise a good notice, if at any date before Oct. 11, 1948, the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries consented in writing thereto.

A The Agriculture Act, 1947, altered in many ways the law relating to landlords and tenants of agricultural holdings. That Act, so far as it would apply to a holding of this kind, came into force on Mar. 1, 1948. In pursuance of the policy of the new Act there was brought into operation on the same date another defence regulation, made by virtue of the Supplies and Services (Transitional Powers) Act, 1945 (as amended), which had taken the place of the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939. The Defence Regulation (No. 3) Order, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 336) provides:

"1. Paragraph . . . (4A) . . . of reg. 62 of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (which . . . make[s] . . . provision with respect to the termination of agricultural tenancies) [is] hereby revoked . . ."

C When, therefore, the notice expired on Oct. 11, 1948, reg. 62 (4A), which had applied to this notice up to Mar. 1, 1948, had ceased to apply. The landlord never asked the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries to give his consent to the notice, and no consent was ever given. The landlord, however, contended that from the date of the revocation of reg. 62 (4A) he became wholly free from any obligation to obtain the Minister's consent as a condition of enforcing his notice to quit. On the other hand, the tenant said that, either by virtue of the Interpretation Act, 1889, or otherwise, the revocation did not make good the notice to quit which, in the absence of a ministerial consent, had been disabled once and for all by reg. 62 from having any effect.

D The county court judge, who decided in favour of the landlord, referred in his judgment to the interpretation which this court has put on the formula E "null and void." He concluded by saying:

"It is perfectly obvious that the regulation made in 1948 was being framed to do away with the whole of the procedure laid down by reg. 62 (4A) and it would be an odd thing to say that, where it is doing away with the whole thing, it does not apply to any case where notice has been given already. I cannot believe that it means that. I say it is revoked entirely so that the regulation ceases to have any effect . . . This is supported by the fact that the law was then in a state of transition. This was one stage in moving from the old code to a new one. For these reasons I feel that the moment reg. 62 became inoperative, all consents became unnecessary."

F G With that conclusion of the learned judge I agree, though I would like, since the matter is of some importance and has been carefully argued, to state the steps by which I arrive at that conclusion.

First, it is necessary to see what this phrase, "null and void," means. When reg. 62 (4A) was originally introduced in 1941 the proviso was in a different form and was to the effect that a notice to quit would be null and void unless prior to the giving of it a consent had been obtained. If that had been its form throughout, I think the words "null and void" would have been appropriate. The change, however, in the form of the proviso and the use of words which show quite plainly, as the court has held in Re Kendrick's Agreement (1), that the ministerial consent may be given at any time up to the expiry of the notice make the words "null and void" obviously inappropriate, at least without substantial reservations. A notice to quit which expires in a year's time cannot be said to be effective in one sense of the word until the date arrives on which it is to take effect, and if, notwithstanding the first part of the regulation, a notice can always be made fully effective by a consent given at any time up to the expiry of the notice, it seems inappropriate, pending the giving of the consent, to treat the words "null and void" as meaning wholly nugatory and without any force and effect in any circumstances. Indeed, in Kestell v. Langmaid (2) expression was clearly given to that view by this court. There a notice had been given, the Minister's consent was never asked for and was never obtained, but the tenant went out of possession when the notice expired and then sought compensation under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, s. 12 (1), on the ground that the tenancy of his holding had terminated "by reason of a notice to quit" given by the landlord and in consequence of that notice. The landlord argued that no tenant could be said to have quitted a holding by reason or in consequence of something which was null and void. This court pointed out, however, that "null and void" had no such destructive signification and that in the circumstances it came to no more than that the notice was not enforceable by the landlord against the tenant unless the ministerial consent has been obtained before its expiry. The example of Kestell v. Langmaid (2) is important as showing that, even where no consent has been given, if the tenant acts on the notice, then, for the purposes of attracting compensation, it retains the quality that it would have at common law of being a valid and effective notice to quit. That, as will be seen, is important.

I return to the regulation which revoked para. (4A) of reg. 62. It is well established that, apart from the Interpretation Act, 1889 (which took the place of an earlier Act of 1850), the effect of the repeal of an Act of Parliament is that the Act repealed is treated as having been ab initio non-existent. The matter is stated thus in MAXWELL ON INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES, 9th ed., p. 404:

"Where an Act . . . was repealed, it was formerly regarded, [i.e., before the Interpretation Act, 1889] in the absence of provision to the contrary, as having never existed, except as to matters and transactions past and closed."

Apart, therefore, from the Interpretation Act, 1889, the effect of the revocation of para. (4A) would be that, quoad this notice, the regulation would be treated as though it had never existed. In other words, the only thing which qualified or in any way disabled the effect that that notice would have had at common law has been removed. I think that that would be so even though the words "null and void" were to have their full signification, although, in my opinion, since "null and void" has been given a much more limited meaning, it becomes still more difficult to say that after the regulation which imposed the condition has gone, the notice suffers from its initial disabling characteristic.

That, however, is not the end of the matter, because it is provided by reg. 99B of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, that the Interpretation Act, 1889, shall apply to regulations of this kind, as it applies to statutes. Regulation 99B now provides:

"The Interpretation Act, 1889, shall apply to the interpretation of any Order in Council, order, rule or bye-law made under or by virtue of the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939, the Supplies and Services (Transitional Powers) Act, 1945, or the Emergency Laws (Transitional Provisions) Act, 1946, as it applies to the interpretation of an Act of Parliament, and for the purposes of s. 38 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, any such Order in Council, order, rule, or bye-law as aforesaid shall be deemed to be an Act of Parliament."

Section 38 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, provides:

"(2) Where this Act or any Act passed after the commencement of this Act repeals any other enactment, then, unless the contrary intention appears, the repeal shall not—(a) revive anything not in force or existing at the time at which the repeal takes effect.”

- A If reg. 62 (4A) had retained its original form so that the notice in question would have been wholly inoperative, or “null and void,” from the moment of its service because of the non-fulfilment of the condition precedent, then I think that the effect of s. 38 (2) (a) of the Act of 1889 would have been that the common law rule to which I have alluded would not have applied so as again to give life to this notice to quit, but, as I have pointed out, the effect of reg. 62 (4A) was not so destructive. There is great force in the argument of counsel for the landlord that reg. 62 (4A) is not within the words of s. 38 (2) (a) at all. It cannot be said of this notice to quit, even before reg. 62 (4A) was revoked, that it was not “in force.” For some purposes it was. It was only conditionally enforceable, but it was in force in the sense that it could have been acted on at any rate by the tenant. Equally it could not be said that it was not existing. So long as it was not wholly null and void, for some purposes it must have existed. There is a still further difficulty. Reg. 62 (4A) confers on the Minister a power and a duty to give his consent in appropriate cases, and that consent takes away the disqualification to which, without it, the notice, by virtue of the regulation, might be subject. It seems very difficult to say that s. 38 (2) (a) was effective to keep alive a ministerial or executive function of the Minister to give consents to notices and thereby to make then enforceable where they otherwise would not be. Sub-section (2) (b) provides that the repeal is not to affect anything duly done under another statute. I do not think that that paragraph can assist the tenant, nor do I think that the tenant’s protection under the regulation could be fairly described in the words of sub-s. (2) (c) as a “right” or “privilege”, or the limitation of the landlord’s right be fairly described as an “obligation” or “liability,” nor do I think that it is a penalty or a punishment in respect of an offence within para. (d). Counsel for the tenant put forward an argument of some ingenuity on para. (e), which says that the repealing Act shall not
- E “affect any investigation . . . in respect of any such right, privilege, obligation, liability . . . as aforesaid.”

- If there is here no right or privilege—and I have said that, in my view, there is not—the case cannot be covered by “investigation” because the only investigations referred to are in respect of such rights as are previously mentioned.
- F The argument has failed to satisfy me that the investigation which reg. 62 (4A) supposes the Minister will, if he performs his ministerial duties aright, undertake before giving his consent is an investigation as envisaged by the final words of para. (e). Nor do I think the landlord’s right to ask for consent could be described as a right within para. (c) or as a right to require an investigation within para. (e).

- G I, therefore, take the view which the learned judge below took—that the words of s. 38 (2) are not appropriate to preserve the procedure and results of reg. 62, para. (4A), quoad this particular notice. I would be disposed to agree with counsel for the tenant that the result is, perhaps, one which Parliament, if asked, would have said it did not contemplate. We, however, must interpret the language Parliament has thought fit to use. It may well be that this is casus omissus, but, looking at the language of the two statutory instruments together, I cannot see any such ambiguity as would entitle us, by investigating the policy of the Agricultural Acts, to import into the second regulation words which would keep alive, for the purposes of this notice and other notices like it, the full effect of the revoked regulation. The decision of the High Court in Re Kendrick’s Agreement (1) shows clearly what was the true meaning of the proviso to reg. 62 (4A). It may be that until that decision it had not been fully appreciated that the language used, whether intentionally or not, had the effect that the ministerial consent could be given at any time up to the expiry of the notice. After that decision, the Ministry concerned proceeded to deal with the excepted cases in S.I. 1948, No. 336, that is to say, they proceeded to deal with Scotland, and the Defence Regulations (No. 8) Order, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 2343) which came into operation on Nov. 1, 1948, took this form:
- H

"1. Paragraph . . . (4A) . . . of reg. 62 of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, . . . [is] hereby revoked in [its] application to Scotland: Provided that, notwithstanding the foregoing revocation and without prejudice to the provisions of s. 38 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, the provisions of para. (4A) aforesaid shall apply to any such notice to quit referred to in the said paragraph as has been given to a tenant prior to the date of coming into operation of this Order."

That form of instrument supports the view I have formed, that, having regard to the true construction of reg. 62 (4A), without a proper saving clause it was not sufficient to rely on the Interpretation Act to keep alive for all purposes quoad notices then current the revoked para. (4A) of reg. 62. For these reasons I think that the decision of the court below was correct and that this appeal fails.

SINGLETON, L.J.: I agree.

VAISEY, J.: I also agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Iliffe, Sweet & Co., agents for Wilkinson & Butler, St. Neots (for the tenant); Alexander Farr & Son, Bedford (for the landlord).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. HAMPSTEAD AND ST. PANCRAS RENT TRIBUNAL.

Ex parte GOODMAN.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Hilbery and Parker, JJ.), December 14, 1950.]

Rent Control—Reasonable rent—Withdrawal of application—Jurisdiction of tribunal to proceed with hearing—Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (c. 40), s. 1 (1).

On Sept. 5, 1949, the tenant of a flat applied to a rent tribunal, under s. 1 (1) of the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, to determine a reasonable rent for the premises. In February, 1950, before the application had been heard, the parties came to an agreement whereby the rent was reduced, and sought to withdraw the application. The tribunal, however, took the view that the Act of 1949 made no provision for the withdrawal of an application once it had been made.

HELD: an applicant under s. 1 (1) might withdraw his application at any time before the tribunal gave its decision, and the tribunal then had no jurisdiction to proceed with the hearing.

[FOR THE LANDLORD AND TENANT (RENT CONTROL) ACT, 1949, s. 1 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 13, p. 1094.]

MOTION by the landlord, Dr. Theodore Goodman, for an order of prohibition prohibiting the Hampstead and St. Pancras Rent Tribunal from further proceeding with an application under s. 1 (1) of the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, made by the tenant on Sept. 5, 1949, in respect of premises at 21c Cannon Place, Hampstead, on the ground that the tribunal had no jurisdiction to deal with the application since it had been withdrawn by the tenant. The tribunal were of the opinion that the wording of s. 1 (1) of the Act of 1949 did not permit the withdrawal of an application once it had been made, but agreed to adjourn the hearing pending the hearing of the motion.

Gallop, K.C., and Dennis Lloyd for the landlord.

The Attorney-General (Sir Hartley Shawcross, K.C.), and J. P. Ashworth for the tribunal.

I. H. Jacob and Nunes for the tenant.

LORD GODDARD, C.J. : Counsel for the landlord moves for an order addressed to the Hampstead and St. Pancras Rent Tribunal to prohibit them from further considering an application made to them under s. 1 (1) of the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, by the tenant, Dr. Wing, in respect of a tenancy of 21c, Cannon Place, Hampstead, which he holds on a fourteen years' lease from Sept. 29, 1947, from the landlord, Dr. Goodman.

The rateable value of the premises is under £100, and, accordingly, the case is one in which the tribunal would have jurisdiction. After the application had been made on Sept. 5, 1949, the parties agreed on a reduced rent to be paid by the tenant, and they so informed the tribunal. The tribunal, however, intimated to the parties that, in their opinion, an application having been made, they were bound to continue the hearing, but they adjourned the matter pending an application to this court for an order of prohibition.

One has to remember the genesis of the Rent Control Act, 1949. In September, 1939, the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 was passed which brought under control a great number of houses which had not previously been controlled, and it was provided that the standard rent should be the rent at which the premises were let on Sept. 1, 1939, or, if let thereafter, the rent at which they were first so let. That gave an opportunity to landlords, where the premises had not been let on Sept. 1, to fix any rent they liked, and the rent so fixed became the standard rent. In 1949 Parliament intervened and conferred on rent tribunals power to alter the standard rent fixed by the Act of 1939 and to substitute a "reasonable" rent. Section 1 (1) of the Act of 1949 provides:

"Where apart from this section the standard rent of a dwelling-house would be—(a) the rent at which it was let on a letting beginning after Sept. 1, 1939, or (b) an amount ascertainable by apportionment of the rent at which a property of which it formed part was let on such a letting as aforesaid (whether such an apportionment has been made or not), then, subject to the provisions of this section, the landlord or the tenant may make application to the tribunal to determine what rent is reasonable for that dwelling-house, and on any such application the tribunal shall determine that rent and shall notify the parties of their determination: Provided that an application shall not be made in respect of a dwelling-house if a previous application in respect thereof has been made under this subsection."

Observe that the application can be made either by the landlord or the tenant, and, if a rent has been fixed by the tribunal, no further application can be made. It seems to me that until an application has been adjudicated on it is always open to any landlord or tenant of the premises to go to the tribunal and ask for the rent to be fixed, but is there any reason why we should construe the section as meaning that once an application, in the sense of the filling in of forms, has been made, the tribunal must go on so as to fix a rent which will adhere to the premises for ever? I think that s. 1 (1) must mean that there must be a subsisting application at the time when the tribunal shall determine the rent, and that we must read the words as meaning: "... on any such application made and not withdrawn the tribunal shall determine that rent and shall notify the parties of their determination: Provided that an application shall not be made in respect of a dwelling-house if a previous application in respect thereof has been made under this sub-section." It seems to me that, in the absence of strong words in the section to the contrary a tribunal only has jurisdiction so long as an application subsists. In my view, an applicant may withdraw his application at any time. So, if the parties to an application choose to withdraw it by consent, the tribunal is not under any duty to—and, indeed, cannot—proceed with the hearing. Any subsequent tenant, however, can go to the tribunal because there will not have been an application which fixed the rent. It is only where there is an application which results in the fixing of the rent that it becomes final. For these reasons, I think the order for prohibition must go.

One other point has been mentioned by the Attorney-General on which he says it is desirable that we should give a decision, and that is: Up to what time can the application be withdrawn? This does not strictly arise in this case, but for my part I think it can be withdrawn up to any time before the tribunal gives its decision.

HILBERY, J. : I agree with all that has fallen from my Lord. It appears to me that the policy of this Act is to give a right to two people personally to go to the tribunal on an application to obtain the decision of the tribunal on what shall be the reasonable rent of premises. It is of importance to notice that in this Act no power is given to a local authority of its own motion to seek the decision of the tribunal so as to fix in rem a standard rent on premises. The right given is a personal right to the landlord and to the tenant, and it is to make an application on which the tribunal will determine what rent is reasonable for the dwelling-house. The jurisdiction of the tribunal is to determine a matter which is brought to them for decision on the exercise of personal rights by certain persons, and I cannot conceive as a matter of general principle, apart from the argument about the contents of other statutes put forward by the Attorney-General, why in those circumstances the parties should not, at any time before the tribunal gives its decision, say to the tribunal: "We no longer wish to exercise the rights thus given to us, and we no longer ask the tribunal to give its decision on what is the reasonable rent." On some occasions it must be an advantage to the parties to be able to do that. I can conceive of cases where, by a bargain made after an application has been put in by the tenant, the tenant may obtain, as a matter of arrangement with the landlord, a rent which he thinks is even lower than the tribunal would award. For these reasons, in addition to those given by my Lord, I agree.

PARKER, J. : I agree with the judgments given by my Lords.

Prohibition issued. No order as to costs.

Solicitors: E. Royalton Kisch & Co. (for the landlord); Solicitor, Ministry of Health (for the tribunal); E. Duchin (for the tenant).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

NOTE.

R. v. GATENBY.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL (Lord Goddard, C.J., Hilbery and Parker, JJ.),
December 18, 1950.]

*Criminal Law—Appeal—Court of Criminal Appeal—Error in order of court—
A Inherent power of court to ensure that its own orders are properly carried out.*

On November 20, 1950, the Court of Criminal Appeal, finding that an irregularity had been committed in a case, in that the recorder at quarter sessions had failed to take the formal verdict of the jury after the appellant had withdrawn a plea of Not Guilty and had pleaded Guilty, set aside the judgment and ordered a venire de novo to issue. In error, the order issued by the Criminal
B Appeal Office stated: "The court doth finally determine the [appeal] and doth allow the said appeal and doth quash the conviction and direct a judgment and verdict of acquittal on the indictment whereon the appellant was convicted to be entered, but doth order that the appellant be kept in custody and remitted for trial at the Manchester Assizes now in progress."

C The appellant did not appear.

J. H. Buzzard for the Crown.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: We consider that we have ample power—the inherent power of the court—to see that its orders are properly carried out, and we set aside the order which has been issued and order in these terms:

"The court doth allow the appeal and doth order that the conviction and D judgment on the indictment whereon the appellant was convicted be set aside and annulled, and that the appellant do appear at the present assizes at Manchester and plead to and answer the said indictment, and that in the meantime the appellant be remanded in custody."

Solicitor: Director of Public Prosecutions.

H.McL.M.

HIGHAM v. HAVANT AND WATERLOO URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Hilbery and Parker, JJ.),
December 7, 8, 14, 1950.]

*Town and Country Planning—Compulsory acquisition—Compensation—Possibility of service of enforcement notice—Notice to treat served after the passing of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, and before the "appointed day"—
G Planning permission—Caravan site—Licence under Public Health Act, 1936 (c. 49), s. 269 (1)—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51), s.
75 (1).*

The claimant owned two sites which she had purchased in plots at dates prior to Apr. 16, 1931, and Aug. 27, 1936, respectively, and, except during the war, had used the whole of one site and part of the other as caravan sites. On Dec. 4, 1937, she applied for and acquired a licence under the Public Health Act, 1936, s. 269, to use the land for caravans. No town planning scheme had been prepared for the area in which the sites were situated, but on Dec. 7, 1928, the Minister of Health confirmed a resolution to prepare a scheme passed by the then local planning authority, the interim development order applicable at that time being the Portsmouth and District Town Planning (General Interim Development) Order, 1928. No application for consent to the user of the sites for caravans under the Town and Country Planning Acts had been made or granted. By the Havant and Waterloo Urban District Council Act, 1947, power was given to the relevant local authority to acquire (inter alia) the two sites in question, and on June 17, 1948, notices to treat were served on the claimant. The compensation fell to be assessed under Part V of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (in particular, s. 55 thereof), which was passed on Aug. 6, 1947, Part V coming into force immediately. The remainder of the Act, including s. 75 (which deals with the position where existing development contravenes previous planning control), by virtue of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (Appointed Day) Order, 1948, dated Feb. 9, 1948, came into force on July 1, 1948. In the assessment of compensation to be paid to the claimant the question arose whether on or after July 1, 1948, the actual use of the two sites could be the subject of an enforcement notice under s. 75 of the Act of 1947, and, if so, whether the arbitrator might take that into account in assessing compensation.
I

HELD: (i) the grant of a licence under s. 269 of the Act of 1936, even though it was granted by the local authority which was also the planning authority, did not amount to planning permission, and, therefore, as no permission for the use of the land for caravan sites had been given by or under the interim development order, having regard to s. 75 (9) of the Act of 1947 the claimant's use of the land was begun in breach of previous planning control.

(ii) on the true construction of s. 75 (1) of the Act of 1947 (which applies Part III of the Act with regard to enforcement notices, including, in particular, s. 23, and provides that an enforcement notice shall not be served in respect of any use at any time after three years from the appointed day) that sub-section provided a substituted, and not an additional, limitation to that provided by s. 23 (which imposes a limitation of four years from the beginning of the change of user), and, therefore, an enforcement notice served when s. 75 came into force would not be out of time.

(iii) it could not be implied, having regard to s. 75 (6), that where no enforcement notice had been served the arbitrator could not take into consideration the possibility of its being served; although at the date of the notices to treat s. 75 had not become law, it was then known that the section would come into force on July 1, 1948, and that an enforcement notice could then be served; and, therefore, the arbitrator was not debarred from taking into consideration the possibility of such service.

[FOR THE TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING ACT, 1947, s. 75, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 40, pp. 812-815.]

Case referred to:

- (1) Pilling v. Abergale Urban District Council, [1950] 1 All E.R. 76; [1950] 1 K.B. 636; 114 J.P. 69.

CASE STATED by an official arbitrator under the Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act, 1919, s. 6 (1).

The arbitrator made alternative awards of compensation to the claimant in respect of the compulsory acquisition of her land by the Havant and Waterloo Urban District Council, subject to the opinion of the High Court on the questions (i) whether, on or after July 1, 1948, the actual use of the land in question could be the subject of an enforcement notice under the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, s. 75, and, if so, whether the arbitrator might take that into account in assessing compensation; and (ii) whether a licence under the Public Health Act, 1936, s. 269, was personal to the licensee. The court did not find it necessary to answer question (ii).

Sandlands, K.C., and G. Howard for the claimant.

H. B. Williams, K.C., and W. L. Roots for the urban district council.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 14. PARKER, J., read the following judgment of the court. This is a Special Case stated by an official arbitrator under the Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act, 1919, s. 6 (1), making alternative awards of compensation in respect of the compulsory acquisition of land, subject to the opinion of the court on two questions.

The facts, so far as they are material to the determination of the questions raised, are as follows. The claimant was the owner of two pieces of land in the parish of Havant in the county of Southampton known as "the Sealand site," about one acre, and "the Creek Road site," about half an acre. The various parcels making up these two sites were purchased by the claimant, in the case of the Sealand site, at various dates prior to Apr. 16, 1931, and, in the case of the Creek Road site, at various dates prior to Aug. 27, 1936. From the time of purchase the claimant used the Sealand site and part of the Creek Road site for moveable dwellings, that is, as sites for caravans, and except for a period during the war when such user was prohibited, continued to do so down to the date of the notices to treat. Prior to the purchases by the claimant, the land had been used for agricultural purposes. No town planning scheme had ever been prepared covering the area in which the two sites were situated, but on Dec. 7, 1928, the Minister of Health had confirmed a resolution to prepare a scheme passed by the Portsmouth City Council, the predecessors of the Havant and Waterloo Urban District Council, the acquiring authority. At that time and when such user by the claimant was begun, the interim development order applicable was the Portsmouth and District Town Planning (General Interim Development) Order, 1928. No application for consent to such user had ever been made or granted. On Dec. 4, 1937, however, the claimant applied for a licence under the Public Health Act, 1936, s. 269, to use the land for moveable dwellings, and, the application not having been refused within four weeks, was, by virtue of s. 269 (4), deemed to have been granted unconditionally on Jan. 1, 1938. By the Havant and Waterloo Urban District Council Act, 1947, a private Act, the acquiring authority were given powers to acquire certain areas of land, including the claimant's two sites, for sea defence works, and on June 17, 1948, notices to treat were served on the claimant in respect of the said sites.

The compensation falls to be assessed under Part V of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947. That Act was passed on Aug. 6, 1947, and by s. 120 certain sections, including those contained in Part V of the Act, were to come into force at once, whereas the remainder, including, in particular, s. 75 (which deals with the position where existing development contravenes previous planning control) was not to come into force until such day as the Minister might appoint. By the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (Appointed Day) Order, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 213) dated Feb. 9, 1948, the Minister fixed July 1, 1948, as the appointed day. The questions raised for the determination of this court are: (i) whether on or after July 1, 1948, the actual use of the two pieces of land (or any part thereof) could be the subject of an enforcement notice under the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, s. 75, and, if so, whether the arbitrator may take this into account in assessing compensation; (ii) whether a licence under the Public Health Act, 1936, s. 269, is personal to the licensee. If the first question is answered in the affirmative, the second question does not arise.

As will be seen from the foregoing, the notices to treat served on June 17, 1948, were served after the passing of the Act and before the appointed day, and, accordingly, compensation falls to be assessed under s. 55 of the Act which adapts the provisions of s. 51 (which deals with acquisitions after the appointed day) to the limited class of acquisitions between the passing of the Act and the appointed day. By s. 55 (2) it is provided:

"The value of any interest in land which is compulsorily acquired as aforesaid shall be ascertained by reference to prices current immediately before Jan. 7, 1947, and for that purpose the interest shall be deemed to have been subsisting immediately before that day subject to all incidents to which it is subject on the date of the notice to treat, and the land shall be deemed to have been immediately before Jan. 7 in the same state as it is at the date of the notice to treat."

It is contended on behalf of the acquiring authority that one of the incidents to which the land was subject on June 17, 1948, was the risk that in two weeks' time, when the appointed day arrived, an enforcement notice might be served prohibiting the use of the land for moveable dwellings pursuant to the provisions of s. 75 and s. 23 of the Act and that such a risk was a matter which the official arbitrator was entitled to take into consideration in assessing the compensation. By s. 75 (9) it is provided that the use of the land shall be deemed to have been begun in contravention of previous planning control, where at the material time the land was subject to a resolution to prepare a planning scheme, if begun otherwise than in accordance with permission granted in that behalf by or under the interim development order. On the facts of this case it is clear, and, indeed, it is admitted, that, unless the licence deemed to have been granted under the Public Health Act, 1936, amounts to such permission (a point with which we will deal hereafter) the claimant was in breach of previous planning control. Section 75 (1), so far as it is material, provides that, where any use to which land is put on the appointed day was begun in contravention of previous planning control,

"... the provisions of Part III of this Act with respect to enforcement notices shall apply in relation thereto as they apply in relation to development carried out after the appointed day without the grant of permission ... Provided that an enforcement notice shall not be served by virtue of the provisions of this section in respect of any works or use (not being works or a use carried out or begun during the war period as defined by the Building Restrictions (War-Time Contraventions) Act, 1946) at any time after three years from the appointed day."

Part III of the Act includes s. 23.

On behalf of the claimant various points are taken. It is said, in the first place, that no enforcement notice could have been served when s. 75 came into force because there had been no breach of previous planning control in that the unconditional licence deemed to have been granted under the Public Health Act, 1936, s. 269, amounted to planning permission. We do not think that such a proposition is tenable. As was pointed out by this court in Pilling v. Abergele Urban District Council (1), the Public Health Act, 1936, is concerned solely with matters relating to health and sanitation, and town planning considerations are outside the purview of that Act. The mere grant of a licence under s. 269 of that Act, even when granted by the local authority which is itself the planning authority, cannot amount to planning permission. It is said, secondly, that no enforcement notice could have been served when s. 75 came into force because under s. 23 no notice can be served after four years have elapsed since the development (which includes a change in the use of the land: see s. 12) was begun, and that this was begun in the case of both sites well over four years before July 1, 1948. It is argued that s. 75 (1), in adapting the provisions of s. 23, preserves the limitation that any notice must be served within four years of the beginning of the change of use, and by its proviso adds a further limitation that such notice must also be given within three years of the appointed day. In other words, it is said that such a notice can only be served within three years of the appointed day if it is also served within four years of the beginning of the change of use.

A The acquiring authority, on the other hand, contends that the second part of s. 75 (1), though in form a proviso, is providing a substituted, and not an additional, limitation. On the whole, we prefer this latter construction. It must be remembered that s. 23, which imposes a limitation of four years from the beginning of the change of user, is dealing with a change of user occurring after the appointed day and that s. 75 is adapting in general terms the provisions of that section as a part of Part III of the Act to the circumstances of a change of user begun before the appointed day. The adaptation is itself stated to be "subject to the provisions of this section," and the proviso, which is part of the section, provides another limit. In order to determine the question whether the proviso lays down a limitation in addition to or in substitution for that laid down in s. 23, some help is, we think, to be derived from s. 75 (2) and (3). These sub-sections deal with works carried out, or a use begun, broadly speaking, during the war, and if the claimant's argument is right, enforcement notices could only be served in respect of the limited number of works carried out or user begun since July 1, 1944. Moreover, it is relevant to observe that prior to the appointed day when the Town and Country Planning Act, 1932, was repealed, and s. 75 came into force, the claimant was liable to have the user prohibited without compensation when a scheme was actually prepared. It is further contended on behalf of the claimant that in any event the official arbitrator cannot take into account the possibility of such a notice being served in that (i) s. 75 (6) expressly provides that where an enforcement notice has been served the arbitrator is to take it into consideration, and that, accordingly, by implication he is not to take into consideration the possibility of its being served thereafter, and (ii) in any event s. 75 had not become law at the date of the notices to treat.

B As regards the first contention, it is to be observed that where land compulsorily acquired falls to be valued under s. 51 of the Act, the arbitrator is told to value on certain assumptions which are, broadly speaking, such as will ensure that the value is the existing use value. Where, therefore, an enforcement notice has been served, some express provision would be necessary to enable the arbitrator to depart from the existing use value, and s. 75 (6) provides what is to happen. It says that he is to calculate the compensation

E "... having regard to the requirements of the notice, and the assumptions required to be made for those purposes shall be modified accordingly."

That sub-section being clearly necessary to provide for such a case, we do not think that it can be argued that there is any implication therefrom that the possibility of a notice being served in the future must be disregarded. As regards the second contention, it is true that s. 75 was not law at the date of the notices to treat, and that, at that date, there was no power to serve an enforcement notice under the Town and Country Planning Act, 1932, which was then in force, since the powers of enforcement under that Act were limited to the case where a scheme had been actually prepared. On the other hand, the claimant was in breach of previous planning control, and it was known that that section would come into force on July 1, 1948, and that then an enforcement notice could be served, even though only a resolution to prepare a scheme had been passed. We do not think that in these circumstances it can be said that as a matter of law the arbitrator is debarred from taking into consideration the possibility of such a notice being served. What weight he should attach to such a possibility and the extent to which the value of the land should be diminished by that possibility may be difficult questions, but they are, of course, matters for him with which this court is not concerned. This court, therefore, answers the first question in the affirmative, and the second question does not arise.

Order accordingly. No order as to costs.

Solicitors: Mortimer Silverman & Co., agents for James Barnes, Hayling Island (for the claimant); Lees & Co. (for the urban district council).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

REGIONAL PROPERTIES, LTD. v. FRANKENSCHWERTH AND ANOTHER.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Singleton, L.J., and Danckwerts, J.), December 4, 5, 1950.]

Rent Restriction—Assignment without consent of landlord—Assignment by contractual tenant—Need for prohibition in tenancy agreement against sub-letting—Right of landlords to damages for failure of tenant to deliver up premises at end of term—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 3 (1), sched. I (d).

By an agreement dated July 25, 1946, the landlords let to the tenant a flat to which the Rent Restrictions Acts applied. The tenancy was terminable by monthly notice and the agreement contained a covenant to deliver up the premises at the end of the tenancy, but there was no covenant against assignment or sub-letting, and at some time during the tenancy the tenant, without the consent of the landlords, sub-let the premises furnished to the sub-tenant. The landlords served a notice to quit expiring on June 18, 1950, and on June 15, 1950, the tenant again without consent assigned the tenancy to the sub-tenant. On a claim by the landlords for possession under para. (d) of sched. I to the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, HELD: (i) (a) "tenant" in para. (d) included a contractual tenant, and (b) no qualification was to be implied that the paragraph only applied where consent to an assignment was required by the tenancy agreement, and, therefore, the court had power to make an order for possession.

(ii) in view of the absence in the tenancy agreement of a prohibition against assignment and the fact that the landlords had obtained an order against the sub-tenant for possession, rent, and costs, they were not entitled even to nominal damages against the tenant for being a party to the creation of a statutory tenancy in the sub-tenant and so being in breach of the covenant to deliver up the premises at the end of the term.

[AS TO RESTRICTIONS ON THE LANDLORD'S RIGHT TO POSSESSION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 329-334, paras. 392-399; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 576-581, Nos. 7256-7297, and Digest Supp., and 2nd Digest Supp.].

Cases referred to:

- (1) Skinner v. Geary, [1931] 2 K.B. 546; 100 L.J.K.B. 718; 145 L.T. 675; 95 J.P. 194; Digest Supp.
- (2) Roe v. Russell, [1928] 2 K.B. 117; 97 L.J.K.B. 290; 138 L.T. 253; 92 J.P. 81; Digest Supp.
- (3) Dalrymple's Trustees v. Brown, 1945 S.C. 190; [1945] S.L.T. 220; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (4) Rhodes v. Cornford, [1947] 2 All E.R. 601; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) Cumming v. Danson, [1942] 2 All E.R. 653; 112 L.J.K.B. 145; sub nom. Cumming v. Dawson, 168 L.T. 35; Digest Supp.
- (6) Bell London & Provincial Properties, Ltd. v. Reuben, [1946] 2 All E.R. 547; [1947] K.B. 157; [1947] L.J.R. 251; 176 L.T. 92; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (7) Henderson v. Squire, (1869), L.R. 4 Q.B. 170; 38 L.J.Q.B. 73; 19 L.T. 601; 33 J.P. 532; 31 Digest 546, 6925.
- (8) Keats v. Thompson, [1939] N.Z.L.R. 30; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the defendants from a judgment of His Honour JUDGE CLOTHIER, sitting at Lambeth County Court, dated Oct. 5, 1950. The landlords claimed possession of a flat, to which the Rent Restrictions Acts applied, from the assignee of the tenant, on the ground that the premises were assigned without the landlords' consent. The landlords further claimed against the tenant damages for breach of the covenant to deliver up, committed by the assignment of the premises. The county court judge made an order for possession and awarded £2 nominal damages against the tenant. The facts appear in the judgment of SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R.

Pearl for the tenant.

Lester for the sub-tenant.

A. R. Campbell for the landlords.

A SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R.: The landlords own a flat known as 125, Pullman Court, Streatham, which admittedly is, and at all material times was, a dwelling-house within the Rent Restrictions Acts. The first defendant in the action was the tenant of the premises by virtue of a contract of tenancy, dated July 25, 1946, at a monthly rent of £9 11s. 9d. The agreement, which provided that the tenancy should be determined by one month's notice, B contained in a usual form a covenant by the tenant to deliver up the premises at the end of the tenancy, but it contained no restriction on assignment or sub-letting. Indeed, such a covenant was deliberately struck out of the form of agreement. Some little time ago, the tenant sub-let furnished this flat to the sub-tenant, who has remained in occupation at all material times. C Ultimately, the landlords served on the tenant a notice to quit in accordance with the terms of the contract which was due to expire on June 18, 1950. On the service of the notice the tenant was willing that vacant possession should be given to the landlords, but, out of sympathy for the sub-tenant or some other motive, he sought to put the sub-tenant into a position in which he could assert the Rent Restrictions Acts and so after the termination of the tenancy remain in possession of the flat as statutory tenant. A meeting D took place between the representatives of the tenant and sub-tenant, and there then came into existence what has been described as a "device" which consisted in two steps being taken. The first was to take advantage of the fact that under the tenant's agreement he was free to assign the term to a third party, and he executed an assignment in favour of the sub-tenant. E Secondly, the furniture which belonged to the tenant was moved away wholly or substantially, and the sub-tenant put in his own furniture. The result of those transactions was that for the remainder of the term—and I should state that that was then three days—the sub-tenant was the assignee of the tenant, and was entitled to the interest of the tenant under the original demise. The notice then expired. The tenant had removed himself from all contact with the premises, but the sub-tenant then asserted that, he having on the expiry F of the notice to quit been the contractual tenant by assignment, he then became, and, indeed, the landlords so alleged and pleaded, a statutory tenant.

The landlords, bringing proceedings for possession against both the tenant and the sub-tenant relied on the provisions of sched. I to the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, which is in these terms:

G "A court shall . . . have power to make . . . an order . . . for the recovery of possession of any dwelling-house to which the [Rent Restrictions] Acts apply . . . (where the court considers it reasonable so to do) if —(d) the tenant without the consent of the landlord has at any time after July 31, 1923, assigned or sub-let the whole of the dwelling-house or sub-let part of the dwelling-house, the remainder being already sub-let."

I The case of the landlords is of the simplest character. Counsel on their behalf argues that the words "the tenant without the consent of the landlord has . . . assigned" means precisely what they say, neither more nor less; here there was an assignment without the landlords' consent; and, therefore, jurisdiction is conferred on the court to make an order for possession if the court thinks it reasonable so to do. An argument was presented by counsel for the sub-tenant (for, I think, it is convenient to deal first with his appeal) that either the words "the tenant" mean only a statutory tenant, or, if the words "the tenant" include a contractual tenant, then the few words I have read must be deemed to have read into them a substantial qualification to this effect: "in the case of a contractual tenant where a consent to assign is required by the contract of tenancy." I will say at once that, treating this as an ordinary matter of construction of simple words in the English language, I cannot accept that alternative submission. I think the words mean what they say. I am prepared to follow the adjuration of counsel for the sub-tenant and read these words in the light of the whole context in which they appear. It is true that in the other paragraphs of the schedule the ground conferring jurisdiction is some breach of obligation or similar act on the part of the tenant against whom the proceedings is brought for possession, but, in considering the case which para. (d) plainly contemplates of an assignment of the whole term demised, that, I should have supposed, as a simple matter of English, referred to an event, namely, an assignment, the result of which has been to put into possession the assignee and not the original assigning tenant. Because the other cases dealt with in the schedule refer to acts of the kind I have mentioned on the part of the tenant, seems to me to be no reason to expand the language of para. (d) so that it is confined to similar occasions.

I feel a degree of sympathy for the sub-tenant. Though I have used the word "device," I am not imputing any dishonest intention or other reprehensible conduct on his part. Moreover, I sympathise with the view put forward on his behalf that at first approach it might well be supposed that para. (d) must be read in one or other of the alternative ways suggested. I think there is much force in that, but, to take the first alternative, there is this great difficulty in the way of supposing that para. (d) refers only to a statutory tenancy. The paragraph first appeared as s. 5 (1) (h) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (as substituted by s. 4 of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923), and, as SCRUTTON, L.J., observed in Skinner v. Geary (1), the court was then in the process of formulating the view, which it thereafter very firmly laid down on more than one occasion, that the so-called statutory tenancy was not a right of property capable of transmission by assignment or gift or devise. If, therefore, as the cases establish, between 1923 and 1933 the court had laid it down clearly that a statutory tenancy was not capable of assignment, it seems almost impossible to suppose that Parliament (which according to well-established principles must be taken to legislate in the light of judicial decisions on existing Acts) should have repeated the words of s. 5 (1) (h) of the Act of 1923 ten years later if the supposed case, namely, assignment by a statutory tenant, was something which the law did not recognise. I do not propose to refer to the cases which counsel for the sub-tenant mentioned—Roe v. Russell (2), and those which follow it—save just to say that I think the language of SCRUTTON, L.J., cannot, on any view, be said to amount to a determination that s. 5 (1) (h) of the Act of 1920 applied exclusively to statutory tenancies. In any case, we have to consider sched. I to the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, which was passed and became law after the decision in Roe v. Russell (2) and Skinner v. Geary (1). It is of significance that from quite a short time after the passing of the Act of 1933 the view of text-book writers has been clearly to the effect that para. (d) of the schedule must be read as including the case of an assignment during the term.

In RENT AND MORTGAGE INTEREST RESTRICTIONS, by the Editors of "Law Notes," 17 ed. (1938), p. 201, there appears this note:

"This was a new paragraph introduced by the Act of 1923. It is re-enacted here without alteration. Since the statutory tenancy is not assignable, this paragraph can only refer to assignments of an existing contractual tenancy."

That view has been consistently maintained, and is also referred to in THE RENT ACTS by R. E. MEGARRY. I thus derive support for the view which I have indicated—that, as a matter of language and in the light of the decisions of the court, the proper construction of these words in sched. I (d) is not to confine the words “the tenant” so as to mean the statutory tenant. It is unnecessary here finally to say whether the words would cover the case of a purported assignment by a statutory tenant, but I am satisfied that the paragraph does cover, and is intended to cover, the case of an assignment by the contractual tenant before the contractual term comes to an end.

The reason for such a provision, I think, is not far to seek. No one has better laid down the principles of the Rent Restrictions Acts than SCRUTTON, L.J., and in Skinner v. Geary (1) he pointed out ([1931] 2 K.B. 559) that the object of the Acts was to protect tenants from eviction and not to provide some means whereby tenants could make a financial gain out of dealings with rent-controlled property. I am not saying that this is that type of case. The evidence is that the tenant made no profit and received nothing out of the transaction, but it might be otherwise in other cases, and I think what Parliament was saying in the Act was: “If somebody who had been a contractual tenant and who, if he remained there living in the place as his home, would have then become entitled to the protection of the Act, chose, instead of doing that, for consideration large or small or no consideration, to say: ‘I do not want the benefits of this Act. If you like to have them, I will put you in the position of being able to claim them,’ we are not interested in that type of person. If the real tenant does not want to live in the premises, there is no reason why the landlord should not have some say on the question who should occupy his property. Therefore, we say, if that has happened, the court is given jurisdiction to make an order.”

The alternative contention, if the words “the tenant” include a contractual tenant, is that para. (d) is to be confined to cases where consent is required by the contract. Counsel for the sub-tenant submitted that that must be so because otherwise the results would be so surprising. I confess that they have not surprised me. These words in the statute seem perfectly simple and straightforward, and, unless there is something which compels me to do so, I cannot see what can be the justification for reading into them a qualification which Parliament never imposed. It is plain that during the term of the contract, if there is no prohibition against assignment or underletting, the tenant can assign or underlet without asking the landlord’s consent or leave, but what Parliament has said is, whether or not consent is necessary, if, in fact, there has been an assignment without the landlord’s consent, then, for the reasons which I have indicated, it is fair that the court should have power to make an order for possession against the assignee who, ex concessis, is somebody unknown to and not approved of by the landlord.

It is said that in this case, because of the form of the lease, the definition clause of which provides that the word “tenant” shall include an assignee, and because (though I doubt if this is admissible in evidence) a clause prohibiting assignment was struck out, therefore it must be said that any assignment made at any time during the term by the tenant has inferentially the consent of the landlord within the meaning of para. (d). I cannot accept that argument. I think that this paragraph means what it says, and that “the consent of the landlord” means the consent actively given to a particular tenant. I am supported in that opinion by the view taken by the Inner House of the Court of Session in Dalrymple’s Trustees v. Brown (3). A decision of that court is not binding on this court, but since the Acts to be construed are the same in both Scotland and England, and since, further, it is known that from time to time cases under those Acts go to the House of Lords from Scotland and from England, it is plainly desirable that the construction of the relevant parts of the Acts should be the same on both sides of the border. I should, therefore, always be inclined in cases of this kind to follow a decision of the Inner House of the Court of Session, and the language of the Lord President (LORD NORMAND), is, to my mind, persuasive, and conveys the point which I think is the answer to this part of the argument. That was a case, not of assignment, but of a sub-letting by the tenant of urban property in Scotland during the pendency of the contract of letting without the landlord's consent. It was argued that, since by the law of Scotland it is unnecessary in such cases to get the consent of the landlord to sub-let, therefore, it must be supposed that proleptically the consent is given in each case. The answer to the argument is thus concisely stated by LORD NORMAND (1945 S.C. 192):

"The law is that the tenant of urban tenements in Scotland has an implied power to sub-let without the consent of the landlord; and not that there is an implied consent of the landlord to every urban sub-let. Moreover, any sub-let at common law endures at common law only for the period of the tenant's lease, and has nothing to do with the protection for an extended period under the Rent Restrictions Acts. I am clear that the words 'without the consent of the landlord' in para. (d) of sched. I to the Act of 1933 mean without actual consent given by the landlord either expressly or by implication. That necessarily requires that the landlord should have had knowledge of the sub-lease."

He says that in that case the landlord had no knowledge and gave no consent, express or implied. I respectfully adopt that reasoning and apply it to this case.

The result, therefore, in my judgment, is that the county court judge was right when he concluded that there was here jurisdiction on his part to make an order. [HIS LORDSHIP considered the facts, and said that the county court judge was entitled to form the view that it would be reasonable to make an order for possession, and that, therefore, the sub-tenant's appeal failed, and continued:] There is also an appeal by the tenant and this is, indeed, a strange case. I regret that the time of the court has been taken up in debating matters of which the issue is whether the tenant ought to pay 40s. to the landlords, for that is what the appeal is about. The particulars of claim alleged that the assignment had the effect, as I think it had, of creating a statutory tenancy in favour of the sub-tenant when the contractual lease determined, and it is pleaded that the creation of that statutory tenancy involved a breach of the covenant for delivery up at the end of the term, and for that breach a claim is made for damages. It is said that the claim is in two parts, nominal damages and a full indemnity as to costs. I am anxious to confine myself to this particular case. I do not say that there might not be cases in which a tenant of a protected dwelling-house would be liable in damages of some measure to a landlord for something done, or said to be done, at the end of the tenancy. The question in the present case is whether, having regard to the fact that the landlords have got an order for possession against the sub-tenant, plus an order for payment of rent or mesne profits (which is compensation for the value of the premises during the sub-tenant's possession), plus an order for the costs of the action of ejectment, in a case in which it is not suggested that the sub-tenant is a man of straw, it can be suggested either that there is a case which may be formulated for damages for breach of contract or that any damages could be said to flow from the breach, if any, so committed? I must say I think the answer is plainly: No. The judge came to a different conclusion. The matter is somewhat briefly stated, but I gather that since, in his opinion, there was an obligation to deliver up the premises and that the so-called device prevented the tenant from fulfilling that covenant, he put the landlords to certain expense in coming to court, and, therefore, the landlords were entitled to £2 damages.

Under the common law, it is clear enough that if a tenant contracts to deliver up possession at the end of a lease and then by his own act puts somebody into the place as a sub-tenant or licensee and that latter person does not go out when the term ends, the tenant is liable in damages (at any rate, unless he shows that he has taken all reasonable and proper steps to get rid of the intruder), the measure of damages being, as was stated in Henderson v. Squire (7) (L.R. 4 Q.B. 173) by COCKBURN, C.J., and BLACKBURN, J., a sum to com-

A pensate the landlord for loss of rent while he was getting the intruder out and the costs he was put to in getting the intruder out. In the present case there is an order for mesne profits and the costs of the action. It is not clear to me that there is any further damage which the landlords sustained, but, in any event, my view is that that state of the common law has been substantially modified by the impact of the Rent Restrictions Acts. It has been pointed
B out by the court that, when a statutory tenancy is created the terms of that tenancy are those which are found in the contract of tenancy save so far as they are inconsistent with the Acts. The whole scheme of the Rent Restrictions Acts shows that the common law effect of the covenant to deliver up is inconsistent with the protection given to the sitting tenant. Counsel for the landlords was forced to concede that, if his argument was right the tenant would
C always be liable to some nominal damages although the person in possession was a sub-tenant whose occupation had been assented to at all material times by the landlord and it was in every respect lawful and free from any sort of disclaimer. That seems to me to be a very unlikely result. Counsel for the landlords relied on a decision of the Supreme Court of New Zealand in Keats v. Thompson (8). I am not persuaded by the judgment in that case to any view
D contrary to that which I have indicated. I am not satisfied that the position in that case and in this is comparable, for the judge in New Zealand pointed out that the sub-tenant whose failure to give up possession gave rise to the point in that case was not protected by any statutory provision comparable to s. 15 of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920. The point argued here does not appear to have been taken.

E In the present case it is conceded that until the termination of the contract the tenant was free to assign his tenancy. If either the tenant or an assignee were in possession in the ordinary sense of that term when the contract ended, it must have been well understood by the parties to the contract from the first that the covenant for delivery up could be qualified necessarily by the statutory right of that tenant, or assignee, as the case might be, to remain there unless F and until a court made an order for ejectment. In other words, I think the basis on which such cases as Henderson v. Squire (7) were decided under the common law has very seriously to be qualified where the contract in question relates to a rent-controlled dwelling-house. In those circumstances, I do not accept the view, with all respect, which the judge below accepted, that the deliberate grant of this assignment, the deliberate putting into possession of the sub-tenant so that he could be, as he did become, the statutory tenant,
G was a breach of the contract as contemplated by the parties to it. I have already said that, even if it were, I am not satisfied that any damages flowed from the breach. I do not wish to be taken as stating that in no case where the subject-matter is a rent-controlled house can there be a claim for damages against the tenant from whom possession is not obtained on the termination of the contractual tenancy. Every case must be decided on its own particular facts, but, on the facts of this case and having regard to all its circumstances, I am satisfied that there was no basis on which a claim for damages could be successfully asserted against the tenant. I, therefore, would allow the tenant's appeal for the reasons I have indicated, while rejecting that of the sub-tenant.

I SINGLETON, L.J.: I am of the same opinion. The claim of the landlords was based on para. (d) of sched. I to the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933. Much criticism has been directed to the complications of the Rent Acts, but I do not think there is any complication to be found in para. (d) of sched. I to the Act of 1933. Counsel for the sub-tenant referred to a considerable number of authorities in seeking to persuade the court to put the construction which he desired on that paragraph. We have before us an assignment of June 15, 1950, between the tenant, of the one part, and the sub-tenant, of the other part. It is clear that there was an assignment of the whole of the dwelling-house from the one to the other on that date, to which the consent of the landlords was not asked. Counsel for the sub-tenant submitted that that was not necessary as there was no provision against sub-letting in the original agreement. I do not think that it is necessary to refer to authorities to answer that problem—in any event, the words of LORD NORMAND in Dalrymple's Trustees v. Brown (3) are clear, and I accept them. If these words in para. (d) are to be read in their ordinary sense, it is plain beyond measure that the tenant, without the consent of the landlords, after July 31, 1923, assigned the whole of the dwelling-house.

The remaining point is whether it was reasonable to make an order for possession? [HIS LORDSHIP considered the evidence and continued:] The judge considered it reasonable to make an order, and I see no reason whatever to interfere with the judgment which he formed.

On the landlords' claim for damages against the tenant, I agree with my Lord that, if the landlords recover from the sub-tenant all that they are out of pocket—if they recover possession and rent or mesne profits—there is no reason why they should have judgment even for nominal damages against someone else for an extra £2. At the same time I do not wish it to be thought that in certain circumstances a claim might not be put forward in tort. If there was a conspiracy to defeat the rights of the landlords or something of that kind, it would have to be the subject-matter of a plea in order to entitle the landlords to succeed upon it. Counsel for the landlords said he could not plead anything of that kind. It may well be in some such case that a landlord could put forward a good claim for damages if there was a conspiracy of the kind I have suggested. I agree in the present case that counsel for the landlords has not made out any such claim.

DANCKWERTS, J.: I also agree. The Master of the Rolls has expressed the reasons for dismissing the appeal of the sub-tenant so fully that it is unnecessary for me to add anything in regard to those reasons, with which I agree. A tenant, assignee, or sub-tenant, who continues in possession after the contractual tenancy has come to an end in the case of a house to which the Rent Restrictions Acts apply retains his possession lawfully under s. 15 of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, and he continues to occupy on the terms of the tenancy so far as applicable to that situation. Sub-section (3) of that section recognises him as having an interest. In those circumstances it seems to me that the sum which is awarded to a landlord who is given an order pursuant to the Act to recover possession should be described more properly as rent rather than as mesne profits. That leads me to the observation which I wish to make in regard to the claim of the landlords against the tenant for damages. Here it seems to me clear that the assignment was lawful. There was no restriction on assignment or under-letting in the terms of the tenancy, and as long as the period of the tenancy persisted the tenant was at liberty to assign or underlet. Having done that, the sub-tenant as assignee remained lawfully in possession. It seems to me that those circumstances, by themselves, distinguish this case from such cases as Henderson v. Squire (7) where a sub-tenant or some other person remained in possession unlawfully without any authority and had to be evicted. Furthermore, the date of the tenancy agreement in this case was July 25, 1946, when the situation which might be created by the Rent Restrictions Acts was well known to all persons concerned with property. It seems to me that, in those circumstances, landlords and tenant contracted on a footing which was different from that known to the common law, and, therefore, it may well be that any covenant to deliver up possession at the end of the tenancy must be read and construed subject to those conditions.

Appeal of tenant allowed with costs. Appeal of sub-tenant dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Godfrey Davis & Foster (for the tenant); Bieber & Bieber (for the sub-tenant); Theodore Goddard & Co. (for the landlords).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

POLSKY v. S. AND A. SERVICES.
S. AND A. SERVICES v. POLSKY.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J.), December 1, 7, 1950.]

Bill of Sale—Assurance of personal chattels by way of security—Purported sale of car followed by hire-purchase agreement—Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882 (c. 43), s. 3.

On June 21, 1948, the plaintiff purchased from a dealer a motor car for the sum of £895 and paid for it by cheque. On June 22, wishing to obtain a sum of £400 to pay into his bank to meet the cheque, the plaintiff entered into a transaction with the defendants who carried on the business of financing the purchase of cars. Their usual practice was to buy a car from a dealer on behalf of a purchaser, the purchaser himself paying part of the purchase price either to the defendants or direct to the dealer and the defendants paying the remainder, and then to let the car on hire-purchase terms to the purchaser, the car remaining the property of the defendants until the full purchase price had been paid by the purchaser. On this occasion, although the plaintiff had purchased the car himself and merely sought a loan of £400, the transaction was carried out by means of the documents which were used by the defendants when financing purchases of cars, and they purported to buy the car from the plaintiff and to let it out to him under a hire-purchase agreement, dated June 22, 1948. In the proposal form signed by the plaintiff the value of the car was given as £895 and it was stated that an initial payment of £495 had been made, leaving £400, plus £50 for charges, as "balance of hire" to be paid by the plaintiff in eighteen monthly payments of £25 each. Among the other documents signed by the plaintiff in connection with the purported sale and hire of the car, one contained a receipt saying: "Received cheque £400 payment for the car," and another contained a statement by the plaintiff that he clearly understood that he was selling the car to the defendants. The plaintiff brought an action against the defendants claiming a declaration that the hire-purchase agreement was a bill of sale within the meaning of the Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882, s. 3, being in reality an assurance of personal chattels as security for a debt, and that, as it was unregistered, it was void under s. 8 of the Act.

HELD: the main object of the Act of 1882 being to protect borrowers against lenders, it was the duty of the court to look behind the documents to discover the true nature of the transaction; the facts set out in the proposal form were incorrect, and the transaction was not a genuine sale and re-hire, but was merely a loan of £400 by the defendants to the plaintiff on the security of the car; and, therefore, the hire-purchase agreement of June 22, 1948, was a bill of sale within s. 3 of the Act of 1882, and, as it was not registered, it was void under s. 8.

Re Watson, Ex p. Official Receiver in Bankruptcy (1890) (25 Q.B.D. 27), and Madell v. Thomas & Co. ([1891] 1 Q.B. 230), applied.

Staffs Motor Guarantee, Ltd. v. British Wagon Co., Ltd. ([1934] 2 K.B. 305), distinguished.

[AS TO TRANSACTIONS WITHIN THE BILLS OF SALE ACTS, see HALSBURY, A Hailsham Edn., Vol. 3, pp. 13, 14, para. 18; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 7, pp. 15-18, Nos. 67-80.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Yorkshire Railway Wagon Co. v. Maclure, (1882), 21 Ch.D. 309; 51 L.J.Ch. 857; 47 L.T. 290; 10 Digest 737, 4607.

(2) British Railway Traffic & Electric Co. v. Kahn, [1921] W.N. 52; Digest Supp. B

(3) Re Watson, Ex p. Official Receiver in Bankruptcy, (1890), 25 Q.B.D. 27; 59 L.J.Q.B. 394; 63 L.T. 209; 7 Digest 17, 74.

(4) Madell v. Thomas & Co., [1891] 1 Q.B. 230; 60 L.J.Q.B. 227; 64 L.T. 9; 7 Digest 17, 75.

(5) Victoria Dairy Co. v. West, (1895), 11 T.L.R. 233; 7 Digest 10, 33. C

(6) Staffs Motor Guarantee, Ltd. v. British Wagon Co., Ltd., [1934] 2 K.B. 305; 103 L.J.K.B. 613; 151 L.T. 396; Digest Supp.

ACTION for a declaration that a hire-purchase agreement, made between the plaintiff and the defendants on June 22, 1948, was a bill of sale within the Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882, s. 3, and, being unregistered, was void under s. 8 of the Act, and that the plaintiff was at all material times the owner of the motor car which was the subject-matter of the agreement. In a second action, in which the defendants in the first action were plaintiffs and the plaintiff in the first action was defendant, the defendants in the first action claimed the return of the car from the plaintiff and damages for its detention. D

The plaintiff, wishing to obtain a loan of £400 to place in his bank to meet a cheque for £895 which he had given to a motor car dealer in payment for a car which he had purchased from them, entered into a transaction with the defendants, whereby the defendants purported to purchase his car and then to let it out to him on a hire-purchase agreement. The plaintiff contended that the real transaction was an assurance of personal chattels as security for a debt within the Bills of Sale Acts. The facts appear in the judgment. E

Laskey for the plaintiff (the defendant in the second action).

Melford Stevenson, K.C., and Hallis for the defendants (the plaintiffs in the second action). F

Cur. adv. vult. G

Dec. 7. LORD GODDARD, C.J., read the following judgment. The question for decision in this case is whether or not a hire-purchase agreement, dated June 22, 1948, whereby the defendants purported to let on hire an Austin motor car to the plaintiff, is a bill of sale within the Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882, s. 3, and, therefore, void under s. 8 of that Act as being unregistered. The defendants carry on the business of financing purchases of motor cars. This has now become quite a common and well known class of business and is carried out in this way. The would-be purchaser of a motor car who is unable, or unwilling, to pay the full amount at the time of purchase enters into an agreement with a finance company whereby the latter acquires a car from a dealer. As a general rule the would-be purchaser has to find some portion of the purchase money, which he may pay either to the dealer or to the finance company, and the latter finds the rest of the money and buys the car. H from the dealer. The car then becomes the property of the company, which lets it out on hire-purchase terms to the purchaser, and it follows that the car remains the property of the finance company until the full purchase price is paid. The plaintiff seems to have had some transaction with the defendants in the early part of 1948, but I had no evidence as to the precise nature of the transaction which then took place between them. On June 21, 1948, without any previous communication on the subject with the defendants, the plaintiff bought a second-hand Austin car from a dealer, Graham Fine, Ltd., for the sum of £895 and paid for it by cheque. In so doing, there is no doubt that, as he put it, he over-spent himself. His account at the bank at that moment was in credit for something between £300 and £400, though he told me, and I have no reason to doubt it, that he could have overdrawn up to £600. However that may be, the plaintiff wished to obtain a sum of money to pay into his bank to meet this cheque. He, therefore, approached the defendants, and a transaction took place between the parties which was carried out by means of the documents which would have been used had this been one of the ordinary transactions whereby the defendants finance purchases of cars. The difference between those ordinary cases and this is that the defendants were purporting to buy the car, not from a dealer, but from the plaintiff, who, undoubtedly, had the property in it.

The first document, which is, in my opinion, the most significant, is what is known as the proposal form. It begins:

"I desire you to purchase and let to me a second-hand Austin car HOM 924 on your hire-purchase plan."

The document contains the full name of the proposer, i.e., the plaintiff, his private and business addresses, and the name of his bankers, and the defendants' name is given as that of the company with which he had previously entered into a hire-purchase agreement. Certain details are set out beneath the plaintiff's signature. The total value of the car is given as £895, initial payment £495, leaving a balance of £400 to which is added: "charges £50." These are totalled and the result is shown as "balance of hire £450," and then is added: "eighteen monthly payments of £25 each." The next document purports to be an invoice from the defendants to the plaintiff, and reads:

"To one s/h [second-hand] Austin car [then follow the chassis number, engine number and registered number] £895 less first payment due under your agreement £495 . . ."

showing a balance due of £400. Under that is a receipt given in these terms: "Received cheque £400 payment for the car. M. Polsky." There was also another document on which great reliance was placed by the defendants. It is addressed to them by the plaintiff, and reads:

"With reference to the transaction which you are carrying through for me at my request I hereby certify that the Austin car registered No. HOM 924 is my own property and free from any incumbrance. It has been explained to me and I clearly understand that I am now selling the car to you and that it will become your property. As requested by me you are now hiring the car to me under your usual agreement with option of purchase."

At the same time the plaintiff wrote another letter to the defendants, saying:

"I beg to inform you that I have this day, June 22, 1948, taken delivery of the Austin car in approved condition."

Then a hire-purchase agreement was executed, by cl. 1 of which the hirer agreed to pay to the owners the sum of £495 on the signing of the agreement in consideration of the option of purchase and for which amount credit would only be given in the event of a purchase, and it was further provided that that sum should become the absolute property of the owners. By cl. 2 the hirer agreed to pay the monthly rent of £25 for the hire of the motor car, and finally, by cl. 15, it was provided that, if all the terms and conditions of the agreement should have been strictly performed and observed by the hirer, he might at any time during the hiring become the purchaser of the car by paying to the owners the difference between the sum of £945 and the amount previously paid under cl. 1 and cl. 2, or, if he should continue the hiring strictly in accordance with all the terms and conditions until the total sum of £945 should have been paid, the car should then become his sole property. The £945 was apparently made up of the two figures £895, representing the total value of the car, and £50 charges, the latter, I suppose, being mainly for interest. A

If the defendants had bought this car from a dealer, all these documents would have been completely in order and no question could have arisen as to the Bills of Sale Acts having any application to the transaction. What I have to decide is whether this transaction was in fact what it purported to be or whether it was in truth no more than a loan by the defendants of £400, with interest, on the security of the car. If the latter is the true view of the transaction, it is clear that the hire-purchase agreement was no more than an assurance of personal chattels by way of security for the payment of money, and, accordingly, it is a bill of sale within the meaning of the Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882, s. 3, and, being unregistered, it is void under s. 8 of the Act. A considerable number of cases were cited to me on the point which may, I think, be conveniently divided into two lines of authority. There is, on the one hand, the class of case, of which Yorkshire Railway Wagon Co. v. Maclure (1) and British Railway Traffic & Electric Co. v. Kahn (2) are good examples, where the transaction in question has been held to be a genuine sale followed by a hire-purchase agreement, and, therefore, unaffected by the Bills of Sale Acts, and, on the other hand, there is the class, which includes Re Watson, Ex p. Official Receiver in Bankruptcy (3) and Madell v. Thomas & Co. (4), where the court has held, on facts not very dissimilar from those in the present case, that the real transaction was one of loan, and, therefore, it was avoided by reason of the Acts. There is no doubt, I think, as to the deciding principle. The court has to determine whether the transaction in question is a genuine sale by the original owner of the chattel to the person who is finding the money and a genuine re-letting by the latter to the original owner on hire-purchase terms, or whether the transaction, though taking that form, is nothing more than a loan of money on the security of the goods. It is perfectly clear from the judgments of LORD ESHER, M.R., in Re Watson (3) and in Madell v. Thomas & Co. (4), that that is the question which has to be determined. The court is not to look merely at the documents. It must discover what the real transaction was. As LORD ESHER, M.R., said ([1891] 1 Q.B. 234) in Madell v. Thomas & Co. (4): B C D E F

" . . . the court is to look through or behind the documents, and to get at the reality; and, if in reality the documents are only given as a security for money, then they are bills of sale." G

The question, indeed, is simply one of fact: see per WRIGHT, J. (11 T.L.R. 233) in Victoria Dairy Co. v. West (5).

Counsel for the defendants contended that in approaching this case I should bear in mind—as, indeed, I do—that both the parties might fairly be described as business people, and, as the plaintiff had deliberately signed a document in which he stated that he clearly understood that he was selling the car to the defendants, I ought not to find that the transaction was anything else but a sale. If that, however, is the true and only approach, it would mean that I could not look behind the documents to ascertain the true nature of the transaction. I must equally bear in mind, as LORD ESHER, M.R., pointed out H ([1891] 1 Q.B. 233) in Madell v. Thomas & Co. (4), that the object of the Bills of Sale Acts is:

" . . . to protect borrowers against lenders as well as to protect other persons who might be creditors of borrowers. The main object of the Act of 1882 is to protect borrowers as against lenders."

In Madell's case (4), too, both parties to the transaction were business men.

A When a person has bought a car, be he business man or not, and finds that his resources do not enable him to pay for it, or that, if he does pay, he will be left in an embarrassed position, he may fairly be described as a somewhat needy borrower.

It seems to me that one of the most satisfactory ways of deciding what the true nature of the transaction was is to see whether the documents themselves

B accurately set out the deal between the parties as it took place and at the time when it took place, or whether the facts, or some of them, therein recorded do not truly represent that which happened, but give the transaction what I may call an innocent appearance. This transaction started with the proposal form. Now that proposal form, as filled in, would be completely appropriate to the class of transaction whereby the finance company buys from a dealer,

C while at the same time some of the purchase price is provided by the prospective buyer. It states that an initial cash payment of £495 has been made, but no such payment had ever been made. It shows a balance on the purchase price of £400. The £400 had, in fact, been found by the defendants and handed straight to the plaintiff, and was not a sum of money found by them to pay to the original owner of the car, in this case Graham Fine, Ltd. It was a sum

D of money paid to the plaintiff who desired to put his bank account into credit, so that the cheque he had given might not be dishonoured or his account put into overdraft. This class of case was considered by MACKINNON, J., in Staffs Motor Guarantee, Ltd. v. British Wagon Co., Ltd. (6), in which, having contrasted the two classes of case which I have mentioned, the learned judge came to the conclusion that the case before him fell on the side of the line illustrated

E by Yorkshire Railway Wagon Co. v. Maclure (1). When one examines with care the facts in Staffs Motor Guarantee, Ltd. v. British Wagon Co., Ltd. (6), it will be seen how materially they differ from those in the case now before me. In the former case one Heap, a dealer in motor cars, owned a six ton lorry. He approached the defendants in that case, who were a finance company carrying on the same sort of business as the present defendants, and asked them to

F enter into a transaction of the usual type, i.e., he invited them to buy the lorry from him and let it out on hire-purchase to a third party. For some reason the defendants were unwilling to do the business in that way and eventually it was agreed that Heap should sell the lorry to the defendants and that they should let it to him on hire, giving him liberty to sub-let it to the third party on hire-purchase. The learned judge said ([1934] 2 K.B. 311):

G "It seems to me to be highly likely that the defendants adopted this course because they supposed that if they departed from their printed forms it might be necessary to employ a solicitor to prepare the proper guarantee, and that from a business point of view the more convenient way of carrying out that transaction would be to make use of their ordinary documents."

H That case seems to me wholly different from the present. It is quite clear that the real object in that case was to get the lorry into the hands of the third party, and there were the three parties who are usually found in these hire-purchase transactions. Heap was a dealer in cars, his customer was the third party, and the defendants were the financiers. If they, as was usual, had bought from Heap and re-let the lorry direct to the third party, no question could have arisen. That was the essence of the transaction which was carried out in a different way by their entering into a hire-purchase agreement with Heap and giving him leave to sub-let to the third party. In the case now before me, in spite of the documents, there had been no initial payment of £495 by anyone. The transaction which the documents would accurately record would have been one in which the plaintiff had paid the sum of £495 either to the defendants or to Graham Fine, Ltd., and then the defendants had completed the purchase of the motor car by paying £400 for it. In my opinion, the true transaction here was nothing more or less than a loan of £400 by the defendants to the plaintiff on the security of the car and a provision for the payment of £50 as a bonus or interest, and, in my opinion, it is exactly the class of transaction at which the Bills of Sale Acts strike.

I should, perhaps, state my finding on one other matter of fact, although, in my opinion, whichever way it is found would make no difference to the result. The plaintiff said that, when he went to the defendants' office to carry out this transaction, he did not take the car with him. The defendants' managing director, on the other hand, said that the car was brought there and left in Whittington Avenue, and that he went out and sat in it before he agreed to buy it. He seemed to think that by so doing he was in some way taking actual possession of the car. I am not prepared to find, if this curious proceeding has any materiality, that it in fact took place. On cross-examination it seemed to me probable that the managing director was confusing this transaction with another which took place in August when another car formed the subject of a dealing between the parties. In any case, even if he did go out and sit in the car before the details of the transaction had been agreed between them, I cannot see how his action could have any bearing on the case.

Soon after the transaction, the plaintiff sold the car. He continued, however, to pay the instalments and paid altogether six. When he was one month in arrear the defendants found out that he had sold the car, and—apparently, for the purpose of punishing him for having done so—when the full amount of the balance then due to them was offered to them, they refused to accept it and endeavoured to get possession of the car. The conduct of the parties at that time does not throw any light on what the true nature of the transaction was when it was entered into, but, considering that the defendants had been repaid £150 in monthly instalments, if they were then entitled to take possession of the car although they were offered the balance of what they had provided, it seems to show that this is a case in which, as LORD ESHER, M.R., pointed out in Madell v. Thomas & Co. (4), the Bills of Sale Acts are required for the protection of a borrower. There will be judgment for the plaintiff for a declaration that the hire-purchase agreement, dated June 22, 1948, made between the parties is a bill of sale within the Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882, s. 3, and, therefore, void under s. 8 of that Act as it was not registered, and for a declaration that at all material times the plaintiff was the owner of the said Austin motor car, and he will have the costs of the action. The second action, in which the present defendants are the plaintiffs and the present plaintiff is the defendant, is one in which the present defendants were claiming a return of the car and damages for its detention, and, as my judgment in the first case disposes of the second, that action will be dismissed with costs.

Judgment for the plaintiff with costs.

Solicitors: Canter, Hellyar & Co. (for the plaintiff); Gouldens (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

PORTMAN BUILDING SOCIETY v. YOUNG.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Lord Radcliffe and Singleton, L.J.), December 19, 1950.]

Mortgage—Attornment clause—Creation of relationship of landlord and tenant—Application of Rent Restrictions Acts.

A mortgage of a dwelling-house provided: "The mortgagor hereby attorns tenant to the [mortgagee] of such parts of the property as may at any time be in the occupation of the mortgagor at the monthly rent of £9 16s. 0d. to be paid on the days hereinbefore appointed for payment of monthly instalments and such rent is to be applied in or towards satisfaction of such instalments. Provided always that the [mortgagee] may at any time without giving previous notice in that behalf determine the tenancy created by such attornment." The monthly payments fell into arrear, and the mortgagee issued an originating summons for possession. The master took the point that the Rent Restrictions Acts applied to the relationship of the mortgagee and mortgagor.

HELD: on the issue of the originating summons the contractual relationship, whatever its character, created by the attornment clause, in so far as it partook of a tenancy, ceased, and when the matter came before the court there was no relationship of landlord and tenant between the mortgagee and mortgagor; the Rent Acts, in dealing with the rights of a tenant to remain in occupation of premises after the termination of the contractual relationship, referred only to cases in which the person in occupation was in the true sense a tenant of premises "let" to him by the person who was in ordinary language the landlord and owner of the premises; where the real relationship between the parties was that of mortgagor and mortgagee and the case did not fall within those parts of the Rent Acts which specifically related to mortgages the case could not be brought within the protection of the other part of the Acts by an attornment clause; and, therefore, the premises in the present case were not protected.

Decision of DANCKWERTS, J. ([1950] 2 All E.R. 443); reversed.

[AS TO RELATIONSHIP EFFECTED BY ATTORNMENT CLAUSE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 23, pp. 325, 326, para. 489; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 35, pp. 327-331, Nos. 712-737.]

Case referred to:

(1) Ex p. Isherwood. Re Knight, (1882), 22 Ch.D. 384; 52 L.J.Ch. 370; 48 L.T. 398; 35 Digest 328, 719.

APPEAL by the Portman Building Society from a decision of DANCKWERTS, J., on June 30, 1950, reported [1950] 2 All E.R. 443.

The Portman Building Society, as mortgagees, issued an originating summons under R.S.C., Ord. 55, r. 5A, claiming possession of the mortgaged premises from the mortgagor and costs. The master took the point that the Rent Restrictions Acts applied to protect the mortgagor, and DANCKWERTS, J., so held. DANCKWERTS, J., further held that in the circumstances, notwithstanding that he was able to order possession to be given to the building society, he had no power to award them costs.

Heathcote-Williams, K.C., and L. A. Blundell for the Portman Building Society.

The mortgagor did not appear.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R.: This action was started by originating summons dated Feb. 7, 1950, and issued under R.S.C., Ord. 55, r. 5A, whereby the plaintiff building society claimed as first mortgagees of certain property known as 122, Merewood Road, Crayford, Kent, (i) possession of that property, (ii) further and other relief, and (iii) costs. When the documents were examined it was found that at the relevant date, i.e., on Feb. 7, 1950, the relationship between the society and the defendant was constituted by two deeds, one dated Apr. 17, 1948, and the other, a supplemental deed, dated Apr. 30, 1949. By the combined effect of those two deeds the society was legal chargee of the premises, the owner (and I am using that word without prejudice to anything I say hereafter) and mortgagor being the defendant. The amount due under the mortgage was repayable by monthly instalments which took account of the principal and interest. The monthly sum was £9 16s. 0d.

The difficulty was created by the last clause of the supplemental deed which provides:

"The mortgagor hereby attorns tenant to the society of such parts of the property as may at any time be in the occupation of the mortgagor at the monthly rent of £9 16s 0d. to be paid on the days hereinbefore appointed for payment of monthly instalments and such rent is to be applied in or towards satisfaction of such instalments. Provided always that the society may at any time without giving previous notice in that behalf determine the tenancy created by such attornment."

There was a further proviso that the tenancy should not render the society liable to account as mortgagees in possession. The point suggested was that, as the rent of £9 16s. 0d. was not less than two-thirds of the rateable value of the property and it is conceded that the property was within the economic ambit of the Rent Acts, it would follow that the tenancy which was referred to in this attornment clause was one protected by the Acts, with the result that, in seeking possession of the premises, the plaintiff society had to bring themselves within one or other of the provisions of the Acts which give to the court jurisdiction to make an order for possession. They succeeded in doing so because they were able to show that the rent, so-called, was in arrear, and that, therefore, the court was entitled to make an order under the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, sched. I, para. (a), and DANCKWERTS, J., made an order for possession. That order has in fact been implemented.

That, however, still left this further point. Since ex hypothesi the order sought and the order obtained was one under the Acts, the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, s. 17 (2), prevented the court, in answer to the third part of the prayer of the summons, making any order in the society's favour in respect of costs. The terms of the sub-section, so far as relevant, are:

"A county court shall have jurisdiction to deal with any claim . . . arising out of this Act . . . notwithstanding that by reason of the amount of claim or otherwise the case would not but for this provision be within the jurisdiction of a county court, and, if a person takes proceedings under this Act in the High Court which he could have taken in the county court, he shall not be entitled to recover any costs."

In the present case the deprivation of the plaintiffs of their costs meant that they could not add them to the amount of their security, and the decision, and the basis on which the order went, viz., that because of the attornment clause this case was covered by the Rent Acts, raised a point of real substance for the plaintiff society, because, if it were right, whenever there was such a clause at a rent which was not of a sufficient sum to exclude the operation of the Acts, then, if the society desired to obtain possession, they would have to bring their case, somehow or another, within one or other of the relevant provisions of the Act, and then persuade the court that it was reasonable in the circumstances to make the order. I confess that at first sight it seemed a strange case for the invocation of the Acts. It did not look as though it was the sort of case Parliament desired to protect in this way. Still, the mortgagees, for their own purposes, and to give themselves certain procedural advantages, had thought fit to insert this attornment clause, and it might be said that they must take the rough with the smooth and must prove what was necessary to bring their case within the class in which an order for possession under the Acts can be made, though, being mortgagees, they would almost inevitably have to sue in the High Court where they would be deprived of costs.

The question whether or not an attornment clause in general does create what SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., called a real tenancy between a real landlord and a real tenant is one which might be perceptible of a good deal of argument. In the days when Ex p. Isherwood. Re Knight (1) came before this court, a mortgage commonly took the form of a conveyance of the fee simple so that at law the mortgagee was the owner of the property and the mortgagor his tenant at will. The position in equity was superimposed, and, in fact, controlled the relationship, but, as I have said, in those days the mortgagee became the owner at law, and, that being so, it was, perhaps, somewhat easier to say that in reality a position of landlord and tenant was created by putting the attornment clause in the mortgage deed. Under modern conveyancing practice, the mortgagee does not become the legal owner. He becomes a chargee. He may become a lessee under a term of years, but he does not become the owner. The mortgagor remains at law, as well as in equity, the owner subject to the charge and otherwise to the provisions of the mortgage deed. I do not think it necessary to pursue that aspect of the case further, nor do I think it necessary (and, indeed, on this we have heard no argument) to decide whether, having regard to the terms of the attornment clause and the uncertainty which, it is said, surrounds the description of the parcels, it would be right to say that no tenancy in the true sense of the term ever came into existence.

In my judgment, there is another and shorter answer to the suggestion that the Rent Acts at the relevant date, i.e., when the case came before the court, applied to the premises, a point suggested by LORD RADCLIFFE at an early stage of the argument. As I stated when reading the clause, the relationship, whatever it may be, created by the attornment clause, is, according to the clause itself, determinable at any time on the part of the society and without giving previous notice in that behalf. It would, therefore, appear that, if the society, before starting any proceedings, had determined the attornment clause or the tenancy alleged to be created by it, then, at any rate, as a matter of contract, it would have ceased altogether to exist. There is no evidence that the society in this case ever did so determine the tenancy before the date when they issued their originating summons, viz., Feb. 7, 1950, but by the issue of that summons claiming possession, it seems to me plain that the contractual relationship, whatever its character, created by the attornment clause, in so far as it partook of a tenancy, ended, and had ceased to be when the matter came before the court. That having happened, what is there which enables the tenant to require the court to say that the premises were protected by the Acts so that in respect of them no order for possession could be made save under conditions specified in the Act?

I have come to the conclusion that the answer to the question is: Nothing. Where there has been a contractual tenancy within the scope of the Acts and when that tenancy has come to an end, the policy and operation of the Acts is to protect the occupant from eviction at the suit of the person who would be properly described as his landlord. That appears plainly enough from the language of s. 15 (1) of the Act of 1920, which, so far as is relevant, provides:

“A tenant who by virtue of the provisions of this Act retains possession of any dwelling-house to which this Act applies shall, so long as he retains possession, observe and be entitled to the benefit of all the terms and conditions of the original contract of tenancy, so far as the same are consistent with the provisions of this Act . . .”

I think that that section, as well as s. 3 of the Act of 1933 and sched. I to that Act, makes it plain that the whole idea and scheme of the Acts, so far as they relate to protected dwellings and the right of the person in occupation to continue in occupation, is to deal with premises of which the person in possession is, in a true and sensible meaning of the word, a tenant of them from someone else who is in ordinary language the landlord and their owner. After all, for the Acts to apply at all to any premises for the purpose of protecting occupation, the premises must be "let" as a separate dwelling. If that be accepted as right, it appears immediately that the necessary foundation for the application of the Acts is absent here.

In the present case the true position is that the person in occupation is the owner and the person seeking possession is a chargee wishing to realise his charge. Once contractual situation created by the attornment clause is gone, it is impossible with any sense of the meaning of words to refer to their relationship as that of landlord and tenant. Consider what would happen if that were not right. Is the mortgagor, the owner of the house, in possession as tenant of his mortgagee for ever and a day at the rent of £9 16s. 0d. a month? Is he to continue so to be after the principal and interest have been paid off, and after, therefore, the mortgagee would cease to have any right or interest of any sort or kind in the property? Once the particular contractual relationship has finished, it results in an absurdity to suppose that this relation of landlord and tenant continues.

So far, I have been speaking as though the Rent Acts deal only with cases where the person in possession is being protected from eviction by a landlord, but that is an incomplete statement of their purpose, and a more detailed statement, I think, supports the view I have suggested. The Acts are also concerned to protect mortgagors as such. There are sections of the Acts which form a code dealing specifically, not with the position of landlords and tenants, as regards the right of the latter to occupation, but with the position of mortgagees and mortgagors as regards the rights of the former to enforce the terms of the mortgage. If a mortgage is within the Acts as such, then the Acts apply to it and the mortgagor can get the appropriate protection as such. I think it unnatural to suppose that cases where the real relationship is that of mortgagee and mortgagor, but which are not within the protection of the Acts relating to mortgages, should by a side wind be brought under the protection of the other part of the Acts which is not concerned with mortgages at all.

For these reasons I have come to the conclusion that when this originating summons was issued, the attornment clause and all the contractual rights, however they should be defined, which it operated to give to the parties, came to an end altogether, and that thenceforward there was no subsisting relationship of landlord and tenant or anything analagous to it which would as such bring into operation the Rent Acts so that the mortgagee, in pursuing his remedies as mortgagee had, in order to get possession, to bring the case within one or other of the provisions of those Acts entitling a landlord to possession. That being so, the bar which the learned judge thought prevented him giving costs in the ordinary way did not subsist. The learned judge could have awarded, and I think it is quite plain would have awarded, costs in the ordinary way to the mortgagees which they would be entitled to add to their security. I think the appeal ought to be allowed.

LORD RADCLIFFE: I agree.

SINGLETON, L.J.: I agree.

Appeal allowed; order varied by directing that the costs below be added to the security. No order as to costs of appeal.

Solicitors: Hewlett & Co. (for the building society).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. CITY OF LONDON, ETC., RENT TRIBUNAL.

Ex parte HONIG.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Hilbery and Parker, J.J.),
December 8, 1950.]

Rent Control—Rent tribunal—Jurisdiction—Determination of collateral question on which jurisdiction depends—Existence of tenancy at time of reference—Review of decision—Certiorari—Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946 (c. 34), s. 2 (1) (2).

At the hearing of a reference under s. 2 (1) of the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946, the landlord contended that the tribunal had no jurisdiction because a notice to quit given by him had expired before the date of the reference and so there was no contract of tenancy to refer to the tribunal. There being no documentary evidence as to the nature of the tenancy, the tribunal decided on the evidence of the parties that the notice to quit was invalid, that there was a subsisting tenancy between the parties, and that, therefore, the tribunal had jurisdiction to entertain the reference and to reduce the rent. On a motion by the landlord for certiorari, HELD: (i) since it was on the collateral question whether or not a tenancy subsisted that the jurisdiction of the tribunal to determine a reasonable rent depended, the tribunal was entitled to decide that collateral question first before proceeding to the main matter under consideration.

(ii) it was open to a party who complained of that decision to ask the High Court to review the matter on an application for certiorari.

(iii) in the present case the landlord had not discharged the onus on him of satisfying the court that the tribunal had come to a wrong conclusion, and, therefore, certiorari would not issue.

[FOR THE FURNISHED HOUSES (RENT CONTROL) ACT, 1946, s. 2 (1) (2), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 13, p. 1086.]

E Cases referred to:

- (1) R. v. Income Tax Special Purposes Comrs., (1888), 21 Q.B.D. 313; 53 J.P. 84; sub nom., R. v. Income Tax Special Comrs., Ex p. Cape Copper Mining Co., Ltd., 57 L.J.Q.B. 513; 59 L.T. 455; 2 Tax Cas. 332; 28 Digest 97, 580.
- (2) R. v. Lincolnshire JJ., Ex p. Brett, [1926] 2 K.B. 192; 95 L.J.K.B. 827; 135 L.T. 141; 90 J.P. 149; Digest Supp.
- (3) R. v. Brighton and Area Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Marine Parade Estates (1936), Ltd., [1950] 1 All E.R. 946; [1950] 2 K.B. 410; 114 J.P. 242.
- (4) R. v. Hampstead and St. Pancras Furnished Houses Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Ascot Lodge, Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 12; [1947] K.B. 973; [1947] L.J.R. 1003; 176 L.T. 560; 111 J.P. 349; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) R. v. Fulham, Hammersmith and Kensington Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Philippe, [1950] 2 All E.R. 211; 114 J.P. 384.
- (6) R. v. Barnet, etc., Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Millman, [1950] 2 All E.R. 216; [1950] 2 K.B. 506; 114 J.P. 340.

MOTION by the landlord, Emanuel Honig, for an order of certiorari to remove and quash a determination of a rent tribunal, dated June 28, 1950, on a reference made to them under the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946, whereby they reduced the rent of two furnished rooms let by the landlord to one, Albert Shomade, from £1 7s. a week to 17s. 6d. a week.

At the hearing before the tribunal the landlord claimed that the tribunal had no jurisdiction under the Act because notice to quit the premises expiring on Monday, May 1, 1950, had been served on the tenant and the contract was at an end before the reference to the tribunal was made on June 1, 1950. No rent book had been issued in connection with the tenancy, and there was no contract in writing, but the tribunal accepted the evidence of the tenant that the tenancy was a weekly one running from Saturday to Saturday, and held that the notice to quit was invalid. Alternatively, they held that, even if the notice was valid, the acceptance of rent by the landlord for periods after May 1, 1950, created a fresh contract, and, therefore, the tribunal had jurisdiction to entertain the reference. The landlord now contended that the tribunal had no power under the Act of 1946 to inquire whether or not the tenancy had been lawfully determined.

S. W. Magnus for the landlord.

J. P. Ashworth for the tribunal.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This case raises a question of some importance, viz.: Where a tenant refers a purported contract of tenancy to the rent tribunal under the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946, or now to the tribunal established under the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, and the landlord maintains that the tenancy has been determined, can the tribunal inquire into the question whether the tenancy has been lawfully determined, to enable them to decide whether or not they have jurisdiction to hear the application? I do not think that it could be contended that if, before the contract was referred, the tenancy had been lawfully determined, at any rate under the Act of 1946, the tribunal would have any jurisdiction. In the present case the landlord purported to give a notice to quit on a particular day. After that date, but while the tenant was still in occupation he referred the matter to the tribunal. The tenant might have been holding over merely as a trespasser, or he might have been holding over by agreement or under the terms of his tenancy. That question had never been determined.

When the matter came before the tribunal the landlord took the objection that there was no contract of tenancy in existence at the time when the matter was referred because he had given a valid notice to quit. On the other hand, the tenant contended that the notice to quit was invalid. The question between the parties was whether the tenancy was one from Saturday to Saturday or one from Monday to Monday. The landlord maintained that the tenancy ran from Monday to Monday, and he had given the notice to quit on that basis. The tribunal inquired into the matter and came to the conclusion that the tenancy was one from Saturday to Saturday, that there had been no valid notice to quit, that there was still a subsisting tenancy between the parties, and, therefore, that they had jurisdiction to decide what was a fair rent for the premises.

The landlord now moves for an order of certiorari on the ground that the tribunal had no jurisdiction to inquire whether the notice to quit was good or bad. In my opinion, they clearly had such jurisdiction because it is only if there was a tenancy in existence at the time of reference that they would have jurisdiction to act. Section 2 (1) of the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946, provides:

"Where a contract has . . . been entered into whereby one person . . . grants to another person . . . the right to occupy as a residence a house or part of a house . . . in consideration of a rent which includes payment for the use of furniture or for services . . . it shall be lawful for either party to the contract or for the local authority to refer the contract to the tribunal for the district . . ."

Then the tribunal is to fix what they consider to be a reasonable rent in respect of the tenancy. By s. 5, if the tribunal give a decision, the Act gives the tenant three months' security of tenure from the date of that decision unless the tribunal fixes a shorter period.

Unless the tribunal could first decide on the question of the existence of a tenancy they could only proceed in a case where both parties agreed that a contract was in existence and it would always be open to the landlord to dispute the existence of the tenancy. That would result in an action in the county court, and if the county court judge decided one way, the tenant would be able to go on with his reference, but if he decided the other way he would not. I cannot think that it was intended that that should take place in regard to proceedings under this Act. The principles on which such tribunals as these can act seems to me to be well established by decided cases. First, one has to consider whether the tribunal must, to enable itself to obtain jurisdiction, find that a certain state of affairs collateral to the main question exists. The question whether or not there is a contract seems to me clearly to be collateral to the main question which the tribunal has to decide, viz., what is a reasonable rent under the contract of tenancy?

In R. v. Income Tax Special Purposes Comrs. (1), which is the leading case usually cited on this question, LORD ESHER, M.R., stated the law in this way (21 Q.B.D. 319):

"When an inferior court or tribunal or body, which has to exercise the power of deciding facts, is first established by Act of Parliament, the legislature has to consider what powers it will give that tribunal or body. It may in effect say that, if a certain state of facts exists and is shown to such tribunal or body before it proceeds to do certain things, it shall have jurisdiction to do such things, but not otherwise. There it is not for them conclusively to decide whether that state of facts exists, and, if they exercise the jurisdiction without its existence, what they do may be questioned, and it will be held that they have acted without jurisdiction."

Then he points out that the legislature may give power to the court to come to a final decision on that matter, and that if the statute does not give a right of appeal the matter cannot be questioned in any other court. In my opinion, the present case is clearly one where, if a certain state of facts exists, i.e., if there is a tenancy of the class contemplated by the Act, the tribunal has jurisdiction to proceed to do what they are entitled to do, viz., to fix the rent, but their decision is not conclusive and can be reviewed in this court, as can the collateral matter which the tribunal has decided, viz., the existence of a tenancy.

Counsel for the tribunal called our attention to R. v. Lincolnshire JJ., Ex p. Brett (2), and, more particularly, to the judgment of ATKIN, L.J., in which he quoted with approval ([1926] 2 K.B. 202) the statement of the law set out in HALSBURY'S LAWS OF ENGLAND, vol. 10, p. 193, para. 375, as follows:

"The case is more difficult where the jurisdiction of the court below depends, not upon some preliminary proceeding, but upon the existence of some particular fact. If the fact be collateral to the actual matter which the lower court has to try, that court cannot, by a wrong decision with regard to it, give itself jurisdiction which it would not otherwise possess. The lower court must, indeed, decide as to the collateral fact, in the first instance; but the superior court may upon certiorari inquire into the correctness of the decision . . ."

That is what we have to do. I am of opinion that the tribunal had power to inquire into the collateral fact, namely, whether there was a contract, because it was only if there was a contract that they could exercise the jurisdiction which the Act of Parliament has given them. Having decided that, it is open to the person who complains of that decision to ask this court to inquire into it by means of certiorari. In some cases, this court has been able to inquire into the matter by means of documents and other information put before it and has come to a conclusion that the tribunal decided erroneously. In the present case the decision of the tribunal depended entirely on oral evidence. They heard both parties and came to a decision on the question of fact, and there is nothing before us now which can satisfy us that the tribunal came to a wrong conclusion. Some day Parliament may consider it desirable that there should be some form of appeal. On the other hand, I can understand the view that, perhaps, has been taken—that there should not be any appeal in these matters because it was thought when this legislation was passed that the tribunals would be for the benefit of poor people. We now know from R. v. Brighton and Area Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Marine Parade Estates (1936), Ltd. (3) that professional men and men in receipt of good incomes and landlords who have embarked thousands of pounds in property are apt to be brought before the tribunals. There is nothing here in the case before us to show that the tribunal came to a wrong decision in fact. Therefore, certiorari cannot issue and the application must be refused. A HILBERY, J.: I am of the same opinion for the same reasons.

PARKER, J.: I agree and I would only add that in more than one case this court has already held that furnished houses rent tribunals are rather of the first type referred to by LORD ESHER, M.R., in R. v. Income Tax Special Purposes Comrs. (1). I need only refer to R. v. Hampstead and St. Pancras Furnished Houses Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Ascot Lodge, Ltd. (4), and the two more recent cases concerning premiums, viz., R. v. Fulham, Hammersmith and Kensington Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Philippe (5) and R. v. Barnet, etc., Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Millman (6). As the result, it must not merely appear to these tribunals that the condition precedent to their jurisdiction exists, but it must, in fact, exist. In the two recent cases to which I have referred the jurisdiction of the tribunal depended on whether there was a premium within the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, and this court decided that it must not merely appear to the tribunal that a premium existed, but, in fact, a premium must exist before their jurisdiction arose. It seems to me that the present case is very similar to those cases. It must not merely appear that a contract exists on which they could exercise their jurisdiction, but it must, in fact, exist. The onus is on an applicant to this court to show that the decision of the tribunal was erroneous. Where that depends almost entirely on oral testimony, the onus is particularly high, and in the present case the landlord has not satisfied me that the decision was erroneous. C D

Application dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: J. Dalton (for the landlord); Solicitor, Ministry of Health (for the tribunal). E

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. BIRMINGHAM (WEST) RENT TRIBUNAL. Ex parte EDGBASTON INVESTMENT TRUST, LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Hilbery and Parker, JJ.),
December 12, 1950.] G

Rent Control—Premium—Payment by tenants to builders for conversion of dwelling-houses into flats—Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (c. 40), s. 2 (1), s. 18 (2), sched. I, Part I, para. 1.

By an agreement, dated July 31, 1948, between the landlords, eighteen prospective tenants, and a firm of builders, it was agreed that the builders should convert six dwelling-houses into eighteen flats for the sum of £18,000, of which £9,000 was to be paid by the landlords and £500 each by the prospective tenants, and that on completion of the work the landlords would grant to the tenants leases for fourteen years of the flats at rents varying between £100 and £175 a year. On June 22, 1950, on an application by three of the tenants the rent tribunal decided that each of the sums of H

£500 paid by them to the builders was a "premium" required by the landlords "as a condition of the grant of a tenancy" within the meaning of the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, s. 2 (1), certified that Part I of sched. I, to the Act applied, and determined the rental equivalent in each case at £8 18s. 6d. a quarter. On an application by the landlords for an order of certiorari to bring up and quash the certificate and determination of the rent tribunal,

HELD: (i) to constitute the payment of a premium within the Act of 1949 there must be a payment to the landlord and not to a third person; in the present case there had been no payment to the landlords; and, therefore, no premium had been required as a condition of the grant of a tenancy within s. 2 (1), and the certificate and determination of the rent tribunal must be quashed.

[FOR THE LANDLORD AND TENANT (RENT CONTROL) ACT, 1949, s. 1 (5), s. 2 (1), (5), s. 18 (2), and sched. I, Part I, para. 1, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 13, pp. 1095, 1097, 1110.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) King v. Cadogan (Earl), [1915] 1 K.B. 821; 84 L.J.K.B. 779; affd. [1915] 3 K.B. 485; 84 L.J.K.B. 2069; 113 L.T. 895.
- (2) R. v. Fulham, Hammersmith and Kensington Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Philippe, [1950] 2 All E.R. 211; 114 J.P. 384.
- (3) R. v. Barnet, etc., Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Millman, [1950] 2 All E.R. 216; [1950] 2 K.B. 506; 114 J.P. 390.

MOTION by the landlords, Edgbaston Investment Trust, Ltd., for an order of certiorari to bring up and quash a certificate and determination of the Birmingham (West) Rent Tribunal, dated June 22, 1950.

In 1947 the landlords purchased six dwelling-houses which had suffered war damage. By an agreement, dated July 31, 1948, between the landlords, eighteen prospective tenants, and a firm of builders, the builders undertook to convert the dwelling-houses into eighteen flats, i.e., three flats to a house, for the sum of £18,000, of which £9,000 was to be paid by the landlords and the balance of £9,000 by the tenants, each of whom was to pay £500. It was further agreed that on completion of the work the landlords would grant to each of the tenants a lease of one of the flats for a term of fourteen years at an agreed rent. The conversion was carried out and each of the tenants paid £500 to the builders. In May, 1950, three of the tenants applied to the rent tribunal, alleging that each of the sums of £500 which they had paid was a premium required by the landlords as a condition of the grant of the tenancy of each flat within the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, s. 2 (1) and sched. I, Part I, para. 1. The tribunal accepted this contention, certified that Part I of the schedule applied, and determined the rental equivalent of the premium under Part I, para. 3 (1) (a), and Part III, para. 8, of the schedule. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

Dare for the landlords.

R. J. Parker (J. P. Ashworth with him) for the tribunal.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: Counsel for the landlords moves for an order of certiorari to bring up a decision of the Birmingham (West) Rent Tribunal under which they determined the rental equivalent of a premium at £8 18s. 6d. per quarter. The tribunal have also issued a certificate under para. 1 (b) of Part I of sched. I to the Act to certify that they are satisfied that since the premium was paid and before Mar. 25, 1949, the reversion had been conveyed or assigned for a consideration in money or money's worth. The point we have to determine is whether or not a certain sum of money, in circumstances to which I will refer, is a premium within the meaning of the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949.

Some old houses in Hagley Road, Birmingham, which had suffered war damage, were acquired by the present landlords, the Edgbaston Investment Trust, Ltd. The landlords then conceived the plan of converting these old houses into eighteen flats, three flats to a house, and on July 31, 1948, the following agreement was made "... between Edgbaston Investment Trust, Ltd. ... (hereinafter called 'the landlords' ...) of the first part, Birmingham Builders, Ltd. ... (hereinafter called 'the builders' ...) of the second part and the persons whose names addresses and occupations or descriptions are set out in sched. I hereto (hereinafter called 'the tenants' ...) of the third part. Whereby it is agreed as follows: (1) The landlords and the tenants hereby agree with the builders that the builders shall forthwith proceed to convert the six dwelling-houses Nos. 287 289 291 293 295 and 297 Hagley Road Edgbaston in the city of Birmingham into a block of eighteen flats under the inspection and direction and to the satisfaction of the surveyor for the time being of the landlords for the sum of £18,000 which shall be paid as to £9,000 part thereof by the landlords and as to the balance of £9,000 by the tenants who shall each be responsible for payment of £500 only. (2) The builders hereby agree that in consideration of the said sum of £18,000 to be paid to them in manner aforesaid they will as soon as reasonably possible after the date hereof complete the conversion of the said six residences into eighteen flats fit for immediate occupation ... (3) If the said buildings and works shall be completely finished to the satisfaction of the said surveyor (to be evidenced by his certificate in writing to that effect) the landlords shall grant and each of the tenants shall accept and execute a counterpart of a good and sufficient lease of one of the said flats to each of the tenants with their appurtenances for the term of fourteen years from Sept. 29, 1948, at the yearly rent specified in sched. I hereto as applicable to the flat selected by the tenant such rent to be paid clear of all deductions ..."

When most of the flats had been constructed the three tenants with whom we are concerned took tenancies of three of the flats on the terms contained in the agreement I have just read. The tribunal has decided that the £500 which each tenant paid to the builders was a premium and caught by the Act of 1949, and, therefore, that they were entitled to find the rental equivalent of that premium and reduce the rent by the amount of that rental equivalent over a given number of years.

Section 1 (5) of the Act, which deals with cases where a premium is paid before the coming into force of this Act [i.e., on June 2, 1949]—which is the case here—provides:

"In determining under this section what rent is reasonable for a dwelling-house, no regard shall be had to the fact that any premium has been paid in respect of the grant, continuance or renewal of a tenancy; but the provisions of Part I of sched. I to this Act shall have effect in relation to such premiums paid before the commencement of this Act."

Part I of sched. I provides:

"1. Where on an application under s. 1 of this Act made within twelve months from the date of the commencement of this Act it appears to the tribunal that before the commencement of this Act any premium has been paid (whether lawfully required or not) in respect of the grant, continuance or renewal of a tenancy of the dwelling-house to which the application relates, whether by the tenant or by a previous tenant of the dwelling-house, and has not been fully repaid or recovered, the tribunal shall, if the tenant so requires, certify that this Part of this schedule applies ..."

Thereupon the tribunal may make the certification to which I have referred. By s. 18 (2) it is provided:

"In this Act . . . the expression 'premium' includes any fine or other like sum and any other pecuniary consideration in addition to rent . . ."

Section 2 of the Act provides:

"(1) A person shall not, as a condition of the grant, renewal or continuance of a tenancy to which this section applies, require the payment of any premium in addition to the rent . . . (5) Where, under an agreement made after Mar. 25, 1949, any premium has been paid which, or the whole of which, could not lawfully be required under the foregoing provisions of this section (or, if the premium was required before the commencement of this Act, which could not lawfully have been required if this Act had then been in force), the amount of the premium, or so much thereof as could not lawfully be required or have been required, as the case may be, shall be recoverable by the person by whom it was paid."

The person paying the premium is, therefore, given a right to recover the amount paid.

The whole question here depends on whether or not, on its true construction, this Act has any application to a case where the sum of money alleged to be a premium is paid, not to the landlord, but to some other person. As counsel for the tribunal has pointed out, the definition does not say that the expression "premium" includes a pecuniary consideration in addition to the rent paid to the landlord, but, in our opinion, this Act can only apply to premiums which are paid to the landlord. In the interpretation section "premium" is not defined, but it is stated that it includes "any . . . pecuniary consideration in addition to rent" which is paid as consideration for the grant of a lease. In King v. Cadogan (Earl) (1)—a case which was first before the Divisional Court, where BRAY, J., delivered a very useful judgment on the subject—LORD COZENS-HARDY, M.R., said in his judgment in the Court of Appeal ([1915] 3 K.B. 490) that: "'Premium' is a word of art." Although what the term includes is stated in s. 18 (2) of the Act of 1949, the whole conception of a premium is a sum of money paid to a landlord as consideration for the grant of a lease. Here, under the terms of the agreement, it is clear that Birmingham Builders, Ltd., were willing to convert these premises for £18,000 and only looked to the landlords for half that sum. It is abundantly clear from that agreement that Birmingham Builders, Ltd., could never have sued the landlords for anything more than £9,000. For the balance they had to look to the tenants, each of whom had agreed to pay them £500. Each tenant had to pay that money, not to the landlords, but to Birmingham Builders, Ltd. The landlords never had any claim against any tenant for the £500, although, I think, we may take it that the landlords would not have granted a lease to anybody who had not agreed to sign the agreement of July 31, 1948. Birmingham Builders, Ltd., could only recover the balance of the £9,000 from the various tenants up to £500 each. When the tenant paid that money, he paid it before the Act came into force. Supposing this had been a case after the Act came into force, from whom could the tenant have recovered the money. He could not have recovered it from Birmingham Builders, Ltd., because the consideration which supported the premium was, not the grant of the lease, but the work which the builders did in converting the premises, and he could not recover it from the landlords because the landlords had not received it.

I think we are bound to construe the word "premium" in this Act as meaning a payment to a landlord and not a payment to a third person, although that third person may be a party to an enterprise to which both the landlord and also the tenant are parties. If we did not construe the Act in that way, extraordinary difficulties would arise, because, as I have already said, the construction we give to the word "premium" under sched. I must equally apply to premiums under s. 2, where the right of action is given to recover a premium.

For these reasons it seems to me that this sum of money was not a premium.

To my mind the case is not on all fours with R. v. Fulham, Hammersmith and Kensington Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Philippe (2). There a tenant was taking a lease of premises and one of the terms of the lease was that he should do certain work on the premises. Instead of his doing the work himself, it was agreed between him and the landlord that the landlord would do the work. Under that agreement the landlord was in the position of an independent contractor. It was as if the tenant had employed a third person to do the work, and, therefore, it was held that the Act did not apply. Those are not the same facts as we have here. Here the money was actually being paid to a contractor. Again, in R. v. Barnet, etc., Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Millman (3), in the judgment of the court delivered by PARKER, J., it was pointed out ([1950] 2 All E.R. 219):

"Read in their widest sense the words 'in respect of' would cover the payment of money for whatever purpose so long as it could be said that no tenancy would have been granted but for the payment. Thus, the words would cover the purchase price of the stock taken over or the reimbursement to the landlord of the proportion of any outgoings such as rates, insurance and the like, paid in respect of the period covered by the tenancy. No doubt, it may not be easy in some cases to say whether a payment comes within these words, but where, as here, a payment is made for the genuine purchase of the goodwill of a business and against the seller entering into a restrictive covenant not to carry on a similar business, we do not think that it can be said to have been paid 'in respect of' the grant."

I only refer to that case, which was very different on the facts to show that although it may be that the tenant would never have got the premises if he had not agreed to buy the goodwill of the business which was attached thereto, the court would not regard the money that was paid for that goodwill as money paid in respect of the grant of the tenancy. Here I prefer to base my judgment on the ground that on the true construction of this Act it is clear that it was intended to apply to a pecuniary consideration paid to the landlord. If the landlords here had entered into an agreement under which they had made themselves liable to the builders for the full amount and then insisted that the tenant, as a condition of the grant of the lease, should discharge a part of that liability, the tenant would obviously be paying a sum on behalf of the landlords, which would be the same as if he paid the landlords, but when one examines this agreement one sees clearly that its scheme is that the landlords are liable for no more than £9,000 and that the rest of the money due to the builders has to be found by the tenants. Therefore, in my opinion, there has been no payment of a premium in respect of the grant of a tenancy within the Act, and I think certiorari must issue.

HILBERY, J.: I agree. I find further support for the view my Lord has expressed in the language of the Act itself, when one remembers what in law that language has come to mean. The word "premium" is, as my Lord has pointed out, a word of art, and in King v. Cadogan (Earl) (1), WARRINGTON, L.J., said ([1915] 3 K.B. 492):

"Now the legislature in expressing its intention has chosen to use two words—'rent' and 'premium'—both of which in connection with leases have perfectly well known legal meanings. I need not say anything about the meaning of the word rent, but 'premium,' as I understand it, used as it frequently is in legal documents, means a cash payment made to the lessor, and representing, or supposed to represent, the capital value of the difference between the actual rent and the best rent that might otherwise be obtained."

When one bears in mind the evil at which the Act of 1949 and the earlier Acts relating to this subject-matter were aimed, it is clear that "premium" was intended to bear that meaning in the Act of 1949. In a number of cases houses had standard rents which had been fixed under the Rent Restrictions Acts and could not be increased notwithstanding all the increases in the cost of labour and materials to which the landlord might be put in keeping the premises in repair and notwithstanding that rents everywhere had increased and the rent of any house would be much greater than the standard rent if it were not controlled. To meet that situation landlords demanded premiums for lettings at the standard rent to recoup themselves the difference between the standard rent and the market rent. That evil related to a premium payable to the landlord, a premium in the true legal sense of the word. In addition, s. 18 (1) of the Act provides, not a true definition of "premium," but a statement that it shall include certain things. There is, in my view, additional ground in support of the interpretation which we are putting on the Act today in the fact that in that so-called definition it is said that "... the expression 'premium' includes any fine or other like sum and any other pecuniary consideration in addition to rent."

An addition to rent would normally be something payable to a landlord.

PARKER, J.: I agree.

Order of certiorari granted. No order as to costs.

Solicitors: Church, Rendell, agents for Westwood, Morris & Co., Birmingham (for the landlords); Solicitor, Ministry of Health (for the tribunal).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. COHEN.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL (Lord Goddard, C.J., Hilbery and Parker, JJ.), December 5, 18, 1950.]

Customs—Harbouring uncustomed goods—Ingredients of offence—Knowledge that goods uncustomed—Intent to defraud—Prima facie case—Goods found on premises of accused—Onus on accused to prove that goods customed or that he did not know duty had not been paid—Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (c. 36), s. 186, s. 259—Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (c. 36), s. 1 (f).

The appellant was charged on indictment with knowingly harbouring certain uncustomed goods and was found Guilty of harbouring 352 watches. He carried on the business of a jeweller and when questioned by Customs officers about his purchases of watches gave the names of two firms from whom he had bought goods. He produced thirty watches and said there were no others on his premises, but, on making a search at his invitation, the officers found 439. The grounds of appeal were that the deputy chairman misdirected the jury as to the onus of proof; that he should not have questioned the appellant in regard to certain invoices relating to watches not the subject of the charge; and that he should not have asked the appellant if he was an undischarged bankrupt.

HELD: (i) the offence of knowingly harbouring goods subject to duty was committed when it was shown that the accused person had harboured the goods and had known when he did so that they were uncustomed.

(ii) once it was proved that the goods were in his possession a prima facie case was established that he had knowingly harboured them and s. 259 of the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876, shifted the burden of proof and placed on him the onus of giving an explanation from which the jury could infer that the goods were in fact customed, or that, having acquired them in the ordinary way of business, he did not know that duty had not been paid. In considering what amount of evidence was necessary to shift that burden the court must have regard to the opportunities of knowledge of the facts to be proved possessed by the parties.

R. v. Kakelo ([1923] 2 K.B. 793), applied.

(iii) intent to defraud was also an ingredient of the offence and such intent must be inferred from the surrounding circumstances. In the present case, where the appellant not only had the goods in his possession in order to sell them, but also lied to the Customs officers when challenged, there was ample evidence of intent to defraud.

(iv) the questions put to the accused in regard to invoices for watches not the subject of the charge were not irrelevant as they were material to the issue whether he was an honest trader and as such admissible.

(v) the question whether the appellant was an undischarged bankrupt was put to test his evidence regarding purchases of goods and in the circumstances did not offend against the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, s. 1 (f).

[FOR THE CUSTOMS CONSOLIDATION ACT, 1876, s. 186 and s. 259, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 16, p. 339 and p. 359, respectively.]

AS TO THE FACTS THAT MUST OR MAY BE PROVED IN A CRIMINAL PROSECUTION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 9, pp. 183-189, paras. 267-271; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 14, pp. 368-376, Nos. 3892-3959 and Digest Supp. and 2nd Digest Supp.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) R. v. Kakelo, [1923] 2 K.B. 793; 92 L.J.K.B. 997; 129 L.T. 477; 87 J.P. 184; Digest Supp.
- (2) R. v. Fitzgerald, (1948), unrep.
- (3) R. v. Neal, [1949] 2 All E.R. 438; [1949] 2 K.B. 590; 113 J.P. 468; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL against conviction and sentence.

The appellant, Robert Abraham Cohen, was convicted at Middlesex Quarter Sessions of knowingly harbouring uncustomed goods with intent to defraud, contrary to s. 186 of the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876, and was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment.

Marshall, K.C., and M. Waters for the appellant.

Widgery for the Crown.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 18. LORD GODDARD, C.J., read the following judgment of the court. The appellant was charged on indictment before the deputy chairman of Middlesex Quarter Sessions with knowingly harbouring certain uncustomed goods, namely, 382 Swiss watches and other articles, with intent to defraud His Majesty of the duties thereon, contrary to s. 186 of the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876. The jury found him Guilty and found the number of watches harboured was 352. The appellant was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment.

The facts, so far as it is necessary to state them, are that the appellant carried on a jewellery business at his house at Edgware and since early in 1948 had done a considerable business in buying and selling watches. On Feb. 19, 1949, two officers of the Customs visited his house and asked him where he acquired the watches which he was selling. The appellant gave the names of two firms—Abrahams, of Hatton Garden, and Peter Rees, of Maida Vale. He also showed the officers about thirty watches which, he said, he had for repair, and, being asked if he had any more on the premises, he replied: "No, you are welcome to look round." The officers searched the ground floor and found nothing.

On going upstairs they found seventy-six new Swiss watches in cardboard boxes in a bedroom, and the appellant's explanation was that these were all to be returned to Abrahams and that he had forgotten them when speaking to the officers downstairs. The officers then made a further search and found two gold Swiss watches in a drawer of a wardrobe which the appellant said he had bought a year previously at Marlow. It does not seem that much

A point was made about those two watches, but under a bed the officers found two canvas bags containing no fewer than 361 new Swiss watches and five gold wrist bands of American manufacture, which, again, the appellant said he had forgotten. When giving evidence at the trial the appellant sought to excuse the untruths he had told by saying that he was frightened because he thought the Customs officers were men who had come to do a hold-up and steal his property. That this explanation was palpably untrue is shown by the

B fact that not only did the officers produce various of the invoices which had led to their inquiries, but they produced their cards showing their authority, and the appellant invited them to look round when they asked him if he had any more watches.

This appeal is brought, first, on the ground of misdirection; secondly, on

C the ground of certain questions which were put by the deputy chairman to the appellant when he was giving evidence; and on certain other grounds to which we will refer in the course of the judgment.

The first ground of appeal is that the deputy chairman misdirected the jury on the onus of proof, or, at least, did not adequately direct them, and, indeed, it was this ground that largely influenced this court in giving leave to appeal.

D The matters raised are of considerable general importance in this class of case and we hope that our judgment may prove of assistance to courts of quarter sessions who nowadays not infrequently have to deal with indictments for offences under this section. First, let us consider the ingredients of the offence and what has to be proved by the prosecution in order to establish a prima facie case. Apart from an intent to defraud, with which we will deal separately,

E the offence consists in knowingly harbouring uncustomed goods, and, in our opinion, that means that the accused knowingly harboured goods and also knew that they were uncustomed. To prove a conscious harbouring it would usually be enough to show that goods which were subject to duty were found in the possession of the accused. If they are found in his house, warehouse or other place under his control, that would establish a prima facie case that he

F knowingly harboured them, though, no doubt, he could rebut this by proving that he did not know of their presence, for instance, by showing that someone had "dumped" them there without his knowledge or privity. Once it is proved that he knowingly harboured goods subject to duty, s. 259 throws on him the onus of proving that the goods are, in fact, customed. To do this he would have to prove that the duties had actually been paid, or, at least, that

G they had been declared and that the customs officers, in the exercise of a discretion which, as is well known, they are allowed, had permitted the goods to enter. The latter case would probably seldom arise and could only occur in the case of a small amount of spirits, tobacco, jewellery or the like, and we need not deal further with this.

In a case such as the present, unless the accused is or knows the actual

H importer, so that a receipt for the payment of duties can be produced or first-hand evidence of payment given, it would probably always be difficult, and often impossible, for him to prove actual payment. Though the powers of Customs officers are always used with discretion, it is in law possible for them to require anyone, be he trader or not, who has dutiable goods in his possession to show that duty had been paid. If the person challenged cannot prove payment, it does not follow that he must be taken to have committed the offence of what for convenience we will call unlawful harbouring. He will not be guilty unless he knew that duty had not been paid. The prosecution having proved that the accused was in possession of dutiable goods in such circumstances as would entitle a court to find that he was consciously in possession of them and the accused having failed to prove that the duty had in fact been paid, there is then, in the opinion of the court, an onus on him to give some explanation of his possession from which a jury might infer that he did not know that duty had not been paid. It must be for him to give this explanation because the facts relating thereto must be exclusively within his knowledge. There is, in fact, a shifting of the burden of proof, and in considering the amount of evidence necessary to shift the burden of proof the court has regard to the opportunities of knowledge with respect to the facts to be proved which may be possessed by the parties respectively: see STEPHEN'S DIGEST OF THE LAW OF EVIDENCE, 12th ed., art. 104. That this applies to criminal cases no less than civil is shown by R. v. Kakelo (1). A

A simple way of proving lack of knowledge is to prove that the goods were bought in the ordinary course of trade. If a man buys a box of cigars in a shop at the ordinary price, why should it be supposed that he knew they had been smuggled, if, in fact, they had been? In the course of his summing-up the deputy chairman quoted a passage from a recent judgment of this court in R. v. Fitzgerald (2), in which I said: B

"If a man buys something from a trader in the ordinary way (it does not matter whether it is wholesale or retail), you would presume that he has bought it honestly and that the duty on it has been paid." C

It would, perhaps, have been more accurate if I had said: "that he had no knowledge or reason to believe that the duty had not been paid." Having arrived thus far, it appears to the court that counsel for the Crown was right in his submission that these cases are closely analogous to those of receiving stolen goods when the evidence relied on for the prosecution is merely possession of goods recently stolen. That has always been held to be prima facie evidence of guilty knowledge, or, in other words, to raise a presumption of guilt, so that if no explanation is given by the receiver the jury are entitled, though not compelled, to convict. On the other hand, if the explanation given either satisfies the jury or raises a doubt in their minds as to guilty knowledge, the defendant is entitled to an acquittal. A case is never proved if the sum of the evidence leaves the jury in doubt. So, in the present class of case, once it is proved that the accused was knowingly in possession of dutiable goods which he has not proved had paid duty, if he gives no explanation, he may be convicted of harbouring. If he does give an explanation, the jury should be told that if it either satisfies them that he did not know the goods were uncustomed or leaves them in doubt whether he knew, he should be acquitted. D

Another ingredient of the offence is the intent to defraud, and of this the jury should be reminded, but, as in all cases where an intent to defraud is a necessary ingredient, the intent must usually be inferred from the surrounding circumstances. If a jury is satisfied that the accused knew, which would include a case in which he had wilfully shut his eyes to the obvious, that the goods were uncustomed, and he had them in his possession for use or sale, it would follow, in the absence of any other circumstance, that he intended to defraud the revenue. That there may be cases where the circumstances would negative the intent is possible, but, ordinarily speaking, it is, indeed, difficult to see how it could be found he did not intend to defraud the revenue, certainly in such a case as the present, where the appellant not only had the goods in his possession for the purpose of selling, but told lies to the officers when challenged on the matter. E

Having thus dealt with the onus on the prosecution and defence respectively, we must see how the deputy chairman charged the jury. In the early part of F the summing-up, after dealing with what the Customs must prove to establish a prima facie case, he said:

“You have to inquire whether the defendant was knowingly harbouring uncustomed goods with intent to defraud, or has satisfied you that these goods have paid the duties.”

A That says nothing about the appellant's knowledge, but it has to be remembered that at the outset of the case, and in the absence of the jury, it had been agreed that, if the appellant satisfied the jury that he had bought the goods in the ordinary way of business from Abrahams and Rees, the prosecution would accept that as proof that the duty had been paid. That did not mean that if some, maybe a few, were shown to have been bought from these traders, that would cover every watch, but it would cover those about which the jury B were satisfied had been so bought, and, when returning their verdict, the jury gave the number of watches about which they were not satisfied. It might, perhaps, have been better and more accurate had the agreement been that the prosecution would accept proof of purchase as proof that the appellant did not know that duty had not been paid, but clearly the case was tried C throughout on the footing that proof of purchase in the ordinary way of trade should be equivalent to proving that duty had been paid and should be accepted as discharging the onus that s. 259 put on the appellant. Accordingly, knowledge as a separate issue became irrelevant, because the agreement was that, if he proved that the goods were bought in the ordinary course of business, he was entitled to an acquittal. This also explains the reference by the deputy chairman to the passage from the judgment of this court to which I have D already referred. Later, the deputy chairman said:

“The defendant's case is that he is an honest trader and he bought these things in the honest way in the course of business. If you accept that he is an honest trader and if you accept that he bought all these things from Abrahams and Rees, you will acquit him. If your minds are in doubt E (it being for him to establish that they have come to him honestly) whether he has established that they have come to him honestly—and you think he has not quite established it—then his good character stands by him—and if you have a reasonable doubt about it, a business doubt, as you would have about your own transactions, then again you will acquit him, but if he has failed to satisfy you, you will convict him.”

F That, we think, was, and was intended to be, a direction on the lines now given in cases where there is an onus on an accused, that the same high standard of proof is not required from him as from the prosecution, and the deputy chairman concluded by saying:

“If he has satisfied you, acquit: if your minds are in reasonable doubt, acquit: if he does not satisfy you, convict.”

J We do not think any reasonable jury could be in any doubt as to how to regard the onus. That there was an onus on the appellant is clear, and the jury were told that if they were in doubt as to whether he had discharged it they should acquit. It may be that was really putting it too favourably to the appellant. It certainly was not putting it too strongly against him. In the result, having I regard to the course taken at the trial with the assent of both counsel, we cannot hold that there has been any misdirection on this matter.

The next matter urged in support of the appeal has given the court some trouble. There were in the hands of the prosecution certain invoices for watches supplied by the appellant to one Hutchins of Penzance which were not the subject of the charge. A discussion took place at the opening of the trial, the result of which was that counsel for the prosecution agreed not to refer to the invoices in opening, but he clearly reserved his right to refer to them or to call evidence about them by way of rebuttal should they become relevant on account of the defence which might be developed. The deputy chairman said that, if necessary, the matter could be discussed again. Counsel for the prosecution, in the exercise of his discretion, and we are far from saying that he did not exercise it wisely, did not refer in any way to those invoices in his cross-examination of the appellant. The deputy chairman, however, took up this matter after the appellant's evidence had been given. He had him re-called and put a good many questions to him about the invoices, obviously with the view to testing his evidence that he was an honest trader. There were 191 watches sold to Hutchins in a comparatively short time, though over a year before the seizure of the watches the subject of the charge. We cannot say that the examination was irrelevant as it was material to the question whether the appellant was an honest trader. In his reference to this matter in his summing-up, it is true that the deputy chairman did not point out that those watches might have come from stock or that the appellant might have a difficulty in remembering where he got them, especially as he was giving evidence some two years after the sale. The deputy chairman, however, did remind the jury that though the appellant might not have satisfied them that he got the watches from Abrahams or Rees, they were to consider his evidence that they might have come from elsewhere, and that, if they were left in some doubt as to his explanation, they should acquit.

We think that on this part of the case the jury must have understood the direction to be: "If you think his explanation possible, though you have some doubt about it, you should acquit." This court thinks it would have been better, at that late stage of the evidence, had the deputy chairman not put this cross-examination to the appellant, but, as we have said, it was not irrelevant. It was also said that the appellant was improperly cross-examined by the deputy chairman as to character, because he was asked if he was not an undischarged bankrupt. The deputy chairman, it would seem, asked that question because the appellant had said that he bought a stock of watches and a shop from a man named Scatterfield, again for the purpose, apparently, of accounting for his possession of some at least of the watches sold to Hutchins. Certainly it was a somewhat odd transaction and the appellant gave the vaguest possible account of it. The deputy chairman put this question and reminded the jury that he did so not so much on a question of character as to test his evidence as to the truth of this alleged purchase. We cannot hold, in these circumstances, that the question offended against the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, s. 1 (f), and, moreover, as the deputy chairman said, the appellant had put his character in issue.

We allowed counsel for the appellant to deal with a matter that had not been raised by the notice of appeal, which was that the deputy chairman handed to the jury the notebook which the Customs officer had used to refresh his memory, but which had not been put in by either side as evidence. This was done without objection during the summing-up and was evidently thought of so little importance that it was not included in the notice of appeal. We could not allow a matter of that sort, certainly if it stood alone, to influence the result of an appeal. This court has said more than once that, if a slip is made in the course of a case that can be remedied, an accused person cannot lie by and take no objection and then use it as a ground of appeal. On this point we would call attention to what was said in R. v. Neal (3). There the irregularity was of so novel a character that we did not think counsel could fairly have been expected to deal with it when it emerged suddenly just before the jury returned their verdict. Here, obviously, the matter was not thought to be of any importance, and, as the prosecution had no notice that this point would be raised on appeal, they were unable to produce the book for our inspection when the appeal was heard.

Finally, counsel for the appellant submitted that the sum of the matters with which we have dealt, whatever the effect of any one of them standing alone might have been, rendered the trial so unsatisfactory as to merit the conviction being quashed. In the opinion of the court, there has been nothing here that can possibly have resulted in a miscarriage of justice. A misdirection on law has always been treated as a ground for quashing, but for the reasons given when dealing with the direction on the onus of proof, we are of opinion that, having regard to the course of the trial, there was no misdirection. In spite of the other matters which it would have been better to have omitted, the case for the Crown was really overwhelming. The circumstances under which the watches were found, the untruths told by the appellant, the explanation of why he told them (which could deceive no one), all point to this being a case in which it would have been impossible for a reasonable jury to have returned any other verdict than the one they did, and this appeal fails and is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Arnold Lee & Co. (for the appellant); Solicitor of Customs and Excise (for the Crown).

[Reported by H. McL. MORRISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

COURT AND ANOTHER v. ROBINSON AND ANOTHER.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Asquith and Denning, L.JJ., and Harman, J.), December 18, 19, 1950.]

Rent Restriction—Standard rent—Premises originally let for business purposes—Change of user—Knowledge of landlord's rent collector—Implication of landlord's consent—Later letting at higher rent—Determination of standard rent under Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 6—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (1) (a).

On Sept. 1, 1939, premises were let under a lease containing covenants by the tenants to use the premises only for the purposes of a working men's social club. There was evidence that at various times one of the tenants under that letting had lived on the premises to the knowledge of the rent collector of the landlords, but there was no evidence that the landlords had ever assented affirmatively to a change of user. By a lease, dated Nov. 5, 1947, the premises were let to a tenant for use as a shop and dwelling-house at a rent substantially in excess of that under the lease current on Sept. 1, 1939. With regard to the standard rent of the premises, HELD: (i) the letting of the premises for use as a working men's social club was a letting for business purposes and not a letting as a dwelling-house; the user prescribed in the lease and not the actual user was the essential factor to be considered: Wolfe v. Hogan, [1949] 1 All E.R. 570; the premises could not be regarded as let as a dwelling-house because of the residence on the premises of one of the tenants unless there was a new contract or a variation of the existing contract so as to permit the changed user; knowledge of changed user by the rent collector was insufficient to imply the landlords' consent to a variation of the terms of the lease; and, therefore, the standard rent was the rent under the lease of 1947.

(ii) the court could not determine the standard rent under s. 6 of the Act of 1933, unless (a) the premises had been let as a dwelling-house to which the Rent Restrictions Acts applied, and (b) it was impracticable to discover at what rent they were so let.

[AS TO BUSINESS PREMISES UNDER THE RENT RESTRICTIONS ACTS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 315, 316, para. 371, and 1950 Supplement; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 558, 559, Nos. 7054-7067.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Wolfe v. Hogan, [1949] 1 All E.R. 570; [1949] 2 K.B. 194; 2nd Digest Supp. A
- (2) Whitty v. Scott-Russell, [1950] 1 All E.R. 884; [1950] 2 K.B. 32.
- (3) Gidden v. Mills, [1925] 2 K.B. 713; 134 L.T. 31; 31 Digest 559, 7063.
- (4) Barrett v. Hardy Brothers (Alnwick), Ltd., [1925] 2 K.B. 220; 94 L.J.K.B. 665; 133 L.T. 249; 31 Digest 561, 7090.
- (5) Epsom Grand Stand Assocn., Ltd. v. Clarke, [1919] W.N. 170; 31 Digest 581, 7296. B
- (6) Kitchen's Trustee v. Madders and Madders, [1949] 2 All E.R. 1079; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (7) Vickery v. Martin, [1944] 2 All E.R. 167; [1944] K.B. 679; 113 L.J.K.B. 552; 171 L.T. 89; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (8) Stagg v. Brickett, [1951] 1 All E.R. 152. C

APPEAL by the tenant from an order of His Honour JUDGE CLOTHIER, K.C., made at Lambeth County Court on Oct. 26, 1950, whereby he granted possession of a dwelling-house to which the Rent Restrictions Acts applied, on the ground of non-payment of rent. The county court judge further ordered the payment of arrears of rent and mesne profits.

By leases dated Dec. 31, 1935, Jan. 5, 1938, and Apr. 11, 1940, the premises were let at a rent of £65 a year. In each case the lease provided that the premises should be used as a working men's social club only. In 1940 the premises were damaged by enemy action, but on Nov. 5, 1947, they were let by the present landlords at a rent of £208 a year with no restriction as to user. The tenant contended that there was extrinsic evidence to show that between 1935 and 1939 it was the intention of the parties that the premises should be used as a dwelling-house, and, therefore, that the standard rent was the rent at which it was then let, viz., £65 a year, in which case there would be no grounds for forfeiture, and not, as the landlords contended, £208 a year. The issue was referred to the registrar who fixed the standard rent at £208 and, on appeal, the county court judge confirmed that assessment. The facts appear in the judgment of ASQUITH, L.J. D

Fife and Gatehouse for the tenant.

Boreham for the landlords. E

ASQUITH, L.J. : This is an appeal by the tenant against a judgment of His Honour JUDGE CLOTHIER, K.C., on two separate, but related, issues which, although they are the subject of two different formal orders, are dealt with in a single judgment. The landlords at the material times were the owners of the freehold of a house called 86, Gypsy Hill, Upper Norwood, and they sued the two defendants for possession of those premises, the first defendant being the tenant, and the second defendant being a person in whose favour the tenant, in breach of covenant as it was said, had parted with possession of part of the premises. The landlords claimed that the lease was forfeited, and originally based their claim on the ground of breach of this covenant, namely, the parting with possession without written consent. They later discarded this ground, and relied on breach of the covenant to pay rent. They also claim arrears of rent and, as regards the period after the summons, mesne profits on the basis of the rent fixed by the tenant's current lease, namely, £208. F

The lease, to which I shall refer as lease No. 4, was dated Nov. 5, 1947. It became clear quite soon in the proceedings that the issue of possession, and, G indeed, the issue with regard to arrears of rent, could not be satisfactorily resolved unless the standard rent of these premises, which were of a rateable value of between £40 and £50 a year, was first ascertained, for on those figures depended not only the amount, and, indeed, the existence, of the arrears, but also the claim for possession. If the standard rent, as the landlords said, was £208 a year and if the tenant was in breach of his covenant to pay rent, then a large figure of arrears was due. The tenant says, however, that the current lease did not determine the standard rent, but that that rent was determined by the lease on foot on Sept. 1, 1939, or, alternatively, by certain other leases current at certain other times, but all of them providing for a rent of about £1 a week. On this footing, if that lower figure were the standard rent, the sums paid by the tenant on the £208 rent basis were in excess of the standard rent and the balance was recoverable under the Rent Restrictions Acts, and these sums would more than set off any arrears due on the basis of a standard rent of £1 a week and would leave a substantial margin for which the tenant could counterclaim. On this footing, again, no rent would have been in arrear at any time, and the basis of the claim for forfeiture would have been swept away. The issue was referred to the learned registrar who decided it in substance in favour of the landlords, that is to say, he fixed the standard rent at the figure of £208 a year, and the judge on appeal confirmed that assessment and made an order for possession.

H

It is clear that a determination of what is the true standard rent will also decide whether the order for possession can stand. To do this the statutory provisions for the ascertainment of standard rent must be applied to the peculiar facts of this case. The main provision is s. 12 (1) (a) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, as amended by s. 3 (1) of, and sched. I to, the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939, in its application to a 1939 controlled house, such as was this house. The subsection so amended reads as follows:

“The expression ‘standard rent’ means the rent at which the dwelling-house was let on Sept. 1*, 1939, or, where the dwelling-house was not let on that date, the rent at which it was last let before that date, or, in the case of a dwelling-house which was first let after the said Sept. 1, the rent at which it was first let.”

The material facts on which this provision falls to be applied in the present case are as follows. The premises are at least one hundred years old. They are described in the current lease as “shop and premises.” We know nothing about the premises up to the year 1904. From 1904 to 1935 we know that they were used as a beer-house. There is no evidence to show whether or not at this stage they were let. Later they were let under four consecutive leases. I have already referred to the fourth lease and it remains to say something about the first, second and third. Lease No. 1, dated Dec. 31, 1935, was a quarterly letting by the Express Dairy Co., who were then the freeholders, to two persons called McCarthy and Jones. The rent was £65 per annum. The lease provided (as did also lease No. 2 and lease No. 3) that the lessees should use the premises for the purposes of a working men’s social club only. Leases No. 1 and No. 2 also contained a negative covenant in respect of the same subject-matter. The lessees covenanted that they would not “use or permit to be used the said premises otherwise than for the purposes before described.” Lease No. 2 was, except as to a part of it, identical with lease No. 1. It was dated Jan. 5, 1938, and was from the Express Dairy Co., as lessors, to McCarthy and one Plummer. The rent was again £65 a year payable quarterly from Dec. 1, 1937. The same double provision appeared in lease No. 2 as to the sole use of the premises for the purposes described as had appeared in lease

* This date results from the combined effect of sched. I to the Act of 1939 and the Defence (Commencement of Enactments) Order, 1939, (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 1135).

No. 1. Lease No. 3 was dated Apr. 11, 1940. The parties were the Express Dairy Co. as lessors and Walter Trappitt and Charles King as lessees. The undertaking to use the premises for the purpose of a working men's club only re-appeared in lease No. 3, but the negative counterpart drops out. In 1940 the premises were badly damaged by enemy action and remained for a considerable time unoccupied. On Nov. 5, 1947, came lease No. 4, to which I have already alluded, by Herbert Court and Geoffrey Herbert Court, the landlords in the present action, to Robinson, the first defendant. This lease, unlike the other three, contains no stipulation at all restricting the user of the premises for the purposes of a working men's social club and the rent fixed is £208 a year.

Applying s. 12 (1) (a) to these facts, the tenant by his counsel says that on Sept. 1, 1939, the premises were let as a dwelling-house under the lease of 1938. Undoubtedly, they were let at that time, but were they let as a dwelling-house? Prima facie, when the lease itself specifies clearly a particular purpose for which, and, a fortiori, for which alone, the premises are to be used, for instance, for an office or for a barn, I should read that as excluding the notion that they were intended to be let, or were let as a dwelling-house, and it is unnecessary to look further as DENNING, L.J., said in Wolfe v. Hogan (1).

The excerpts from the material authorities are assembled in Whitty v. Scott-Russell (2), in which, delivering the judgment of the court, I said ([1950] 1 All E.R. 887):

"It is, however, argued in answer to this objection that the Court of Appeal, in certain of its decisions of which the most recent is Wolfe v. Hogan (1), has held that, where there has been a formal instrument of letting the terms of which express the purpose for which the premises were let, this is conclusive, and evidence of any other purpose derived from, e.g., the actual use, is excluded. In that case DENNING, L.J., used language which lends strong colour to such a contention when he said, in the opening sentences of his judgment ([1949] 1 All E.R. 575): 'In determining whether a house or part of a house is "let as a dwelling" within the meaning of the Rent Acts, it is necessary to look at the purpose of the letting. If the lease contains an express provision as to the purpose of the letting, it is not necessary to look further, but, if there is no express provision, it is open to the court to look at the circumstances of the letting.' In that case there was no express provision in the lease as to the 'purpose.' In the present case the tenant expressly covenanted to use the premises as 'a private dwelling-house only,' and, if the proposition stated by DENNING, L.J., is to be taken as both authoritative and unqualified, it clinches the tenant's argument. EVERSLED, L.J., in the first judgment, appears to accept this view, though whether with some, and, if so, what, qualifications is a question which must be explored. BUCKNILL, L.J., gave no reasons but simply agreed with the judgment of EVERSLED, L.J. EVERSLED, L.J., cited Gidden v. Mills (3) and, among other passages from judgments of the Court of Appeal he cited ([1949] 1 All E.R. 574) a passage from the judgment of SCRUTTON, L.J. ([1925] 2 K.B. 227) in Barrett v. Hardy Brothers (Alnwick), Ltd. (4): 'The important matter is the rights under the lease, not the de facto user.' EVERSLED, L.J., also cited (ibid.) a passage from the judgment of BANKES, L.J. ([1919] W.N. 171) in Epsom Grand Stand Asscn., Ltd. v. Clarke (5): 'If an agreement were to let premises as a barn, the tenant, even though he lived there, could not be heard to say that they were let as a dwelling-house.' He then went on to approve a passage from MEGARRY ON THE RENT ACTS, 4th ed., p. 19: 'Where the terms of the tenancy provide for or contemplate the use of the premises for some particular purpose, that purpose is the essential factor, not the nature of the premises or the actual use made of them. Thus, if the premises are let for business purposes, the tenant cannot claim that they have been converted into a dwelling-house merely because somebody lives on the premises . . .’ Mr. MEGARRY goes on to say that actual user at the time when possession is claimed must be considered where the tenancy agreement contemplates no specified use. The only qualification annexed to this general statement by EVERSLED, L.J., is contained in the following passage from his judgment ([1949] 1 All E.R. 574): ‘Again I wish to make it quite plain that I am saying nothing which should be taken as indicating that, if a tenant does change the user and creates a dwelling-house out of what was formerly a shop, and if that fact is fully known to and accepted by the other party to the contract (whether or not there is a prohibition), the result may not very well be that there will then be inferred a contract to let as a dwelling-house, although it may be a different contract in essentials from the contract which was originally made and expressed.’ In other words, where the original contract was for a particular user, but, by the time the plaint is issued, it has been superseded by a subsequent contract providing for a different user, the subsequent contract may be looked to in deciding whether the premises are let as a ‘dwelling’ or ‘separate dwelling.’”

There are cases in which a covenant not to use the premises otherwise than as, say, an hotel or a lodging house or a temperance hotel have been held not to be broken by the tenant sleeping there, nor the house thereby denuded of the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts. Those cases, however, are clearly distinguishable, to my mind, from the present case because it may be difficult to conduct the business of an hotel efficiently without sleeping there, and in that case to sleep there would be to observe the covenant, not to violate it. That, I think, is the basis on which Kitchen's Trustee v. Madders and Madders (6) and Vickery v. Martin (7) proceeded. The present case seems to me to be entirely different. I cannot accept the contention of counsel for the tenant that a working men's social club is such an ambiguous expression as to permit one to deduce the intentions of the parties as to the user of the premises from extrinsic evidence. It seems to me to be very nearly as unambiguous as an undertaking to use premises solely as a shop or office or barn. Again, I cannot accept counsel's further argument that the intention deducible from extrinsic evidence in this case was that the premises should be let as a dwelling-house. The last contention, based on the landlords' knowledge—not proved or brought home to them personally, but imputed to them through their rent collector—that McCarthy between 1935 and 1938 or 1939 lived in the premises, and even had a guest staying with him there, is that the lessors thereby assented to his doing so. Leaving aside the question whether the landlords' rent collector's knowledge could in such a matter be ascribed to the landlords—which seems to me on the authorities cited to us to be more than doubtful—much more than knowledge is necessary to repel the user to which the express terms of the lease restrict the lessee. The user prescribed in terms in the lease is what counts. If that is departed from through the parties making a new contract or varying the existing contract so as to permit or provide for a changed user, then the new user may, for the present purposes, be treated as the material one, but nothing short of the new contract or variation of the contract will, to my mind, suffice, and the facts proved in this case seem to me to fall far short of establishing such a contract.

If, contrary to counsel's first contention, the standard rent is not determined by lease No. 2 which was the current lease at Sept. 1, 1939, we must go back and ascertain when the premises were last let as a dwelling-house before Sept. 1, 1939. Counsel first went back to the lease of 1935, but this also contains a provision as to sole user as a working men's club and the same considerations apply to it mutatis mutandis as I have already considered in connection with lease No. 2. Going further back, we reach a period when the premises were used as a beer-house from 1924 to 1935. As regards this period the tenant fails in limine, because he cannot show that during this period the premises were let at all. The onus is on him to show that they were let because the premises may have been owner-occupied, as beer-houses often are. The tenant in the court below, through a witness called Spencer, tendered certain evidence which the judge excluded partly on the ground (which was erroneous in law) that at no time were licensed premises within the Rent Restrictions Acts. Epsom Grand Stand Asscn., Ltd. v. Clarke (5), is an authority the other way. But there is reason for supposing that, when the learned judge excluded that evidence, he did not do so on that ground alone, and there was, in my view, ready to hand a perfectly valid ground on which the evidence could rightly be excluded, namely, that it could only come from a source which would make it hearsay.

We could not consent to determine the standard rent by the method which was made available in certain cases by s. 6 of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933. That section, judging by its opening lines, applies only where one starts with a dwelling-house to which the principal Acts apply and which was let on the material date, and where the gap in one's knowledge consists of the rent at which it was so let. I cannot see that that section has any application until it is shown that the house was let. When one has shown that, and shown that it is impracticable to discover what the rent was, say, on Sept. 5, 1939, then, no doubt, there is room for the provision to apply, but even then it is discretionary.

Moving now to the period when the premises were let next after Sept. 1, 1939, we come to the lease of 1940, to Trappitt and King. Here there is no double provision for sole use as a club, but there is a single provision to that effect. Even if a thing is said only once and duplication is thereby avoided, that is no reason why effect should not be given to it, and, therefore, the reasons why, in my view, this lease also does not govern the standard rent are those mutatis mutandis which have been stated already in regard to the other leases. Finally, it appears that when lease No. 4 was being negotiated in May or June, 1947, and the bomb damage to the house in question was being repaired, the tenant was allowed to move into the premises and to occupy part of the shop and part of the house. Permission to do that was given to him by letter dated May 15, 1947, as follows:

"We find that you are now occupying part of the domestic premises at 86, Gypsy Hill. Will you kindly note that the rent from Sunday last, the 11th instant, is £2 per week for partial use of the shop and partial use of the house."

The tenant, all his previous arguments failing, relied on this as constituting a letting for £2 a week. He said that although he may at first have occupied part only of the house, he proceeded to occupy the whole of it, and that, therefore, the £2 a week was to be treated as rent for the whole of it. When the tenant said that he occupied the whole, he may, of course, have been referring to a mere de facto user of the whole, use, although he had no right to do more than occupy a part; but the learned judge has found as a fact as follows:

"As and when the rooms in the bombed premises, No. 86, became available, Robinson was allowed to move in. £2 a week was fixed as a temporary rent for 'partial use of the house and partial use of the shop.' Therefore, it was only a temporary expedient, and I cannot accept that rent as being the standard rent."

The learned judge has, therefore, found that, according to the terms of that arrangement (which may have been not a tenancy at all but only a mere licence), the consideration of £2 was for only part of the premises and it was not the same subject-matter as that the standard rent for which we are trying to ascertain now.

In any case that arrangement, limited as it was in space, was very limited also in time, because in July, 1947, although lease No. 4 had not yet been entered into, it was still the subject-matter of negotiation and cast its shadow before it. Fifty-two pounds had been paid in July in respect of the quarter ending June 24 of that year, and that obviously superseded the £2 arrangement. In the result I am of the opinion that the judge and the registrar were right in taking lease No. 4 as determining the standard rent, and I think the appeal should be dismissed and the orders appealed from should stand.

DENNING, L.J.: This is another case, of which we have had several lately, where a tenant has sought to push to an extreme length the advantages which have been conferred on him by the Rent Restrictions Acts. In November, 1947, the tenant, being advised by a solicitor, freely took a lease for twenty-one years of a shop and dwelling-house at a rent of £208 a year, that is, £4 a week. Now he turns round and says he can have the benefit of that lease for the full twenty-one years for the sum of £1 a week, or thereabouts, and can reclaim the excess paid. The reason is that he has discovered that the premises were let in 1939 at about £1 a week, and he says that is the standard rent. I would point out that, if the standard rent is the £4 a week and is too high, the tenant can apply under the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, to have it reduced to a reasonable amount, but, if the standard rent is only £1 a week and is too low, there is no power to have it increased to a reasonable amount. I pointed that out in Stagg v. Brickett (8) ([1951] 1 All E.R. 157). The only question, however, is: What is the standard rent?

In 1939 the premises were let on a lease which contained an express term that the tenant was "to use the premises for the purposes of a working men's social club only." Was that a business letting or was it a letting as a dwelling? Inasmuch as there was an express term in the lease showing the purpose of the letting, that is the only thing that matters. It is not necessary to look further unless there is evidence from which it may be inferred that the landlords affirmatively assented to a change of user: see Wolfe v. Hogan (1). In my opinion, the letting "for the purposes of a working men's social club only" was a letting for business purposes and not a letting as a dwelling. It is true that a steward might lawfully sleep there without being guilty of a breach of covenant, but that does not mean that the premises were let as a dwelling. It is rather like premises let as a warehouse. The fact that a caretaker stays there does not make it a letting as a dwelling. It is quite different from the letting of an hotel or a boarding-house which necessarily involves that the person in charge will use it as a dwelling. A working men's social club does not involve anyone dwelling there. There was no evidence that the landlords ever assented affirmatively to a change of user. It is true that the agent who collected the rents knew that a club member and his family lived there for a time in 1940, but a rent collector has no authority to make a lease or to vary a lease or to assent to a change of user. Even if he had, the acceptance of rent by him for a few months, with knowledge of the user, would not be enough to show that there had been a variation of the original contract as to user: see Wolfe v. Hogan (1). In my opinion, therefore, the lettings as a working men's social club can be ignored. The true standard rent is £208 a year, and the appeal should be dismissed.

HARMAN, J.: I agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Howard G. Thomas (for the tenant); Bennett, Welch & Co. (for the landlords).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

SCOTT v. SCOTT.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Hodson, J.), December 11, 1950.]

Husband and Wife—Maintenance—Application to High Court—“Reasonable maintenance”—Tests of reasonableness—Husband’s common law liability—Previous standard of living—Absence of security or certainty of continuance of existing allowance—Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949 A (c. 100), s. 5 (1).

The wife left the husband, taking with her the two daughters of the marriage. She contended that she was forced to leave her husband because of his cruelty, but he denied that charge. The wife took out a summons under the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949, s. 5 (1), alleging that her husband had been guilty of “wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance” for her and her daughters within the meaning of the section. In fact, at all material times since the parting she had been in receipt of £10 a week free of income tax, and the court found that to produce that amount it would be necessary to set aside a capital sum to produce a notional gross income of £945 per year. The husband’s property consisted of £40,000 in cash, the proceeds of the sale of his farm, which was treated by the court as representing a notional income of £1,500. B C

HELD: (i) the question what was “reasonable maintenance” for a wife and children under s. 5 (1) of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949, must be considered with reference to the husband’s common law liability to maintain them, and the word “reasonable” must be interpreted against the background of the standard of life which the husband had previously maintained. D

(ii) when the court was applying the test for reasonableness it was not open to the wife to say that that test was not satisfied because there was no security for the amount which she had been receiving, although security for at least the joint lives of the spouses might have been obtained if she had succeeded in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights or succeeded in obtaining an order under s. 5 (1), nor was it open to her to contend that the test was not satisfied because there was no certainty that her allowance would be continued. Provided the husband was paying the wife prima facie reasonable maintenance—as was the fact in the present case—that maintenance did not become unreasonable when tested against what the wife might obtain if she had succeeded in proceedings for judicial separation or divorce. E F

[FOR THE LAW REFORM (MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS) ACT, 1949, s. 5, see HALSBURY’S STATUTES, Vol. 42, p. 574.] G

SUMMONS by the wife against her husband under the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949, s. 5 (1), for a maintenance order on the ground of his wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance for her and her children. The facts are set out in the judgment of HODSON, J. H

John Latey for the wife.

H. V. Brandon for the husband.

HODSON, J.: This is an application under s. 5 of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949, sub-s. (1) of which reads as follows:

“Where a husband has been guilty of wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance for his wife or the infant children of the marriage, the High Court in England, if it would have jurisdiction to entertain proceedings by the wife for judicial separation, may, on the application of the wife, order the husband to make to her such periodical payments as may be just . . .”

As a matter of history, s. 5 was introduced to simplify the procedure by which in the High Court a wife might, in appropriate circumstances, obtain what are called periodical payments. It is necessary to look at s. 187 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, which, after providing that a decree for restitution of conjugal rights should not be enforced by an attachment, provides that, in the event of failure to comply with the decree, the court may order the respondent to make the petitioner such periodical payments as may be just. In s. 5 (2) of the Act of 1949 it is provided that the court may order the husband to secure to the wife the periodical payments. Section 5 follows the same line as s. 187, the position now being that, instead of a husband who is living apart from his wife, being given the alternative of taking her back or showing cause why he should not do so, and, failing either, being ordered to provide for her periodical payments, the wife is entitled to periodical payments if she can prove that the husband has been guilty of wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance for her or for her children. The field is wider than it was because a wife who is unwilling to return to her husband is not in a position to apply for a decree of restitution of conjugal rights ordering him to take her back, whereas she may be able to prove that he has been guilty of wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance because she has good ground for living apart from him.

On Sept. 15, 1950, the wife in the present case left the husband and took with her the two daughters of the marriage, aged sixteen and twelve years, leaving the husband behind with two sons, aged eighteen and fourteen. She has stated that she was forced to leave her husband because of his cruelty, which has been denied, and alleges that the husband has been guilty of wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance for her or for her children, notwithstanding the fact that she has been in receipt of £10 a week free of income tax at all material times since the parting. The financial position, so far as it is material, is approximately that the husband was a farmer who sold his farm and has some £40,000 in cash representing the proceeds of the sale of the farm and farm stock, while the wife has virtually nothing. The husband has the younger boy with him. The elder boy is described as a farm worker and is not working for his father as he was before the sale. The husband says that his wife has deserted him. Besides the affidavits which have been sworn in these proceedings, the only material I have is contained in some correspondence which has passed between the parties. It appears from a letter of the wife's solicitors, dated Sept. 18, 1950, that during the marriage she claimed to have received £3 10s. a week for housekeeping, out of which she had to pay for music and elocution lessons for her daughters, their pocket money, their dinners at school, and some other amounts. That does not seem a very large allowance having regard to the comparatively large sum which was realised by the husband on the sale of his farm. The question is whether it is possible for the wife to establish that the husband has been guilty of wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance for her or for her children. It is pointed out that, the husband's property being cash and there being no income coming in, the problem, so far as income is concerned, can properly be approached by treating the £40,000 as invested at a rate of something between three per cent. and four per cent., thus producing a notional income of between £1,200 and £1,600 gross, whereas to produce a sum of £520 free of tax for the wife and the two children concerned, it would be necessary to set aside a capital sum producing a notional income of about £945 a year.

In my view, the question what is reasonable maintenance for the wife and children has to be considered with reference to the husband's common law liability to maintain his wife and children, and, no doubt, the word “reasonable” has to be interpreted against the background of the standard of life which he previously has maintained. Even taking these matters at their highest against the husband, it does not seem to me that the wife can succeed in establishing on these figures that there has been the requisite failure unless she is entitled to say that the reasonableness may be tested in other ways. For example, counsel for the wife seeks to say that, because there is no security for the amount which the wife has been receiving, although security at least for their joint lives could be obtained by the wife if she succeeded either in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights or succeeded in obtaining an order under this section, the test of reasonableness is not satisfied. He goes on to say that as there is no certainty that the allowance will continue, again the test of reasonableness is not satisfied. I am unable to accept those contentions. It seems to me that, provided the existing state of affairs is that the husband is paying what is prima facie reasonable maintenance for his wife and two children, as I find is the fact in this case, the maintenance does not become unreasonable when tested against what could be obtained if the wife had succeeded in some proceedings which she might have taken, or, indeed, which she might yet take, because if the wife has left her husband because of his cruelty of which she is complaining, she can take proceedings against her husband on the ground of that cruelty either for a judicial separation or for divorce. In those proceedings she would be entitled to claim alimony pendente lite, and, in the event of her succeeding in those proceedings, she is entitled to claim a permanent provision for herself whether by way of alimony or by way of maintenance. In the event of divorce, she is entitled to claim maintenance to be secured to her for her life as opposed to the period of joint lives, which appears to be the utmost that can be obtained under s. 5 of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949.

In my judgment, the wife's application fails on the ground that she has not shown that the husband has been guilty of the wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance which it is necessary for her to prove. There is no specific evidence directed to circumstances which make any particular sum necessary to support either the wife or either of the daughters. I am not told, for instance, that the wife is living in any particular circumstances or that her rent is higher than it would be in circumstances applicable to a normal wife. The same thing applies to the two children. There is no evidence as to the elder child, who is sixteen, being at school or as to any special expenses which are attributable to her maintenance. What I have said does not in any way bind the court as to what it would order in the event of this particular set of figures falling to be considered in other circumstances. Wilful neglect is not automatically established when it is found that the amount paid is less than the court might order in the case of a guilty husband and an innocent wife in proceedings brought, say, on the ground of cruelty or adultery or desertion for three years. In my judgment, this summons must be dismissed.

Summons dismissed.

Solicitors: Rider, Heaton, Meredith & Mills, agents for Bellyse & Eric Smith, Nantwich (for the wife); Robinson & Bradley, agents for A. E. Whittingham & Son, Nantwich (for the husband).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

REGOR ESTATES, LTD. v. WRIGHT.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Cohen and Denning, L.JJ., and Danckwerts, J.), December 8, 1950.]

Rent Control—Premium—Requirement of payment as condition of continuance of lease—Proviso for re-entry on breach of any of tenant's covenants—Agreement in 1948 to pay premium for grant of fourteen years' lease—Premium payable by instalments over ten years—First annual instalment of premium falling due after June 2, 1949—Demand for payment of instalment—Instalments of premium not additional rent—Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (c. 40), s. 2 (1).

In October, 1948, the owners of a flat within the Rent Restrictions Acts, of which the recoverable rent was £59 per annum, offered a prospective tenant a fourteen years' lease thereof at an annual rent of £59 and further required a payment of £270 as a consideration for their granting an option on the lease. At that time, by virtue of s. 8 of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, it was not unlawful for the landlords to demand a premium in respect of a lease for fourteen years. After negotiation it was agreed that in addition to the rent a premium of £360 should be paid, as to £60 on execution of the lease and as to £300 by ten equal annual instalments of £30. On Dec. 15, 1948, a lease was executed whereby "in consideration of" the premium, the rent, and the tenant's covenants the premises were demised to the tenant for a term of fourteen years. The covenant as to the payment of the premium provided that the tenant should pay to the landlords the ten annual instalments, but that, in the event of the tenant desiring to assign, underlet, or part with possession of the demised premises, it should be a condition of the granting of consent by the landlords that all remaining instalments of premium were paid by the tenant to the landlords. The lease contained a proviso for re-entry on breach of any of the tenant's covenants. On Nov. 18, 1948, the first payment of £60 was made by the tenant. On June 2, 1949, the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, came into force, and s. 2 (1) made it illegal to require the payment of a premium "as a condition of the grant, renewal or continuance of a tenancy" of a dwelling-house to which the Rent Restrictions Acts applied. On Nov. 11, 1949, the first annual instalment of the premium, amounting to £30, became due, but the tenant refused to pay it on the ground, first, that the instalments alleged to be instalments of a premium in fact were demands for increased rent, and, therefore, illegal, and, secondly, that to require payment of the sum in question was, in effect, because of the proviso for re-entry in default, to require payment of a premium for the continuance of the lease. On Feb. 1, 1950, the landlords by letter demanded from the tenant payment of the instalment of the premium, and on Feb. 14, 1950, entered a plaint in the county court for the recovery of the instalment.

Held: (i) on the true construction of the lease, the provision as regards payment of a premium imposed a personal obligation on the original tenant which would not run with the land, and, therefore, the instalment did not constitute an illegal additional rent.

(ii) the landlords stipulated for the payment of a premium as a condition of the grant of the lease at a time when it was lawful to do so; the mere existence of the proviso for re-entry, which the landlords had not threatened to enforce, did not give the demand for an instalment of premium the character of a requirement for the payment of a premium as a condition of the "continuance" of the tenancy within s. 2 (1) of the Act of 1949; and, therefore, the landlords were entitled to recover.

[FOR THE LANDLORD AND TENANT (RENT CONTROL) ACT, 1949, s. 2 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 13, p. 1097.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Hill v. Booth, [1930] 1 K.B. 381; 99 L.J.K.B. 49; 142 L.T. 80; Digest Supp.
- (2) Samuel v. Salmon & Gluckstein, Ltd., [1945] 2 All E.R. 520; [1946] Ch. 8; 115 L.J.Ch. 103; 173 L.T. 358; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Rush v. Matthews, [1926] 1 K.B. 492; 95 L.J.K.B. 409; 134 L.T. 571; 31 Digest 573, 7201.
- (4) Colton v. Becollda Property Investments, Ltd., [1950] 1 K.B. 216; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the tenant from an order of His Honour JUDGE HODGSON, made at Kingston-on-Thames County Court on Oct. 20, 1950, allowing the landlords' claim for £30 payable under a lease for fourteen years, dated Dec. 15, 1948, as an annual instalment of a premium. The facts appear in the judgment of COHEN, L.J.

Pearl and J. W. Wellwood for the tenant.
Avgherinos for the landlords.

COHEN, L.J.: This is an appeal from a judgment of His Honour JUDGE HODGSON given on Oct. 20, 1950, allowing a claim for the sum of £30 payable under a lease dated Dec. 15, 1948, as an instalment of premium. The premises comprised in the lease were 3, Bushey Court, Upper Teddington Road, Hampton Wick. The recoverable rent payable under the lease was £59 per annum, and the term was fourteen years.

The landlords claim £30 as an annual instalment of a premium alleged to be due in consideration of the granting by the landlords to the tenant of a fourteen years' lease of the flat at Bushey Court. The defence originally was that the claim was barred by s. 2 (1) of the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, but before the hearing the tenant amended her defence, alleging in the alternative that the said instalment constituted an illegal increase in rent. The facts were not in dispute, and were largely to be found in an agreed bundle of correspondence and the actual lease. By letter dated Oct. 21, 1948, the landlords offered the tenant a fourteen years' tenancy of the premises at the annual rent of £59, and required payment of £270 as a consideration for their granting an option on the lease. In reply, the tenant, by letter dated Oct. 26, 1948, said that she thought the sum of £270 too much, but she offered to pay extra rent in lieu thereof. By letter of Oct. 27, 1948, the landlords pointed out that this was not possible under the existing legislation, but offered to accept an increased consideration of £360 payable as to £60 on execution of the lease and as to £300 payable by ten equal annual instalments of £30. On Nov. 1, 1948, these terms were accepted orally by the tenant, and on Nov. 2, 1948, they were confirmed by the landlords by letter. The tenant entered pursuant to the agreement shortly before Nov. 18, 1948, on which date the first £60 was paid by her to the landlords. The lease was executed on Dec. 15, 1948. The relevant clauses of this document are as follows:

"1. In consideration of the premium of £360 payable as to £60 on the signing hereof (the receipt whereof the landlords hereby acknowledge) and subject as hereinafter provided payable as to the balance thereof by ten annual instalments of £30 to be paid on Nov. 11 in every year the first of such annual payments to be made on Nov. 11, 1949, and in consideration of the rent hereinafter reserved and of the lessee's covenants hereinafter contained the landlords hereby demise unto the lessee [the premises] to hold the premises hereby demised (hereinafter referred to as 'the demised premises') unto the lessee for the term of fourteen years from Nov. 11, 1948, yielding and paying during the said term yearly and so in proportion for any fraction of a year the rent of £59."

Clause 2 contains the lessee's covenants. Sub-clause (a) is a covenant for the payment of rent. Then it is provided:

A “(b) To pay to the landlords the ten annual instalments of premium on the days hereinbefore provided but in the event of the lessee desiring to assign underlet or part with possession of the demised premises in accordance with the provisions herein contained it shall be a condition of the granting of such consent that all remaining instalments of premium are paid by the lessee to the landlords . . . (j) Not to assign underlet or part with possession of the demised premises or any part thereof without the previous written consent of the landlords and subject to the provisions of cl. 2 (b) hereof such consent not to be unreasonably withheld and within one month of the execution of any assignment or underlease of the demised premises to produce the same to the landlords' solicitors for registration.”

B Then come the landlords' covenants, and it is only the opening words of (a) which may have any relevance:

C “The landlords covenant with the lessee as follows: (a) That the lessee duly paying the said rent and observing and performing the agreements herein contained may peaceably and quietly hold and enjoy the demised premises without any interruption by the landlords or any person lawfully claiming under or in trust for them.”

There is a proviso for re-entry, which is the most important clause from the point of view of the tenant in this appeal. It reads as follows:

D “Provided always and this lease is upon the express conditions following that is to say: (1) If any rent shall be in arrear for fourteen days or upwards whether legally demanded or not or if there shall be a breach of any of the lessee's covenants herein contained or if the lessee or other person in whom the term hereby granted shall be vested shall become bankrupt or enter into any arrangement with his or her creditors or shall suffer execution to be levied on the demised premises the landlords may re-enter upon any part of the demised premises in the name of the whole without giving notice to quit to the lessee and thereupon the term created by these presents shall be determined but without prejudice to any rights or remedies of the landlords in respect of any antecedent breach of the covenants on the part of the lessee and conditions hereinbefore contained.”

E On Nov. 11, 1949, the first annual instalment of £30 became due under the terms of the agreement and lease, but the tenant refused to pay it, because on June 2, 1949, the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, had come into operation with retrospective effect as from Mar. 25, 1949. The tenant alleged that to require payment of this £30 was, in effect, to require payment of a premium for the continuance of the lease because of the proviso for re-entry in default. Later she contended further that it was a demand for increased rent and accordingly illegal. By letter, dated Feb. 1, 1950, the landlords demanded from the tenant payment of the instalment of the premium, and on Feb. 14 entered the plaint in the county court for its recovery.

G Section 2 of the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, is headed: “Prohibition of premiums on grant or assignment of tenancy,” and s. 2 (1) provides:

H “A person shall not, as a condition of the grant, renewal or continuance of a tenancy to which this section applies, require the payment of any premium in addition to the rent . . .”

Sub-section (5) contains a provision giving a certain retrospective effect to an agreement made after Mar. 25, 1949. In the operative part it contains a provision enabling a tenant who has paid a premium under such an agreement to recover

" . . . the amount of the premium, or so much thereof as could not lawfully be required or have been required, as the case may be . . ."

The sub-section contains a proviso enabling either party who is dissatisfied with the position created by the first part of the sub-section "without prejudice to the operation of this section" to avoid the agreement if he thinks fit. Sub-section (6) imposes a penalty on any person requiring a premium in contravention of the section, and both counsel agree that the effect of that provision is that the section must be construed strictly. Sub-section (7) provides:

A

"Section 8 of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, is hereby repealed; but, without prejudice to the operation of s. 38 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, nothing in this section shall be construed as affecting the operation of the said s. 8 as respects anything done before the commencement of this Act."

B

Section 8 (1) of the Act of 1920 contained provisions restricting the right of landlords to demand fines, premiums, or other like sums, and it provides in sub-s. (3):

"This section shall not apply to the grant, renewal or continuance for a term of fourteen years or upwards of any tenancy."

C

The importance of that is that the lease now in question, being granted when s. 8 of the Act of 1920 was, and s. 2 of the Act of 1949 was not, in force, and being a lease for a term of fourteen years, was not within the mischief of sub-s. (1) of s. 8, and, therefore, it was not illegal for the landlords to demand and receive a premium.

Dealing first with the tenant's contention that the alleged instalment constituted an illegal increase of rent, I feel no doubt that on the true construction of the lease the provision as regards payment of a premium imposes a personal obligation on the original lessee and would not run with the land. True, that the definition of "lessee" includes not only the original lessee, but also persons deriving title under him, but the premium is clearly expressed to be in consideration of the grant of the demise. It is plainly distinguished both from the rent and from the lessee's other covenants by cl. 1. Counsel for the tenant points out that cl. 2 contains covenants by the lessee, and, generally speaking, "lessee" is to include successors in title of the original lessee, but when we come to cl. 2 (b) (and it is important in this connection to remember that the provisions for payment of instalments are expressly made by cl. 1 subject to the provisions in cl. 2 (b)) we find it provides that "in the event of the lessee desiring to assign underlet or part with possession of the demised premises . . . it shall be a condition of the granting of such consent that all remaining instalments of premiums are paid by the lessee to the landlords."

D

E

F

Where "the lessee" appears for the second time in that sub-clause it must, I think, as a matter of construction, mean "the lessee desiring to assign, underlet or part with possession," and, therefore, could only apply to the original lessee, since it must be he who first desires to assign, underlet, etc. The effect of the sub-clause, therefore, is to enable the landlords to insist, as a condition of granting their consent to an assignment, that the remaining instalments of premium be paid by the original lessee to the landlords before that consent is given. I see nothing in sub-cl. (j) which is in any way inconsistent with that construction of sub-cl. (b)—indeed, it seems to me on the whole that it supports the conclusion which I have indicated because it provides that it shall not be considered to be an unreasonable withholding of the consent that the landlords require the provisions of sub-cl. (b) to be carried out.

G

H

The difficulty is caused only by the proviso for re-entry. Counsel for the tenant relied on the proviso for re-entry, which, he said, applied to the breaches of any covenant, in support of his argument on both branches of his case. He said that this is a breach of one of the lessee's covenants, and there is nothing in the proviso for re-entry to indicate that cl. 2 (b) is excluded from its operation. That, I think, is true. Counsel for the landlords in order to reserve the point, though he did not argue it fully before us, was prepared to submit that (a) the covenant, being a purely personal covenant on the part of the lessee, does not run with the land, and, therefore, (b) it is not within the meaning of "the lessee's covenants" where that phrase occurs in cl. 4, the proviso for re-entry. There is a great deal of force in that argument, but I propose to proceed, for the purposes of my judgment, on the view that the proviso for re-entry does apply to the clause binding the lessee to pay the premium by instalments. Even so, I think it remains a personal obligation which would not bind assignees from the lessee and does not affect the view I have already formed that the premium is a premium and nothing but a premium.

I derive some support for the view I have formed on the construction of the document from the decision of this court in Hill v. Booth (1). In that case the lease provided that £800, part of a premium of £1,000, reserved by the terms of the document, should be payable by instalments, but there was an express provision (which there is not here) that, in the event of the term being determined by re-entry, all the premium unpaid would forthwith become payable. Here the only express provision to that effect is in the event of consent to an assignment. There was in that case a proviso for re-entry, among other things, in the event of default in payment of an instalment, but the court had no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the premium was what it was expressed to be—a premium. GREER, L.J., having said that he thought it was a premium, said ([1930] 1 K.B. 390):

"The only doubt in my mind has arisen upon the proviso for re-entry which provides for re-entry not merely on non-payment of the rent but on non-payment of any instalment of the premium. That seems to make the right of re-entry in respect of the premium an incumbrance on the land. The right of forfeiture and the right of re-entry are rightly described as incumbrances on the land, and I think under the [Law of Property] Act of 1925 that right of re-entry has gone. The non-payment of the premium would not justify the lessor in entering upon the land the freehold of which had become vested in the lessee. But that does not affect the separate obligation to pay the £1,000 premium."

SLESSER, L.J., said (ibid., 391):

"That view that the premium is a consideration for which the lease itself is granted, as appears clear on the face of the lease itself, is made even more clear by the fact that in the event of re-entry for non-payment of rent or premium, while only a proportionate part of the rent has to be paid up to the date of re-entry, it is expressly provided in cl. 1 of the lease that all the premium unpaid up to the date of re-entry shall become immediately due and payable. Other provisions make it equally clear that the premium of £1,000 which is to be paid by instalments is not rent or anything like rent."

I take SLESSER, L.J., as meaning that he does not decide the case on the basis of the express provision making the whole amount payable, but as saying that, even apart from that, he would have come to the same conclusion.

Looking at the lease in the present case purely by itself, for the reasons I have given, I should come to the conclusion that it was an agreement for the payment of a premium so far as the £360 was concerned and not an agreement for the payment of additional rent. In dealing, however, with a matter of this class and the effect of a document relating to the Rent Restrictions Acts, we are not confined to the terms of the document, and we are bound to look at the transaction as a whole and consider whether it is within the prohibition of the Acts. In a different connection UTHWATT, J., made some observations in Samuel v. Salmon & Gluckstein, Ltd. (2), in which he makes it clear that we are not bound by the vocabulary the parties have chosen to use. In that case he held that the premium was rent. The facts are obviously so far from the present case that we cannot gain anything by referring to them, but UTHWATT, J., said ([1945] 2 All E.R. 522):

"Land may be leased for a consideration which is not a rent in law or for a consideration which consists of or includes a rent. The parties may write the agreement in such terms as they please and, if so minded, may attach any label they wish to the payments agreed to be made by the lease. But, when all that is done, it is for the law to decide on the effect of the document what payments are rent reserved and what not. No label can create a fact: a label may accurately describe a fact or it may mis-describe it, or may help to the solution of a doubtful question of interpretation."

Counsel for the tenant referred us to the decision in Rush v. Matthews (3), where the parties had plainly attempted to evade the Rent Restrictions Acts by providing for weekly payments and calling them premiums in a separate document. On the facts of that case the court had no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that there was a pure evasion of the Acts, within the mischief of the Acts, and, therefore, the premium could not be enforced.

There is, however, every difference between evasion and avoidance, and I think that, if we look at the lease before us as a whole, the learned county court judge arrived at the right conclusion about it. He said:

"I think the correspondence clearly shows that there was an intention to take premium for a grant. There was no intention to evade the Acts. I think the tenant, when she suggested more rent, was in all probability acting quite bona fide, but the landlords knew the relevant statutes. They said at once 'We cannot take more rent.' They asked for a premium, and, as the term was for fourteen years, they were fully entitled so to do. I hold that the parties intended that the lease for fourteen years should be granted in consideration of this premium and that the rent reserved should be £59. The instalments of premium were payable not on the usual quarter days when the rent was due, but on Nov. 11. They were not payable during the whole term, but for the first ten years only; the rent went on for the whole term of fourteen years. Finally, as I have held, the liability to pay these annual instalments would not have ceased if the proviso for re-entry had been enforced; the personal promise remained. I cannot hold that these payments were rent or that they were masquerading merely as premiums to evade the statute."

I agree so entirely with the judge's conclusion and with his reasons that I will say no more about that part of the case.

The more difficult question is whether the demand made by the landlords, first, by letter of Feb. 1, 1950, and, secondly, by issuing the plaint in this matter, was, or was not, an infringement of the provision of s. 2 (1) of the Act of 1949 that

"A person shall not, as a condition of the grant, renewal or continuance of a tenancy to which this section applies, require the payment of any premium in addition to the rent."

Counsel for the tenant says it is plainly an infringement of this section. He accepted this from me, I think, as a fair statement of his argument: Whenever, but only when, the landlord has a power to determine can there be a question of continuance, and if the landlord demands money for not exercising the power it infringes the section whether the power arises under contract or under the general law. He had in mind by "the general law" a case which was put to him by DENNING, L.J., where a weekly tenancy would be determinable by notice and the landlord took a consideration for not exercising the right to give that notice. In the latter case, I should have thought it was plain that it was within the mischief of the section, but I do not think it necessarily follows that the position is the same where the landlord has a pre-existing right to effect a forfeiture and demands money which he is entitled to obtain under a personal covenant, in no way threatening to exercise the right if the demand is not satisfied.

In the present case there has been a demand for payment of £30 payable under the provisions of the clause as an instalment of a premium. There is no threat that can be proved in the correspondence, nor any demand in the action for possession, and in those circumstances counsel for the landlords argues that it cannot be said that there has been such a demand. He says that the requirement of a premium was made long before the Act of 1949 came into force. That seems to me reasonably clear from the fact that a claim or requirement of a premium was made in the correspondence which led up to the lease of Dec. 15, 1948, and the payment of the premium was expressed to be the consideration for the grant of the lease. He says that the demand by action of an instalment of a premium contracted in December, 1948, to be paid is not the requirement of a premium within the mischief of the Act since it is not a requirement within the section. Finally, he says the premium was required as a condition of the granting of the lease and not as a condition of its continuance.

I think that the Act is dealing with one of three things—a grant of a lease, a renewal of a lease, or a continuance of a lease, and I find it impossible to visualise conditions in which something can be said to be both requiring the payment of a premium as a condition of the grant of a lease and a requirement of the payment of a premium as a condition of its continuance. In the present case it seems to me to be plain that there was the requirement of the payment of a premium as a condition of the grant of the lease.

That that is so, I think, appears plainly from the decision of this court in Colton v. Becollda Property Investments, Ltd. (4). That case was dealing with a state of affairs prior to the coming into force of the Act of 1949. It does not in any way decide the question with which we are now concerned. There the respondent company agreed orally to the offer of X., a statutory tenant of the flat, to take it for a term of fourteen years from Sept. 29, 1948, on terms which included the payment of a premium of £700, which was required by the landlords, subject to confirmation by the board of directors. On Oct. 5, 1948, the chairman wrote to X. that, after consultation with his board, they had decided to accept his offer, and, on Jan. 7, 1949, the parties executed a lease containing the terms agreed, including the payment of a premium, the habendum of which was: "To hold unto the tenant from Sept. 29, 1948, for the term of fourteen years." It was held that since the premium was required by the landlords before Sept. 29, 1948, as a condition of granting the lease, there was a grant for a term of fourteen years of a tenancy within the meaning of s. 8 (3) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, as amended by s. 3 of, and sched. I to, the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939, with regard to a new control dwelling-house. The condition in the lease, requiring the premium, related back to the original requirement for that premium made by the landlords before Sept. 29, 1948. The only importance of that case here is that it shows that the premium may properly be regarded as "required" at a stated date, notwithstanding that it was made payable, as it was in that case, by instalments payable at dates subsequent to the stated date. JENKINS, L.J., said ([1950] 1 K.B. 227):

"The question . . . is whether the parties had, before Sept. 29, 1948, reached such a measure of agreement that it can fairly be said that the premium in question was required by the defendants as a condition of their granting a lease to him of the premises for fourteen years from Sept. 29, 1948, being a then future date. In my judgment, if the facts fairly support that conclusion, the section has not been infringed. I think, on the language of the section, one must look at the facts and see when the premium alleged to be an illegal premium was required, and what it was required for; and if one finds a preliminary agreement for a lease for fourteen years from a future date, one of the terms of which is that the intending lessee shall pay a premium, then it seems to me that within the meaning of the section the premium has been required in respect of a lease of the exempted character, namely, a lease for a period of fourteen years."

DENNING, L.J., said (ibid., 231):

"In such a case the condition in the lease requiring the premium, would relate back, in my opinion, to the original requirement made in the negotiations before the tenant went in. There would be no breach of the Act because the effective requirement was made before the fourteen years started."

That case seems to me to show that, in dealing with matters of this kind, one must look at what was the effective requirement, and I find it difficult to think that, since there was an effective requirement at the time of the original lease in December, 1948, it can fairly be said that either the letter of Feb. 1, 1950, or the issue of the plaintiff by the landlords amounts to requiring the payment of a premium in addition to rent "as a condition of the grant, renewal or continuance of a tenancy to which this section applies." There is no condition imposed. There is no proved threat to discontinue the lease. There is merely an attempt to enforce a personal covenant which was valid when it was imposed and as to which there is nothing expressed in this section to invalidate it.

I am further led to this conclusion by the provisions of s. 2 (5). It seems to me that it would be strange indeed if a section which gives limited retrospective effect to agreements made after Mar. 25, 1949, but before the coming into force of the Act were to have an even more drastic effect on agreements made before Mar. 25, 1949, than it had on those expressly dealt with by sub-s. (5). For, be it observed, if a landlord under an agreement made after Mar. 25, but before the coming into force of the Act is exposed to attack under the Act, he has, so to speak, a locus poenitentiae, but, if counsel for the tenant is right, the landlord under an agreement made before that date would be in an equally disadvantageous position, yet would have no locus poenitentiae. That, I think, is a reason for leaning against the construction which counsel has asked us to adopt. I think also (though I do not base my judgment on it) that sub-s. (7) may affect the matter. It seems to me that counsel's argument will hardly be consistent with the direction in that sub-section that the operation of s. 8 of the Act of 1920 "as respects anything done before the commencement of this Act" is not to be affected. Before the commencement of this Act his client entered into this covenant. That, in my view, was something done before the commencement of this Act; and it seems to me that if we were to accept counsel's argument, we should be saying in effect that sub-s. (1) was to affect that covenant which was something done "before the commencement of this Act."

For the reasons I have stated I entirely agree with the conclusion of the learned judge which he expressed in these words:

"The request for the £30 was, in my judgment, not a requiring of a payment for the continuance of the lease or tenancy. It was rather a request for the performance of the promise already given by the defendant and subject to an agreed sanction. There seems to me to be no reason why the parties should not agree this mode of payment for the grant, nor why their agreement should not be given efficacy by an adequate sanction."

I would dismiss this appeal.

DENNING, L.J.: I agree, and I only wish to add a word on the second point. This lease was granted in December, 1948, for fourteen years in consideration of a premium of £360 payable by instalments of £30 a year. It is said that since the Act of 1949 the instalments of premium are irrecoverable. The only ground is because the lease contained a proviso for re-entry.

Under the Act of 1949 a landlord must not require a payment of a premium under an agreement made after the coming into force of the Act—first, on a "grant of a tenancy" (which means an agreement to grant an initial tenancy); secondly, on a "renewal of a tenancy" (which means an agreement for a fresh tenancy following on the termination of the earlier one); and, thirdly, on a "continuance of a tenancy" (which means, I think, an agreement to continue an existing tenancy, as, for instance, by agreeing not to give notice to determine or to re-enter under a provision in that behalf). If the landlord should stipulate for a premium as a condition of any such agreement, his act is unlawful and the stipulation is void, no matter whether it is a part of the agreement or collateral to it. Here, however, no agreement has been made since the Act of 1949. The only agreement was made before the Act, namely, in December, 1948. A premium was stipulated for the grant of the lease, but that was lawful because it was before the Act. Since the Act the tenancy has continued, but there has never been any agreement for its continuance. The agreement continued of its own force, and none the less so because there was a proviso for re-entry.

In my judgment, the section does not invalidate contracts for a premium made in respect of a fourteen year lease granted before Mar. 25, 1949. If the tenant's contention in this case were right, she could hold all the benefits of the agreement and reject the burdens. She need only pay the rent of £59 and pay none of the premiums, with the result that she would be better off under this agreement than if she had made a similar agreement after Mar. 25, 1949. Under s. 2 (5) of the Act in the case of an agreement made between Mar. 25, 1949, and June 2, 1949, the landlord has an option to avoid the agreement, but if the tenant is right, in the case of an agreement made before Mar. 25, 1949, the landlord loses his premium and has no such option. I cannot believe that the Act has that result. I agree, therefore, that the appeal should be dismissed.

DANCKWERTS, J.: I agree. Section 2 (1) of the Act of 1949 contains a prohibition in these terms:

"A person shall not, as a condition of the grant, renewal or continuance of a tenancy to which this section applies, require the payment of any premium in addition to the rent."

"Grant" means obviously a grant of a new lease, and "renewal" is again a term which is easy to understand. "Continuance" appears to refer to the continuance of an existing tenancy which will go on unless something is done. One can easily understand the position where one has an undetermined tenancy like a tenancy from year to year or from month to month or from week to week. It is forbidden in such a case to demand a premium as a condition of not giving notice to determine the tenancy. These words, however, are similar to those in s. 8 (3) of the Act of 1920, which provides:

"This section shall not apply to the grant, renewal or continuance for a term of fourteen years or upwards of any tenancy . . ."

so there is some reference there to a term of fourteen years. It is a little difficult to understand how it could apply in the same way to a lease for a term of fourteen years. It may be that if, a condition of re-entry having become exercisable, the landlord demands a premium not otherwise provided for by the terms of the lease or makes some demand of that kind as a condition of not enforcing his right of re-entry, the section would be infringed. It seems to me, however, that that does not apply to a case where there is merely a demand for payment of a sum which is already provided for by the terms of the original lease. In this case the premium, or the sum of £30, was payable by reason of the agreement between the parties contained in the original lease. The demand which was made by the letter of Feb. 1, 1950, or by the commencement of these proceedings in no way gave rise to the right to recover the sum. It was not recoverable by reason of that demand; it was recoverable by reason of the original agreement, which was entered into before Mar. 25, 1949. A

It seems clear, therefore, that this is not a case which is covered by the prohibition contained in s. 2 (1) of the Act. It is also quite clear to me that it is not a case where there is a provision for payment of additional rent, and I agree with the view which has been expressed by my Lord that the covenant for the payment of the £30 on Nov. 11 is a personal covenant. It is clear that that was intended to be made good by the provision for the whole sum being payable at once on the occasion of a desire to assign. It appears also to be quite clear that it is not a covenant which would run with the land in the hands of an assignee. For those reasons it cannot be rent, but is what it says—an instalment of a premium. I agree, accordingly, that this appeal should be dismissed. B

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Partridge, Moss & Co., Twickenham (for the tenant); Theodore Goddard & Co. (for the landlords). D

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

PERCY G. MOORE, LTD. v. STRETCH.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Somervell, Jenkins and Birkett, L.J.J.), December 7, 1950.] E

Rent Restriction—Dwelling-house owned by local authority—Protection of sub-tenant—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), s. 3 (2) (c). F

In 1935 a local authority, who were owners of a combined shop and dwelling-house the rateable value of which was within the limits prescribed by the Rent Restrictions Acts, let the premises to one M. In 1950 M., who carried on his business in the shop, sub-let the dwelling-house to the sub-tenant. Later, he transferred his business to a limited company, and assigned to them his interest under the lease. The company, requiring the dwelling-house for one of their employees, gave the sub-tenant notice to quit. The dwelling-house, being one to which s. 128 of the Housing Act, 1936, applied, was, by virtue of s. 3 (2) (c) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939, prima facie outside the Rent Restrictions Acts, but the tenant claimed that s. 3 (2) (c) was only intended to enable a local authority to gain possession of premises owned by them and was not available to a tenant from a local authority as against his sub-tenant. G

HELD: the Rent Acts applied in rem to property and not in personam to a tenant or a sub-tenant, and, therefore, the house fell within s. 3 (2) (c) and the Rent Acts did not apply to protect the sub-tenant. H

[FOR THE RENT AND MORTGAGE INTEREST RESTRICTIONS ACT, 1939, s. 3 (2) (c), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 13, p. 1078.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Rudler v. Franks, [1947] K.B. 530; [1947] L.J.R. 658; 176 L.T. 326; 111 J.P. 190; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Clark v. Downes, Clark v. Mawby, (1931), 145 L.T. 20; Digest Supp.
- (3) Wirral Estates, Ltd. v. Shaw, [1932] 2 K.B. 247; 101 L.J.K.B. 370; 147 L.T. 87; 96 J.P. 143; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the tenant from an order of His Honour JUDGE CROSTHWAITE, sitting at Liverpool County Court, dated Oct. 9, 1950, whereby he held that a dwelling-house, the property of the Liverpool Corporation, was, by virtue of s. 3 (2) (c) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939, outside the Rent Acts, and that the sub-tenant in possession was not entitled to protection.

F. G. Paterson for the tenant.

Heathcote-Williams, K.C., and G. Newman for the landlords.

SOMERVELL, L.J.: It is agreed that the house, a part of which is in question, is within s. 3 (2) (c) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939. Section 3 (2) provides:

"The principal Acts shall not, by virtue of this section, apply . . . (c) to any dwelling-house being, or forming part of, a house or dwelling in respect of which a local authority for the purposes of Part V of the Housing Act, 1936, are required by s. 128 of that Act to keep a housing revenue account other than a house or dwelling to which s. 129 (3) of that Act applies."

The premises in question come within s. 128 of the Act of 1936. Section 129 (3) refers to houses which have been sold or otherwise disposed of, though, presumably, still within the opening words.

In 1935 the Liverpool Corporation let these premises to a Mr. Moore. They consisted of a lock-up shop with a dwelling-house over it. With the consent of the corporation, Mr. Moore sub-let the dwelling-house to the present tenant, who has lived there and paid rent since June 5, 1950. Mr. Moore, who had a business which was carried on in the lock-up shop, transferred his business to the present landlords, a limited company, and assigned to them his interest under the lease. The company now wants the dwelling-house for someone employed in their business.

This dwelling-house prima facie being outside the Rent Restrictions Acts, the submission made by counsel for the tenant is that we should treat s. 3 (2) (c) of the Act of 1939 as intended for the protection of the corporation, so that if and when they want vacant possession they can get it, but it should not be available for a lessee from the corporation as against a sub-lessee. This sort of point has been considered in cases relating to the position of Crown property to which, under well-known principles, the Rent Restrictions Acts have been held not to apply, there being no express provision subjecting Crown property to their application. Having regard to what is said in those cases and other cases, the Rent Acts, speaking generally, operate in rem, i.e., they operate on property. One example of this is the wording of the enactment with which we are concerned. Its form is not to give some special right to a corporation, but merely to provide that the Rent Acts are not to apply to any dwelling-house which comes within its words. It exempts the dwelling-house, but it does not in terms confer a privileged position on local authorities. Having that in mind, it seems to me impossible to accept the submission of counsel for the tenant. The sub-section exempts from the Acts "any dwelling-house being, or forming part of, a house or dwelling in respect of which a local authority . . ." Those words seem to me precisely to cover the premises which are in question in this case. They say expressly that the Rent Restrictions Acts shall not apply to them.

That is enough to decide this case, but I think it right that I should shortly mention the line of cases to which the learned judge referred. He rightly regarded himself as bound by Rudler v. Franks (1), and, being so bound, he regarded that case as deciding the present issue. In that case a tenant held a farm, on lease from the Crown, and there was a cottage on the farm which the tenant let to a sub-tenant. Subsequently, the tenant sought to recover possession of the cottage by a warrant under the Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838. The justices refused to grant the warrant, holding that, as between the landlord and the tenant of the cottage, the Rent Acts applied. It was held by the Divisional Court that the Rent Acts did not apply as the cottage was Crown property, and the Crown was not affected by the Rent Restrictions Acts since they applied in rem and not in personam; the fact that the landlord of the cottage was a lessee from the Crown of the farm including the cottage did not make any difference; and, therefore, he was entitled to a warrant under the Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838, for the recovery of possession of the cottage. In coming to that conclusion the Divisional Court relied on a decision of that court in Clark v. Downes (2) which was approved in this court in Wirral Estates, Ltd. v. Shaw (3). I do not propose to refer to those cases because I think the present case falls to be decided on the wording of s. 3 (2) (c) of the Act of 1939, but it seems to me that the ratio in those cases, namely, that the Acts operate in rem, confirms the construction which I put on this sub-section and the way in which I apply it to the present circumstances. Therefore, I think this appeal fails and should be dismissed.

JENKINS, L.J.: I agree. Whether or not the full result of s. 3 (2) (c), in view of the terms in which it appears in the Act of 1939, was foreseen when it was drafted, I find the words of the sub-section as it stands an insurmountable obstacle to the contention of counsel for the tenant. Section 3 (2) (c) contains nothing to confine its application to claims for possession by local authorities. The exclusion operates if the dwelling-house in respect of which protection of the Rent Acts is claimed is, or forms part of, a house or dwelling in respect of which a local authority is required by s. 128 of the Act of 1936 to keep a housing revenue account. Once that fact is established, it follows that the dwelling-house is outside the Acts, and it does not matter whether the tenancy in relation to which protection is claimed is held directly from the local authority or from a lessee of the local authority. I agree both that the language of the sub-section makes this plain, and also that the conclusion to which its language points is borne out by the cases to which my Lord has referred.

BIRKETT, L.J.: I agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Mawby, Barrie & Letts, agents for Silverman & Livermore, Liverpool (for the tenant); Playne & Co., agents for Edward Lloyd & Co., Liverpool (for the landlords).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. VALLETT.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL (Lord Goddard, C.J., Hilbery and Parker, JJ.),
December 18, 1950.]

Quarter Sessions—Committal to, for sentence by court of summary jurisdiction—“Character and antecedents”—Not confined to previous convictions—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), s. 29 (1).

A The appellant, who had not been previously convicted, pleaded Guilty before a court of summary jurisdiction to four charges of larceny as a servant and asked for ninety-six other cases to be taken into consideration. The justices committed her to quarter sessions for sentence under the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, s. 29 (1).

B HELD: the “character and antecedents” of the offender mentioned in s. 29 (1) were not limited to previous convictions, and, therefore, the justices had power to commit the appellant for sentence.

[FOR THE CRIMINAL JUSTICE ACT, 1948, s. 29, see HALSBURY’S STATUTES, 2nd Edn., Vol. 14, p. 1013.]

Cases referred to:

- C (1) R. v. Sheridan, [1936] 2 All E.R. 883; [1937] 1 K.B. 223; 106 L.J.K.B. 6; 155 L.T. 207; 100 J.P. 319; Digest Supp.
(2) R. v. Grant, [1936] 2 All E.R. 1156; 106 L.J.K.B. 9; 155 L.T. 209; 100 J.P. 324; Digest Supp.

APPEAL against sentence.

D The appellant, Catherine Vallett, pleaded Guilty before a court of summary jurisdiction to four charges of larceny as a servant. She then asked for ninety-six other cases to be taken into consideration. The justices committed her for sentence to quarter sessions where she was sentenced to two years’ imprisonment. The ground of appeal was that the justices had no power to commit for sentence as she had no previous convictions.

E M. C. Parker for the appellant.

The Crown was not represented.

LORD GODDARD, C.J., delivered the following judgment of the court. The appellant, a woman aged thirty-four years, was charged before a court of summary jurisdiction with four cases of larceny from her employers. At that time nothing was known against her. She had been employed for some three years at a laundry, and for the last year she had been appointed a supervisor to stop thefts by employees. She had to attend meetings with her employers to devise ways of preventing theft and so knew all the arrangements that had been made with that object, and she profited by her knowledge to such an extent that on at least a hundred occasions she stole other people’s property. Before the court of summary jurisdiction she pleaded Guilty to the four charges, and she then stated that she wished ninety-six other charges to be taken into account. Thereupon the justices exercised their power under s. 29 (1) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, and, having convicted her, they committed her for sentence to quarter sessions, because, in their opinion, greater punishment should be inflicted than they had power to inflict.

H Counsel for the appellant argued that the justices had no jurisdiction to act under s. 29 (1) because the appellant had no previous convictions, but the words of s. 29 (1) are that the justices may commit for sentence

“if, on obtaining information as to [the offender’s] character and antecedents, the court is of opinion that they are such that greater punishment should be inflicted . . .”

It is not necessary to enter into a discussion whether “character” means general reputation. It certainly, in my opinion, relates to something more than the fact that a person has been previously convicted, and the word "antecedents" is as wide as can be conceived. On considering the appellant's antecedents it was found that she was a married woman living with a man who was not her husband, that she had been put in a position of trust, and that she had used the information she had so obtained to carry out persistent and wholesale thefts.

It seems to the court that, having those antecedents before them, the justices were entitled to use their powers under s. 29 (1). If the legislature had intended to limit the powers given by s. 29 (1) to cases where the defendant had been previously convicted, I think the words would have been: "If, on obtaining information as to his previous convictions . . ." Parliament, however, has used wider words—"character and antecedents." The character and antecedents of the appellant show that she has been a shameless thief for a long period of time and in these circumstances we consider that the justices had power to commit her to quarter sessions. It cannot be said that a sentence of two years for the offences committed is excessive, and the appeal is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Registrar, Court of Criminal Appeal (for the appellant).

[Reported by H. McL. MORRISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. LONDON SESSIONS APPEAL COMMITTEE.

Ex parte BEAUMONT.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Hilbery and Parker, JJ.), December 15, 20, 1950.]

Quarter Sessions—Appeal from justices—Sentence—"Order made on conviction"—Order that defendant should enter into recognisance—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), s. 36 (2).

The applicant was convicted before a metropolitan magistrate for that he did wilfully obstruct the free passage of the highway by means of a costermonger's barrow, contrary to s. 54 (6) of the Metropolitan Police Act, 1839, and was fined 40s. In addition to the penalty imposed, the applicant was ordered to enter into his own recognisance and to find two sureties to be of good behaviour for six months.

HELD: the order to find sureties for good behaviour was not an "order made on conviction" within the definition of "sentence" in s. 36 (2) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, and, therefore, there was no right of appeal to quarter sessions against that order under s. 36 (1).

[AS TO RECOGNISANCES TO KEEP THE PEACE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 21, pp. 633-637, paras. 1091-1096; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 33, pp. 365-369, Nos. 743-780.]

Case referred to:

(1) R. v. County of London Quarter Sessions, Ex p. Metropolitan Police Comr., [1948] 1 All E.R. 72; [1948] 1 K.B. 670; [1948] L.J.R. 472; 112 J.P. 118; 2nd Digest Supp.

MOTION for an order of mandamus.

On Aug. 1, 1950, the applicant was charged before a metropolitan magistrate for that he on July 31, 1950, did wilfully obstruct the free passage of the highway by means of a costermonger's barrow, contrary to s. 54 (6) of the Metropolitan Police Act, 1839. The applicant pleaded Guilty to the charge and was ordered to pay a fine of 40s. By reason of his previous record he was ordered, in addition to the penalty imposed, to enter into his own recognisance in the sum of £25, and to find two sureties, each in the sum of £25, to be of good behaviour for the next six months. The applicant appealed to quarter sessions against the order to find sureties, but that court held that, as the order did not involve a conviction, there was no right of appeal therefrom. Counsel for the applicant contended that such an order was an order made "on conviction" within the meaning of s. 36 (2) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, and that quarter sessions had jurisdiction to hear the appeal.

Power for the applicant.

Vernon Gattie for the respondents.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 20. The following judgments were read.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: Counsel for the applicant moves in this matter for an order of mandamus to the appeal committee of London Sessions to hear and determine an appeal against an order of Miss CAMPBELL, a metropolitan magistrate, that the applicant, Thomas Beaumont, should enter into his own recognisance of £25 and find two sureties in a like sum to be of good behaviour for six months and in default to be imprisoned for two months. The applicant desired to appeal only against so much of the order as required him to find sureties, but nothing turns on that point. He was convicted before the learned magistrate for that he did wilfully obstruct the free passage of the highway by means of a costermonger's barrow, contrary to s. 54 (6) of the Metropolitan Police Act, 1839. The conviction then goes on to state that it is adjudged that the applicant for his said offence do forfeit and pay a fine of 40s., and it continues:

"And whereas by reason of the [applicant's] previous record of convictions there is a strong ground to suspect him of future misbehaviour, it is hereby ordered, in addition to the penalty imposed, that the [applicant] do find sufficient surety for his good behaviour, that is to say, that he do enter into his own recognisance in the sum of £25 and do find two sureties, each in the sum of £25, to be of good behaviour during the period of six months now next ensuing. And in default of compliance with the said order, it is ordered that the [applicant] be imprisoned . . . for . . . eight weeks."

The appeal committee held they had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal, hence this motion.

This court has so recently dealt with the question whether an appeal lies against an order of a justice requiring a person brought before him to be of good behaviour, which, to use the words of BLACKSTONE in dealing with this subject in his COMMENTARIES, 8th ed., vol. IV, chap. 18, p. 256, includes security for the peace and somewhat more, that we need not repeat what was said in R. v. County of London Quarter Sessions, Ex p. Metropolitan Police Comr. (1), where the matter was dealt with fully. Counsel for the applicant, however, argued that the law had now been changed by s. 36 (2) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, which was not in force when that case was heard. Sub-section (1) of that section gives a person convicted by a court of summary jurisdiction a right of appeal, if he pleaded Guilty, against his sentence, and sub-s. (2) provides that the expression "sentence" includes any order made on conviction with certain exceptions, one of which is an order for costs and another an order for the destruction of an animal under the Protection of Animals Act, 1911. In my opinion, this sub-section did not, and was not intended to, alter the law with regard to the order of a justice requiring sureties of the peace or for good behaviour, even when made at a time when the justice was convicting the offender of a substantive offence. The words "any order made on conviction" mean, in my opinion, an order made as a consequence of a conviction, and the case to which I have just referred laid down in the clearest terms that an order for sureties was not a conviction and that there did not have to be a conviction for any offence to enable a justice to make such an order. As has been pointed out not only by BLACKSTONE, but in many cases, the order is in the nature of preventive justice. It is not a penalty for the offence for which the applicant was brought before the justice. The penalty for the offence in the present case was the fine, but, the applicant being before the justice, and she being satisfied that there was a likelihood of his repeating the offence, she called on him to provide sureties against the repetition. She could have required sureties although he was not charged with any offence or had him brought up on another occasion for this purpose. In my opinion, the orders against which the section contemplates an appeal may be brought are those which a statute allows to be imposed as a consequence of conviction, such as orders disqualifying a person for holding a driving licence or a firearm, or forfeiting goods which have been seized. This view is supported by the two exceptions that I have mentioned. An order for costs is made not only on, but in consequence of, a conviction, and so is an order for the destruction of an animal, and they cannot be made unless there is a conviction.

The only difficulty that can present itself here is that the order for sureties is contained in the formal conviction which has been drawn up as there was a notice of appeal. It would have been more regular, in my opinion, if a separate order had been drawn with regard to the finding of sureties, but this conviction is not before us on certiorari and I say no more on this subject. We are asked to order the sessions to hear an appeal against the order to find sureties, but, in my opinion, they were right in holding that they had no jurisdiction to do so. The motion is dismissed with costs.

HILBERY, J.: I am of the same opinion. The contention here is that the appeal committee should be ordered by this court to hear and determine the appeal because the order made by the magistrate was said to be made appealable by s. 36 of the Criminal Justice Act, 1948. That section reads as follows:

"(1) A person convicted by a court of summary jurisdiction shall have a right of appeal—(a) if he pleaded Guilty or admitted the truth of the information, against his sentence; (b) in any other case, against the conviction or sentence, to a court of quarter sessions in manner provided by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts . . . (2) For the purpose of the last foregoing sub-section, the expression 'sentence' includes any order made on conviction by a court of summary jurisdiction, not being—(a) a probation order or an order for conditional discharge; (b) an order for the payment of costs; (c) an order under s. 2 of the Protection of Animals Act, 1911 (which enables the court to order the destruction of an animal); (d) an order made in pursuance of any enactment under which the court has no discretion as to the making of the order or the terms thereof."

The question, therefore, which has to be answered is whether the order in this case is an order made "on conviction" within the meaning of that expression as used in that section of the Act of 1948. It is true to say that it is an order made on the occasion of a conviction, and if that is all that is meant by the expression "made on conviction" as used in the statute, then this is such an order. It must be remembered, however, that, apart from this definition of sentence created by this statute, no order made by the court in addition to the sentence it passed has, hitherto, been any part of the sentence. After verdict, or confession by the accused on arraignment, the court gave judgment. That was the regular completion of the record. Any order made by the court at the time when judgment was given was not part of the sentence and judgment.

It was an order of the court added to the record. For the purposes of appeal, the section of the statute which I have just quoted makes all such orders, save those which it expressly excepts, part of the sentence.

The definitive characteristic of orders made "on conviction" was that they were orders made as a consequence of the conviction of the particular offence of which the accused stood convicted. For example, an order might be made for the restitution of the stolen goods, for the stealing of which the thief had then just been sentenced, or on a conviction of dangerous driving an order might be made that the convicted person's driving licence should be endorsed, or suspended for a specified period, or, again, on a conviction of an offence against the customs laws, an order might be made for the forfeiture of the goods. If this is correct, as I think it is, then it is to such orders that the words in the definition section which I have read must be intended to refer.

The order in question was not an order which could be made in the exercise by the magistrate of the jurisdiction to hear and determine the charge which was before her under s. 54 (6) of the Metropolitan Police Act, 1839. In respect of that charge she exhausted her jurisdiction by awarding the maximum fine of 40s. That conviction alone did not give her the power to make the order now in question. To make the order which she did make and express to make as an addition to the imposition of the maximum penalty for the offence which had been charged and admitted, she had necessarily to invoke powers of what has been called "preventive justice" given to her by the Justices of the Peace Act, 1361. Except for the powers given to magistrates by that statute she had no power to make the order which she did make. The conviction of the applicant of the offence charged against him did not give the magistrate the power to make the order in question, nor did the magistrate make this order because of this conviction. In other words, the conviction in this case for the offence against the Act of 1839 only provided an occasion, which the magistrate took, to consider something different from the offence for which she had sentenced the applicant, that is, the question whether she should not exercise the powers given her by the Act of 1361. In acting as she did she initiated a proceeding against the applicant under the Act of 1361 and decided in that proceeding to make the order which she did make.

In my opinion, such an order, so made, cannot properly be said to be an order made on the conviction in question. Support for this view is, I think, to be derived from a consideration of the orders which the Act of 1948 says shall be exceptions from those which are to be deemed for the purpose of appeal to be part of the sentence. Each one of the exceptions is such an order as the court would normally have power to make as a result of the conviction because of power given to the court to make such an order on that conviction. Unless excepted, they would be made appealable by the section, because they are orders which are made "on conviction." The order in this case could not have been made part of the penalty for the offence of obstructing the highway. For that offence the magistrate was sentencing the accused to the maximum penalty of 40s. Nor could it have been added to the conviction for that offence in the exercise of the powers of the magistrate when dealing with that offence alone. In my view, therefore, the order was not an order made "on conviction" so as to come within the definition of "sentence" given in s. 36 (2) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, and no appeal did, therefore, lie to the County of London Sessions and this motion should be dismissed.

PARKER, J.: I agree with both the judgments which have just been delivered and have nothing to add.

Application dismissed. No order as to costs.

Solicitors: Philip Conway, Thomas & Co. (for the applicant); The Solicitor, Metropolitan Police (for the respondents).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re ROGERS' SETTLEMENT.ARNOTT AND ANOTHER v. ROGERS AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Harman, J.), December 15, 1950.]

Settlement—After-acquired property—Covenant to settle on trusts of a will—Covenantor acquiring absolute interest (i) under the settlement and (ii) under the will—Application of covenant.

In 1902 a settlement was made on the marriage of A.'s daughter, B., with C., whereby a fund was settled on C. for life and on his death to B. for life, and after the death of the survivor of C. and B. to such issue of the marriage as C. should appoint, and in default in trust for the children of the marriage being male at the age of twenty-one years or being female on attaining that age or marrying. By cl. 17 of the settlement, B. covenanted with the trustees "that if at any time during the same coverture she shall become entitled in any manner and for any estate or interest to any real or personal property of the value of £500 or upwards at one time and from one and the same source (. . . except personal chattels) . . . then she and all other necessary parties will at the cost of the trust estate as soon as may be and to the satisfaction of the trustees convey such real or personal property to the trustees upon trust to stand seized or possessed of the same as personal property on trusts precisely similar to those declared concerning the said legacy and share of the residue in the [thereinbefore] recited will of [A.] deceased." Two children of the marriage were born. In 1927 the daughter of the marriage died a spinster intestate having attained the age of twenty-one years. After the death of his daughter, C. made a revocable appointment of the fund, subject to the life interests of himself and B., to the remaining child, a son. In 1934 the son died, an infant and intestate. On Jan. 1, 1950, C. died without having revoked the appointment. It was now argued that the moiety of the remainder appointed to the son expectant on B.'s death (which passed to B. under the son's intestacy) was caught by cl. 17 of the settlement.

HELD: as it was not the purpose of cl. 17 to cause to be re-settled on the trusts of the settlement property which had already devolved by virtue of those trusts, the interest in remainder was not caught by the clause.

Dictum of LORD MACNAGHTEN in Mackenzie v. Allardes ([1905] A.C. 292), applied.

By his will (which was recited in the settlement of 1902) A. settled a fund on B. for life and after her death for her issue as she should appoint and in default of appointment in trust for her children who attained the age of twenty-one years or being female attained that age or married, with a power to B. to appoint a life interest to her husband. B. appointed a life interest to C. and after the death (in 1927) of her daughter, appointed the fund, subject to her and C.'s life interests, to her remaining child, the son absolutely. Under the son's intestacy, B. became absolutely entitled to a moiety of the fund. On the question of the application of cl. 17 of the settlement of 1902,

HELD: the moiety of the fund had never before been the subject-matter of the settlement of 1902 and was, therefore, caught by cl. 17, and B. was bound to settle it in accordance therewith.

Re Bennett-Stanford Settlement Trusts ([1947] 1 All E.R. 888), distinguished.

[AS TO COVENANTS TO SETTLE AFTER-ACQUIRED PROPERTY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 29, pp. 571-583, paras. 833-850; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 40, pp. 493-517, Nos. 422-618.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Mackenzie v. Allardes, [1905] A.C. 285; 40 Digest 498, 462.

- (2) Re Benett-Stanford Settlement Trusts, [1947] 1 All E.R. 888; [1947] L.J.R. 1073; 177 L.T. 301; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Lassence v. Tierney, (1849), 1 Mac. & G. 551; 2 H. & Tw. 115; 15 L.T.O.S. 557; 41 E.R. 1379; 43 Digest 643, 790.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine the application of a covenant to settle after-acquired property contained in a marriage settlement to funds devolving on the covenantor absolutely (a) under the trusts of the marriage settlement itself, and (b) under a will, on the relevant trusts of which the covenantor had by the said covenant agreed to settle the after-acquired property.

By a settlement dated Aug. 11, 1902, made between Arthur Edward Rogers (hereinafter called "Mr. Rogers"), of the first part, the defendant, Lily Eleanor Rogers (hereinafter called "Mrs. Rogers"), of the second part, and the trustees, of the third part, it was recited that a marriage was intended between Mr. Rogers and Mrs. Rogers and that Mr. Rogers had transferred to the trustees certain investments (hereinafter called "the husband's fund") to be held on the trusts thereafter declared. The trusts of the will of Sir John Arnott, deceased (the father of Mrs. Rogers), were then recited in full so far as they related to a legacy of £40,000 and a share of the testator's residuary estate settled by the will on Mrs. Rogers and her issue. The usual trusts of a husband's fund were then declared of the husband's fund, and by cl. 17 of the settlement Mrs. Rogers covenanted to settle her after-acquired property on the trusts of the thereinbefore recited will of Sir John Arnott. In the events which happened, Mrs. Rogers became entitled absolutely (apart from the operation of cl. 17) to (a) a share of the husband's fund, and (b) a share of the corpus of the legacy and residuary estate settled by the will of Sir John Arnott on herself and her issue. The relevant words of cl. 17, and the facts are stated in the judgment.

F. B. Marsh for the plaintiffs, the trustees of the settlement.

J. Brightman for the first defendant, Lily Eleanor Rogers.

Templeman for the second defendant, Williams Deacon's Bank, Ltd., the executor of the will of Arthur Edward Rogers.

HARMAN, J.: This is a case where in the upshot an absurd result has been produced. It arises out of a settlement made in 1902 on the marriage of the first defendant (whom I will call Mrs. Rogers) to her husband, Mr. Rogers, who died on Jan. 1, 1950, and is represented by the second defendant, Williams Deacon's Bank. There were two children of the marriage, a daughter who attained the age of twenty-one years and died intestate and a spinster in 1927, and a son, who died an infant and intestate in 1934. The sole next of kin both of the daughter and of the son were Mr. and Mrs. Rogers in equal shares. By the settlement, a fund, details of which were set out in a schedule, was settled on the usual trusts of a husband's fund, i.e., to pay the income to Mr. Rogers for his life and after his death to Mrs. Rogers, if surviving, for life without power of anticipation, and after the death of the survivor to such issue of the marriage as Mr. Rogers should appoint and in default in trust for the children at twenty-one or on marriage if female. This fund was duly enjoyed by Mr. Rogers during his life and passed to Mrs. Rogers on his death on Jan. 1, 1950. The question is: What happens to the remainder?

When the daughter died, Mr. Rogers made a revocable appointment, which became irrevocable on his death, whereby he appointed the fund after the death of the survivor of himself and Mrs. Rogers, in favour of the son absolutely. Therefore, on the death of Mrs. Rogers this fund passed to the son absolutely, and that interest in the fund was an interest immediately vesting when the appointment was made, but subject, of course, to the power of revocation and to the prior life interests. When the son died in 1934 his interest in half the fund went to Mr. Rogers (and as to that no question is here raised) and the other half went to Mrs. Rogers. She became entitled to that interest in 1934, it being then a vested interest in remainder expectant on Mr. Rogers' death. So far we have got the interest back to Mrs. Rogers, but she entered into a covenant in the settlement of 1902 whereby, under cl. 17, she covenanted with the trustees:

"that if at any time during the same coverture she shall become entitled in any manner and for any estate or interest to any real or personal property of the value of £500 or upwards at one time and from one and the same source (. . . except personal chattels) . . . then she and all other necessary parties will at the cost of the trust estate as soon as may be and to the satisfaction of the trustees convey such real or personal property to the trustees upon trust to stand seized or possessed of the same as personal property on trusts precisely similar to those declared concerning the said legacy and share of the residue in the said recited will of the said Sir John Arnott deceased."

It is said that Mrs. Rogers became bound under that covenant to convey to the trustees the moiety of the son's reversionary interest in the fund, because it is caught by the after-acquired property clause in the events which have happened.

In my judgment, the after-acquired property clause in the settlement was never intended to catch property which was already in the settlement and on which the settlement had operated. It would be ridiculous that property already in the settlement should come into the settlement again and go on the limitations of the settlement, and so on, in an everlasting succession. I cannot think that is what the after-acquired property clause was intended to do. Although Mrs. Rogers acquired this interest afterwards, because her son did not die until 1934, this was the very property in which, under the settlement itself, she had a life interest already, and it is ridiculous to suppose that she would have to re-settle to give herself another life interest in the same property. Therefore, in my judgment, that property is not within the mischief of the after-acquired property clause.

I find some support for that view in LORD MACNAGHTEN'S speech in Mackenzie v. Allardes (1). That case was concerned with Scottish law. LORD MACNAGHTEN makes these general observations ([1905] A.C. 292):

"As regards clauses in marriage contracts providing for the settlement of after-acquired property, I quite agree that effect must be given to the intention of the parties apparent on the face of the contract construed fairly, although the result may seem to be whimsical or even unreasonable. But still there are some considerations which it is as well to bear in mind as aids to the construction of such clauses. These considerations may, of course, be excluded either designedly or accidentally by the language used, but unless they are so excluded they are, I think, of general, if not universal, application. One is that change of investment—mere alteration in the outward form of property—is not 'acquisition' within the meaning of a provision of this sort. Another is that property which has reached its destination through the medium of the trust, or property which, in accordance with the declarations of the parties to the contract, comes to be at the absolute disposal of one of those parties, does not again fall under the operation of the trust unless there is a clear direction to that effect. In the present case I cannot find in the marriage contract of 1848 any indication that money, which under or in accordance with the trust would come to the hands of Mrs. Dunbar—money which was to be hers to hoard or spend, to waste or save, just as she pleased—was under any circumstances or in any event to be brought back under the operation of the trust and pass through the mill again. Such a result seems inconsistent with provisions carefully made to safeguard her separate use and enjoyment of the income which was originally her own. It is, I think, opposed to the whole scope of the instrument."

Of course, there the facts were very different. LORD MACNAGHTEN was dealing, as I understand it, with an accumulated fund which represented the savings of a lifetime out of income, but he said that after-acquired property clauses of this kind are not meant to catch property settled by the settlement. I, therefore, hold that, so far as the husband's fund is concerned, it is not caught by the after-acquired property clause.

Mrs. Rogers was the daughter of Sir John Arnott, who made a will (which was recited in the settlement of 1902) in her favour. By that will he gave her a legacy and a share of his residue absolutely, with a proviso creating a trust to pay the income to her for life, and after her death on trust for her issue as she should appoint and in default of appointment on trust for her children who attained the age of twenty-one years or (being female) married. There was a power for her to give a life interest to her husband. Mrs. Rogers enjoyed the first interest and she exercised her power to appoint a life interest to her husband, which never came into effect because he predeceased her. When her daughter died she made a revocable appointment, shortly after her husband appointed his fund, directing the trustees of the will of Sir John Arnott, after the death of herself and subject to her husband's interest, to stand possessed of the legacy and the residuary share in Sir John's estate in trust for the son absolutely. This fund too, on the son's death intestate, goes half to his mother and half to his father, and, clearly, the father keeps the half that goes to him. It is suggested here again that the mother's half is caught by the after-acquired property clause in the settlement.

Now, the argument which has been advanced with respect to the husband's fund does not apply here, because this has never been the subject-matter of the settlement. It is property coming from the outside to this lady, being settled on the trusts declared by Sir John's will for herself for life, and so on. On the son's death intestate, half the fund reverts to her, but, if caught by the after-acquired property clause, it goes back again to him and so on. It is urged that I may avoid this result if I follow a case before JENKINS, J., Re Bennett-Stanford Settlement Trusts (2). There was a marriage settlement with remainder to the children of the marriage and an after-acquired property clause on the part of the wife. There was only one child who attained a vested interest. He died a bachelor and left a will leaving everything he possessed to the wife, that is to say, to his mother. He was entitled under another settlement, at his death, to an absolute interest in the remainder of the settled property, and this interest, it was said, was caught by the after-acquired property clause. The interest was given in terms such as to be subject to the after-acquired property clause. The question, states the headnote of the report, was whether, under the provisions of that clause, the interest should be held on trust, subject to the life interests of the husband and wife, for the son, who had attained a vested interest under the original trusts of the marriage settlement, or whether, since it did not become subject to the after-acquired property clause until after the son's death, it should be held on the ultimate trusts of the settlement. I do not think that quite accurately states the question. The question, as I see it, was: Should it be left in the son's estate by reason of some modification of the trusts of the settlement so as to bring in an ultimate trust by which he was to be a beneficiary, or should it go to the mother on the footing that the after-acquired property clause had to be disregarded in the circumstances? It was also argued that there was an intestacy as to the son's estate and that his disposition was ineffective because it brought it back to himself. On that JENKINS, J., says ([1947] 1 All E.R. 891):

"In this case there was an effective disposition of the whole of the son's interest in favour of his mother absolutely. If, therefore, the effect of applying to the absolute interest so given the trusts engrafted on it by the after-acquired property clause was to bring some residual interest back to the son's estate, that would be a case in which, in my judgment, the principle of Lassence v. Tierney (3) would apply, that is to say, there would be an absolute gift with a trust engrafted on it which did not exhaust the whole beneficial interest, with the result that the original absolute gift would remain."

I do not think I can take that view here. There was no will on the part of the son in the present case and I do not think that point arises. What happens is that the property goes from the son to the mother, never having been in the settlement before, and is subject to her after-acquired property clause. I would gladly follow Re Bennett-Stanford Settlement Trusts (2) if I thought it really applied here, but I do not, on the whole, think it does. It follows from the earlier part of this judgment that, once Mrs. Rogers's share of the son's interest in remainder in the will fund has been brought into the settlement by the operation of the after-acquired property clause, the operation of the clause will be exhausted and the process will not be repeated.

Order accordingly. Costs to be paid out of the fund in the hands of the trustee. Solicitors: Carleton-Holmes & Co. (for all parties).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Reversed in part. C.A. [1951] 2 All E.R. 543.

Re D'AVIGDOR-GOLDSMID'S LIFE POLICY. D'AVIGDOR-GOLDSMID v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Vaisey, J.), November 13, 14, 15, December 20, 1950.]

Estate Duty—Property deemed to pass—Money received under policy of assurance—Policy kept up for donee—"Donee"—Interest accruing or arising—Accruing or arising on death of assured—Contemporaneous assignment of policy and other property—Subsequent premiums paid by assignee—Whether policy indirectly purchased or provided by assignor—Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30), s. 2 (1) (c), s. 2 (1) (d)—Finance Act, 1939 (c. 41), s. 30 (1).

In 1904 the deceased took out a policy of assurance on his own life and for his own benefit for £30,000 with profits. On Oct. 22, 1907, the deceased made an ante-nuptial settlement whereby he settled certain freehold estates, certain investments, and the policy, and directed that the trustees should receive the moneys payable under the policy at maturity and invest them in freehold land to be held on the same trusts as might then be subsisting in relation to the freehold estates thereby settled. Under the settlement the deceased took a protected life interest in the freehold estates, which after his death were directed to be held in tail male for the first and other sons of the marriage, subject to a jointure rentcharge. The deceased covenanted in the settlement to pay the premiums on the policy. In 1930, by virtue of powers conferred by a private Act of Parliament, the existing trusts were brought to an end, and by a deed of re-settlement, dated June 10, 1930, the freehold estates were settled on such trusts as the deceased and the plaintiff (the deceased's eldest son) should by deed jointly appoint (provided that this power should not be capable of being exercised so as to benefit the deceased directly or indirectly) and in default of and until and subject to any appointment (as regards part thereof) on trusts under which there was a discretionary trust of which the plaintiff was the principal object, and (as regards the remainder) on trusts under which the deceased took a determinable protected life interest in restoration of his former life interest under the settlement. The deceased covenanted in the re-settlement to pay the premiums on the policy, and it was provided that the proceeds of the policy should become subject to the same trusts as that part of the realty in which the deceased had a protected life interest. On Nov. 10, 1934, the deceased and the plaintiff appointed that the policy (and also certain real property (the "Wood Street property")) should be held in trust for the plaintiff absolutely, and the deceased was released from his covenant to pay the premiums. The deceased paid all the premiums falling due prior to Nov. 10, 1934, but thereafter until the maturity of the policy the premiums were paid by the plaintiff. On Apr. 14, 1940, the deceased died, and the Crown claimed estate duty under the Finance Act, 1894, s. 2 (1) (c) or s. 2 (1) (d) in respect of the proceeds (or part thereof). Of the thirty-seven premiums which had been paid, the deceased had paid four prior to the date of the original settlement, and a further twenty-three prior to the disentailment in 1930. He paid a further four before the appointment of 1934, and the plaintiff paid the last six premiums.

HELD: (i) although until 1934 the policy was kept up by the deceased, it was not kept up for the plaintiff, who, as the ultimate donee, was the "donee" for the purposes of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1889, s. 11 (1), it being irrelevant that he was one of the beneficiaries under the settlement and re-settlement, and, therefore, s. 2 (1) (c) of the Act of 1894, did not apply.

Lord Advocate v. Fleming ([1897] A.C. 145), applied.

(ii) the property assigned to the plaintiff in 1934 was the policy, i.e., the benefit of the contract of insurance with the insurance company, and no new benefit accrued or arose in connection therewith on the deceased's death, and, therefore, s. 2 (1) (d) of the Act of 1894 was inapplicable.

Lord Advocate v. Hamilton's Trustees (1942 S.C. 426), applied.

(iii) the contemporaneous appointment of the Wood Street property did not give rise to a claim in respect of the policy moneys under s. 2 (1) (d) of the Act of 1894 by virtue of the Finance Act, 1939, s. 30 (1), the plaintiff being free to pay the premiums in any manner and out of any resources as he wished.

[AS TO POLICIES KEPT UP FOR A DONEE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 13, p. 241, para. 232; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST Supp.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Lord Advocate v. Fleming, [1897] A.C. 145; 66 L.J.P.C. 41; 61 J.P. 692; sub nom. Lord Advocate v. Robertson, 76 L.T. 125; 21 Digest 87, 632.
- (2) Lord Advocate v. Inzievar Estates, [1938] 2 All E.R. 424; [1938] A.C. 402; 107 L.J.P.C. 65; 159 L.T. 97; Digest Supp.
- (3) Parr v. A.-G., [1926] A.C. 239; 95 L.J.K.B. 417; 134 L.T. 321; Digest Supp.
- (4) A.-G. v. Murray, [1904] 1 K.B. 165; 73 L.J.K.B. 66; 89 L.T. 710; 68 J.P. 89; 21 Digest 16, 79.
- (5) Tennant v. Lord Advocate, [1939] 1 All E.R. 672; [1939] A.C. 207; 108 L.J.P.C. 65; 160 L.T. 441; Digest Supp.
- (6) Re Albert Life Assurance Co., (1870), L.R. 9 Eq. 703; 39 L.J.Ch. 257; 22 L.T. 92; 29 Digest 362, 2927.
- (7) Lord Advocate v. Hamilton's Trustees, 1942 S.C. 426; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (8) Re Hartland, [1911] 1 Ch. 459; sub nom. Re Dixon Hartland, 80 L.J.Ch. 305; 104 L.T. 490; 21 Digest 38, 247.

- (9) Brooks v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1913] 3 K.B. 398; 82 L.J.K.B. 1086; 109 L.T. 363; 42 Digest 670, 815.
- (10) Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Scott's Trustees, 1918 S.C. 720; 55 S.L.R. 654; [1918] 2 S.L.T. 97; 21 Digest 15, 73i.
- (11) A.-G. v. Dobree, [1900] 1 Q.B. 442; 69 L.J.Q.B. 223; 81 L.T. 607; 64 J.P. 24; 21 Digest 17, 97.
- (12) A.-G. v. Robinson, [1901] 2 I.R. 67; 21 Digest 15, 73, q.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS under the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1933, s. 3, to determine a question of liability to estate duty.

The Crown claimed estate duty on moneys payable under a policy of assurance on the life of the deceased, either under s. 2 (1) (c) of the Finance Act, 1894, or under s. 2 (1) (d) of that Act, as extended by the Finance Act, 1939, s. 30 (1). The plaintiff, the son of the deceased, claimed either that no duty was payable, or that duty was payable on twenty-seven thirty-thirds (the proportion of premiums paid by the deceased after the policy was first settled), or on two-fifths (the proportion of premiums paid by the deceased after the policy was re-settled) of the policy moneys.

Tucker, K.C., Cyril King, K.C., and Wilfrid Hunt for the plaintiff.
Upjohn, K.C., and J. H. Stamp for the Crown.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 20. VAISEY, J., read the following judgment. The question which arises on the present summons is whether, on the true construction of the Finance Act, 1894, and amending Acts and in the events which have happened, estate duty became payable as claimed by the Inland Revenue Commissioners, who are the defendants, on the death, which happened on Apr. 14, 1940, of Sir Osmond Elim d'Avigdor-Goldsmid (whom I will call "the deceased") in respect of a policy of assurance on his life, dated May 3, 1904, and effected with the Royal Insurance Co., or of the sum of £48,765 which became payable under such policy on maturity. The plaintiff, Sir Henry Joseph d'Avigdor-Goldsmid, alleges that no duty became payable on such death either in respect of the said policy or in respect of the said policy moneys. Alternatively, he says that the duty was payable only on twenty-seven thirty-third parts of such moneys or only on two-fifths parts thereof. The defendants' claim is based alternatively either on s. 2 (1) (c) of the said Act or on s. 2 (1) (d) of the said Act as extended by s. 30 (1) of the Finance Act, 1939.

The history of the matter is as follows. The policy bears date May 3, 1904. The annual premium was £695 payable on Jan. 20, 1905, and on each succeeding anniversary of that date during the life of the deceased. On the issue of the policy a first premium of £510 6s. was paid in respect of the initial period of "cover," viz., 268 days from Apr. 27, 1904, to Jan. 20, 1905. From first to last thirty-seven premiums were paid. The deceased was married on Oct. 23, 1907, to Miss Rose Anne Alice Landau, and the plaintiff is the eldest son of the marriage, having been born on June 10, 1909. On his said marriage the deceased made a settlement dated Oct. 22, 1907, of (i) certain freehold estates, (ii) certain investments, and (iii) the above-mentioned policy, which was originally for a sum of £30,000 with profits. The interest which the deceased took under the settlement was, inter alia, a protected life interest in the settled freeholds, out of which, after his death, a jointure rentcharge was limited to his wife with power for him to apportion it among the various settled properties, and, subject as aforesaid, as to the estates specified in the first and second parts of sched. I to the settlement, there was a limitation to the first and other sons of the marriage in tail male. The policy with all bonuses and additions was assigned to the trustees on trust to receive the moneys to become payable thereunder at maturity and to invest the same in the purchase of freehold hereditaments to be settled on and subject to the uses, trusts, powers and provisions therein declared and contained concerning the beforementioned freeholds, or such of them as should be subsisting or capable of taking effect, and in the meantime to invest or apply it in any other mode in which capital moneys under the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890, were authorised to be invested or applied. The deceased covenanted to pay the premiums on the policy, and he was given an option (which he never exercised) to apply bonuses in reduction of premiums.

- A A private Act of Parliament entitled the Goldsmid Estate Act, 1928, was passed on Aug. 3, 1928, and by s. 3 (1) of the said Act the deceased was empowered by deed effectually to assure his life interest in all or any parts of the settled property to the person who at the date of such assurance was next entitled in remainder or reversion expectant on his death to the property to which the assurance related, and in particular it was provided that that section should
- B extend to a disentailing deed affecting the said property or any part thereof whereby the property was assured to a grantee on trusts conferring a general power of appointment having priority over the life interest, and it was provided by s. 3 (2) of the Act that any assurance thereby authorised should operate as if the settlement had not contained any provision to determine the deceased's life interest and as if, in place thereof, an absolute life interest had been limited
- C to him, and any such assurance of part of the settled property should not operate to effect a determination of the said life interest as respects any other part of the settled property.

By a deed of appointment dated June 10, 1930, the deceased under a power of appointment conferred on him by the settlement over certain properties and funds thereby settled for the benefit of his younger children, appointed that

D the same should be held in trust for the plaintiff in tail male, subject to the prior limitations and powers in such appointment referred to, and by cl. 1 of a disentailing deed also dated June 10, 1930, the plaintiff, with the consent of the deceased as protector of the settlement, assured, and the deceased, in exercise of the powers conferred on him by the said Act as to his life interest in the property (but not so as to transfer any legal estate), assured, released

E and confirmed to the trustees all the hereditaments of which the plaintiff was then tenant in tail under the settlement or the said appointment, to hold the same in fee simple or absolutely freed from the life estate or interest of the deceased and from the plaintiff's interests in tail male and all subsequent estates or interests on such trusts and in such manner generally as the deceased and the plaintiff should by deed jointly appoint and in default of and until and

F subject to any such appointment on the precedent subsisting trusts and so as to restore the same, and by cl. 2 of the disentailing deed a similar assurance was made of inter alia the said life policy on and subject to similar trusts and powers.

Following on the two last-mentioned deeds a re-settlement was, on the same June 10, 1930, made by the deceased and the plaintiff under their said joint

G powers of appointment of, inter alia, the said policy. By cl. 3 of the re-settlement, some of the family real estate was settled on such trusts and in such manner generally as the deceased and the plaintiff should by deed jointly appoint, provided that this power should not be capable of being exercised so as to benefit the deceased directly or indirectly and in default of and until and subject to any appointment on trusts under which during the life of the plaintiff

H there is a discretionary trust of which the plaintiff is the principal object. By cl. 4 of the re-settlement other parts of the family real estate were settled on trusts under which the deceased and the plaintiff had a joint power of appointment corresponding to the power conferred on them by cl. 3 of the deed and subject thereto and to certain charges the deceased took a determinable protected life interest in restoration of his interest in those parts of the real estate under the settlement with remainder on the trusts and subject to the powers and provisions affecting the estates comprised in cl. 3 of the re-settlement.

By cl. 10 (1) of the re-settlement, the deceased, so long as the said life policy should remain subject to the trusts thereof, covenanted with the trustees that he would duly pay all money payable and do all things necessary for keeping it on foot. By cl. 22 of the re-settlement, in exercise of the said power conferred by the disentailing deed, the deceased and the plaintiff appointed inter alia the said policy to be held on trust to get in all moneys to become payable thereunder and to stand possessed of the net money received on the trusts and subject to the powers and provisions on and subject to which capital money arising under the Settled Land Act, 1925, from the estates settled by cl. 4 of the re-settlement or investments representing the same would be held, and, as to the said money and investments mentioned in sched. II to the re-settlement, on the trusts and subject to the powers and provisions on and subject to which capital money arising under the said Act from the estate settled by cl. 3 of the re-settlement would be held. A B

Prior to the appointment hereinafter referred to, the freehold property known as No. 27, Wood Street, in the city of London, was acquired out of capital moneys representing part of the estates settled by cl. 4 of the re-settlement. By a deed of appointment dated Nov. 10, 1934, under the hands and seals of the deceased and the plaintiff they, in exercise of their said joint powers of appointment conferred by the re-settlement, appointed that, first, the said life policy, and, secondly, the said premises No. 27, Wood Street, should be thenceforth held by the trustees and the deceased respectively in trust for the plaintiff absolutely and in fee simple for the plaintiff's own use and benefit discharged from the trusts, powers and provisions declared by the re-settlement, and the plaintiff thereby released and discharged the deceased from all his covenants contained in the re-settlement for the payment of premiums on and otherwise relating to the said policy and that a term of ninety-nine years limited by the re-settlement should as regards the premises affected by such appointment cease and be extinguished. C D

The effect of the last-mentioned deed of appointment was that the plaintiff became absolute beneficial owner of the said life policy and of the said premises, 27, Wood Street. The insurance company hold the original policy. The legal estate in the said premises, 27, Wood Street, was vested in the plaintiff after the said appointment. The plaintiff could have at any time surrendered or sold the said policy had he so desired, but he preferred to keep it up. The premium under the policy was payable annually, as I have said, on every Jan. 20. In all, thirty-seven premiums were paid on the policy, of which thirty-three in all were paid subsequently to the said marriage settlement. Subsequently to the re-settlement, ten premiums were paid, of which four were paid prior to the said appointment of 1934, and six were paid subsequently. The plaintiff paid out of his own moneys the six premiums paid after the said appointment, but the deceased paid all the premiums paid before the appointment of 1934. When the policy matured, i.e., on the death of the deceased, on Apr. 14, 1940, the plaintiff received a sum of £48,765 thereunder, being the original sum of £30,000 plus bonuses. E F G

Thirty-seven premiums were paid in respect of the policy from its issue until maturity, and it would appear to follow (a) that the deceased had paid for his own benefit four premiums, that is to say, the first premium of £510 6s., and three premiums of £695 each payable in 1905, 1906, and 1907; (b) that the deceased had paid for the benefit of the persons interested under the marriage settlement twenty-three further premiums payable in the years 1908 to 1930 inclusive; (c) that the deceased had paid for the benefit of the persons interested under the re-settlement four premiums payable in the years 1931 to 1934 inclusive; and (d) that the plaintiff for his own benefit has paid six premiums payable in the years 1935 to 1940 inclusive, he having since Nov. 10, 1934, been the absolute owner of the policy and exclusively entitled to the benefit H thereof. On Apr. 14, 1940, when the policy matured, he alone could have given the insurance company a good discharge for the policy moneys. It is to be noted that more than five years had elapsed between Nov. 10, 1934, and Apr. 14, 1940.

The claim to the duty rests either on s. 2 (1) (c) or on s. 2 (1) (d) of the Finance Act, 1894, which specify two of the items of property which are deemed to be included in property passing on a death, although they do not, in fact, so pass. I will deal with the alternatives separately, taking head (c) first. The words are:

"Property which would be required on the death of the deceased to be included in an account under s. 38 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881, as amended by s. 11 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1889, if those sections were herein enacted and extended to real property as well as personal property, and the words 'voluntary' and 'voluntarily' and a reference to a 'volunteer' were omitted therefrom . . ."

I will now read the relevant part of s. 38 of the Act of 1881 with the modifications indicated. It reads thus:

"(b) Any property which a person dying . . . having been absolutely entitled thereto, has . . . caused or may . . . cause to be transferred to or vested in himself, and any other person jointly whether by disposition or otherwise, so that the beneficial interest therein or in some part thereof passes or accrues by survivorship on his death to such other person."

and s. 11 of the Act of 1889 provides (so far as material):

"The charge under the said section [s. 38 of the Act of 1881] shall extend to money received under a policy of assurance effected by any person dying on or after June 1, 1889, on his life, where the policy is wholly kept up by him for the benefit of a donee, whether nominee or assignee, or a part of such money in proportion to the premiums paid by him, where the policy is partially kept up by him for such benefit."

The Crown's claim under head (c) is for duty on a proportion of the policy moneys, and a question may arise as to what the proportion is.

Now, it is quite clear that in 1930 the original settlement was destroyed, and a new settlement came into operation under which a class of beneficiaries different from the class interested under the original settlement came into existence, and it also is quite clear that after Nov. 10, 1934, the plaintiff became sole owner of the policy, and it certainly seems a strange result if duty should become payable by reason of the death of the deceased more than five years afterwards. The authorities which were cited to me are numerous and difficult to reconcile, but it seems to me that on this part of the case I ought to follow the decision of the House of Lords in Lord Advocate v. Fleming (1). The facts there are simple and, I should have thought, on all fours with the facts in the present case. My attention was called to the passage in LORD HERSCHELL's speech ([1897] A.C. 154), where he points out that it is an abuse of language to suggest that the policy had ever been wholly or even partially kept up for the benefit of the daughter to whom it was assigned merely because of the premiums having been paid prior to the assignment when the daughter was in no sense a "donee." There is also the passage in the speech of LORD HALSBURY, L.C. (ibid., 153), where he points out the fallacy in the suggestion that the moment a policy of insurance is taken out the person who takes out the policy keeps it up not only for his own benefit but for the benefit of some person becoming a donee at a future time. So far as the claim under head (c) is concerned, I think that the Crown have not established their case. I have been somewhat puzzled by Lord Advocate v. Inzievar Estates (2), but there it was pointed out by LORD MAUGHAM, L.C., that where the donee had paid all the premiums subsequent to the assignment no duty would be payable, but where, as in that case, the assignor had paid some of the premiums subsequent to the assignment, a proportionate claim to the duty could be established. On the whole, I think that that case, no less than the earlier one, supports the conclusion which I have reached, that no duty is payable under head (c).

I have come to the conclusion that the donee referred to in s. 11 of the Act of 1889 is the ultimate donee, and that the reference to donee is not properly applicable to a series of donees, and that the word only properly signifies the final beneficiary and owner of the policy in question. I have considered Parr v. A.-G. (3), which was, of course, a decision on a different point, but it seems to establish the proposition that where a settlement is put an end to, as by an absolute assignment, the old estates cease to exist. For any purpose they are, indeed, merely past history. It seems to me that the Crown's case is that one must look at the whole life of the policy from start to finish, and that is a proposition which I cannot accept. I do not think that the deceased can be considered for the present purpose as having kept up the policy for the benefit of the plaintiff as donee. He could never, prior to 1934, have been understood to be doing so, except prophetically. The only person who kept up the policy for the benefit of the plaintiff was the plaintiff himself. I reject the argument that the fact that the plaintiff was one of a number of beneficiaries under the previous settlements has any bearing on the present question. I do not think that the policy was kept up by the deceased for the benefit of the plaintiff. It is not denied that it was kept up by the deceased until Nov. 10, 1934, but it was not kept up, in my judgment, for the plaintiff's benefit. I have come to the conclusion that neither on the whole nor on four-tenths (or two-fifths) or twenty-seven thirty-thirds of the policy moneys is any duty leviable, i.e., under head (c).

I turn to head (d), which is as follows:

"Any annuity or other interest purchased or provided by the deceased, either by himself alone or in concert or by arrangement with any other person, to the extent of the beneficial interest accruing or arising by survivorship or otherwise on the death of the deceased."

Under head (d) it seems to me that where a life policy is sold or given away by the life assured to another person, there can be no other interest in it or in the moneys assured thereby. That, in my view, is so, at any rate, in a case in which the life assured has ceased to be concerned with the policy, in any way, as, for instance, by having covenanted to pay the premiums: see A.-G. v. Murray (4).

I was invited to consider whether the property assigned was the policy of insurance or the moneys payable thereunder. I am of opinion that it was the policy, i.e., the contract or the benefit of the contract with the insurance company. On this footing, the plaintiff was the sole and absolute owner of the assigned property at the death of the deceased, and, he having been so for more than five years from the date of the assignment, no duty could attach to it, or to any of its fruits, on the death of the deceased. Admittedly, I think, the plaintiff might have surrendered or sold the policy or the benefit of the policy before its maturity, in which case, so far as I can see, no duty could possibly have attached to the proceeds. I think that no beneficial interest accrued or arose on the death. The point whether it was the policy or the policy moneys which were provided by the deceased was apparently left open in Tennant v. Lord Advocate (5), but see the observations of LORD RUSSELL of KILLOWEN ([1939] 1 All E.R. 675). If the view which I have expressed is right, the claim under (d) cannot, I think, be sustained. The nature of a policy of assurance is thus expressed by SIR WILLIAM JAMES, V.-C., in Re Albert Life Assurance Co. (6) (L.R. 9 Eq. 705):

"The contract on the part of the company was, that if he should, on or before a certain day in every year, pay a certain sum, their assets should be liable to pay his representatives a certain sum on his death. He was under no contract with the company; it was simply this, that he had to perform a condition the performance of which entitled him to certain benefits."

That seems to me to be accurate, with appropriate additions of references to the assured's assigns.

- A I was urged to consider Lord Advocate v. Hamilton's Trustees (7), as concluding the matter so far as I am concerned in the plaintiff's favour. I accept that view, and hold that the claim under head (d) is precluded by that authority. Re Hartland (8) and Brooks v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (9) are to the effect that it is my duty as a court of first instance in England to follow a unanimous decision of the Court of Session on a statute equally applicable to both countries.
- B I propose to follow Lord Advocate v. Hamilton's Trustees (7) and to treat it as concluding the issue in this action, so far as the Crown rests the claim under head (d). It is not necessary, I think, for me to enter at length into the facts on which the case to which I have referred arose. LORD WARK, in his judgment, after observing that the claim in that case was made under head (d) and not under head (c), observed that while it was not disputed that head (d) might render subject to duty insurance policies and policy moneys which escape under head (c), and that the words "other interest" in (d) are sufficiently wide to include the right to a policy or policy moneys, he found it difficult to understand how it could catch the very case with which head (c) deals, viz., the case of an out and out transfer of a policy by way of gift and make the interest in such policy liable to duty whether the policy be kept up by a donor for the benefit of the donee or not. He added that if that were a sound view it seemed to him that head (c) was otiose. He expressed the view that the Crown's claim failed because it was not shown that any beneficial interest accrued or arose on the death of the deceased, and he pointed out (1942 S.C. 443) that the whole interest in the policies and the policy moneys had passed to the beneficiaries twenty-four years before the deceased's death. Their interest then was fully vested, and was neither altered nor increased by the deceased's death. The nature of the interest was the same although the value of it was increasing during the lifetime of the assured, and reached its maximum at his death. An earlier passage in the same judgment puts the case in a manner which seems to me most convincing. He says (ibid., 440):
- E "Coming to consider the language of s. 2 (1) (d), it is apparent that,
- F in order to succeed, the Crown must establish two things: first, that the property sought to be charged has been provided or purchased by the deceased, either by himself alone or in concert or by arrangement with any other person; and, second, that to some extent there has been a beneficial interest arising or accruing by survivorship or otherwise on the death of the deceased. If either of these is not established, the claim fails.
- G And it is well to keep in view the elementary principle of construction of taxing statutes that it is for the Crown to show that the subject is within the ambit of the statute and not for the subject to show that he is outside it. Having regard to what I have said as to s. 2 (1) (c), I think there is soundness in the argument for the respondents that, where you are dealing with policy moneys, it is not sufficient to bring them within the expression 'purchased or provided by the deceased' that the policy was originally
- I taken out by him, or even that certain premiums were paid by him upon it, if it has been assigned to a donee and the assured has thereafter paid no further premiums. And, in my opinion, this is true, even when the gift is made through the medium of a trust, so long as it is not one of the purposes of the trust to make payment of the premiums out of funds provided by the truster. The argument for the Crown amounted to this, that the deceased had in effect provided the premiums after the date of the declaration of trust by creating a trust and empowering the trustees to borrow upon the trust property, which was of sufficient value to afford security for the further premiums required. Alternatively, it was said that the trustees were his mandataries to pay the premiums. I do not think this argument is sound in either alternative. The trustees were trustees, not for the deceased, but for the beneficiaries. They were answerable to them alone, and, when they borrowed, it was in their interest and on their behalf. They were not directed to borrow, but only empowered to do so. They might have surrendered the policies, or some of them, at any time. Accordingly, the further premiums required were paid truly by the beneficiaries entirely, and not by the deceased. The case of Scott's Trustees (10), on which the Crown relied, has thus no application. Moreover, in Scott (10) there was no vested right in the beneficiaries until the death of the assured."

A

B

The latter part of this passage seems to me to dispose of any claim that might have been based on the Finance Act, 1939, s. 30 (1), in reference to the Wood Street property as affecting the policy and policy moneys in question. It may well be that Lord Advocate v. Hamilton's Trustees (7) is inconsistent with A.-G. v. Dobree (11), A.-G. v. Robinson (12), and Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Scott's Trustees (10), but I think, as I have said, that I am bound to follow it.

C

The authorities are, in my view, difficult to reconcile. I am aware that a taxing statute must be taken as meaning exactly what it says, irrespective of any capricious or surprising consequences that may flow from such a construction of it, but, in truth, it surprises me that so simple and so ordinary a situation as is found in the present case should fall to be dealt with in the manner which the Crown suggests. The property which the plaintiff acquired on Nov. 10, 1934, viz., the policy, was essentially the same in character as any other property which is capable of absolute and unfettered ownership. The plaintiff could have sold it, mortgaged it, given it away, destroyed it, settled it, or (being a policy on his father's life) he could have surrendered it at the moment when his father was in extremis, at the point of death. In the case of none of these possible dealings on the plaintiff's part could the present claims have been established so far as I see. I will declare that no estate duty became payable on the deceased's death on the insurance policy or on the value of it or on any part of such value or on the sum of £48,765 which became payable thereunder or on any part of such sum. The defendants must pay the plaintiff's costs.

D

E

Order accordingly.

F

Solicitors: Frere, Cholmeley & Nicholsons (for the plaintiff); Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

TINKHAM v. PERRY.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Lord Radcliffe and Singleton, L.J.), December 18, 1950.]

Rent Restriction—Death of tenant—“Where tenant leaves no widow”—Implication of residence with tenant at time of his death—“Member of tenant’s family”—Woman living in adultery with tenant—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17); s. 12 (1) (g).

The tenant of a dwelling-house to which the Rent Restrictions Acts applied occupied the premises with his wife until in or about September, 1948, when the wife left the house and the defendant came to live with the tenant and had two children by him. In August, 1950, the tenant died, and the defendant remained in the house after his death. In an action by the landlord for possession, the defendant claimed the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts on the ground that she was a “member of the tenant’s family” within the meaning of s. 12 (1) (g) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, which provides that the expression “tenant” includes “the widow of a tenant who was residing with him at the time of his death, or, where a tenant leaves no widow . . . such member of the tenant’s family so residing as aforesaid . . .”

HELD: on the true construction of s. 12 (1) (g) it was not possible to limit the words “where a tenant leaves no widow” by the added qualification “residing with him as aforesaid”, and, since the tenant’s wife was still alive, the section did not apply and the defendant was not entitled to protection.

Re Bidie ([1948] 2 All E.R. 995), distinguished.

Per SIR RAYMOND EVERSHERD, M.R.: “I must not be taken in any way to be suggesting that [the defendant] could succeed in showing that a woman living with a tenant in these circumstances could be held to be a member of the tenant’s family.”

[AS TO STATUTORY TENANTS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 334, 335, paras. 400, 401, and 1950 Supplement; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 575, 576, Nos. 7226-7255, and Supplements.

FOR THE INCREASE OF RENT AND MORTGAGE INTEREST (RESTRICTIONS) ACT, 1920, s. 12 (1) (g), see HALSBURY’S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 13, p. 999.]

Case referred to:

(1) Re Bidie, Bidie v. General Accident Fire & Life Assurance Corpn., Ltd., [1948] 2 All E.R. 995; [1949] Ch. 121; [1949] L.J.R. 386; 113 J.P. 22; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the defendant from an order of His Honour JUDGE PRATT, made at Newton Abbot County Court, and dated Oct. 19, 1950, granting the landlord possession of a dwelling-house to which the Rent Restrictions Acts applied.

The county court judge held that the defendant, a woman who had been living with the statutory tenant of the premises up to the date of his death, his wife having left him, was not a member of the tenant’s family within the meaning of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, s. 12 (1) (g).

L. A. Blundell for the defendant.
Kisch for the landlord.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSHERD, M.R.: This is an appeal from a decision of His Honour JUDGE PRATT sitting at Newton Abbot County Court. The action was brought by Mrs. Tinkham, as landlord, for possession of certain premises, 11 Sea Lawn Terrace, Dawlish, against the defendant, Miss Perry, who at the time the proceedings were brought was living there with her two children of which the father was the former tenant of the premises, a Mr. Latter. Mr. Latter and his wife had lived at these premises for some time prior to September, 1948, but about that time Mrs. Latter left her husband, and the defendant then moved in and lived with Mr. Latter. As a result of their cohabitation the two children that I have mentioned were born. On Aug. 24, 1950, Mr. Latter died.

The claim of the defendant is that in the circumstances she falls within the ambit of para. (g) of s. 12 (1) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, either as Mr. Latter's "widow" or as a member of his family. In each case she says with truth that she was residing with the tenant at the date of his death. The language of para. (g) so far as relevant, is as follows:

"... the expression 'tenant' includes the widow of a tenant . . . who was residing with him at the time of his death, or, where a tenant . . . leaves no widow or is a woman, such member of the tenant's family so residing as aforesaid as may be decided in default of agreement by the county court."

Counsel for the defendant has felt unable to argue that his client falls within the first part of that definition. He cannot say that the defendant was the widow of Mr. Latter in any ordinary acceptance of those words, and certainly not within their use in this paragraph. He has, however, put forward an alternative argument, namely, that the second part of the definition can be made to apply to this case, and as a premise to that part of his case he says that the words "where a tenant leaves no widow" means "leaves no widow such as mentioned before," viz., a widow residing with him at the time of his death. If that is right, counsel was prepared to contend that the defendant, in the circumstances of the case, could fairly be described as a member of Mr. Latter's family. In my judgment, it is impossible as a matter of fair construction of the language to limit the phrase "where a tenant leaves no widow" by the added qualification "residing with him as aforesaid." Plainly, words should not be added by implication to the language of a statute unless it is necessary to do so to give the enactment sense and meaning in its context, and in this case I cannot see any need to read these words in any other than their ordinary sense. They apply, therefore, only to the case where, in fact, a tenant dies leaving no widow. Since Mr. Latter did not so die (for Mrs. Latter is still alive) it follows that the rest of the paragraph cannot apply.

The chief ground on which counsel urged us to add the qualification I have indicated was this. He said that unless some such qualification were added we should introduce anomalies that Parliament cannot be thought to have intended. Thus, in the simple, and not infrequent, case where a man's wife has parted from him and he lives in a rent controlled house with children of his own, those children could not on his death claim the benefit of the Act because there was then living, elsewhere and separated from the husband, his widow. That, says counsel, is a harsh result which Parliament could not have intended. Further, it is said, in the other case introduced by this part of the paragraph, the case where the tenant is a woman, there is no such requisite that she should leave no widower. Putting those two considerations together, it makes, according to the argument, a more probable result to say that the words "where a tenant leaves no widow" mean "where the tenant leaves no widow residing as aforesaid." I fully accept the force of those considerations, and, indeed, it looks as though Parliament may not have chosen its language with all its customary care, but the fact is that sense can perfectly well be given to this paragraph by reading the words as they are written and according to their ordinary context.

Re Bidie (1), to which counsel alluded, was a wholly different case. The question there was whether the words in s. 2 (1) of the Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938, "representation in regard to the testator's estate for general purposes is first taken out " meant representation of any kind, whether on an intestacy or by probate of a will. If they meant the former, which might be said prima facie to be what the words say, then in the case of a man dying apparently intestate, but whose will was discovered some time later, the widow would be liable to be barred altogether from claiming the benefit of that Act. The whole purpose of the Act of 1938, however, was to give relief in certain circumstances to a woman who was inadequately provided for by the testator's will, that is to say, the statute only operates in the case of persons dying testate. That being so, it was held by this court to be not only the natural, but also the necessary, consequence that the word "representation" must have been intended to refer to representation in the sense of probate being granted of the will under which the widow was claiming or could claim.

A

B No such consideration applies to the present case, and, therefore, I agree with the learned judge that we cannot introduce into this paragraph the words which counsel asks should be inserted.

In the circumstances it is unnecessary to consider the rest of counsel's argument, though I must not be taken in any way to be suggesting that he could succeed in showing that a woman living with a tenant in these circumstances could be held to be a member of the tenant's family. On that I say nothing, having heard no argument, but I wish to avoid any suggestion that I should, apart from this point, have decided this case in the defendant's favour on that ground. For these reasons, I think the appeal should be dismissed.

C

LORD RADCLIFFE: I agree with all that has been said by the learned Master of the Rolls. The circumstances of the case are sad, but, in my view, there would be no chance of the appeal succeeding unless the court was entitled to construe these words in s. 12 (1) (g) "leaves no widow" as if they meant "leaves no widow so residing as aforesaid." It seems to me impossible to find in the context of that section or of the Act of 1920 as a whole any material which would entitle a court to introduce that qualification. Indeed, the fact that in the succeeding sentence appear the words "such member of the tenant's family so residing as aforesaid," referring to a member of the tenant's family, make it very difficult to suppose that, if the legislature had intended the same qualification to apply to the word "widow", it would not have expressly introduced the words there also. For these reasons I agree that the appeal must fail.

D

E

SINGLETON, L.J.: I agree.

F

Appeal dismissed. No order as to costs.

Solicitors: Baileys, Shaw & Gillett, agents for Tozers, Dawlish (for the defendant); Taylor, Jelf & Co., agents for J. & S. P. Pope, Exeter (for the landlord).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

TINSLEY v. DUDLEY.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Jenkins, L.J., and Danckwerts, J.), December 11, 12, 1950.]

Bailment—Delivery to bailee—Goods on bailee's premises—Irrelevance of whether bailor invitee or licensee—Licensee of public house—Motor bicycle left in covered yard, marked "garage," adjoining and forming part of premises.

Before going into a public house for refreshment the plaintiff left his motor bicycle in a closed yard adjoining and forming part of the premises. On the gates of the yard was the name of the public house followed by the words: "Covered yard and garage." There was no attendant to look after vehicles which might be brought into the yard, and the plaintiff did not tell the defendant, the licensee of the public house, that he had left the bicycle there. When the plaintiff left the public house, he found that the bicycle had been stolen. In an action against the defendant claiming damages for its loss,

HELD: (i) assuming that the defendant was not an innkeeper at common law and that he would not be liable for the loss of the motor bicycle unless the inference could be drawn from the circumstances that the plaintiff had actually or constructively delivered the bicycle into his safe keeping, it was irrelevant to consider whether the plaintiff was an invitee or a licensee at the material time because the validity of the distinction between invitee and licensee bore only on matters relating to dangers arising from defects in the physical condition of the invitor's or licensor's premises and personal injury resulting therefrom, and not on those relating to the existence of some form of bailment of goods with the invitor or licensor, and, even if the plaintiff were an invitee, it did not follow that there was a delivery of possession of the bicycle by him to the defendant.

(ii) on the facts there was a general invitation to customers, if so minded, to leave their vehicles in the yard and this invitation was accepted by the plaintiff, but there was no delivery of possession, either actual or constructive, of the bicycle to the defendant, and, therefore, the defendant was not liable for its loss.

Ashby v. Tolhurst ([1937] 2 All E.R. 837), applied.

[EDITORIAL NOTE. This case should be compared with Williams v. Linnitt, post, p. 278.

AS TO NATURE OF CONTRACT OF BAILMENT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 1, pp. 747, 748, para. 1231; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 3, pp. 53-57, Nos. 1-32.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) R. v. Rymer, (1877), 2 Q.B.D. 136; 46 L.J.M.C. 108; 35 L.T. 774; 41 J.P. 199; 29 Digest 9, 103.
- (2) Sealey v. Tandy, [1902] 1 K.B. 296; 71 L.J.K.B. 41; 85 L.T. 459; 66 J.P. 19; 29 Digest 3, 11.
- (3) R. v. Armagh JJ., [1897] 2 I.R. 57; 30 I.L.T. 47; 30 Digest 68, c.
- (4) Scarborough v. Cosgrove, [1905] 2 K.B. 805; 74 L.J.K.B. 892; 93 L.T. 530; 3 Digest 83, 187.
- (5) Indermaur v. Dames, (1866), L.R. 1 C.P. 274; Har. & Ruth. 243; 35 L.J.C.P. 184; 14 L.T. 484; affd., (1867), L.R. 2 C.P. 311; 36 L.J. C.P. 181; 16 L.T. 293; 31 J.P. 390; 36 Digest 35, 208.
- (6) Ashby v. Tolhurst, [1937] 2 All E.R. 837; [1937] 2 K.B. 242; 106 L.J.K.B. 783; 156 L.T. 518; Digest Supp.
- (7) Ulzen v. Nicols, [1894] 1 Q.B. 92; 63 L.J.Q.B. 289; 70 L.T. 140; 58 J.P. 103; 3 Digest 57, 32.

(8) Robins & Co. v. Gray, [1895] 2 Q.B. 501; 65 L.J.Q.B. 44; 73 L.T. 252; 59 J.P. 741; 29 Digest 19, 240.

(9) Deyong v. Shenburn, [1946] 1 All E.R. 226; [1946] K.B. 227; 115 L.J.K.B. 262; 174 L.T. 129; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the defendant, the licensee of a public house, from an order of His Honour JUDGE SAMUEL, K.C., made at Whitechurch County Court on Oct. 25, 1950, whereby he held the defendant liable in damages to the plaintiff for the loss of the plaintiff's motor bicycle, which had been left by the plaintiff in a covered yard adjoining the public house while the plaintiff took refreshment on the premises. The name of the public house, followed by the words "Covered yard and garage," appeared on the door of the yard. The learned county court judge held that the relationship between the parties at the material time was that of invitee and invitor, and by virtue of that relationship the defendant was under a duty to take all reasonable precautions to keep the motor bicycle safe against theft. The facts appear in the judgment of SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R.

Stephen Chapman for the defendant.

N. C. Bridge for the plaintiff.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R.: The case presented by this appeal is not free from difficulty and not without public interest. I shall have to refer presently in some detail to the evidence of the plaintiff, but, shortly expressed, the facts in question are these. On Aug. 20, 1949, the plaintiff arrived on his motor bicycle at a public house, called the Wheatsheaf, at Green End, Whitechurch, the time being 8.35 p.m. He placed his motor bicycle on an area or space, a part of the premises, went into the public house, and had a drink. A little later he left the public house to call on a friend, returning at 10 p.m. According to the plaintiff's evidence, the motor bicycle was then still at the place where he had left it. After some further refreshment he left the public house at 10.23 p.m. and found his motor bicycle missing. It had been stolen and has not since been recovered. The plaintiff sued the defendant, who is the licensee and tenant of the Wheatsheaf, for damages, the figure claimed being £130, on which figure there is no dispute. In his pleadings and at the trial before the learned county court judge, the plaintiff put his case on two alternative grounds. The plaintiff first alleged that the defendant was an innkeeper within the meaning of the Innkeepers' Liability Act, 1863, that, as such, he owed a duty to the plaintiff to look after the motor bicycle while on his premises, and that he failed to perform that duty. It is said that the duty was owed to the plaintiff either as a traveller or otherwise. Secondly, and alternatively, the plaintiff alleged that in the circumstances of this case there came into existence between the plaintiff and the defendant a contract whereby the defendant undertook to use reasonable care to look after the plaintiff's motor bicycle, that he failed to perform that duty, and is liable, accordingly, in negligence for the sum claimed.

In this court we have had the advantage of most careful and lucid arguments from counsel for the parties. In that regard I do not doubt that we have had a substantial advantage over the learned county court judge. As a result, certain points have dropped out for the purposes of this decision. Thus, counsel for the defendant conceded that, if in truth his client was an innkeeper, he would be liable to the plaintiff, whether because he was a traveller or otherwise, under the first head of the plaintiff's claim. He has, however, drawn our attention to such authority as there is on the question of the true characteristics of an innkeeper. Counsel for the plaintiff has not felt able to address to us contrary arguments, and in those circumstances I shall deal briefly with the reasoning which (as counsel for the defendant suggests) concludes the case as to innkeeper in his favour.

Counsel for the defendant read, as part of his argument, certain passages from JELF AND HURST ON THE LAW OF INNKEEPERS, pp. 2 and 5, according to which it is of the essence of an innkeeper's functions that he should afford relief and lodging to people travelling from place to place. Counsel for the defendant also referred to one or two authorities, such as R. v. Rymer (1), Sealey v. Tandy (2), and R. v. Armagh JJ. (3), an Irish case. Those cases, he contended, support the view that no one can be said to be an innkeeper unless he offers accommodation in the sense of lodging to persons who want to stay at his house. A
It is beyond dispute that the Wheatsheaf offered no such accommodation. There was, I understand, one spare bedroom, but it was not furnished, and, therefore, there was absent the characteristic which counsel for the defendant has contended is essential, namely, that there should be lodging available to persons who require to avail themselves of it. As I have said, counsel for the plaintiff has not felt able to cite authority or prefer an argument contrary to that view. B
In case, on any future occasion, it is necessary further to pursue the matter, it is desirable that I should say no more about it than that, on the arguments as presented and in view of the concession of counsel for the plaintiff, I proceed by assuming and holding that in this case the defendant was not an innkeeper, and, therefore, that the first head on which the plaintiff seeks to found himself cannot be sustained. C

The result is that the determination of this appeal must depend on the second argument put forward by the plaintiff, namely: Was there a contract of the kind I have indicated? Again we are assisted by the concession of counsel for the plaintiff, which is to the effect that, if there be a contract giving rise to liability on the defendant's part, there must have been some delivery to the defendant of the possession or custody of the motor bicycle. The argument D of counsel for the plaintiff is that such a giving of possession or custody was found as a fact by the learned judge and that there is some evidence to support it.

Before I further develop that matter, which is the main point in the case, I will first dispose of a subsidiary argument of counsel for the plaintiff, founded on Scarborough v. Cosgrove (4). Counsel for the plaintiff contended that that case (which was a case of a boarding-house keeper and not of an innkeeper) E affords an analogy which can be applied in this case to impose similar liability on the defendant. I say at once that I do not accept that argument. I think, if I may venture to say so, that it is confusing the special circumstances of a particular case with a matter of principle, and that there does not emerge from the case any valid ground or basis for supporting a claim for liability different from that to which I shall later refer. In Scarborough v. Cosgrove (4), the two F plaintiffs, a husband and wife, were lodgers at a boarding-house kept by the defendant. On the occasion of their visit, the female plaintiff pointed out to the defendant's manager that she had with her some jewellery, and she made inquiries in regard to the locking up of the bedroom which they were occupying or of some receptacle in the bedroom, so that the jewels could be safely stored. The defendant's manager, aware, therefore, of the existence of the valuables, G explained that no separate key could be given, but assured the plaintiff that, if they were left in the room in the ordinary way, they would be quite safe. From those facts it is not, indeed, altogether surprising that the court held that there was a duty on the defendant, the boarding-house keeper, to take reasonable care for the safety of the jewels, and that there was evidence of a breach of that duty. It is to be observed that (unlike the present case) H the subject-matter was personal belongings of the person staying in the boarding-house, and (still more significant) that their existence was disclosed to the defendant in the action, or her agent, who in turn made representations to the plaintiff in regard to them. In his judgment SIR ROBERT ROMER, L.J., stated his view on the liability of a boarding-house keeper to a paying guest in respect of the latter's luggage. After referring to two cases, the learned lord justice said ([1905] 2 K.B. 814):

"I think it right, therefore, to state my opinion on the subject. One thing is clear—namely, that the liability of the landlord of the boarding-house in respect of the luggage is not co-extensive with the liability of an ordinary innkeeper, but what the extent of the liability is remains to be considered. It appears to me that, before that can be ascertained, it is necessary, at any rate to a certain extent, to inquire into the particular circumstances of each case. It may be that some of the luggage has been committed temporarily, or during the stay of the lodger, into the sole custody of the landlord. In that case, clearly, there would be a duty on the part of the landlord to take reasonable care of it. On the other hand, there may be cases where, by arrangement between the parties, the guest has taken upon himself solely the care of his luggage, and in those cases, whatever may be the duties of the landlord towards his guest, they could not be treated as based on the footing that in any sense he had the custody or partial custody of the luggage. The difficulty as to the law arises in cases like the present, which are intermediate between the two I have just mentioned, and where the luggage cannot be said to be in the sole custody of either the landlord or the guest."

C I have read that passage because it emphasises the important point which I think is vital in this case, viz., that the decision must depend on discovering in whose hands was the custody of the article in question.

I now refer to the judgment of the learned judge in this case. He said:

D "I came to the conclusion that on the night in question the relationship between the parties was that of invitee and invitor. It was admitted by the defendant's advocate that, as far as the plaintiff personally was concerned, he was an invitee whilst purchasing and consuming alcoholic liquor on the premises, but he was only a licensee for the purpose of taking and leaving his motor cycle in the defendant's yard. I cannot draw that distinction. The yard in question forms part of the whole premises. On the door of the yard, as is shown by the photograph, is painted in big letters 'Covered yard and garage.' In my view, the said words constitute at least an implied invitation to those who have business at the defendant's inn that they may leave any vehicle therein whilst on the said premises. Whilst the said motor cycle was there on Aug. 20, 1949, and whilst the plaintiff was on the premises consuming his liquor, the said motor cycle was taken away by some unauthorised person and it has not been recovered by the plaintiff. In my view, the defendant failed to exercise reasonable care of the said motor cycle whilst it was in his keeping as aforesaid."

G It is on those last few words that counsel for the plaintiff has fastened, for he says (as I have already indicated) that there is here a finding that the relationship which existed in the circumstances of the case on the evening of Aug. 20 was such that the bicycle was in the keeping of the defendant. I am unable to accept that submission. I cannot resist or escape the conclusion that the foundation of that particular finding or conclusion on the part of the county court judge lay in this, that the relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant was that of invitee and invitor as distinct from licensee and H licenser. In so far as he based himself on that distinction, I think, with all respect to him, that the learned judge fell into error and misdirected himself. I think he wrongly assumed that if, as might well have been the proper inference, the plaintiff was an invitee, it followed that there was a delivery of custody or possession of the motor bicycle to the defendant as invitor. Therein, to my mind, lies the fallacy in the judgment. It has been many times considered by the courts whether the relationship of one person to another on, or in respect of, certain premises, is that of licensee or invitee, but the validity of the distinction bears only, I think, on matters of personal injury or, at most, material injury which is incidental or ancillary to personal injury. The basis of liability in the case of an invitee is too well known to require any long citation. In Indermaur v. Dames (5), WILLES, J., states (L.R. 1 C.P. 288) that such a person “ . . . is entitled to expect that the occupier shall on his part use reasonable care to prevent damage from unusual danger, which he knows or ought to know . . . ”

On examination of the cases, however, the damage which there is referred to is injury to the person rather than damage to the goods of the invitee, save to the extent that such material damage may, as I have said, be purely ancillary to personal injury. There is no authority for the view that an invitee quoad his belongings, such as a motor car or motor bicycle, has some higher right as against the invitor than has a licensee against a licensor. Indeed, such a view could not rest on any intelligible principle, for, as counsel for the plaintiff has rightly conceded, the liability of the defendant depends on possession or custody, and I cannot see that the distinction between a licensee, on the one hand, and an invitee, on the other, can of itself bear on or be relevant to the question of the existence of some sort of bailment.

Counsel for the defendant made Ashby v. Tolhurst (6) the foundation of his argument. Having regard again to the concession which counsel for the plaintiff has properly made, I do not propose to go at length into the facts and judgments in that case. The plaintiff in that case had left his motor car in a car park belonging to the defendants, and the action raised the general question: What is the position of one who parks his car (to use the modern phrase) in a car park? On the occasion in question the plaintiff was given a ticket, and much turned in the course of the arguments and judgments on the effect of the ticket. Apart from that, however, it seems to me plain that the decision in this court proceeded on the view that one who parks his car in a car park does not thereby deliver over the possession or custody of the motor car to the keeper of the park—at any rate, in the absence of some unusual or special circumstances which did not exist in that case and were not to be imported by the giving or the terms of the ticket. Counsel for the defendant in the case now before us particularly relied on a passage in the judgment of SIR WILFRID GREENE, M.R., where he said ([1937] 2 All E.R. 840):

“ It seems to me that reading the document as a whole, including its own description of itself, namely, ‘car park ticket,’ it really means no more than this: the holder of this ticket is entitled to park his car in the Sea Way Car Park, but . . . this does not mean that the proprietors are going to be responsible for it. If that be the true construction of the document, and I think it is, the argument that the presence of these exempting conditions points to the view that they are inserted in order to remove a contractual liability which would otherwise be there disappears and, in my opinion, the argument, when applied to a document of this kind, is not one of any real weight. If that be the true view, the relationship was a relationship of licensor and licensee alone, and that relationship in itself would carry no obligations of the licensor towards the licensee in relation to the chattel left there, no obligation to provide anybody to look after it, no liability for any negligent act of any person in the employment of the licensor who happened to be there.”

It is true that in the present case no suggestion was made, and no part of the argument or judgment was addressed, to the possibility of the relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant being that of invitee and invitor. I think that that was because it would have been beside the point. If it were relevant to determine in which character the plaintiff was clothed, it may, indeed, be that he was an invitee rather than a licensee. The point, however, is whether or not there was a contract whereby custody or possession of the car was handed over to the car park owner. The distinction, therefore, must, I think, be between licensee or invitee, on the one hand, and bailor, on the other. Ashby v. Tolhurst (6) is of some importance, because it laid down clearly that one who leaves his motor car in a car park cannot assume or assert against the car park proprietor any obligation to use reasonable care to look after the car. If, therefore, on the true view of the facts in the case now before us, this yard, which was part of the Wheatsheaf premises, was really no more than a car park, the case is governed by Ashby v. Tolhurst (6). On the other hand, it is conceded that, if I take my motor car to a garage, in the ordinary acceptation of that term, and leave it in the garage, prima facie there would be a delivery over of possession or custody to the garage proprietor. Common experience is that in such a case there is inevitably some attendant there, and, if it is permissible to have regard to the meaning of words, "garage," according to the SHORTER OXFORD ENGLISH DICTIONARY, is a place "for the storage or re-fitting of motor vehicles."

I must now examine the evidence in the present case. First, I will refer to the photograph with which we have been supplied, as counsel for the plaintiff has concentrated his case on what the photograph discloses. On the left of the entrance to the public house appears an archway or entrance to the place or yard in question. Dividing the archway from the public highway appear to be double doors. As the learned judge pointed out, they bear, in large characters, the legend: "Wheatsheaf: covered yard and garage." From the photograph it appears that the doors are capable of being locked against entry by means of a padlock—and, when the photograph was taken, they possibly were—and it further appears, though I have not myself been able to attach great significance to the fact, that along the top of the doors there is a series of spikes. I shall return to the true view of the invitation imported by the words on the doors, but first let me refer to the other evidence of the nature of this yard and what occurred on the relevant evening. The plaintiff said that he went to the hotel with his motor bicycle. He identified the photograph. Then he said:

"I put the motor cycle in the hotel yard, and went in to get a drink. I went out of hotel to see friends. I returned to hotel at 10 p.m. when motor cycle was there. I went into hotel and had some more drinks, and went out at 10.23 p.m. and found the motor cycle had gone. I did not know whether an attendant was kept to look after contents of yard. I did not immobilise the motor cycle. I did not tell defendant I had left motor cycle there. There was no charge for leaving it there."

The plaintiff's evidence was supported by that of a friend, who merely stated that the plaintiff left the motor bicycle in the defendant's yard. The defendant gave evidence as to the nature of his business. So far as this point is concerned, he said, in his evidence-in-chief, only that he did not see the motor bicycle, that the plaintiff did not tell him that he had left it there, nor did he pay for so doing. The defendant was not cross-examined on that part of his evidence. It seems to me clear, therefore, that, if the evidence which I have read stood alone, there would be no basis whatever in this case for saying that there was any delivery over to the defendant or to any agent of the defendant of possession or custody of the motor bicycle. As the plaintiff frankly said, he never told anyone that he was putting it there. It is clear that there was no one about. He said that he did not know whether there ever was an attendant. He certainly did not see one, and, whatever may have been the reason for the shutting, and, perhaps, the locking, of the gates when this photograph was taken, there is no sort of suggestion that access to the yard was not open and available to any who liked to walk in. Can, therefore, the ordinary conclusion or inference which, I think, inevitably flows from the evidence given at the trial be in any way affected by the nature of the invitation on the door, particularly by the use of the word "garage"? I have come to a clear conclusion that in this case it cannot. I think that the learned judge was right to say that the wording on the door was an invitation. I should be content for my part to accept further the nature of the invitation as the judge stated it, namely, an invitation to those who had business on the premises that they could leave any vehicle there while in the premises. That seems to me to be no more than saying: "Here is a car park for the use of those who want to go into the public house." I am bound to say that on this evidence the use of the word "garage," to my mind, is more eulogistic than accurate, and I do not, therefore, think that it can be asserted in this case that the wording on the door, together with the rest of the evidence, involved the result that there was here symbolically a delivery over of possession to the defendant, or, put the other way round, that, there being an invitation by the defendant which the plaintiff accepted, the defendant could not be heard to say that he had not accepted custody of the motor bicycle.

I think, if that is right, that the facts and the basis of the decision in such a case as Ulsen v. Nicols (7) cannot apply here. There the question was: Had there been a bailment in the case of a coat? In the Westminster County Court, the jury had found as a fact that there had. It is plain from the judgments in the Divisional Court that both judges felt grave doubt about the propriety of the finding. CHARLES, J., thought that there was evidence to support it, and, therefore, that the Divisional Court could not interfere. WRIGHT, J., dealt with it more briefly by saying that the point that there was no bailment had not been taken in the county court and was not, therefore, available, so that the finding as to bailment must be assumed to be correct. When one examines the facts, however, it seems clear that there was some evidence to support it, for there was a physical delivery of the coat to a servant of the restaurateur, a waiter, who took it and hung it on a peg. Nothing like that delivery over of possession, actual or symbolical, occurred in this case, and I think, therefore, that there was no evidence here which can be said to support the view that there had been a transfer of possession. If that is so, of course, the defendant must succeed and the judgment cannot stand.

Since the judge never has, I think, really applied his mind to the true question, I have thought anxiously whether it would be right to send the case back for a new trial, but I have come to the conclusion that it would merely involve the parties in unnecessary expense. The judge's note is brief, but there has been no suggestion by counsel for the plaintiff that it is in any way inadequate or that any facts were stated or sworn to by the plaintiff which are not recorded in the note. As ROMER, L.J., said in the Scarborough case (4), all these cases must depend on their own facts, and it should not, therefore, be assumed that in every case in which a place adjoining a public house is provided for the leaving or storage of motor cars by patrons of the house, it will follow that the publican is under no liability. It would depend on whether, in the particular case, such a contract of bailment comes into existence or not. In this case, it is quite clear on the evidence that no such contract was made. It was for the plaintiff in the action to prove his case, and I think that he failed to do so. One cannot help feeling sympathy for the plaintiff, who, being quite innocent, loses the possession of his motor cycle, but there is, after all, something to be said for the view that, if, as is the fact in the present case, the question is on which of two quite innocent persons a loss should fall, the loss may be left where it has fallen. However that may be, I am clear, on an examination of this case, that there was no evidence which would support a delivery of possession or custody and, therefore, that there was no basis in fact for the judge's finding, on which counsel for the plaintiff has relied. that the motor bicycle was in the defendant's keeping. That being so, in my opinion, the action should be dismissed and the appeal must succeed.

JENKINS, L.J.: I agree. As SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R., has said, this appeal falls to be determined on the footing that the Wheatsheaf was not an inn and the defendant was not an innkeeper in the common law sense. In Robins & Co. v. Gray (8) there is a well-known passage in the judgment of LORD ESHER, M.R. ([1895] 2 Q.B. 503), which begins:

“The duties, liabilities, and rights of innkeepers with respect to goods brought to inns by guests are founded, not upon bailment, or pledge, or contract, but upon the custom of the realm with regard to innkeepers.”

This case falling to be determined on the footing that the Wheatsheaf is not an inn, I think the contrast drawn in that passage is, perhaps, instructive. An innkeeper is under a special liability by virtue of the custom of the realm. In other cases, the liability, if any, must be found in some bailment or pledge or contract. In this case, I think the relevant ground of liability would be bailment or contract, and I think it can, in effect, be further narrowed down to bailment, as the contract must be one which amounts to a bailment in that there must be actual or constructive delivery of the chattel into the hands of the person who is said to be responsible for its safe custody.

The question, therefore, is whether, in the circumstances in which the plaintiff came to leave his motor bicycle in the yard of the Wheatsheaf in the present case, the defendant, as proprietor and occupier of the Wheatsheaf, is fixed with liability for the theft of the bicycle. [HIS LORDSHIP stated the facts.] The learned county court judge held—in my view, rightly—that the plaintiff was an invitee at the Wheatsheaf. He held further—and, I think, rightly—that, having regard to the notice written on the doors of the covered yard and garage, the invitation extended not only to the plaintiff himself, but also to his motor bicycle. In fact, the position was that the defendant, as the proprietor of the Wheatsheaf, extended a general invitation to customers to come to the Wheatsheaf and consume the liquor provided, and, if they chose, while they were so doing, to leave any vehicle or bicycle, in or on which they came, in the yard. From that, however, the learned county court judge reached the conclusion that the bicycle passed into the keeping of the defendant and he became under a duty to use reasonable care to see that it was not stolen. In my view, that conclusion was not supported by the finding that the relationship of invitor and invitee existed between the defendant and the plaintiff. Counsel for the plaintiff ingeniously argued that in the judgment there is something amounting to a finding that, on the facts, a contract of bailment was to be inferred, and he said that there was some evidence to support that finding and it ought not to be disturbed. The effect of the whole of the evidence, however, supports a case of invitor and invitee and nothing more. Therefore, the judgment comes, as I think, to this. The learned judge, having found that the relationship of invitor and invitee existed, held that by virtue of that relationship the defendant became responsible for keeping the motor bicycle safe against theft and taking all reasonable precautions to that end.

In my judgment, that liability cannot, as a matter of law, be inferred from the relationship of invitor and invitee. As is well known, a distinction is drawn in the cases for certain purposes between mere licensees and invitees, invitees being a class of licensees who are not merely authorised to come on premises, but are expressly or by implication invited to do so. The purpose, however, for which that distinction has been drawn has been that of measuring the liability of the occupier of premises to persons coming on them with respect to the safety of the premises in point of physical condition, and an invitor has been placed under a more stringent liability in that respect to his invitees than a mere licensor to his licensees. The distinction is one which, owing to the unsatisfactory results produced in certain cases and the difficulty in many instances of distinguishing or drawing the line between invitees and mere licensees, has not escaped criticism from time to time, but it is a well-established distinction in the field to which it applies, and the field to which it applies is the physical safety of the premises. There is no warrant at all on the authorities, so far as I know, for holding that an invitor, where the invitation extends to the goods as well as the person of the invitee, thereby by implication of law assumes a liability to protect the invitee and his goods, not merely from physical dangers arising from defects in the premises, but from the risk of the goods being stolen by some third party. That implied liability, so far as I know, is one unknown to the law. It would be a liability of a most sweeping and comprehensive character and would have entered into a very great number of cases if it existed. It would by now be well-established by the authorities. For example, in Deyong v. Shenburn (9), in which an actor's property was stolen from the theatre in which he was rehearsing, a decision could have been reached on the very short ground that the actor was an invitee, that the invitation extended to the necessary properties he had to bring with him for the purpose of his performance, and, accordingly, that the proprietor or occupier of the theatre was responsible to him for the safe custody of his goods. It was not even sought to argue the case on that ground, but an analogous course was taken, in that it was sought to extend the liability of an employer to his employee for the safety of the premises on which the employee is required to work to the safety from theft of the property brought by the employee into the place of employment. DU PARCQ, L.J., dismissed that contention on the ground that there was no warrant whatever for extending the liability of the master for the physical safety of his servant to the safety of the goods of the servant from theft. I venture to think that, if the case had been argued, as it might have been, on the basis of invitor and invitee, an attempt to extend the liability of the invitor from the physical safety of the invitee to the safety of the invitee's goods from theft would have been equally shortly dismissed.

Therefore, I agree that, as SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R., has said, the defendant can only be fixed with liability if the inference can properly be drawn from the circumstances that there was an actual or constructive delivery of the bicycle into his safe keeping. On the facts, it seems to me that clearly there was no such delivery, actual or constructive. There was no attendant in the yard to whom the motor bicycle could be handed over. The plaintiff never even told the defendant that he had left the bicycle in the yard. The yard was one to which access could readily be had from the street by anyone. There was nothing beyond the general invitation to customers, if so minded, to leave their vehicles or bicycles in the yard—an invitation accepted by the plaintiff. In my judgment, those facts fall far short of what is required to show an actual or constructive delivery of the machine into the charge of the defendant. The onus which it is sought to place on persons in the situation of the defendant, and which would be placed on them, as it seems to me, if the learned county court judge's judgment was correct, would be an enormously heavy and quite unreasonable onus in the circumstances of the case. It would place them under an obligation, in effect, to keep a yard such as the defendant's yard under constant watch by some attendant appointed for the purpose, and, probably, owing to the hours of duty involved, it would be necessary to have more than one of these people in order that the watch might be constantly kept. Nothing short of that, so far as I can see, would protect the proprietor of premises such as these. Where the special and peculiarly stringent liability imposed on innkeepers, in the common law sense, is not in question, an obligation of that onerous character is not lightly to be inferred, and, in my judgment, it would be quite wrong to infer it from a mere general invitation to customers of an hotel, if so minded, to leave their vehicles in the yard of the hotel, with nothing over and above that amounting either to a delivery of the vehicle or bicycle into the charge of the proprietor of the premises, or, at least, to some representation by such proprietor that, in the event of vehicles or bicycles being left there, they would be safely kept. For the reasons which I have endeavoured to state, in addition to those already stated by SIR RAYMOND EVERSHERD, M.R., I agree that this appeal should be allowed.

DANCKWERTS, J.: I, also, am of the same opinion. The learned county court judge based his judgment on the finding that the plaintiff was an invitee rather than a licensee. Such a distinction is relevant to a claim in tort for injury to the person, but, as it seems to me, is not relevant to a claim for loss of goods. As regards his motor bicycle, it seems to me that the only invitation, if any, which the plaintiff received was to accept a licence to leave it in the yard. He never brought the presence of the motor bicycle there to the notice of the defendant or placed it in the care of the defendant or his servants. All the cases in which the owner of premises other than an innkeeper has been held to be liable for loss of property belonging to persons resorting to the premises appear to depend on a contractual acceptance of liability to take care of such property by virtue of a bailment or deposit with the knowledge of the owner of the premises or his servants. That contractual element did not exist in the present case. In my view, therefore, the defendant was under no liability to the plaintiff for the loss of the motor bicycle, and, accordingly, this appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Nash, Field & Co., agents for Garnett & Culey, Crewe (for the defendant); Jaques & Co., agents for Cyril Jones, Son & Williams, Wrexham (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

BROCK v. RICHARDS.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Eversherd, M.R., Singleton, L.J., and Vaisey, J.), November 30, December 1, 19, 1950.]

Animal—Straying—Propensity to stray—Horse straying on to highway—Duty of owner.

The plaintiff was riding his motor bicycle along the highway when a mare jumped over a hedge bordering the highway, descended on the motor bicycle, and injured the plaintiff. The animal was unbroken, over five years old, and had a propensity to stray, but the county court judge found that she had not a dangerous nature. On appeal,

HELD: the occupier of land bordering the highway was under no duty to prevent his animals from straying on the highway unless they were dangerous (as, e.g., owing to their frolicsome behaviour) or mischievous; the fact that the mare in the present case had a special proclivity towards straying did not impose such a duty on the defendant; and, therefore, he was under no liability to the plaintiff.

Searle v. Wallbank ([1947] 1 All E.R. 12), applied.

Per SIR RAYMOND EVERSHERD, M.R.: (i) Apart from the case of special propensities, liability is not imposed on the owner of an animal by reason of special circumstances affecting the nature of the locus in quo, that is, is not imposed because the animal when straying goes over or through a hedge or down a bank and thereby creates the accident.

(ii) it must be treated as clear that an animal, though not savage, which is dangerous because of its frolicsome behaviour, must be taken to have propensities against which (if he knows of them) the owner has a duty to guard. If the horse had a propensity for leaping over hedges on passers-by, and that were known to the owner, he might well be under a duty to keep the horse tethered.

[AS TO INJURIES BY HARMLESS AND DOMESTIC ANIMALS, see HALSBURY, A Hailsham Edn., Vol. 1, pp. 539-542, paras. 929-932; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 2, pp. 229-235, Nos. 198-230.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Searle v. Wallbank, [1947] 1 All E.R. 12; [1947] A.C. 341; [1947] L.J.R. 258; 176 L.T. 104; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Donoghue v. Stevenson, [1932] A.C. 562; 101 L.J.P.C. 119; 147 L.T. 281; B Digest Supp.
- (3) Mason v. Keeling, (1699), 1 Ld. Raym. 606; 91 E.R. 1305; 2 Digest 243, 274.
- (4) Smith v. Cook, (1875), 1 Q.B.D. 79; 45 L.J.Q.B. 122; 33 L.T. 1722; 40 J.P. 247; 2 Digest 253, 345.
- (5) Fardon v. Harcourt-Rivington, (1932), 146 L.T. 391; Digest Supp. C

APPEAL by the defendant against an order of His Honour JUDGE RAWLINS, made at Newquay County Court, and dated Oct. 4, 1950. The learned judge held that the defendant who owned a horse which had to his knowledge a propensity to stray, was liable for damage sustained by the plaintiff when the horse jumped over a hedge and collided with the plaintiff who was passing on his motor bicycle. D

John Thompson and Gazdar for the defendant.

C. Lawson for the plaintiff.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 19. The following judgments were read.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R.: This appeal relates to a remarkable, E but happily not a serious, accident suffered by the plaintiff on Jan. 13, 1950. When riding on his motor bicycle in the evening of that day along the main road from St. Austell to Newquay, he was passing a field owned or occupied by the defendant. At this point a black mare belonging to the defendant leapt over or through the hedge bordering the highway and (according to the plaintiff's evidence) landed on his petrol tank. By the present action he sued F the defendant for damages for negligence in failing to keep the mare under proper control. The learned county court judge gave judgment for the plaintiff for £28 11s. 8d., and that figure has been agreed in this court as a fair sum for compensation to the plaintiff for his personal injuries and the damage done to his motor bicycle and clothing.

I propose to deal briefly with the evidence given at the trial, for I shall read G in full that part of the learned judge's judgment which covers his findings of fact. The plaintiff was supported by two other witnesses, a farmer and a farm labourer. There was in the testimony of these two latter witnesses enough, beyond doubt, to support a finding that the mare (which, though over five years old, had never been broken) was at least of a "mischievous" nature. Thus, although it did not appear ever to have bitten or injured anyone, it was H nevertheless said to possess the curious and alarming habit of dashing towards a human being "with mouth abroad," and then stopping some two or three yards short, and the farmer stated that it would try to bite or kick anyone who tried to catch it when straying on the road. On the other side was the evidence of the defendant, his wife, a stableman and a veterinary surgeon. All these witnesses gave the mare a good character, free from vice and bad temper, though Mrs. Richards, the defendant's wife, who plainly regarded the animal with affection, conceded, in answering a question put to her by the judge, that the mare was different from other horses and was "rather temperamental."

A I have not had the great advantage of seeing or hearing the witnesses, but I am bound to say that, if I were to judge from the judge's notes of the evidence, I should feel strongly disposed to conclude that the mare, though not vicious or savage, was, being unbroken, of a sufficiently mettlesome character to be fairly described as mischievous, but, as will presently appear, the learned judge clearly, to my mind, negatived that view. By finding as a fact—and I think it impossible to say that there was no evidence to support the finding—that the mare had a sweet nature and was in no way dangerous and that her only unusual characteristic was her propensity to stray, he must necessarily have rejected the evidence of other qualities. The question then is: Will such a finding of fact support in law the judgment for the plaintiff?

B The learned judge posed the question for his decision thus:

C "To succeed in this action the plaintiff must show either that the animal was vicious or dangerous, or, alternatively, that special circumstances existed which take the case out of the ordinary rule of law that domestic animals can wander at large without liability being incurred by their owner."

I will read the material part of his judgment in full.

D "This horse was unbroken and by that I mean it had never been used for any form of work. It was specially, looked after by the defendant's wife. It was fed specially, grazed specially, and housed specially. The defendant's wife says that it has a sweet nature and is not in any way dangerous. I entirely accept that evidence. It has been suggested that the mare was different from other mares, but, in my opinion, it is not uncommon that different mares should have different temperaments. This mare liked to be free and get about on its own. The defendant's wife knew that it would get out of any field in which it was put, and that nothing would stop it. On one or two previous occasions it had got out on to the highway. Mrs. Richards knew that nothing could prevent this, and I am satisfied that the defendant knew it also. On one occasion the mare strayed into the garden of a house occupied by the witness Mr. Giles. On another occasion the mare was seen on the highway and difficulty was experienced in catching her. The defendant knew that special precautions were necessary or it would get out on to the high road. On the day of the plaintiff's accident the field near the highway was not the field in which the mare was grazing. The mare had been put in one of two or three intercommunicating meadows and there left to graze. She got through the hedge or gate of these meadows by some means into the ploughed field. Counsel for the defendant says that nobody should have anticipated that it could do this. He says, therefore, that special circumstances do not exist in this case. In my view, it does not matter what field the mare came from. Once it is established that it was likely to get on the highway, precautions should have been taken to stop it getting out. Counsel further says that before the defendant could be found negligent you must find that he owed a duty to the plaintiff. I am of the opinion that in certain circumstances the owner of land adjoining the highway may owe a duty to users of the highway. The question arises whether the possibility of damage should have been contemplated by the parties in this case. Counsel says that the damage is so remote that it could not be in the reasonable contemplation of the parties. He cites Searle v. Wallbank (1), and particularly the judgment of VISCOUNT MAUGHAM. In the present case when the defendant knew the volume of traffic passing on the highway it is ridiculous to say that no danger would have resulted if the horse were to stray. The

E

F

G

H

possibility of damage must, therefore, have been present in the owner's mind. It is, therefore, impossible to say that the damage was too remote. The next question arising is whether the defendant is negligent. He knew the animal's propensity to stray because it had done so on previous occasions. He knew that, if left in the field, it would display that propensity again. His failure to prevent the animal getting on the highway amounts to negligence. I find therefore that in this case there are special circumstances which take it out of the general rule as laid down in Searle v. Wallbank (1). I find that the plaintiff has established negligence on the part of the defendant and that there was no contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. The plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to succeed."

It follows from what I have read that the learned judge was of opinion that a special propensity to stray and knowledge of that fact by the defendant was a sufficient special circumstance (having regard to the nature of the highway adjoining the defendant's land and the extent of the traffic on it) to take the case out of the general rule stated in Searle v. Wallbank (1), and to impose on the defendant the duty of taking reasonable care to prevent the mare indulging its propensity and leaping or otherwise escaping into the road. If the premise is correct, it is not, I think, in dispute that the defendant failed to take the steps which his duty imposed on him, and that the plaintiff is entitled to maintain his judgment. I have felt no little anxiety on the matter, and I confess to a reluctance in an action for damages assessed at £28 11s. 8d. to interfere with the judgment of the court below, but I have felt compelled to conclude that the learned judge's award was based on an erroneous premise, and, accordingly, that it cannot stand.

In Searle v. Wallbank (1) the House of Lords had been invited to consider, in the light of modern conditions and of certain critical doubts which had been expressed by members of this court, the law as it affected persons who keep animals on fields adjacent to the highway. On that occasion all the cases were referred to which have been cited to us. The House had no difficulty in affirming the law as it had previously been understood. It must now be taken to be clearly established that there is no obligation on the owner or occupier of a field adjacent to a highway to maintain a fence on the border of the highway. It is clear, in my judgment, that the law is founded on our ancient social conditions and is in no way related to, or liable to be qualified by, such matters as the relative level of fields and highway, the nature of the highway, or the amount of traffic on it. Secondly, it is equally established that, save in cases concerning animals of peculiar characteristics, to which I will later refer, there is no general duty founded on the principle formulated in Donoghue v. Stevenson (2) on the owner of domestic animals to take steps to prevent them straying on the highway and so causing risk of accidents to users of the highway. Both propositions are clearly stated by VISCOUNT MAUGHAM in Searle v. Wallbank (1): see, for example ([1947] 1 All E.R. 14); and it follows, in my judgment, no less clearly from the speeches in the House that, there being no liability to have a fence at all, liability does not arise because there is a fence which is not properly maintained. The point is stated by LORD DU PARCQ (ibid., 21):

"My Lords, I should have thought that, on principle, where there is no duty to maintain a fence at all, it cannot be a breach of duty to maintain one which is imperfect . . ."

A contrary view would, indeed, lead to strange results. For since the maximum danger to passers-by on the road might be said to be incurred where an animal leaps over or breaks through a fence at the point where it just fails to offer sufficient obstruction, it would appear to follow that the occupier's liability would vary inversely with the condition of his fence, up to the point where the fence was just insufficient to prevent a strong animal leaping over it and at that point it would be at its maximum.

There remains, however, the exceptional class of case where the animal in question is known to have such characteristics as to impose on its owner a duty to take steps to prevent it from endangering the public by getting on the highway and there exhibiting its characteristics to the danger of users of the highway. In so stating the nature of the exceptional class of case I have, I believe, formulated it correctly. But before passing to consider the facts in the present case as found, and to determine whether they are such as to have imposed liability on the defendant, I draw attention to one important matter of fact in Searle v. Wallbank (1) which has, in my judgment, an important bearing on this case. In Searle v. Wallbank (1) the cyclist had been injured as a result of a collision in the dark with a horse, the conditions being made more difficult by the then prevalent black-out regulations, but it is far from clear whether the accident was due to the fact that the cyclist ran into the horse through being unable in the dimmed lighting conditions to see it, or whether (as in the present case) the horse dashed out of a gap in the hedge or leapt down on the cyclist so that the accident was, and would have been, inevitable whatever the lighting conditions and however alert the cyclist had been. Thus, LORD PORTER says (ibid., 18):

“It is not clear from the evidence whether the horse dashed across the road and collided with the appellant or whether, because of the dimness of his lights, he failed to see it and ran into it. I do not think it material to determine which version is the true one, but, if it had to be decided, the former version appears the more likely . . . If, as may be the case, the horse came down from the bank on top of the cyclist, the accident was an unusual one . . .”

It is clear from the opinion of LORD PORTER, as it is also clear from the opinion of LORD DU PARCQ, that it mattered not which of the alternative hypotheses of fact was accepted. For it is, in my judgment, plain that (apart from questions of special propensities to be noted hereafter) the owner of the animal is not rendered liable because the animal leaps over or through the hedge or otherwise down on the user of the highway. This conclusion also emerges, I think, from the dictum of HOLT, C.J., and TURTON, J., in Mason v. Keeling (3) (1 Ld. Raym. 608), quoted with approval by LORD DU PARCQ ([1947] 1 All E.R. 20):

“If the owner puts a horse or an ox to graze in his field, which is adjoining to the highway, and the horse or the ox breaks the hedge . . .”

Again LORD DU PARCQ says (ibid., 21):

“Moreover, the suggested duty could only be to take reasonable care to maintain a reasonably secure fence, and it must be a very high fence which a horse cannot jump.”

From all this it follows, in my opinion, that (apart always from the case of special propensities) liability is not imposed on the owner of the animal by reason of special circumstances affecting the nature of the locus in quo, that is, is not imposed because the animal when straying goes over or through a hedge or down a bank into the road and thereby creates the accident.

Turning to the question of special propensities, it must first be noted that, in my judgment, a special proclivity towards straying cannot be regarded (if known to the owner) as such a special characteristic of itself as imposes liability on him. Such a conclusion appears to me to be logically impossible. For, if the occupier of the field is under no obligation whatever to prevent animals from straying on the high road (unless they are dangerous or mischievous), the duty cannot be imposed on him in respect of a particular animal which is more prone than its fellows to take advantage of the liberty afforded to them. I cannot treat the reference to “disposition to wander” in LORD DU PARCQ’S speech in Searle v. Wallbank (1) (ibid., 20) as indicating any contrary view. Indeed, I think the authorities are clear that in order to impose liability the characteristics must be those of viciousness or mischievousness. It is, no doubt, impossible to apply to an animal an epithet which imports any kind of ethical standard, but the word "vicious" as applied to animals is well understood and indicates a savage disposition, a propensity to attack people. I think it must also be treated as clear that an animal, though not savage, which is dangerous because of its frolicsome behaviour, must equally be taken to have propensities against which (if he knows of them) the owner has a duty to guard. All the authorities, in my judgment, support this view, and I refer particularly to the citation from BLACKBURN, J., in Smith v. Cook (4) cited by LORD DU PARCQ (ibid.). The basis of the liability, in my judgment, is not that such a horse by its mere presence on the highway may cause an obstruction, but because such a horse, when on the highway, and, therefore, when likely to meet passers-by on the highway, is known to be likely to indulge its dangerous propensities. A

In the present case, the county court judge has found, quite clearly, that the horse in question had no such propensities. I have already acknowledged that I feel a serious doubt whether I should myself have been persuaded to accept the partiality of the defendant's wife for this unbroken mare, but Parliament has laid it down that there shall be no appeal on fact from a county court, and I have said that I think it impossible to say that there is no evidence on which the judge could find as he did. The only propensity which the judge has found the animal to possess was a propensity for wandering, and as regards this I have already given my reasons for thinking that such a propensity could not itself impose liability on the owner, but it is said that the horse had another propensity, viz., a peculiar liking for leaping over hedges and, in particular, for leaping over hedges on passers-by in the road. If this were true and known to its owner, I should think that he might well be under a duty to keep the animal tethered, but, in my judgment, there is no evidence to support it. Evidence that on some one or more other occasions it was found in the road, and that on one of such occasions there was difficulty in catching it, is not evidence that the animal, when in the road, was dangerous or mischievous within the meaning of the law as I understand it to be, still less that it had a partiality for leaping over hedges on passers-by. Nor am I able to accept the view that because (and I will assume it) the horse was a peculiar one in some respects, you can, therefore, find here special circumstances, taking into account the nature of the road and the fences, which impose liability on the defendant. D
Reference has been made to LORD ATKIN's observation in Fardon v. Harcourt-Rivington (5) (146 L.T. 392), quoted by LORD DU PARCQ in Searle v. Wallbank (1) ([1947] 1 All E.R. 20), but LORD DU PARCQ makes it quite plain (ibid., 21) that LORD ATKIN's general proposition must be read subject to qualifications, and those qualifications, as it seems to me, prevent the application of the observation to the present case. E
The animal being found to be of mild disposition, there is nothing whatever to show that its act on the night in question in leaping in the dark over the fence into the road was a peculiar characteristic of the horse, or alternatively, was not contrary to its ordinary nature, for it must be unusual in the extreme for a domestic animal to take such a leap out of a field in the night. F
G
H

It is, no doubt, tempting to say that this was an animal of unusual characteristics; that, therefore, the owner must have been under a duty to hobble or tether it (for no other means would have been effective); and, therefore, again, that the accident was due to the breach of duty. But, in the first place, I think such a statement of the case involves a flying in the face of the judge's findings of fact, and, in the second, I think it involves far too imprecise a formulation of the appropriate principle of law and would inevitably introduce into the law serious uncertainties and capriciousness. Put in its briefest form, my conclusion is that, as a general proposition, the owner of animals is under no liability to prevent them straying, even though the straying may take the form of leaping over or through hedges and down banks into a highway at a lower level. If any given case is shown to be an exception to the general rule it must be because the animal in question is known to have some peculiarity which renders it dangerous when on the highway, or because it must have a propensity, through vice or playfulness, of leaping from a field at or on persons on the highway. In the present case, in my judgment, if there is any evidence to support the fact that this animal had such peculiarities, the finding of the county court judge is wholly to the contrary effect. I have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the appeal must be allowed.

SINGLETON, L.J.: The mare which caused the damage was an animal of a most unusual type. She was a six and a half years old shire mare. She had never been broken in. She belonged to a farmer who said he had bought her for breeding and working when she was seven months old, but he had never had the time to break her in, nor had he bred from her. She had been shown on occasions, but not for the last two years. If a stranger tried to catch her she ran at him "mouth abroad." She was blindfolded if she was out at grass when in season. The learned judge might have found that she was vicious, but he did not do so. He accepted the evidence of Mrs. Richards that the mare "has a sweet nature and is not in any way dangerous." The judge found that the defendant, Mr. Richards, the owner of the horse, was liable in damages for negligence in that he knew "... the animal's propensity to stray because it had done so on previous occasions . . . His failure to prevent the animal getting on the highway amounts to negligence."

This, taken by itself, cannot stand. So much is clear from the decision of the House of Lords in Searle v. Wallbank (1). Yet the evidence discloses another side of the character or habits of the defendant's mare. She was accustomed to jumping in a manner quite unbecoming to a shire mare. One wonders why a farmer kept her so long on his farm unbroken.

The plaintiff was riding towards Newquay on his motor bicycle on the evening of Jan. 13, 1950, and his description of the accident, taken from the judge's note, is "saw black horse jump over hedge on top of me, landed on my tank."

He was passing a field of the defendant's at the time. Fortunately, he was not much hurt. Mr. Giles farms land across the road from the defendant's farm. Some eighteen months earlier the same mare had damaged his porch. She had got across the road on to his farm. Mr. Giles said he had seen her loose on the road before that time. He had seen people trying to catch her. "Twice it tried to chase two of my men off the road when we tried to drive it back into the field," he said. The most striking evidence came from the defendant and his wife—and the judge preferred the evidence of the latter.

There was probably some sort of gap or low place in the hedge, but, so far as we know, the hedge was normally sufficient. This mare had been in another field, two or three fields below, and had got into the field from which she jumped on to the highway. There is no evidence to show how she accomplished the journey, though it must have been over the fences, as the farmer said the hedges were all right. No doubt, if she wished to get on to the road she would take the fence at the point which seemed best. She was not an ordinary animal—far from it. She was not kept on the farm for the purpose of work. She was an amazing jumper, and from time to time she went over the fence and on to the road. She was mischievous in this sense. No fence would stop her, it was said. The defendant knew this. It seems to me that, in those circumstances, he ought to have appreciated that there was risk of an accident unless he took some care. One who keeps a mare of such an unusual type owes a duty to the public and to users of the highway in particular, and it was submitted to this court that the defendant had failed to take the care which a reasonable man would have taken in the circumstances. If the mare could not properly be tethered outside, she ought to have been put inside, at least at night time, it was said. A case on these lines might have been made in the county court, and I am inclined to think that there was evidence on which the judge could have found that there were special circumstances so as to bring the case within both limbs of that which LORD DU PARCQ said in Searle v. Wallbank (1) ([1947] 1 All E.R. 21). The difficulties in the way of the plaintiff are that (i) the judge decided the issue on grounds which cannot be supported; (ii) there are no findings of fact as to the propensity of the mare to jump, or to jump on to the highway—and though there is evidence of it I doubt whether it is sufficient to justify this court in basing conclusions on it, especially in view of the fact that (iii) the propensity to jump (or to jump on to the road) was not pleaded, nor does it appear to have been put forward as the case for the plaintiff.

In these circumstances, I feel, with some regret, that the appeal must be allowed and judgment be entered for the defendant. I have considered whether there should be a re-trial. That would involve more expense for the parties in a case in which the damages are small. On the whole, I do not think that it would be right to give the plaintiff an opportunity of setting up now a different case, one which was neither pleaded nor argued before the learned county court judge.

VAISEY, J.: I am not prepared to dissent from the conclusions reached by my Lords, or to express any disagreement with the views expressed in the judgments which have just been delivered. I, therefore, agree that this appeal must be allowed.

Appeal allowed with costs below. No order as to costs of appeal.

Solicitors: Fred Hollis, agent for Thrall, Llewellyn & Spooner, Truro (for the defendant); Barlow, Lyde & Gilbert, agents for Stephens & Scown, Wadebridge (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Affirmed. C.A. [1952] 1 All E.R. [redacted]

R. v. NORTHUMBERLAND COMPENSATION APPEAL TRIBUNAL. Ex parte SHAW.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Hilbery and Parker, JJ.),
December 12, 13, 14, 1950.]

Certiorari—Statutory tribunal—Error of law on face of decision.

National Health Service—Compensation for loss of employment—Clerk to hospital board—Also clerk to local authority—Consideration of service with local authority—National Health Service (Transfer of Officers and Compensation) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1475), reg. 2.

From 1914 onwards the applicant was employed by the N. urban district council as clerk to the council. From October, 1936, in addition he was employed as clerk to a joint hospital board, which employment was terminated on Mar. 31, 1949, in consequence of the passing of the National Health Service Act, 1946. He applied to the compensating authority for compensation for loss of office under the National Health Service (Transfer of Officers and Compensation) Regulations, 1948, and the authority awarded compensation the amount of which was based only on the length of time which the applicant had served with the hospital board, no regard being had to his service with the district council. The applicant appealed to the compensation appeal tribunal, and the tribunal, giving reasons for their decision, decided that the compensating authority was right and that the applicant was only entitled to the sum awarded to him. The applicant moved for an order of certiorari on the ground that there was error on the face of the decision and that the court had jurisdiction to set it aside as being erroneous in law.

HELD: (i) on the true construction of the National Health Service (Transfer of Officers and Compensation) Regulations, 1948, reg. 2, the applicant's service with the local authority should have been taken into account.

(ii) as the tribunal had stated on the face of the order the grounds on which they had made it, and as it appeared that in law those grounds were not such as to warrant the decision to which they had come, certiorari would issue to remove the order into the High Court to be quashed.

Walsall Overseers v. London & North Western Ry. Co. ((1878) 4 App. Cas. 30) and R. v. Nat Bell Liquors, Ltd. ([1922] 2 A.C. 128), applied.

Racecourse Betting Control Board v. Secretary of State for Air ([1944] 1 All E.R. 60), not applied.

[AS TO THE GROUNDS FOR CERTIORARI GENERALLY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 9, pp. 880-889, paras. 1484-1493; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 16, pp. 417-431, Nos. 2763-2918, Digest Supp., and 2nd Digest Supp.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Racecourse Betting Control Board v. Secretary of State for Air, [1944] 1 All E.R. 60; [1944] Ch. 114; 113 L.J.Ch. 129; 170 L.T. 29; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Hodgkinson v. Fernie, (1857), 3 C.B.N.S. 189; 27 L.J.C.P. 66; 140 E.R. 712; 2 Digest 527, 1645.
- (3) Re Jones & Carter, [1922] 2 Ch. 599; 91 L.J.Ch. 824; 127 L.T. 622; Digest Supp.
- (4) Walsall Overseers v. London & North Western Ry. Co., (1878), 4 App. Cas. 30; 48 L.J.M.C. 65; 39 L.T. 453; 43 J.P. 108; 16 Digest 186, 920.
- (5) R. v. Nat Bell Liquors, Ltd., [1922] 2 A.C. 128; 91 L.J.P.C. 146; 127 L.T. 437; 16 Digest 419, 2795.
- (6) R. v. Bolton, (1841), 1 Q.B. 66; 10 L.J.M.C. 49; 5 J.P. 370; 113 E.R. 1054; 16 Digest 418, 2775.
- (7) Ricelip Parish v. Henden Parish, (1698), 5 Mod. Rep. 416; 87 E.R. 739; 37 Digest 299, 995.
- (8) Kent v. Elstob, (1802), 3 East. 18; 102 E.R. 502; 2 Digest 522, 1601.
- (9) Hogge v. Burgess, (1858), 3 H. & N. 293; 27 L.J.Ex. 318; 31 L.T.O.S. 119; 157 E.R. 482; 2 Digest 529, 1658.
- (10) Young v. Bristol Aeroplane Co., Ltd., [1944] 2 All E.R. 293; [1944] K.B. 718; 113 L.J.K.B. 513; 171 L.T. 113; 37 B.W.C.C. 51; affd., [1946] 1 All E.R. 98; [1946] A.C. 163; 115 L.J.K.B. 63; 174 L.T. 39; 38 B.W.C.C. 48; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (11) Noble v. Southern Ry. Co., [1940] 2 All E.R. 383; [1940] A.C. 583; 109 L.J.K.B. 509; 164 L.T. 1; 33 B.W.C.C. 176; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (12) Clarke v. Southern Ry. Co., (1927), 96 L.J.K.B. 572; 137 L.T. 200; 20 B.W.C.C. 309; Digest Supp.

MOTION for an order of certiorari to remove into the High Court to be quashed a decision of the Northumberland Compensation Appeal Tribunal, dated June 14, 1950, made upon the appeal of the applicant against the award of compensation for loss of his employment as clerk to the West Northumberland Joint Hospital Board by the Gosforth Urban District Council as compensating authority. The applicant contended that the decision was erroneous on the face thereof, in that the tribunal had disregarded the provisions of the relevant regulations as to the calculation of the amount of compensation. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

M. L. Lyell for the applicant.

J. P. Ashworth for the tribunal.

Harold Williams, K.C., and Mattar for Gosforth Urban District Council.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: Counsel for the applicant moves for an order of certiorari to bring up and quash a decision of the Northumberland Compensation Appeal Tribunal, appointed under the National Health Service (Transfer of Officers and Compensation) Regulations, 1948, which sits to determine the compensation payable to officers of hospital boards and other bodies who lose their employment by reason of the transfer of hospitals to the Minister of Health. The applicant duly applied to the tribunal, and the tribunal, on June 14, 1950, made a determination in which they awarded him £33 15s. per annum in respect of his accrued pension rights and £63 6s. 8d. per annum for the period between the date when he lost his office and the date of his normal retiring age. The decision of the tribunal is set out in a document in these terms:

"The tribunal determine that on Oct. 7, 1936, the applicant was appointed clerk to the West Northumberland Joint Hospital Board and continued to hold that appointment until Mar. 31, 1949, when the employment ceased in consequence of the passing of the National Health Service Act, 1946. The applicant was born on July 10, 1896. His salary on Mar. 31, 1949, was £200 per annum, less five per cent., or £10, superannuation contribution, making his net emoluments £190. The compensating authority contend that the compensation payable should be limited to the actual dates of service, viz.: Oct. 7, 1936, to Mar. 31, 1949, and that the compensation payable is . . ."

£63 6s. 8d. per annum payable until the normal retiring age, and from the age of sixty-five, which he would attain on July 10, 1961, on the basis of his average remuneration for the five years ended Mar. 31, 1949. Then there is the calculation making a total of £33 15s. The tribunal add:

"We agree with these figures and that the only service to be taken into account is between Oct. 7, 1936, and Mar. 31, 1949. Mr. Thomas Shaw is, therefore, entitled to be paid £63 6s. 8d. per annum until July 9, 1961, and £33 15s. per annum from July 10, 1961."

The matter for our consideration arises in this way. The applicant was not only clerk to this hospital board. He was also clerk to a local district council, and he contends that under the regulations he is entitled to have taken into consideration, not only the period of his service as clerk to the hospital board, but also that of his service in his capacity as clerk to the local district council. That contention the tribunal rejected on the construction of the regulations, and I can sympathise with them in thinking that as the only office which the applicant lost was an office relating to the hospital board, any compensation which they were to award him should be confined to his service with the hospital board. In our opinion, however, that view is seen to be incorrect when an examination is made of the provisions of the regulations under which compensation is payable. Indeed, counsel for the district council conceded that so far as the accrued pension rights are concerned the calculation I have mentioned must be wrong, because the compensation has to be calculated according to the provisions of the Local Government Superannuation Act, 1937, s. 40.

The other matter for compensation depends on the construction of the regulations. It is provided by reg. 10:

"Subject to the provisions of the next succeeding regulation, every person who was an existing officer and who suffers loss of employment or diminution of emoluments which is attributable to the passing of the [National Health Service Act, 1946] shall be entitled to have his case considered for the receipt of compensation under these regulations, such compensation to be determined in accordance with the provisions of the schedule hereto . . ."

Paragraph 8 of the schedule provides:

"For the purpose of determining whether any compensation, apart from any interim compensation paid under para. 4 and para. 5 of this schedule, is payable to any person for loss of employment, and if so the amount of the compensation to be paid, subject to the provisions of para. 11 of this schedule, until normal retiring age, the compensating authority shall have regard to—(a) the conditions upon which his appointment was made; (b) the nature of his office; (c) the extent to which he has sought suitable alternative employment; and (d) all the other circumstances of the case."

Paragraph 9 provides:

"(1) Compensation for loss of employment shall be an annual sum, calculated in accordance with the provisions of sub-para. (2) of this paragraph, and shall be payable, subject to the provisions of para. 11 of this schedule, until normal retiring age, as from the date of loss, if the claim was made within three months thereafter, and in any other case, as from the date on which the claim was made or from such earlier date, not being more than three months before the date on which the claim was made, as the compensating authority may in their discretion allow."

Then comes, perhaps, for this purpose, the most important provision:

"(2) The said annual sum shall, subject as hereinafter provided, be the aggregate of the following sums, namely—(a) for every completed year of the claimant's service, one-sixtieth of the net emoluments of the employment he has lost; and (b) in the case of a claimant over the age of forty-five years at the date of loss, a further one-sixtieth of the said net emoluments for every completed year of service since he attained the age of forty-five."

The difficulty which has arisen in this case is this. There is a definition of "existing officer" in reg. 2 of the regulations, as follows:

"'existing officer' means a person who immediately before the appointed day—(a) devoted the whole of his time to any of the following employments or to any combination of such employments, namely, employment in Great Britain by the governing body of a voluntary hospital, a local authority, an insurance committee, the Ophthalmic Benefit Approved Committee, the Dental Benefit Council, or by any other body for the purposes of the local government service or by the Crown."

The definition of "service" is:

"'service' in relation to a person means any period of whole-time or part-time employment in Great Britain, after attaining the age of eighteen years, under a Regional Hospital Board, a board of governors of a teaching hospital, an executive council, a joint committee of executive councils, or under any such authority or body as is mentioned in s. 67 (1) (c) (i) of the National Health Service (Scotland) Act, 1947, or under any authority or body functions of which cease or are transferred in consequence of the Act or the National Health Service (Scotland) Act, 1947, or under the Crown or any other body for the purposes of the local government service . . .”

These are, to say the least of it, complicated provisions for a lay tribunal to interpret, but we have come to the conclusion, and, indeed, it was not very strenuously argued to the contrary, that there must be taken into account the service which an officer who is entitled to compensation has given to “any other body for the purposes of the local government service.” Therefore, as the applicant was, for a longer period than he was clerk to this hospital board, clerk to a local authority, he is entitled to have taken into account his length of service with the local authority as well as the time of his service with the joint hospital board. It follows that the calculation which the tribunal made was incorrect and the contention that the applicant put forward was correct and the one on which his compensation should be based.

That deals with the merits of the application, but a point of the very greatest importance has been argued which has necessitated the examination of a large number of cases and consideration of the principles which apply to the doctrine of certiorari. Certiorari, as has often been pointed out in this court, is a remedy of a very special character. In most cases it is moved and granted on the question whether or not an inferior court or tribunal has jurisdiction. It never goes to a superior court, but where it is shown that an inferior court either has no jurisdiction in a particular matter or has exceeded its jurisdiction, certiorari will be granted. The object of the old writ of certiorari, which has now been replaced by an order of certiorari—it is merely a procedural change—was to bring up into this court the proceeding and order which had been made in the lower court in order that it should be examined. It did not issue, or seldom issued, to a court of record. In former days the procedure was by writ of error, and where a writ of error was granted the whole record was brought up to this court—or, in former days, to the court of King’s Bench—and the court examined the record and only decided for the plaintiff in error if error appeared on the record. For that reason a writ of error was an unsatisfactory remedy in a criminal case. If a writ of error was granted the record was brought up, which consisted of the commission of assize, showing the appointment of the judges, the holding of the court, the precepts of the sheriffs, the names of the grand jurors, and the finding of the indictment. A record of the petty jurors and any other pleading that might have been put in, such as a plea in bar, and the verdict recorded and the judgment of the court were also brought up for examination. Nothing, however, was shown on the record as to the evidence which was admitted or the charge which was given to the jury, so that, if there had been a completely wrong charge given by the judge on a point of law—what we should now call misdirection—or if there had been a wrongful admission of evidence, that could not be examined on a writ of error, because it did not appear on the record.

With regard to the proceedings of courts not of record, as there was no record to be moved into the court the writ of certiorari brought up the proceedings in and the order of the lower court, and those orders differed from time to time by reason of various statutory provisions, more particularly, I suppose, in the case of proceedings before justices. Before the procedural changes wrought by the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (commonly called Jervis’s Act) all proceedings before justices had to be set out at great length, with their certificates or their convictions, and it was under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts that the simple forms of convictions which are now common were substituted. I am emphasising this point because it will be seen from cases which we have to examine that the question how far this court can inquire into the correctness of the decision, as distinct from the jurisdiction of the court which decided it, depends on the contents of the documents which are brought up under the writ and laid before the court. For instance, if an order of certiorari is now granted to bring into this court a conviction by justices, we will say for some simple offence, there are brought up the charge, the conviction, the determination of the justices, and the order directing payment of a fine, and that is all. I think it very likely that in 1848, when SIR JOHN JERVIS introduced his bill into Parliament, one of the matters which moved him to do so, and moved Parliament to pass the Act, was that hitherto all sorts of objections could be taken on certiorari because of the very full statements which used to be brought up on convictions.

Many statutes have taken away certiorari in respect of the matters with which those statutes have dealt, but that never debarred the court from granting certiorari if it was a question of jurisdiction. If an inferior court had wrongly given itself jurisdiction, certiorari would lie to quash its order, because it had no jurisdiction to make it. The taking away of certiorari by statute no doubt prevented the court from inquiring into what I may call the merits of the determination, but it did not prevent the court from inquiring whether or not the inferior court had any jurisdiction to make the order. Many cases are found in the reports where certiorari had been taken away, the statute providing that the decision of the inferior court was not to be removed into any court by writ of certiorari or otherwise, and yet the courts granted certiorari in respect of those very matters on the ground of jurisdiction.

Counsel for the tribunal contended that the court has no power to examine this order on certiorari because, he said, certiorari went only to defect of jurisdiction, and he relied especially on a case which certainly creates difficulty in this court. I can deal with it frankly because I was one of the members of the Court of Appeal which decided it. It is Racecourse Betting Control Board v. Secretary of State for Air (1). That was the case of a motion in the Chancery Division to set aside an award of the General Claims Tribunal, and LORD GREENE, M.R., in giving judgment, said ([1944] 1 All E.R. 61):

“It was said that the jurisdiction to set aside the award of an arbitrator for error of law appearing on its face is one that exists at common law independently of the Arbitration Acts. It was also said that the jurisdiction is not confined to consensual arbitrations, but extends to arbitrations under statutes. Both these propositions are unquestionably correct: see as to the former, Hodgkinson v. Fernie (2), and as to the latter Re Jones and Carter (3). The next and vital proposition is, however, one which, in my opinion, cannot be supported either on principle or on authority. It was that the jurisdiction is not confined to the case of awards of arbitrators, but extends to the decisions of every form of inferior tribunal; and, accordingly, when the legislature establishes a special tribunal, whether or not it can be described as an arbitration tribunal, the court can set aside a decision given by it if an error of law appears on its face. This jurisdiction was said to exist quite independently of the old procedure by way of writ of error. No authority was quoted in support of this proposition and, in my opinion, it is wrong on principle. In the case of an inferior court, if it acts beyond its jurisdiction, the remedy is by certiorari. If, acting within its jurisdiction, it makes an error in law, the remedy is by appeal (if the decision is appealable), and that whether or not the error appears on the face of the decision. In the case of new tribunals set up under statute, no appeal will lie unless the right of appeal is conferred expressly or impliedly by statute, and accordingly where, as in the present case, no right of appeal is given, their decisions are not appealable.”

He then dealt with the case of arbitration and expressed the view that the undoubted right of the court to interfere where an error of law appeared on the face of an award was an exception to the general rule. MACKINNON, L.J., in giving judgment, said much the same thing and treated arbitration as an exception. I did not deal with it quite in that way, but for present purposes I need not refer to my judgment.

We have to consider whether we are bound by that decision, but it is to be noticed that two cases, one in the House of Lords and one in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, were not cited to the court. In my opinion, if those cases had been cited the decision must have been contrary to what it was. In Walsall Overseers v. London & North Western Ry. Co. (4), EARL CAIRNS, L.C., reviewed the history of quarter sessions taking the opinion of the judges of assize, as they used to do under the terms of their commission. The commission addressed to magistrates ever since the reign of Edward III, when magistrates were first appointed and courts of quarter sessions were set up, gave them authority to hear and determine provided that in cases of difficulty they were to reserve their decision until the judge, with whom they could confer, had come into the county. That was not only part of the commission in those days, but is still to be found in the commission at the present day. LORD CAIRNS pointed out that that gradually fell into disuse and the practice grew up of consulting the court by means of a Special Case. Then he went on to say (4 App. Cas. 40):

“But supposing that the court of quarter sessions did not adopt that course, there was still another mode by which any question of law which appeared to the court of quarter sessions doubtful, might be left open for the exercise of the judgment of a higher tribunal. All that was necessary was that the court of quarter sessions, in making its order, should not make it an unspeaking or unintelligible order, but should, in some way state upon the face of the order, the elements which had led to the decision of the court of quarter sessions.”

Pausing there for a minute, when the Lord Chancellor is speaking of an “unspeaking or unintelligible” order, he obviously means an order which gives no reasons or does not explain in any way why the court made it. It may not be unintelligible in one sense, but it is unintelligible in that it does not tell the superior court why the court made that order. LORD CAIRNS continued (ibid.):

“If the court of quarter sessions stated upon the face of the order, by way of recital, that the facts were so and so, and the grounds of its decision were such as were so stated, then the order became upon the face of it, a speaking order; and if that which was stated upon the face of the order, in the opinion of any party, was not such as to warrant the order, then that party might go to the court of Queen’s Bench and point to the order as one which told its own story, and ask the court of Queen’s Bench to remove it by certiorari, and when so removed to pass judgment upon it, whether it should or should not be quashed. In that case, as I said just now, the jurisdiction of the court of Queen’s Bench was merely a jurisdiction to leave the order standing or to remove it out of the way. It was not a jurisdiction to substitute for it another or a different order; that would be making the court of Queen’s Bench, in the ordinary sense of the term, a court of re-hearing or of appeal.”

That passage seems to me to show that the court could look at the order and pronounce on it if it was a “speaking” order, that is to say, an order which set out the grounds of the decision. To the same effect is the speech of LORD PENZANCE.

That case was dealt with by LORD SUMNER in R. v. Nat Bell Liquors, Ltd. (5) in which he showed that the law of Canada with regard to certiorari was the same as the law of this country. He went most exhaustively into the whole law relating to certiorari. He pointed out that where certiorari is moved on the ground of lack of jurisdiction, in many cases the court must have evidence before it to show the lack of jurisdiction. For instance, if a court of summary jurisdiction professed to have dealt with a case of burglary, the defect of jurisdiction would appear at once on the order and no evidence would be required, but if the defect of jurisdiction arose because of disqualification of a justice, either on the ground of bias or some other reason, the court could not know of it unless evidence was brought before it, and, therefore, the court would admit evidence by affidavit to show the defect of jurisdiction. LORD SUMNER pointed out that if the inferior court acted within its jurisdiction only the order could be examined and evidence could not be taken to show that the order was made as the result of some process of reasoning which was incorrect or of the admission of evidence that was not admissible, or even on the ground that there was no evidence to justify it, because all those were matters of appeal.

LORD SUMNER referred to the speech of EARL CAIRNS, L.C., in Walsall Overseers v. London & North Western Ry. Co. (4), and he quotes this passage ([1922] 2 A.C. 155):

"If there was upon the face of the order of the court of quarter sessions anything which showed that that order was erroneous, the Court of Queen's Bench might be asked to have the order brought into it, and to look at the order, and view it upon the face of it, and if the court found error upon the face of it, to put an end to its existence by quashing it."

He then turned to the kind of order under discussion, and, after stating how much, both of fact and of law, the sessions were bound to set out on the face of their order, he pointed out that the statement of what had led to the decision of the court made the order "not an unspeaking or unintelligible order," but a "speaking" one which on certiorari could be criticised as one which told its own story and for error could be quashed. He said (ibid.):

"It is to be observed on this passage, that the key of the question is the amount of material stated or to be stated on the record returned and brought into the superior court. If justices state more than they are bound to state, it may, so to speak, be used against them, and out of their own mouths they may be condemned, but there is no suggestion that, apart from questions of jurisdiction, a party may state further matters to the court, either by new affidavits or by producing anything that is not on or part of the record."

Observe that that is saying that evidence cannot be produced to supplement that which is on the record. The court is confined to that which is on the record. Later, he says (ibid., 156):

"That supervision goes to two points: one is the area of the inferior jurisdiction and the qualifications and conditions of its exercise; the other is the observance of the law in the course of its exercise."

He went on to deal with R. v. Bolton (6) and said (ibid., 159):

"R. v. Bolton (6), undoubtedly, is a landmark in the history of certiorari, for it summarises in an impeccable form the principles of its application under the regime created by what are called Jervis's Acts . . ."

I do not quite understand that, because Jervis's Acts were not passed till 1848, and R. v. Bolton (6) was decided in 1841. He continued:

" . . . but it did not change, nor did those Acts change the general law. When the Summary Jurisdiction Act provided, as the sufficient record of all summary convictions, a common form, which did not include any statement of the evidence for the conviction, it did not stint the jurisdiction of the Queen's Bench, or alter the actual law of certiorari. What it did was to disarm its exercise. The effect was not to make that which had been error, error no longer, but to remove nearly all opportunity for its detection. The face of the record 'spoke' no longer: it was the inscrutable face of a sphinx."

That was a characteristic observation of LORD SUMNER.

That shows exactly what was the position when the old procedure of drawing up convictions and orders by courts of summary jurisdiction was altered so that there was shown only the bare decision of the case. It disarmed the exercise of the jurisdiction by this court, because they could only look at that order and could not go behind it. They could not, for instance, do what LORD HOLT, C.J., had done early in the eighteenth century, in Ricelip Parish v. Henden Parish (7). That was a settlement case in which the whole matter was brought before the court of King's Bench. I need not read the whole rather complicated story, but this is what LORD HOLT, C.J., said (5 Mod. Rep. 417):

"Where the justices of the peace give a special reason for their settlement, and the conclusion which they make in point of law will not warrant the premises, there we will rectify their judgment; but if they had given no reason at all, then we would not have travelled into the fact."

Walsall Overseers v. London & North Western Ry. Co. (4) and R. v. Nat Bell Liquors, Ltd. (5) were not cited to the Court of Appeal in the Racecourse Betting Control Board case (1), and it seems to me that, in view of the very clear decision of EARL CAIRNS, L.C., in the first case and the equally clear and emphatic statement of the law by LORD SUMNER in the second, the decision of the Court of Appeal cannot stand. I am the more convinced of that because I think, after reading the passages to which I have referred and considering Ricelip Parish v. Henden Parish (7) in which LORD HOLT, C.J., stated the principle, the question before the Court of Appeal, namely, why the court interfered in the cases of arbitrators, becomes clear. The Court of Appeal treated the interference by the court with awards for error on their face as an exception to the general rule, but I think that that is wrong. In Kent v. Elstob (8), which was referred to in the judgment of LORD GREENE, M.R., the court had no doubt of its right to interfere where error appeared on the face of an award. They did so, I think, on exactly the same principles as LORD HOLT, C.J., applied in Ricelip Parish v. Henden Parish (7). An award is, of course, a speaking document. It sets out the reasons for the arbitrator's decision and, therefore, the court has before it, under the hand of the arbitrator, the reasons why he came to the decision he did, and if he has misapplied the law the court will correct him. It is true that WILLIAMS, J., in Hodgkinson v. Fernie (2), seems to have expressed regret that the court took that course in the case of arbitrations, and in Hogge v. Burgess (9), MARTIN, B., said (3 H. & N. 296):

"According to the old rule, the decision of an arbitrator, both upon the law and facts, was conclusive. That rule was broken into by the court of King's Bench in the case of Kent v. Elstob (8) . . ."

The Court of Appeal drew the inference that for some reason, the origin of which they could not ascertain, awards were in a class by themselves and formed an exception to the general rule. In my opinion, the reason why WILLIAMS, J., in Hodgkinson v. Fernie (2) expressed regret at the court being able to interfere in the case of awards was because he thought with others and, I think, with MARTIN, B., that where the parties have chosen to submit both law and fact to an arbitrator they have chosen their own tribunal and one party ought not to be allowed to say that the law which that tribunal has laid down is wrong. He regretted that the courts allowed, as they had certainly done ever since Kent v. Elstob (8), the law of the arbitrator to be attacked, because he thought that, if a person chose an arbitrator, he should be bound by the law which the arbitrator laid down. That is very much the same as SCRUTTON, L.J., often used to say when cases under the Arbitration Act came before him. In giving his reasons why the court would not interfere he would say: "Business men choose to go before other business men, and they go there because they do not like the law that is administered in this court or the way we look at the admission of evidence, or something of that sort. They like to go before their own tribunal." I think that is the real reason why WILLIAMS, J., expressed the regret he did in Hodgkinson v. Fernie (2), and that he was not expressing a regret that an exception had been grafted on to the law. I think the law with regard to awards is exactly the same as that laid down by LORD HOLT, C.J., in Ricelip Parish v. Henden Parish (7).

The result of that clearly seems to me to be that a court before whom this order is brought can examine it. The tribunal has told us what they have taken into account, what they have disregarded, and the contentions which they accepted. They have told us their view of the law, and for the reasons which I gave at the beginning of my judgment this court is of opinion that the construction which they placed on this very complicated set of regulations was wrong. It is perfectly true, as counsel for the tribunal pointed out, that there have been several other cases, principally under the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946, in which the court has refused to grant certiorari, but in none of those cases were there speaking orders, or, if there were, the court has proceeded on the same error that the Court of Appeal fell into in the Racecourse Betting Control Board case (1). Are we at liberty to disregard that decision of the Court of Appeal? That, I think, depends on the application of Young v. Bristol Aeroplane Co., Ltd. (10). That case was one in which the Court of Appeal considered how far they were bound by their own decisions and laid down the principles on which they could depart from a previous decision. In giving the judgment of the court, LORD GREENE, M.R., who was dealing with cases where decisions had been given, as he put it, per incuriam, which the court was entitled to disregard, said ([1944] 2 All E.R. 300):

"Two classes of decisions per incuriam fall outside the scope of our inquiry, namely, (i) those where the court has acted in ignorance of a previous decision of its own or of a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction which covers the case before it—in such a case a subsequent court must decide which of the two decisions it ought to follow; and (ii) those where it has acted in ignorance of a decision of the House of Lords which covers the point—in such a case a subsequent court is bound by the decision of the House of Lords."

I hope that I have shown that the decision in the Racecourse Betting Control Board case (1) is inconsistent with the decisions in Walsall Overseers v. London & North Western Ry. Co. (4) and R. v. Nat Bell Liquors, Ltd. (5). Of course, the last-mentioned case is not technically binding on the Court of Appeal because it was a decision of the Judicial Committee, but it was a case which obviously the Court of Appeal would treat with the utmost respect. Following, as it does, and reinforcing the decision of the House of Lords in the Walsall case (4), I have no doubt the court would have considered it binding on them. Decisions of the House of Lords are binding on this court, as are decisions of the Court of Appeal, and if we find that a decision of the Court of Appeal is inconsistent with a decision of the House of Lords, applying the principles which run through the decision in Young v. Bristol Aeroplane Co., Ltd. (10), we are bound to follow the decision of the House of Lords. I am confirmed in that view by what LORD WRIGHT said in Noble v. Southern Ry. Co. (11). That was a case in which the Court of Appeal, considering itself bound by Clarke v. Southern Ry. Co. (12), had given a decision in a workmen's compensation case, with which all the members of the court said they disagreed. I was a member of the Court of Appeal and we said we did not like the previous decision. We thought it was wrong, but we felt ourselves bound by it because it had never been overruled. It was, to a great extent, inconsistent with some subsequent cases in the House of Lords, but not so inconsistent as to say it could be overruled, but LORD WRIGHT went further and said ([1940] 2 All E.R. 392):

"What a court should do, when faced with a decision of the Court of Appeal manifestly inconsistent with the decisions of this House, is a problem of some difficulty in the doctrine of precedent. I incline to think that it should apply the law laid down by this House, and refuse to follow the erroneous decision."

Where we have a case in the House of Lords deciding one thing and one in the Court of Appeal deciding another in which the decision of the House of Lords was not cited, our plain duty is to follow the decision of the House of Lords, and this court now proposes to act on this principle. I think that the decision to which we are now coming will be very beneficial because so many tribunals are now set up, all of whom, I am certain, desire to do their duty in the best possible way, but they are often given very difficult sets of regulations and statutes to construe. It must be for their benefit, and I have no doubt they will welcome it, that this court should be able to give them guidance. We can give guidance to them if they make their orders speaking orders, so that this court can then deal with them if they are brought before the court on certiorari. I am of opinion that the order for certiorari should go and that the order in question should be quashed.

HILBERY, J.: I agree.

PARKER, J.: I entirely agree.

Order for certiorari. Costs of applicant to be paid by the Ministry of Health and the Gosforth U.D.C.

Solicitors: Gwylm T. John (for the applicant); Solicitor, Ministry of Health (for the tribunal); Adam Burn & Son, agents for Charles S. Perkins, Gosforth (for the Gosforth Urban District Council).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

WILLIAMS v. LINNITT.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Tucker, Asquith and Denning, L.JJ.), November 21, 22, 23, 24, December 20, 1950.]

Inn—Loss of guest's property—Theft of motor car from car park of inn—Need to prove guest a "traveller"—"Traveller"—Resident in neighbourhood—Car park within hospitium of inn—Notice relieving innkeeper of liability.

On Feb. 15, 1949, at about 9 p.m., the plaintiff, who was returning home in his motor car, stopped at the defendant's inn (admittedly a common inn), to reach which the plaintiff had to pass his own house, and, having placed his motor car in the car park, he had drinks with friends at the inn. On leaving the inn an hour later, he found that his car had been stolen. The car park consisted of an area in front of and contiguous to the inn, with a sign bearing the name of the hotel on one side and the following notice: "Car Park. Patrons only. Vehicles are admitted to this parking place on condition that the proprietor shall not be liable for loss of or damage to (a) any vehicle (b) anything in or on or about any vehicle, however such loss or damage may be caused. R.W.L., Proprietor." In an action by the plaintiff against the proprietor of the inn for damages for the loss of the car,

HELD: (i) in an action against an innkeeper for damages for the loss of goods of a guest the owner of the goods must prove that at the time of the loss he was a "traveller."

(ii) although the plaintiff was residing in the immediate neighbourhood of the inn and visited it merely to take a drink, he was, none the less, a "traveller" for the purpose of establishing the defendant's liability as an innkeeper at common law.

Observations of KENNEDY, J., in Orchard v. Bush & Co. ([1898] 2 Q.B. 289), applied.

R. v. Rymer (1877) (2 Q.B.D. 136) and R. v. Higgins ([1947] 2 All E.R. 619), not followed.

(iii) the car park being contiguous to the inn and one in which a guest with a car was customarily invited to leave it, there being no evidence that any other accommodation for cars was provided by the inn, and it being part of the defendant's normal business to provide accommodation for the cars of guests, the car park was within the "hospitium" of the inn.

(iv) (DENNING, L.J., dissentiente) the notice exhibited in the car park did not relieve the defendant of his liability, and, therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to recover.

[EDITORIAL NOTE. Compare this case with Tinsley v. Dudley, ante, p. 252.]

AS TO LIABILITY OF INNKEEPER IN RESPECT OF GUEST'S PROPERTY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 18, pp. 150-159, paras. 208-218; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 29, pp. 10-18, Nos. 128-226.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Calye's Case, (1584), 8 Co. Rep. 32a; 77 E.R. 520; 29 Digest 2, 1.
- (2) R. v. Luellin, (1701), 12 Mod. Rep. 445; 88 E.R. 1441; 29 Digest 9, 105.
- (3) Grimston v. Innkeeper, (1627), Het. 49; 124 E.R. 334; 29 Digest 4, 33.
- (4) Warbrooke v. Griffin, (1609), 2 Brownl. 254; 123 E.R. 927; 29 Digest 21, 276.
- (5) Gulielm's Case, (1625), Lat. 88; 82 E.R. 288.
- (6) Harland's Case, (1641), Clay. 97; 29 Digest 5, 42.
- (7) Bennett v. Mellor, (1793), 5 Term. Rep. 273; 101 E.R. 154; 29 Digest 12, 162.
- (8) Lamond v. Richard, [1897] 1 Q.B. 541; 66 L.J.Q.B. 315; 76 L.T. 141; 61 J.P. 260; 29 Digest 6, 58.
- (9) Thompson v. Lacy, (1820), 3 B. & Ald. 283; 106 E.R. 667; 29 Digest 2, 3.
- (10) Orchard v. Bush & Co., [1898] 2 Q.B. 284; 67 L.J.Q.B. 650; 78 L.T. 557; 29 Digest 13, 164.
- (11) R. v. Rymer, (1877), 2 Q.B.D. 136; 46 L.J.M.C. 108; 35 L.T. 774; 41 J.P. 199; 29 Digest 9, 108.
- (12) R. v. Higgins, [1947] 2 All E.R. 619; [1948] 1 K.B. 165; [1948] L.J.R. 442; 112 J.P. 27; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (13) Cryan v. Hotel Rembrandt, Ltd., (1925), 133 L.T. 395; 29 Digest 5, 40.
- (14) Jones v. Tyler, (1834), 1 Ad. & El. 522; 3 L.J.K.B. 166; 110 E.R. 1307; 29 Digest 12, 151.
- (15) Brand v. Glasse, (1584), Moore, K.B. 158; 72 E.R. 503; 29 Digest 13, 175.
- (16) Sanders v. Spencer, (1566), 3 Dyer 266b; 73 E.R. 591; 29 Digest 13, 173.
- (17) Drope v. Thaire, (1626), Benl. 173; Lat. 126; Poph. 178; 79 E.R. 1274; 29 Digest 4, 32.
- (18) Atkinson v. Sellers, (1858), 5 C.B.N.S. 442; 28 L.J.M.C. 12; 28 L.J.C.P. 72; 32 L.T.O.S. 147; 23 J.P. 71; 141 E.R. 181.
- (19) Stephens v. Watson, (1702), 1 Salk. 45; 91 E.R. 44; sub nom., Watson's Case, (1701), 3 Salk. 26; 91 E.R. 26; 30 Digest 81, 633.
- (20) Carr's Case, (1583), 1 Roll. Abr. 3 (e).
- (21) White's Case, (1558), 2 Dyer, 158b; 73 E.R. 343; 29 Digest 4, 29.

- (22) York v. Grindstone, (1703), 1 Salk. 388; 91 E.R. 338; sub nom., Yorke v. Grenaugh, 2 Ld. Raym. 866; 92 E.R. 79; 29 Digest 6, 49.
- (23) Pidgeon v. Legg, (1857), 29 L.T.O.S. 166; 21 J.P. 743; 29 Digest 3, 5.
- (24) Lane v. Cotton, (1702), 12 Mod. Rep. 472; 1 Salk. 17; 88 E.R. 1458; 91 E.R. 17; 29 Digest 6, 48.
- (25) Nicholson v. Willan, (1804), 5 East, 507; 102 E.R. 1164; 8 Digest 42, 252.
- (26) Peek v. North Staffordshire Ry. Co., (1863), 10 H.L. Cas. 473; 32 L.J.Q.B. 241; 8 L.T. 768; 11 E.R. 1109; 8 Digest 57, 381.
- (27) Mosley v. Fosset, (1598), 1 Roll. Abr. 4; 29 Digest 15, 197.
- (28) Gee, Walker & Slater, Ltd. v. Friary Hotel (Derby), Ltd., (1949), 66 T.L.R. 59.

APPEAL by the defendant from an order of LYNSEY, J., made at Warwick Assizes on July 7, 1950, whereby he awarded the plaintiff £470 damages for the loss of his motor car which was stolen from a car park outside the Royal Red Gate Inn, Nuneaton, of which the defendant was the proprietor, where it had been left by the plaintiff while he took liquid refreshment at the inn.

The defendant contended that (a) the plaintiff, who lived about a mile from the inn, was not within the common law definition of a "traveller" to which an innkeeper owed a duty and (b) that the car park where the plaintiff's car was left was not within the precincts of the inn so as to make the defendant subject to the absolute liability as an innkeeper for the safety of the car. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD TUCKER.

Elwes, K.C., and J. G. S. Hobson for the defendant.

Gardiner, K.C., and J. Stevenson for the plaintiff.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 20. The following judgments were read.

LORD TUCKER: This is an appeal from the judgment of LYNSEY, J., at the Warwick Summer Assizes of 1950, whereby he awarded the plaintiff £470 damages for the loss of his motor car, which was stolen outside the Royal Red Gate Inn in Watling Street, near Nuneaton, where it had been parked by the plaintiff while he took liquid refreshment at the inn, of which the defendant was proprietor. It was admitted that the inn was a common inn and that the defendant was an innkeeper.

The facts as found by the learned judge and set out in his judgment were as follows. The plaintiff, Mr. John Frederick Williams, lives at Caldecote, near Nuneaton. His farm is some two or three miles from Nuneaton, and on this particular day, Feb. 15, 1949, he had gone in his motor car into Nuneaton. In the evening, on his way home from Nuneaton, he had to pass his own house. He did not stop there, but continued for a further distance of about a mile to the Royal Red Gate Inn. He went there, as he says quite frankly, to meet some friends and drink some beer with them. He got there shortly after 9 o'clock and he had some drinks with his friends, and at closing time (10 o'clock) he came out and found his motor car had disappeared. There is a parking place at the front of the inn. When he had arrived at the inn he had found two other motor cars parked near the front in the parking place, and he placed his motor car next to those, i.e., third away from the front of the inn. Having found his motor car gone, he complained to the police. If his motor car had remained there when he came out, he would have got into it and gone home.

A number of points were raised by way of defence, but the one of most interest and general importance was the contention that on these facts there was lacking one of the essential elements of an innkeeper's liability at common law, namely, that the plaintiff was not a "traveller." It was said by counsel on behalf of the defendant that, whatever might be the proper definition of a traveller in this connection, it was sufficient for his purpose to contend that the word did not include a person residing in the immediate neighbourhood who leaves his home for the sole purpose of spending an hour or so drinking with his friends at an inn and then returning home. He cited all the relevant authorities from Calye's Case (1) onwards down to the year 1948. I do not propose to refer to them all. It suffices to say that they clearly establish that for the purposes of an indictment against an innkeeper for refusing without reasonable excuse to receive, lodge or entertain, it is a necessary averment that the person refused was a traveller: see R. v. Luellin (2); and that a similar averment is necessary in the case of a civil action claiming damages for such refusal or for the loss of goods: see Grimston v. Innkeeper (3) and the form of declaration in BULLEN & LEAKE, 3rd ed., p. 344. The second resolution in Calye's Case (1) is as follows (8 Co. Rep. 32b):

"The words are, ad hospitandos homines per partes ubi hujusmodi hospitaria existunt transeuntes, et in eisdem hospitantes, by which it appears that common inns are instituted for passengers and wayfaring men, for the Latin word for an inn is, diversorium, because he who lodges there is, quasi divertens se a via; and so diversoriolum. And therefore if a neighbour who is no traveller, as a friend, at the request of the innholder lodges there and his goods be stolen, etc. he shall not have an action; for the writ is, ad hospitandos homines, etc., transeuntes in eisdem hospitantes, etc."

It was in early times considered that to be a traveller a man must lodge at the inn. In Warbrooke v. Griffin (4), it was said by COKE, C.J. (2 Brownl. 254):

"... and if a neighbour of the innkeeper come to the innkeeper, he shall not answer for the goods, for he is not lodged, but as a tipler, and so if an innkeeper invite any to his house ad prandendum aut caenandum, the innkeeper shall not be charged . . ."

In Gulielm's Case (5) it was considered by DODERIDGE, J., that the traveller lost his status as such after one day's stay. On the second day he became a "hogen hinde" and on the third day a menial servant. In Harland's Case (6), Calye's Case (1) was dissented from. It was urged that after a stay of fourteen days at an inn a man could no longer be a traveller, but it was held otherwise. By 1793, when Bennett v. Mellor (7) was decided, it had become recognised that it was not necessary for the guest to stay the night in order to charge the innkeeper, but a passing visit for refreshment sufficed. Similarly, in the course of time it became settled that it is a question of fact in each case whether the guest, by prolonging his stay, has ceased to be a traveller and become a lodger: see Lamond v. Richard (8). It is, however, remarkable that in only two cases has there ever been any discussion whether the plaintiff on his arrival could properly be considered a traveller. I shall refer to these cases later.

It is argued by counsel for the defendant that in every one of the other reported cases, although the question was not discussed, the facts were such that there was some evidence on which the plaintiff could have been held to be a traveller in the sense for which he contends. On the other hand, counsel for the plaintiff says that all the cases, with one exception, are consistent with the view for which he contends, namely, that the word "traveller" includes all comers who come to an inn from outside, intending to make use of some or all of the facilities it supplies and who are so received. This excludes friends invited as the private guests of the innkeeper, guests who have become lodgers, the servants or family of the innkeeper, and persons visiting the inn for other purposes, for example, a commercial traveller, who comes solely for the purpose of selling his wares.

These contentions necessitate a detailed examination of three cases. The first is Bennett v. Mellor (7) decided in 1793. In that case action was brought against an innkeeper for the value of goods stolen at his inn. The case was tried by BULLER, J., at the Lancaster Assizes and the facts were that the plaintiff's servant had taken the goods in question to market at Manchester and, not being able to dispose of them, went to the defendant's inn and asked if he could leave the goods there till next week (meaning the next market day). He was told by the defendant's wife that she could not tell, as they were full of parcels. The servant then sat down in the inn and had some liquor and put the goods behind him. When he got up after a short time the goods were missing. A verdict was found for the plaintiff. BULLER, J., reporting the case on a motion for a new trial, said (5 Term. 274) that, if the defendant's wife had accepted the goods on the special request made, he should have considered her a bailee and not answerable, having been guilty of no negligence, but, that not being the case, he considered this to be the common case of goods brought into an inn by a guest, and stolen from thence, in which case the innkeeper was liable. It was argued, first, that the innkeeper had refused to take charge of the goods, and was not liable in this form of action, though the plaintiff might have his remedy in another form of action, and, secondly, that the plaintiff's servant did not come as a guest, but for the special purpose of asking the landlord to take charge of the goods. The rule was discharged. GROSE, J., considered the case covered by Calve's Case (1), saying (5 Term. 276):

"According to that, if a man go into an inn and is accepted there as a guest, the innkeeper is bound to take care of the goods of the guest; and so says the case in DYER."

It is said that, on the facts, the servant had, apparently, come from outside Manchester and was intending to return home, and could, accordingly, be considered a traveller. On the other hand, it would certainly appear that no consideration was given to this aspect of the case by anyone, and GROSE, J., dealt with it on the basis of a relationship arising out of the acceptance of the servant by the innkeeper as a guest.

In Thompson v. Lacy (9) the headnote reads:

"A house of public entertainment in London, where beds, provisions, etc., are furnished for all persons paying for the same, but which was merely a tavern and coffee house, and was not frequented by stage coaches and waggons from the country, and which had no stables belonging to it, is to be considered an inn, and the owner is subject to the liabilities of innkeepers, and has a lien on the goods of his guest for the payment of his bill, and that even where the guest did not appear to have been a traveller, but one who had previously resided in furnished lodgings in London."

The facts set out in the report were that the plaintiff, who had previously lived in furnished lodgings in London, went to the defendant's house and engaged a room. He continued to reside there for several months and then left. The defendant charged in his bill for eighty-three nights' lodging, and claimed a lien on the plaintiff's goods. ABBOTT, C.J., directed a non-suit in an action of trover by the plaintiff. A rule nisi was obtained. Counsel showing cause confined their arguments to supporting the finding that the house was a common inn. Counsel appearing in support of the rule, however, contended that it was not an inn and that, even if it were, the plaintiff, having been an inhabitant of London, frequenting it and even sleeping there, was not a wayfaring man within the rule. The judgments of ABBOTT, C.J., BAYLEY and BEST, JJ., holding that the house was an inn, occupy a full page in the report of the case in the English Reports (106 E.R. 667), but none of them even mentions the point taken that the plaintiff was not a traveller.

Finally, in Orchard v. Bush & Co. (10) the facts were that the plaintiff was in business in Liverpool and lived outside. He went one night to an hotel in Liverpool for supper about 9 p.m., on his way to the station on his return home. His overcoat was stolen while he was at dinner. The county court judge found that the plaintiff was "a guest" of the innkeeper and gave judgment in his favour. On appeal to the Divisional Court Mr. Lush argued that merely taking temporary refreshment was not enough to constitute the plaintiff a traveller and cited R. v. Rymer (11), and Lamond v. Richard (8). Mr. Horridge, for the plaintiff, submitted that the relationship of innkeeper and guest is constituted if a person goes to an inn for the purpose of receiving such accommodation and services as are ordinarily given to guests. He is protected if he deposits his goods in a place in which such goods are usually taken in the inn. WILLS and KENNEDY, JJ., dismissed the appeal. WILLS, J., after stating that on the facts the plaintiff was a wayfarer, added ([1898] 2 Q.B. 287):

"I think a guest is a person who uses the inn, either for a temporary or a more permanent stay, in order to take what the inn can give."

KENNEDY, J., said (ibid., 289):

"It was said that the plaintiff in the present case was not a traveller. The authorities give no definition of what is a traveller; but, looking at the reason of the thing, I should have thought that any person, who was neither an inhabitant of the house nor a private guest of the innkeeper or his family, but who came into the house as a guest to get such accommodation as it afforded and he was willing to pay for, was a traveller. It does not seem to me to make any difference whether his journey be a long or a short one. I agree that, on the facts of this case, the plaintiff was a traveller; but, apart from the question whether he was a traveller or not, I am of opinion that if a man is in an inn for the purpose of receiving such accommodation as the innkeeper can give him, he is entitled to the protection the law gives to a guest at an inn. I agree with what is said in the notes to Calve's Case (1) (1 Smith L.C., 10th ed., p. 124). 'It is not necessary, in order that a man may be a guest, so as to fix the innkeeper with liability, that he should have come for more than a temporary refreshment.' "

It is true that KENNEDY, J.'s statement of the law was obiter on the view taken on the facts, but, none the less, it merits the respect and consideration that are always accorded to the observations of that learned judge, and, in my view, it in no way conflicts with previous authority (save possibly Rymer's Case (11) and is entirely consistent with the interpretation of Bennett v. Mellor (7) and Thompson v. Lacy (9) for which the plaintiff in the present case contends.

This brings me to R. v. Rymer (11). In that case the defendant was indicted for refusing to serve liquor to the prosecutor, who was a local resident, and was in the habit of bringing his dogs on the licensed premises, to the annoyance of other customers. It was held by the Court for Crown Cases Reserved, first, that the bar in question which was separated from the inn and had a different name was not part of the inn; secondly, that the prosecutor was not a traveller; and, thirdly, that the defendant had not acted unreasonably. No counsel appeared to argue on either side, but, although the first ground would have been sufficient to dispose of the case, the court clearly decided that the prosecutor, being a local resident who called in for a drink, was not a traveller. There is nothing to show what view WILLS and KENNEDY, JJ., took of this case when it was cited to them in Orchard v. Bush & Co. (10). Although it is difficult to see that any distinction can be drawn between what constitutes a traveller for the purposes of such a prosecution and what is necessary in a civil action at the suit of one who has, in fact, been accepted as a guest at an inn and lost his goods therein, none the less I cannot regard the decision in this criminal prosecution as compelling me to the view that the law was incorrectly stated by KENNEDY, J., in Orchard v. Bush & Co. (10), and the same observation applies to some words used by LORD GODDARD, C.J., in delivering the judgment of the Court of Criminal Appeal in R. v. Higgins (12), in which he said ([1947] 2 All E.R. 621) that, in contrast to the prosecutor, local residents could not be regarded as travellers. For these reasons, I am prepared to accept the statement of the law quoted above from the judgment of KENNEDY, J., in Orchard v. Bush & Co. (10), decided more than fifty years ago and followed and applied in subsequent decisions—for example, in Cryan v. Hotel Rembrandt, Ltd. (13).

We were referred to several cases decided under the provisions of the Licensing Acts prior to 1921, but I do not derive much assistance from these decisions, which depend on the language used in the particular statute in question and the problem of the “bona fide traveller” seeking intoxicating liquor on Sunday. On this part of the case, I am in agreement with the judgment of LYNSEY, J., who arrived at the same conclusion for substantially the same reasons.

The second defence raised was that the car park was not within “the hospitium” of the inn. The car park consists of a wide triangular space in front of the inn which opens on to it, with the road from Watling Street to Fenny Drayton running along the side of the inn. The car park has a tar macadam surface and there is a large sign with the words “Royal Red Gate” in conspicuous letters across one side of the park. It was clearly constructed and intended for the parking of visitors’ cars and was so used. There was, however, attached to one of the uprights supporting the sign a small square board with the following notice on it:

“Car Park. Patrons only. Vehicles are admitted to this parking place on condition that the proprietor shall not be liable for loss of or damage to (a) any vehicle (b) anything in or on or about any vehicle, however such loss or damage may be caused. R. W. Linnitt. Proprietor.”

The learned judge found that the plaintiff had not seen, or, at any rate, read, the notice and that, in any event, if the car park was part of the inn, such a notice would not relieve the innkeeper of his common law liability. The defendant, on appeal, did not seek to rely on this notice as contractually relieving him from liability, and conceded that, if the car park was within the “hospitium,” he could not contract out of his liability, but he contended that the “hospitium” of an inn prima facie includes only the inn itself, its stables, and (in modern times) its garages, though it may be extended beyond the stables or garages by the innkeeper either by accepting the goods by himself or his servants or by necessary inference from his conduct: see Jones v. Tyler (14). This extension being within the control of the innkeeper, he can, it is said, exclude by notice the extension which might otherwise have been inferred from the circumstances. There is no doubt that in former times the “hospitium” was limited to the inn and stables and that the innkeeper was not liable for his guest’s horse which was put to pasture by the guest in a field adjoining the inn, but there is no authority which limits the “hospitium” to such parts of the premises as are under cover, and the word “infra” has been treated as equivalent to “intra.” It is conceded that in modern times the “hospitium” extends to garages, and I can see no reason why it should not include car parks designed and intended for the use of customers paying visits of short duration, just as in former times the gig would be left in the yard on market days. This applies particularly in cases like the present where the inn, adjoining Watling Street, is obviously catering for motor traffic and where no evidence was given by the defendant as to the existence or extent or situation of any garages in which visitors might place their cars. It is true that in the course of the trial a plan, other than the plan which had been agreed, was received in evidence, and that plan does indicate the existence of such garages at the top of the plan. No evidence was given to explain the situation or nature of these garages or whether they belonged to the defendant or some other person. Therefore, I proceed on the basis that there was, in fact, no evidence of the existence of any garages attached to or forming part of the inn.

The liability of the innkeeper, in my view, extends to the goods of his guest which are placed by the guest in that part of the premises in which such goods are usually taken in the inn. The innkeeper will not be responsible if a motor car is placed by the guest on some part of the inn premises not intended for, and unsuitable for, the reception of motor vehicles. This is, I think, the explanation of the old cases, such as Harland's Case (6), Brand v. Glasse (15) and Sanders v. Spencer (16), where a distinction is drawn between an "outyard" and an "inner yard." If an innkeeper has an "inner yard" more suitable for the reception of carriages or cars, he can no doubt exclude the user for this purpose of an "outer yard," but, if he has only one yard or car parking space forming part of the inn premises and designed and intended for the use of cars and if he offers no other accommodation for his customers' cars, then I can see no reason why such space is not within the "hospitium." Furthermore, if liability is to be determined by the structural nature of the yard, I would ask what are the determining features? Must there be a wall or building on all sides of the space or will a wall on two sides or three sides suffice? Suppose the inn building forms one side of the yard, but on two other sides it is bordered by the walls of adjoining buildings with a gateway or archway leading into the street. Is this an inner yard? Unless I can find some guidance from the authorities as to the answer to such questions as these I prefer what seems to be a more reasonable test, namely, is the place in question a part of the inn premises intended and suitable for user in connection with some part of the innkeeper's business, and, if I find that it is not only intended and suitable for such purpose, but is the only accommodation available for the particular purpose, then it seems to me that such part of the premises must necessarily be within the "hospitium" of the inn. If an innkeeper holds himself out as willing to receive customers' motor cars on his premises, he is responsible for their safety. In the present case the defendant so held himself out, there was no evidence of any other accommodation for motor cars, and, in my opinion, the "hospitium" of this inn included the car park and the defendant cannot escape liability for the safety of his guests' motor cars parked in the place intended for them merely by exhibiting a notice such as that described above.

One further matter remains to be dealt with. It was said that one of the plans put in evidence at the trial showed that the only access to the saloon bar visited by the plaintiff was from the outside and consequently it did not form part of the premises devoted to the business of an innkeeper. Further inspection of the plan showed that there was apparently access to this bar from the rear, through a courtyard on to which other parts of the premises opened. No evidence was given on this matter at the trial and the learned judge did not deal with it in his judgment. The material available is manifestly insufficient to enable us to say that this well known feature of most inns was not an integral part of the inn premises. For these reasons, I think this appeal fails.

ASQUITH, L.J.: I agree. Obviously a guest, as against the innkeeper of a common inn, enjoys an anomalous status. The innkeeper is bound, under civil and criminal penalties, to receive him, and under civil sanctions to receive, and (subject to the Innkeepers' Acts) to ensure the safety of his goods, so far as they are "infra hospitium," while as an offset against these stringent obligations he has a lien on the goods which the guest brings to the inn.

This appeal raises four questions. First, must a guest, seeking to enforce the stringent liability to which a common innkeeper is subject, be a "traveller"?; secondly, if so, what does the term "traveller" mean?; thirdly, in the present case was the plaintiff a "traveller" in the material sense of that term?; and, fourthly, if he was, is he on the facts of this case entitled to enforce those strict liabilities? As regards the first of the four questions formulated above, I think it plain that a plaintiff is not a "guest" for the purpose of acquiring the peculiar remedies which the common law confers as against an innkeeper unless he be also a "traveller." Whatever precise force attaches to that expression, it must apply to him or he goes without these remedies. This is, I think, established beyond question by the following among other considerations: (i) The old writ, which in the time of Elizabeth: see Calye's Case (1); could alone initiate a claim of this kind, described the plaintiff or plaintiffs as "transiens" or "transeuntes." (ii) In the field of criminal prosecutions, for not "receiving" the prosecutor, the indictment was bad if it did not contain any allegation that the plaintiff was a traveller: R. v. Luellin (2); and failure to prove that allegation was one of the grounds on which, in R. v. Rymer (11), the Court for Crown Cases Reserved held that the prosecution failed: see also the observations (not, I think, wholly obiter) of LORD GODDARD, C.J., in R. v. Higgins (12). (iii) In the field of civil litigation, since Calye's Case (1) the allegation that the plaintiff was a "traveller" or "travelling" has been held an indispensable averment in the declaration. It is true that in Drope v. Thaire (17), the want of this averment, according at least to the case as reported in Norman French (Lat. 126), was treated as immaterial, but in Lamond v. Richard (8), the Court of Appeal, basing itself partly on the precedent in BULLEN & LEAKE, 3rd ed., p. 344, clearly affirmed the contrary view. That decision is binding on us. There are decisions which, dealing with the rights of a guest, are silent on the question whether the person suing as guest was a traveller. There are no decisions which say expressly that anyone can be a guest without being a traveller, and the first named decisions, in my view, tacitly assume a guest to have fulfilled the qualification necessary to his becoming a guest, namely, that he should have been a traveller. Many of the decided cases, indeed, concern the question whether, or when, he has lost that character and assume him to have possessed it in the first instance.

The second main question, and a more difficult one, is what precisely the word "traveller" means in this connection. I think its meaning has in the course of time undergone some modification. According to the decisions in Tudor and Stuart times, there might have been some warrant for restricting it to persons who resorted to the common inn for accommodation for the night: see, for example, Warbrooke v. Griffin (4). However long this notion endured, it received its quietus when Bennett v. Mellor (7) decided that a man who, on his way home from Manchester market, entered an inn and had his goods stolen while he was having a drink, was entitled to the special remedies against an innkeeper, there being no question of his lodging at the inn for the night. This decision, more than a century and a half old, has never been overruled, and I feel it is too late for any agency short of the legislature to overrule it now. What it decides is that, if the plaintiff in transit from another place to his home, resorts to an inn for a meal (or a drink) he is a "traveller." So, again, in Orchard v. Bush & Co. (10), the plaintiff was held entitled to enforce the special obligations resting on an innkeeper when he stopped at the inn for a meal when en route from his office in Liverpool to his residence some miles outside it. I cannot persuade myself that, if this is so, a person, who travels to an inn from his own residence for a meal or a drink and travels back to his own residence afterwards, is not a "traveller" also.

To this view it is objected that, if it were true, every one visiting an inn would be a "traveller." I think the answer to this objection is that the term "traveller," even on this broad construction, is very far from embracing all comers. It excludes for instance: (a) the innkeeper's family living in the inn, (b) the innkeeper's servants, (c) the innkeeper's private guests, (d) lodgers at the inn, and (e) persons resorting to the inn for purposes unconnected with the enjoyment of the facilities which it provides as an inn—for example, to repair the drains or to sell the innkeeper a sewing machine. This is the gist of the judgment of KENNEDY, J., in Orchard v. Bush & Co. (10), which, whether or not it goes beyond the question immediately in issue, gives an illuminating conspectus of the law. On any other meaning of the word, how can the innkeeper distinguish the traveller to whom he is under strict liability from the non-traveller to whom he is not? On the meaning indicated above, the sheep and the goats can at once be told apart. It is true that in Atkinson v. Sellers (18), COCKBURN, C.J., affirmed for the purpose of the proceedings before him the very distinction which I have ventured for the present purpose to reject. His language is as follows (5 C.B.N.S. 448):

A

"Of course, a man could not be said to be a traveller who goes to a place merely for the purpose of taking refreshment. But, if he goes to an inn for refreshment in the course of a journey, whether of business or of pleasure, he is entitled to demand refreshment, and the innkeeper is justified in supplying it."

B

He was, however, dealing (a) with criminal and not civil liability, and (b) under a particular statute of 1854 which prohibited serving persons between certain Sunday hours unless they were travellers. Such a decision and many others decided under licensing legislation are not directly relevant in a civil action brought on the innkeepers' common law liability. If the distinction were valid in the different province which we are exploring, more than one of the cases cited to us would have been wrongly decided: for example, the decision of GREER, J., in Oryan v. Hotel Rembrandt, Ltd. (13), where, the guest of an hotel guest was held a guest (and, therefore, by implication a traveller) vis-a-vis the hotelkeeper, whereas she had done no more than dine with the hotel-guest, intending no doubt to return home afterwards. I am, therefore, of opinion that, on the third question, counsel for the plaintiff had established that the plaintiff was a "traveller."

C

D

It does not, however, follow that the defendant was, in the present case, subject to the strict innkeepers' liability in respect of the plaintiff's car, having regard to the place where the plaintiff left it. The absolute liability of the innkeeper for the safety of the plaintiff's goods only attaches where such goods are "infra hospitium," namely, within the inn buildings themselves or within precincts so intimately related to those buildings as to be treated for this purpose as forming part of them. Stable buildings or garages annexed to the inn, or inner courts enclosed by its walls, have been so treated. Goods placed within these limits by the traveller are "infra hospitium" and, except by notice under the Innkeepers' Liability Act, 1863, s. 3, and to the extent that such a notice operates, the innkeeper cannot limit his absolute liability in relation to them. He cannot by a special agreement contract out of his strict liability. This is, I think, implicit in the decided cases. If, on the other hand, the traveller places his property in some outlying area which is not actually or constructively part of the inn—if he, for example, deposits his luggage in what was called in Harland's Case (6) an "outyard" adjacent to the inn, the "hospitium" has been held in some of the older cases not to extend to these things. The innkeeper is not absolutely liable for their loss and he can freely limit his liability (which would not, prima facie, exceed that of a bailee) in respect of them by special contract, though, if it is not the guest, but the innkeeper himself, who puts the guest's goods in such an outlying area, or invites the guest to put them there, he may by his act extend the "hospitium" to cover that area, as, for example, in Jones v. Tyler (14), where the innkeeper left the guest's gig in a public street outside the inn. On this branch of the case I agree with the conclusions of my Lord. I would add that, whatever the older cases may say, in my view, it is to-day a question in substance of fact whether a debatable area is part of the inn, including in that term the original "hospitium" or any extension of it. The most material facts in this case are that the area, being an area contiguous to the inn, is one in which the guest with a motor car is invited to leave it, that there is no evidence that any other accommodation belonging to the inn is provided for cars, and that it is part of the innkeeper's normal business to provide for guests who arrive in cars. These circumstances are very strong evidence that the area is within the "hospitium" and, as I read the judgment, the learned judge has so found. If I am wrong in thinking that the question is substantially one of fact, I consider that the conclusion which the judge has reached on this point is the right legal inference from the circumstances referred to, and, if his conclusion is right, the strict liability attached and could not, in my view, be displaced by such notice as was put up in the car park, which, incidentally, would be quite invisible at 9 p.m. on a February night. For these reasons and those given by my Lord, I agree that the appeal, though very attractively argued, should be dismissed.

E

F

G

H

DENNING, L.J.: No one can doubt that the special rights and obligations between innkeeper and guest depend on the guest being a traveller. That appears from the original writ, which, LORD COKE says, in Calye's Case (1) (8 Co. Rep. 32a) "is in such case the ground of the common law", and also from the form of declaration which is set out in BULLEN & LEAKE, 3rd ed., p. 344, and from the form of indictment where an innkeeper is charged with refusing accommodation at his inn: see R. v. Luellin (2); R. v. Rymer (11). The question, however, we are asked to decide is when a man can properly be said to be a traveller.

In the sixteenth and early seventeenth centuries to be a traveller, a man had to "lodge" in the inn, that is, he had to stay the night or, at least, engage a room for the night: see Warbrooke v. Griffin (4); and he had not to stay more than three nights, because, if he did so, he ceased to be a lodger and became a boarder (Gulielm's Case (5); Harland's Case (6)). This test had the merit of simplicity and certainly was entirely in keeping with the distinction between an alehouse and an inn, which was, and still is, that a common inn implies ability to give a lodging to those who wish to stay the night: Stephens v. Watson (19); and, naturally enough, only those were considered travellers who wished to avail themselves of this essential facility. The test of staying the night was not only necessary, but also sufficient, to make a man a traveller. So long as he stayed the night, it did not matter whether he was in the middle of his journey or at the end of it: Drope v. Thaire (17); nor did it matter whether he came from near or from far. The old cases all recognise that a neighbour who only comes a mile or two, but who stays the night, is a traveller, for they are at pains to say that he is not a traveller when he comes as the invited friend of the innkeeper. So, in 1583 in Carr's Case (20) it was held (1 Roll. Abr. 3 (e)) that "if an innkeeper invites a man to supper and, the night being far spent, he invites him to stay the night, if he is afterwards robbed, yet the innkeeper will not be charged for it, because that guest is not a traveller."

LORD COKE in his celebrated discourse on Calye's Case (1), first published in 1611, though the case was decided in 1584, makes the same point (8 Co. Rep. 32a):

"If a neighbour, who is no traveller, as a friend at the request of the innkeeper lodges there and his goods be stolen, etc., he shall not have an action."

The implication clearly is that, if he comes, not as an invited friend, but as a member of the public, he is a traveller, even if he comes from near at hand. There is much good sense in this, because the innkeeper in a large town like London did not, even in those days, know all the people in the place, and, if one of them came and asked to stay the night, the innkeeper might not know the man or how far he had come, and he had no right to ask him those particulars, so he had no ground on which to refuse him accommodation. Accordingly, it was held that, if the man did stay the night, he was a traveller and the innkeeper was entitled to a lien on his goods. This was so well settled that on one occasion later on, when it was suggested that he was not a traveller, the court treated the point as not worthy of notice: Thompson v. Lacy (9).

The simplicity of the sixteenth century test was, however, lost in the succeeding periods. On the one hand, the three days were extended indefinitely. Lawyers at the assizes and gentlemen at the horse races on occasion stayed more than three nights and were still held to be travellers: see the notes to White's Case (21) (2 Dyer, 158b), and Harland's Case (6); but, of course, a guest might still stay so long that he ceased to be a traveller and became a boarder: Lamond v. Richard (8). On the other hand, the requirement that he must stay at least one night at the inn ceased to be effective. The first inroad on the old test was in 1703, when three judges held, against the opinion of HOLT, C.J. (1 Salk. 388), that, if a traveller leave his horse at an inn, and lodge elsewhere, he is a guest "... because the horse must be fed, by which the innkeeper has gain": York v. Grindstone (22). This obviously opened the way for the view that when a traveller took advantage of accommodation provided by an inn, the relationship of innkeeper and guest arose, even though he did not stay the night, and that is the way in which the law did, in fact, develop.

In Bennett v. Mellor (7), a man was on a journey in the sense that he had come into Manchester on a market day and was on his way to his home in the country, but he had no intention of staying the night and he only had a drink at the inn. Yet it was held that the relationship of innkeeper and guest arose. The effect of that case was stated by Mr. J. W. SMITH in 1837, in the first edition of his LEADING CASES, in the notes to Calye's Case (1), in these words:

"It is not necessary, in order that a man should be a guest, so as to fix the innkeeper with liability, that he should have come for more than temporary refreshment."

That note has been retained untouched by all subsequent editors, including WILLES, J., KEATING, J., and LORD COLLINS, and has been accepted as good law for more than a hundred years. It was quoted and adopted by KENNEDY, J., in Orchard v. Bush & Co. (10), and cannot now be called in question. Counsel for the defendant did not, indeed, question it, but he said that it must be confined to a man who was a traveller in some sense of the word, that is, he must at least be on a journey of some kind or other, be it only a journey from his office to his home, and that it was not sufficient if he was merely a local resident dropping in for a drink. There is very considerable authority in favour of counsel's contention. LORD COKE would certainly not have held that the local resident who drops in for a drink was a traveller. He would have dismissed him as a tippler: see Warbrooke v. Griffin (4). So would WATSON, B.: see Pidgeon v. Legg (23); and KELLY, C.B.: see R. v. Rymer (11); and LORD GODDARD, C.J.: see R. v. Higgins (12) ([1947] 2 All E.R. 621).

On reflection, however, I do not think that we can take that view. Once it is accepted that a man, who comes for temporary refreshment while on a journey, is a traveller, there is no practical way of distinguishing him from the local resident. Just as the old lawyers of the sixteenth century found that they could not dismiss the neighbour unless he came as an invited friend of the innkeeper, so we cannot dismiss the local resident unless he comes as an invited guest, and for the selfsame practical reason—that the innkeeper may often not know whether the man is a local resident or not, nor whether he is on a journey or not, and the innkeeper has no right to ask him for those particulars. Yet if the man should be on a journey, the innkeeper dare not refuse him, under pain of being brought before the criminal courts, and, if he is bound to accept him, then he should have a lien for his charges and, correspondingly, should be liable for the safe custody of his goods. It was, of course, easy enough for LORD COKE to dismiss the tippler, because in his day a man, to be a guest, had to lodge in the inn, which the tippler did not do. He did not stay the night.

But since his time the courts have opened the door of the inn to the man who stops for a drink on his way home, and, once he gets his foot in, the door cannot be shut against the local resident, for it is beyond the wit of man to know the one from the other. In the course of the argument, ASQUITH, L.J., put the case of two men walking home from work. Both go to the same inn for a drink, but the home of one is on the hither side of it and the home of the other is on the further side. Is one a traveller and the other not? Such illustrations convince me that we cannot accept the contention of counsel for the defendant and we must hold the plaintiff to be a traveller. A

The second question we have to decide is whether an innkeeper can contract out of his liability to keep safely the goods of his guests. In the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, an innkeeper could not lawfully contract out of his liability for goods which were brought by the guest within the precincts of the inn. There was a very good reason for this rule. It was because the innkeeper was obliged to accept the goods, and the law would not allow him to derogate from his obligation by attaching conditions to his acceptance. If he refused to accept the goods except at the owner's risk, he was in effect refusing to honour the obligation which the law imposed on him, and that he was not allowed to do. B

HOLT, C.J., made this clear in 1702 in Lane v. Cotton (24), when he said (1 Salk. 18) that innkeepers C " . . . are bound to keep safely, and answer all neglects . . . and so they would be, though they should expressly caution against it."

Similar reasoning was applied in those days to common carriers, for in ST. GERMAIN'S DOCTOR AND STUDENT, by MUCHALL (1787), 18th ed., p. 224, one finds it said that D

" . . . if [the carrier] would percase refuse to carry [goods] unless promise were made unto him that he shall not be charged for no misdemeanour that should be in him, the promise were void, for it were against reason and against good manners, and so it is in all other cases like." E

The law as to common carriers was afterwards altered by the judges, who allowed common carriers to make special contracts exempting themselves from all liability. This was a retrograde step, which was regretted by LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J., in 1804, in Nicholson v. Willan (25), when he said (5 East 513): F

" . . . we cannot do otherwise than sustain such right [to contract out] in the present instance, however liable to abuse and productive of inconvenience it may be; leaving to the legislature if it shall think fit to apply such remedy hereafter as the evil may require."

Ultimately Parliament did step in to prevent the carriers from imposing unreasonable conditions: see the history of the law on this matter, set out in Peek v. North Staffordshire Ry. Co. (26) (10 H.L. Cas. 493, per BLACKBURN, J.). The law as to common innkeepers was, however, never altered by the judges. No retrograde step was taken there. Innkeepers have never been allowed to contract out of the liability imposed on them by the custom of the realm. It is true that this involved them in hardships and Parliament passed the Innkeepers' Liability Act, 1863, to protect them in some respects, but the very passing of that Act implicitly affirms the rule that at common law they cannot make a special contract out. So the law still is that, in respect of goods brought within the precincts of the inn, the innkeeper cannot contract out of the liability which the common law imposes on him. No one disputed this before us, but the matter is of such importance that I think that we should declare it specifically. G H

The third question is what are the "precincts of the inn" for which the innkeeper is strictly liable? LORD COKE said in Calve's Case (1) (8 Co. Rep. 32b) that "... the innholder, by law, shall answer for nothing that is out of his inn, but only for those things which are infra hospitium."

This is still the law, but we are left with the question: What is infra hospitium? The two extremes are clear. First, everything which is under the cover of the inn-buildings is "infra hospitium". LORD COKE says (ibid.):

"... the innholder is bound to answer for himself and for his family, of the chambers and stables, for they are infra hospitium."

That is clear enough. Everything within the house and stables, or, in these days, the house and garage, is infra hospitium. Secondly, nothing which is outside the curtilage of the inn is infra hospitium. Thus, a piece of pasture, which is outside the inn, is not infra hospitium. That was decided in Calve's Case (1), where an innkeeper was held not liable for his guest's horse which was stolen from the pasture. The reason, as LORD COKE said (ibid.), is "... because the horse, which at the request of the owner is put to pasture, is not infra hospitium . . ."

Suppose, however, that, instead of a piece of pasture, there is a piece of open land outside the curtilage of the inn, and the innkeeper, at the request of the owner of a motor car, allows him to leave his car on the open space. Is the innkeeper liable if the car is stolen? Clearly he is not liable in the case of the car any more than he is in the case of the horse. Suppose, then, that it becomes a regular thing for owners, with the permission of the innkeeper, to tether their horses in the pasture or to leave their cars in the open space. Is the liability of the innkeeper to be thereby increased? I think not. In each case the innkeeper allows his guest to use the pasture or the open space for their own convenience, but it is not part of the inn, and so he is not liable as an insurer in respect of them, but only for negligence: Mosley v. Fosset (27). There is one obvious exception to this extreme. It is this. The innkeeper is strictly liable if he accepts a horse or carriage into his charge as innkeeper and then himself leaves them outside the curtilage of the inn. Such was the case put by LORD COKE in Calve's Case (1) (8 Co. Rep. 32a) of the innkeeper who, of his own head, puts his guest's horse to grass, and the case of the gig, of which the ostler took charge and then left it in the street outside the inn: see Jones v. Tyler (14). In between the two extremes lies the present case. What is the position of an outer yard or car park which is within the curtilage of the inn, but is not under cover of the buildings? Such a place is, undoubtedly, part of the inn, because it is provided by the innkeeper for the use of his guests; but, unlike the stables or garage, it is not a suitable place for the guests to leave their horses or cars for the night. In most inns there is, or should be, a stable or garage in which travellers can put their horses or cars for the night, for, as I have already said, a common inn implies ability to give a lodging for those who wish to stay the night, and that implies ability to stable the horse or garage the car. The Royal Red Gate Inn in Watling Street apparently provides such accommodation, for it has, according to one of the plans which was handed in at the trial, a double lock-up garage at the back. We have to consider now, however, the car park in the front, which is obviously not a suitable place to leave a car for the night. The car park is not provided for travellers who stay the night, who were the only travellers for whose benefit the common law imposed a strict liability on innkeepers. The car park is provided for travellers who stop for a meal or for a drink, who have only become entitled to be considered travellers by a comparatively recent innovation. Inasmuch as it is provided for these last, I should not myself be disposed to consider it infra hospitium if I could avoid it, because it means yet another extension of the strict liability of innkeepers which has gone far enough already, but I must acknowledge the force of the arguments to the contrary. I can well see that once tipplers and diners are admitted to be travellers, it is logical enough to say that a car park which is provided for them is infra hospitium. It is, so to speak, an extended hospitium due to the extended notion of a traveller. This court seems to have proceeded on that footing in Gee, Walker & Slater, Ltd. v. Friary Hotel (Derby), Ltd. (28) in regard to the forecourt of the Friary Hotel at Derby, and I can see no satisfactory distinction between a forecourt and a car park. I agree, therefore, that the car park was, prima facie, infra hospitium.

The fourth question is whether an innkeeper can protect himself by putting up a notice that he will not be responsible for cars in the car park. If an innkeeper cannot protect himself by notice, it will be a serious matter, because horses and carriages (including cars) are the only things for which an innkeeper is liable for the full value if they are stolen. Parliament has enabled him to limit his liability for everything else to £30, by putting the proper notice up in the hall of his inn, but that parliamentary limit does not apply to cars. If he has no means of protecting himself in respect of the car park, it means that not only guests who stop for a drink during the day, but also those who come for a meal during the hours of darkness, will be able to leave their cars for a long time in the car park, without telling the innkeeper anything about them, and hold him liable for their full value if they are stolen. The innkeeper will not be able to say that the guest was negligent in leaving the car there, because the guest will be able to say, quite rightly, that it was infra hospitium and he was entitled to leave it there, even during the hours of darkness: see Gee, Walker & Slater, Ltd. v. Friary Hotel (Derby), Ltd. (28); so that, if carried to an extreme, this responsibility would mean that an innkeeper ought to have an attendant to watch over cars in the car park—all night, if need be. I do not think that we are compelled to carry the law to such a length. There are cases in the books which show that the innkeeper can at common law protect himself by notice in the case of yards which are unprotected and open to the street.

The first was a case decided in 1564, which was vouched for in Brand v. Glasse (15) (Moore, K.B. 159):

“A clothier came to an inn with his waggon of wool to lodge there, and on his entry the innkeeper said to him that, if he wished that he should undertake the charge of his waggon, he should draw it into the inner court or otherwise he would not be responsible for it; the clothier did not do it. The wool was stolen and the clothier brought an action; and for this special matter the innkeeper was discharged.”

The same result was reached two years later (1566) in Sanders v. Spencer (16), where a clothier came to an inn at Brodeway and, notwithstanding the warning of the innkeeper, laid his packages “in an outer court at large,” where they were stolen; and the innkeeper was held not liable. These cases can be explained, if you please, on the ground that the loss was due to the guest's own fault, but the better ground seems to be that when the goods were placed in an outer court that was open to the street, the innkeeper was entitled to give notice that he would not be responsible for their safety. If they had been placed under cover within the precincts of the inn, the innkeeper could not have escaped liability by giving notice that he would not be responsible, for that would be an attempt to contract out of his strict liability, which is not allowed, but when they were placed in the outer yard, the notice was effective. That was certainly the interpretation put on these cases by WHITFIELD, J., in Harland's Case (6) (Clay. 97), where "it was holden that, though an innkeeper say he will not keep the guest's goods unless he will put them under lock and key, etc., this shall not help the innkeeper, for he is bound by law to keep them safe, and so it differs from packs put in an outyard, etc., where such words will serve the innkeeper . . ."

The notice in such cases is not contractual. It is a limitation which the innkeeper is allowed to put on his strict liability, because of the obvious risk involved if the goods are put in that place. It takes the place, so to speak, out of the hospitium, so that the innkeeper is not liable as an insurer in respect of it, but only for negligence. Apply the principles of those old cases to the present case. The car park at the Royal Red Gate Inn was at least as unsafe as any outer yard. It had the whole of one side open to the street for a distance of seventy-five feet and was more in the nature of a "good pull-in for carmen" than anything else. It was so laid out as to be a convenient place for guests to leave their cars, but palpably not a safe place. There was no attendant there, nor would you expect one at a small road-side inn like this. It was obviously no safer than a street parking place. In short, even if there was no notice up there, it was not a place where anyone could reasonably suppose that the innkeeper took full responsibility on himself for cars that were left there, especially during the hours of darkness. But there was, in fact, a notice. The innkeeper had put up a notice in a suitable and prominent place, quite plain for anyone to read if he chose to do so:

"Car Park. Patrons Only. Vehicles are admitted to this parking place on condition that the proprietor shall not be liable for loss of, or damage to, (a) any vehicle, (b) anything in, or on, or about any vehicle, however such loss or damage may be caused."

I think that, following the old cases, that notice was effective to protect the innkeeper from his strict liability. It is true that the notice did not operate as a contract—at any rate, not in the case of the plaintiff, who came by night and did not read it, but the plaintiff cannot make anything of that, because he never made a contract by which he put the car there. He never told the innkeeper it was there at all. If he had asked the innkeeper if his car would be safe there, the innkeeper might well have said, just as the innkeeper did in Brand v. Glasse (15): "If you wish me to undertake the charge of your car, you should take it into one of the garages which I have at the back of the inn, or otherwise I shall not be responsible. There is a notice up there which says that I am not responsible for the car park." If such a conversation had taken place and the plaintiff had, nevertheless, put his car in the car park and it was stolen, I should have thought it plain that the innkeeper would not be liable. That would be good sense, and good law on the authority of Brand v. Glasse (15) and Jones v. Tyler (14). Can the plaintiff be in any better position when he did not so much as ask the innkeeper if the car would be safe there? Should not the notice then serve the innkeeper? I think that it does. It cannot be suggested that it was the duty of the innkeeper to tell the guest that there was a double lock-up garage available at the back, because, after all, the guest did not even tell him that he had come in a car; and, even if the innkeeper had told him that there was a garage available, it is very unlikely that the guest would have put his car in it, especially if there was a charge for it. The guest who came in for a drink would, no doubt, have taken the risk and left it in the car park. So why should he be better off because there was no such conversation? I think that he is not. I think that the notice takes the place of the imaginary conversation. It expresses a limitation on his strict liability, which, in my opinion, an innkeeper is by law permitted to make in the case of an open yard or car park where there is an obvious risk of theft, and, in order to have the benefit of it, it is not necessary for the innkeeper to prove that he had garage accommodation available, at any rate as against a guest who did not ask for it. The risk of loss by theft should fall on the owner of the car who can, and usually does, insure against it, whether it be stolen in the street, or from a car park, or anywhere else. It should not fall on the innkeeper any more than it does on the keeper of an ale-house or a restaurant who provides a car park. I would, therefore, be in favour of allowing the appeal, on the ground that this was palpably not a safe place to leave a car and that the innkeeper was entitled to protect himself from strict liability by the notice that he put up.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: J. E. Lickfold & Sons (for the defendant); L. Bingham & Co. (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

NOTE.

WILLIAMS v. FALKIRK IRON CO., LTD.

[BIRMINGHAM ASSIZES (Sellars, J.), November 24, December 21, 1950.]

Factory—Protection of eyes—“Fettling”—Moulder removing “runners” or “gates” from castings—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 49—Protection of Eyes Regulations, 1938 (S.R. & O., 1938, No. 654), reg. 1, sched.

The plaintiff was employed as a moulder by the defendants in their factory. The work involved the casting of metal man-hole covers in the foundry by the moulders who poured molten metal into moulds consisting of upper and lower cases. When the metal had cooled, the upper case was removed, and the casting then had projections of metal known as “runners” or “gates” where the metal had been poured in. The moulders had to remove these “runners” or “gates” and pass on the casting to the fettlers in the fettling shop who, by means of hammers and chisels, trimmed excess metal from the casting. There was evidence that in the light-metal casting industry it was a practice for the moulder to remove the “runners” or “gates.” In the plaintiff’s factory the usual practice was to remove them by striking with a hammer. On June 24, 1949, the plaintiff removed a casting from the mould, and was striking off the runners or gates, when a piece of metal flew into his eye and injured him. He claimed, inter alia, that the defendants were in breach of s. 49 of the Factories Act, 1937, and the Protection of Eyes Regulations, 1938 (S.R. & O. 1938, No. 654) made in pursuance thereof. Under s. 49 of the Act and the regulations the employer is placed under a duty to provide suitable goggles or effective screens for workmen engaged in the processes mentioned in the schedule to the regulations, which included the fettling of metal castings, but not the work of moulders.

E. G. H. Beresford for the plaintiff.

A. J. Flint for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 21. SELLARS, J., read a judgment in which he held that the process of removing runners or gates from castings by moulders before passing the castings to the fettlers was not fettling within the meaning of the regulations, and, therefore, the defendants were not in breach of their statutory duty.

Solicitors: Gichard & Co., Rotherham (for the plaintiff); Harold Jackson & Co., Sheffield (for the defendants).

[Reported by R. E. CHAPMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

CURRAN v. NEWPARK CINEMAS, LTD. AND OTHERS.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Somervell, Jenkins and Birkett, L.J.J.), December 7, 8, 20, 1950.]

Execution—Garnishee order—Prior assignment of debt—Direction and authority to garnishees to pay to third party all moneys owing by them to judgment debtors—No direct evidence of assignment—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 136 (1).

By a licence agreement, dated Nov. 9, 1948, and made between the judgment debtors and the garnishees, the gross receipts in respect of the distribution by the garnishees of a film produced by the judgment debtors, less costs and expenses and the garnishees' commission, were to be paid to the judgment debtors. On Mar. 16, 1950, the judgment creditor obtained judgment against the judgment debtors for £47 7s. 6d., and £41 7s. 2d. costs, and on Mar. 17 he wrote to the garnishees asking them whether they had distributed the film for the judgment debtors. On Mar. 20 the garnishees were served with a direction and authority from the judgment debtors, purporting to be made pursuant to arrangements entered into for valuable consideration between the judgment debtors and Barclays Bank, Ltd., and stated to be irrevocable, whereby the garnishees were to pay to the bank all moneys payable by them to the judgment debtors under the agreement of Nov. 9, 1948. On Mar. 28 this document was countersigned by a director of the garnishees. No notice was given by the bank to the garnishees of any assignment to it of these moneys. On Mar. 23 the garnishees replied to the judgment creditor, stating that they were the distributors of the film, and on Mar. 29 the judgment creditor wrote to the garnishees asking for details of the financial position between them and the judgment debtors in respect of the proceeds of the distribution of the film, explaining that his object was to enforce the judgment obtained by him against the judgment debtors. On Mar. 31 the garnishees replied that, if the judgment creditor obtained the necessary authority from the judgment debtors, they would provide the information required, but they did not refer to the direction and authority of Mar. 20. In April the judgment debtors paid the debt of £47 7s. 6d. due under the judgment, but not the amount due for costs. The judgment creditor thereupon procured the issue of a garnishee summons against the garnishees, which was served on them on July 27. In opposition to the summons a director of the garnishees swore an affidavit referring to and exhibiting the licence agreement of Nov. 9, 1948, and the direction and authority of Mar. 20, 1950, and copies of the affidavit and exhibits were sent by the garnishees to the judgment creditor on Sept. 20, 1950.

HELD: the document of Mar. 20, 1950, was not an assignment to the bank of the debt due to the judgment debtors from the garnishees, but merely a direction to the garnishees to pay the debt to the bank, and the mere production by the garnishees of the document, without proof of any agreement with, or notice to, the bank by the judgment debtors, did not suffice to establish an absolute assignment of which express notice had been given to the garnishees and which was, accordingly, a legal assignment under the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 136 (1), but, as there was no evidence that the bank had not been given notice of the direction and authority, in view of the recital therein of the prior arrangements with the bank the document afforded prima facie evidence of an assignment, or, at least, substantial grounds for supposing that there might have been an assignment, and, therefore, the court should not make a garnishee order, but should order the bank to appear and state the nature and particulars of its claim to the debt, in accordance with the practice indicated in the County Court Rules, 1936, Ord. 27, r. 11.

Per curiam: "... we think it is clearly wrong, where the garnishee shows that he has notice of a prior assignment, to make an order against him unless he is able to prove strictly and conclusively that the assignment of which he has notice is a valid assignment."

[AS TO GARNISHEE PROCEEDINGS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 14, pp. 106-112, paras. 170-176; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 21, pp. 631, 632, Nos. 2138-2140.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Standing v. Bowring, (1885), 31 Ch.D. 282; 55 L.J.Ch. 218; 54 L.T. 191; 17 Digest 214, 267.
- (2) Brice v. Bannister, (1878), 3 Q.B.D. 569; 47 L.J.Q.B. 722; 38 L.T. 739; 8 Digest 428, 63.
- (3) Harding v. Harding, (1886), 17 Q.B.D. 442; 55 L.J.Q.B. 462; 8 Digest 442, 191.
- (4) Rekstin v. Severo Sibirsko Gosudarstvennoe Akcionerhoe Obschestro Kom-severputj & Bank for Russian Trade, Ltd., [1933] 1 K.B. 47; 102 L.J.K.B. 16; 147 L.T. 231; Digest Supp.
- (5) Yates v. Terry, [1902] 1 K.B. 527; 71 L.J.K.B. 282; 86 L.T. 133; 8 Digest 487, 558.

APPEAL by the garnishees, Associated British Film Distributors, Ltd., from a garnishee order made against them by His Honour JUDGE DALE in the Westminster County Court on Oct. 11, 1950.

The garnishees contended that a direction and authority served on them by the judgment debtors on Mar. 20, 1950, purporting to be for valuable consideration and directing them to pay to Barclays Bank, Ltd., all moneys payable by them to the judgment debtors under an agreement dated Nov. 9, 1948, operated as a legal assignment to the bank of the garnishees' debt to the judgment debtors under the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 136 (1). The judgment creditor contended that the document was not a legal assignment within s. 136 (1). No notice of an assignment had been given by the bank to the garnishees, and there was no evidence that the bank had been given notice of the document of Mar. 20. The learned county court judge took the view that the document was executed with a view to defeating the judgment (which was obtained on Mar. 16, 1950), and held that there was no valid assignment. The facts appear in the judgment of the Court of Appeal delivered by JENKINS, L.J.

C. H. Duveen and A. L. Figgis for the garnishees.
Sabin for the judgment creditor.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 20. JENKINS, L.J., read the following judgment of the court. This is an appeal by Associated British Film Distributors, Ltd. (whom we will call "the garnishees") from a garnishee order made against them by His Honour JUDGE DALE in the Westminster County Court on Oct. 11, 1950, in the following circumstances. The order under appeal was made in respect of a sum of £41 7s. 2d. remaining due under a judgment for £47 7s. 6d. debt and £41 7s. 2d. costs recovered by Mr. Curran, the present respondent (whom we will call "the judgment creditor"), on Mar. 16, 1950, in an action brought by him in the Mayor's and City of London Court against Newpark Cinemas, Ltd. (whom we will call "the judgment debtors").

On Mar. 17, 1950 (i.e., the day after the judgment had been obtained), the judgment creditor's solicitors wrote to the garnishees asking them whether they had distributed for the judgment debtors a film called "Meet the Duke," produced by the latter. On Mar. 23, 1950, the garnishees replied to the effect that they were the distributors of the film in question. On Mar. 29, 1950, the judgment creditor's solicitors wrote to the garnishees asking for details of the financial position as between the garnishees and the judgment debtors in respect of the proceeds of distributing the film, and said in the final paragraph of this letter:

“You will understand that our object in raising these further points is with a view to enforcing the judgment obtained herein against Newpark Cinemas, Ltd.”

A On Mar. 31, 1950, the garnishees wrote in reply to the effect that, if the judgment creditor's solicitors would obtain the necessary authority from the judgment debtors, the garnishees would provide the information required to the extent so authorised by the judgment debtors. It is to be observed that this correspondence contained no suggestion by the garnishees that anything which might be payable by them in respect of the proceeds of distribution of the film was payable to anyone other than the judgment debtors. In April, 1950, the judgment debtors paid the debt of £47 7s. 6d. due under the judgment, but the £41 7s. 2d. for costs due thereunder remained unsatisfied. In these circumstances the judgment creditor, on filing an affidavit to the effect that the garnishees were indebted to the judgment debtors in an amount unspecified, procured the issue out of the Westminster County Court of a garnishee summons against the garnishees, which was duly served on them on July 27, 1950, and was in the usual form, calling on them to show cause why an order should not be made for the payment by them to the judgment creditor of the debts due and owing or accruing from them to the judgment debtors, or so much thereof as would satisfy the debt due under the judgment and the costs of the summons, and in the meantime attaching the requisite amount of the debts so owing or accruing from the garnishees to answer the judgment.

D In opposition to the summons Mr. L. F. Baker, a director of the garnishees, swore on their behalf an affidavit in which he summarised the terms of a licence agreement between the judgment debtors and the garnishees, dated Nov. 9, 1948, for the exploitation by the garnishees of the film “Meet the Duke,” under which the gross receipts in respect of such exploitation, less costs and expenses and the garnishees' commission, were to be paid to the judgment debtors. After exhibiting a copy of this licence agreement as “L.F.B.1,” the affidavit concluded as follows:

F “On Mar. 20, 1950, the garnishees were served with a direction and authority now produced and shown to me marked ‘L.F.B.2’ given under the seal of the judgment debtors purporting to be for valuable consideration to pay to Barclays Bank, Ltd. all moneys payable by the garnishees to the judgment debtors under the said agreement of Nov. 9, 1948.”

The direction and authority, exhibit “L.F.B.2,” is dated Mar. 20, 1950, and is in these terms:

G “To Associated British Film Distributors, Ltd., 161-171 Oxford Street, London, W.1. Referring to the distribution agreement dated Nov. 9, 1948, made between us (Newpark Cinemas, Ltd.) of the one part and yourselves of the other part whereby in consideration of the agreement on your part therein contained we granted to you the sole and exclusive right and licence to exploit, distribute and exhibit the film ‘Meet the Duke’ until H Nov. 15, 1953, upon the terms as to the gross receipts (as therein defined) being applied and divided as therein mentioned, and pursuant to the arrangements for valuable consideration which we, Newpark Cinemas, Ltd., have made with Barclays Bank, Ltd., we hereby give you irrevocable directions, instructions and authority to pay to the said Barclays Bank, Ltd., at their Moorgate branch, or as they may in writing direct, all moneys payable to us under the terms of the said agreement and we confirm that the receipt of the said Barclays Bank, Ltd. shall be your full and sufficient discharge for all such payments. This authority and instructions can be varied or cancelled only by a document duly signed on behalf of Barclays Bank, Ltd. Dated Mar. 20, 1950."

The common seal was affixed in the presence of a director and the secretary. It is sealed with the common seal of the judgment debtors, and countersigned by a director of the garnishees with the note: "Counterpart signed 28/iii/50." A copy of Mr. Baker's affidavit and copies of the two exhibits appear to have been sent by the garnishees to the judgment creditor's solicitors with a letter dated Sept. 20, 1950, and we understand this to have been the first intimation received by the latter of any assignment, or alleged assignment, by the judgment debtors of the sums due, or accruing due, to them under the licence agreement of Nov. 9, 1948.

No evidence was filed in answer, there was no cross-examination, and no oral evidence was adduced at the hearing, so that the evidence before the learned county court judge consisted of (i) the purely formal affidavit in support of the summons; (ii) Mr. Baker's affidavit, which did no more than put in evidence the licence agreement of Nov. 9, 1948, and the direction and authority of Mar. 20, 1950, to which should be added (iii) the correspondence already referred to, which, though not formally exhibited, was by consent referred to in the county court and also in the course of the present appeal. It only remains to add that, admittedly, no notice of any assignment to them of the moneys payable to the judgment debtors under the licence agreement of Nov. 9, 1948, had been given by the bank to the garnishees.

Such being the state of the evidence, on Oct. 11, 1950, the county court judge made the garnishee order now under appeal, notwithstanding the direction and authority of Mar. 20, 1950, but included in such order a provision suspending its operation until Oct. 25, 1950, and an undertaking on the part of the judgment creditor (by his counsel) to give notice forthwith to the manager of the Moorgate branch of the bank of the terms of the order made. The learned judge's reasons for so doing appear in the note of his judgment, in the course of which he says:

"There was no evidence that the bank had received or knew of this (i.e., the direction and authority of Mar. 20, 1950) or had accepted the alleged assignment, and the presumption was that they had not done so as otherwise they would have notified the garnishees of the same. It was contended by the judgment creditor that this document was not an effective or genuine assignment, but was a mere subterfuge to avoid payment under the judgment. Correspondence was admitted and apart from the other documents mentioned there was no evidence. The judgment creditor on Mar. 17 informed the garnishees in writing of the judgment he had obtained against the judgment debtors, but notwithstanding this the garnishees, without informing the judgment creditor of the same, signed the document of Mar. 20, 1950. I formed the view that this had been done in collusion with the judgment debtors with a view to defeating the judgment. This being so, I held that the assignment must be strictly proved, and, as there was no other evidence of any assignment, nor was there any evidence that this document had ever come to the knowledge of the alleged assignee to indicate that he had accepted it as an assignment, I held that an assignment had not been proved. The bank might well have refused to accept any assignment in such circumstances. I considered that an assignment could not become effective until the assignee accepted it as such. The judgment creditor himself did not in fact know of the alleged assignment until Oct. 2, 1950, more than two months after the garnishee summons had been served. I held that there had been no assignment and that the document of Mar. 20, 1950, was merely an authority given by the judgment debtors to the garnishees to pay to Barclays Bank certain moneys due to them from the garnishees and was not a valid assignment. I therefore granted an order against the garnishees in respect of the sum due, but at the invitation of counsel for the judgment creditor I directed that the order should not become effective for fourteen days on the undertaking by the judgment creditor to inform the bank forthwith of the document of Mar. 20, 1950, so that it might if so advised apply to discharge the order."

A The county court judge's decision was attacked by counsel for the garnishees primarily on the ground that the direction and authority, of which the garnishees undoubtedly had express notice, operated as a legal assignment of the debt in question by virtue of the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 136 (1), which imparts that operation to:

B "Any absolute assignment by writing under the hand of the assignor (not purporting to be by way of charge only) of any debt or other legal thing in action, of which express notice in writing has been given to the debtor . . ."

He relied on Standing v. Bowring (1) as authority for the proposition (stated in the headnote) that:

C "A transfer of property to a person without his knowledge, if made in proper form, vests the property in him at once, subject to his right to repudiate it when informed of the transfer."

He also cited, with respect to the form of the document, Brice v. Bannister (2) and Harding v. Harding (3) as showing that a direction in writing to a debtor D by his creditor to pay a third party, handed to the third party, will suffice to effect a legal assignment on notice of such direction being given to the debtor.

Counsel for the judgment creditor, on the other hand, contended that s. 136 (1) only applied where there was a document amounting to an absolute assignment and that the document here in question, being in form not an assignment but merely a direction to the garnishees to pay a third party (i.e., the bank), could only answer that description if and when communicated to the bank, as, until so communicated, it was revocable by the judgment debtors at any time and, therefore, not absolute. He referred in this connection to Rekstin v. Severo Sibirsko Gosudarstvennoe Akcionernoe Obschestro Komseverputj & Bank for Russian Trade, Ltd. (4), which he also relied on as showing that a direction to pay which was uncommunicated to the third party and, therefore, revocable F at the date of the service of a garnishee order nisi (to which the garnishee summons in this case corresponds), is revoked by such service. We are disposed to think counsel for the judgment creditor right on this part of the argument.

It is, no doubt, true that s. 136 (1) does not require any particular form of assignment, or that the notice given to the debtor should necessarily have been given by the assignee. The sub-section does, however, clearly postulate G that, whatever its form, there should be a document amounting to an absolute assignment by writing under the hand of the assignor. Given such an assignment, and given the requisite notice to the debtor, the assignment (to put it shortly) is to operate as a legal assignment of the debt in question. Section 136 (1), however, does not provide that a document which would not, independently of the sub-section or its predecessor (Supreme Court of Judicature

H Act, 1873, s. 25 (6)), have operated as an absolute assignment at law or in equity is to have the force of an absolute assignment for the purposes of the sub-section. The document here relied on is the direction and authority, which in point of form is not an assignment to the bank of the debt in question but merely a direction to the garnishees to pay the debt in question to the bank. On the footing that there had, in fact, been no prior agreement with the bank to give such a direction, and that the bank had not been notified of the fact that such a direction had been given, we think the result would follow that the direction and authority, though expressed to be irrevocable except with the consent of the bank, could in fact have been revoked by the judgment debtors at any time as amounting to no more than an arrangement between the judgment debtors and the garnishees in which they alone were concerned and which, in the absence of any such agreement or notification, conferred no interest in the debt on the bank. If that is right, then we think that the contention of counsel for the garnishees to the effect that the mere production by the garnishees of the direction and authority, without proof of any agreement with, or notice to, the bank, sufficed in itself to establish an absolute assignment of which express notice had been given to the garnishees, and hence a legal assignment by virtue of s. 136 (1), necessarily fails. A

This, however, by no means concludes the matter. There was no evidence that the bank had been given notice of the direction and authority, but, on the other hand, there was no evidence that the bank had not been given such notice. Moreover, there was some evidence, in the form of an admission by the judgment debtors in the document itself, that the directions thereby given were given pursuant to "arrangements for valuable consideration" made by them with the bank. If that statement was true and meant, as, if it meant anything, it must have meant, that the judgment debtors had agreed with the bank to give the direction and authority to the garnishees, then we think that there was, by the joint effect of the agreement with the bank and the direction and authority given in pursuance of it, a good assignment, whether legal or equitable—for the present purpose it matters not which—of the debt in question. Of course, the direction and authority might have been a mere sham and the recital of the prior arrangements with the bank a mere fiction. The learned county court judge thought this to be the case on grounds which sufficiently appear from the facts as already stated and from the notes of his judgment quoted above. We think, if anything, he overstates these grounds. He does not mention the fact, for what it is worth, that the judgment debtors had actually paid the portion of the judgment representing the debt sued on before the service of the garnishee summons. He also says that the judgment creditor was not informed of the direction and authority until Oct. 2, 1950, when, in fact, his solicitors seem to have been sent copies of the affidavit in opposition to the summons and of the exhibits thereto in a letter from the garnishees' solicitors, dated Sept. 20, 1950. Giving full weight, however, to all the equivocal circumstances referred to by the learned judge or appearing from the facts as stated above, including the reticence as to the existence of the direction and authority observable in the garnishees' letters, we find in all these circumstances grounds for suspicion and nothing more. As against this there is the direction and authority, which, in the absence of fraud—and fraud is by no means to be presumed without proof—must, we think, be regarded (in view of the recital of the prior arrangements with the bank) as affording prima facie evidence of an assignment. If that is putting it too high, at all events the direction and authority affords at least substantial grounds for supposing that there may have been an assignment. Whichever way it is looked at, we think that the learned county court judge was wrong to make the order in the face of this document. It must be remembered that a garnishee is in a difficult position. He has to obey any order made against him, yet, if he has had notice of a prior assignment, the order is no protection to him, and, if he pays in compliance with the order, he nevertheless remains liable to the assignee to pay the debt over again: see Yates v. Terry (5). This being so, we think it is clearly wrong, where the garnishee shows that he has notice of a prior assignment, to make an order against him unless he is able to prove strictly and conclusively that the assignment of which he has notice is a valid assignment. B C D E F G H

The proper course in such circumstances is indicated in the County Court Rules, 1936, Ord. 27, r. 11, which is in these terms:

"(1) If in garnishee proceedings it is suggested that the debt belongs to or is claimed by some third person, or that any third person has or claims to have a lien or charge upon it, the judge may order the third person to appear and state the nature and particulars of his claim to the debt. (2) After hearing the third person if he appears, the judge may bar the claim of the third person or may order an issue to be tried between the third person and the judgment creditor, or make such other order (including an order as to costs) as may be just."

This rule corresponds to R.S.C., Ord. 45, r. 5 and r. 6. We cannot regard the service of notice of the order on the bank in the present case (which produced no action on the bank's part, and certainly did not amount to an explicit invitation to the bank to move to discharge the order if so advised) as by any means a satisfactory substitute for the procedure thus laid down. In the result, therefore, we would allow the appeal, discharge the garnishee order of Oct. 11, 1950, and remit the case to the county court with a view to the bank being ordered to appear and state its claim in accordance with the County Court Rules, 1936, Ord. 27, r. 11. If the bank fails to appear, or fails to establish its claim as assignee, a fresh garnishee order binding the bank and protecting the garnishees in their compliance with it can be made.

Appeal allowed with costs. Case remitted to county court judge. Costs of first hearing in discretion of county court judge.

Solicitors: M. A. Jacobs & Sons (for the garnishees); Atkins, Walter & Locke (for the judgment creditor).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

WHITNEY v. WHITNEY.

[LEEDS ASSIZES (Willmer, J.), December 11, 12, 13, 1950.]

Divorce—Desertion—Termination—Intercourse on number of occasions with deserting spouse during attempts at reconciliation—Condonation—Deserting spouse's refusal to resume cohabitation—Revival of original desertion.

In December, 1945, the wife left her husband in circumstances which were held to amount to desertion on her part. Between that time and August, 1947, the husband visited the wife on a number of occasions to effect a reconciliation. On those occasions the parties resumed marital intercourse, but the wife maintained throughout her determination not to return to live with her husband. The husband's answer alleging desertion by the wife was dated July 17, 1950.

HELD: (i) desertion, once established, continued until it was proved to have been brought to an end; the fact that intercourse took place on a number of occasions during genuine efforts by the husband to effect a reconciliation did not bring the wife's desertion to an end; and, therefore, the husband was entitled to a decree of divorce.

Mummery v. Mummery ([1942] 1 All E.R. 553) and Bartram v. Bartram ([1949] 2 All E.R. 270), applied.

(ii) even if, whenever, intercourse took place, the husband must be taken to have condoned the wife's previous desertion, that desertion was on each occasion revived by the wife's repeated refusal to resume cohabitation.

[AS TO CONDONATION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 679-682, paras. 1004-1009; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 339, 340, Nos. 3184-3203, and Digest Supp., and 2nd Digest Supp.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Mummery v. Mummery, [1942] 1 All E.R. 553; [1942] P. 107; 111 L.J.P. 58; 166 L.T. 343; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Pulford v. Pulford, [1923] P. 18; 92 L.J.P. 14; 128 L.T. 256; 27 Digest 307, 2846.
- (3) Bartram v. Bartram, [1949] 2 All E.R. 270; [1950] P. 1; [1949] L.J.R. 1679; 113 J.P. 422; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (4) Hopes v. Hopes, [1948] 2 All E.R. 920; [1949] P. 227; [1949] L.J.R. 104; 113 J.P. 10; 2nd Digest Supp.

PETITION for divorce by the wife on the ground of her husband's desertion in August, 1945. In his answer dated July 17, 1950, the husband denied the desertion alleged and put in a cross-prayer for divorce on the grounds of his wife's desertion. The facts appear in the judgment of WILLMER, J.

H. S. Pears for the wife.

J. B. Willis for the husband.

WILLMER, J.: In this case each of the parties alleges desertion against the other and seeks relief on that ground. The parties were married in September, 1938. The wife is a Leeds woman who, on her marriage, went to reside with her husband in Hull. They lived in Hull until September, 1939, when the husband was called up for service in the Royal Engineers. It is common ground that after he was demobilised in September, 1945, the husband went to Leeds, where during most of the war the wife had been residing with her mother, and that the parties cohabited there. Both sides agree that marital intercourse then took place. The wife says that was the last occasion on which there was marital intercourse between them. The husband says that it continued for some time after that. The husband was anxious to get back to his civilian occupation in Hull, and, being a docker, he was more or less tied to the port of Hull, as there was no work for which he was fitted to be had in Leeds. The husband went back to Hull after his stay with his wife in Leeds, and, it is said, it was arranged that the wife should follow with the two children of the marriage. After a brief while the wife did go to Hull to join her husband, who at that time was residing with his father. The wife was not asked to stay at the father's house, so she went to stay with the husband's sister. The wife says that she and her husband did not reside together, but he says that during the time his wife was with his sister he moved to her house and slept there with his wife, maintaining normal marital relations. After a short period the wife took rooms in the house of a Mrs. Cartwright. She says that she stayed there some three or four weeks until December, 1945. Mrs. Cartwright, who gave evidence, is clear that at least on one occasion, and she thinks on other occasions, the husband stayed with the wife and they spent the night together as husband and wife while the wife was residing at Mrs. Cartwright's house. In December, 1945, the wife gave up her rooms with Mrs. Cartwright and went back to Leeds because, she says, her husband told her to go, saying that he did not want her any more, and she might as well go back to her own mother. The husband, on the other hand, says that it was against his wish that she went; that he realised that, if she did go, it would prejudice their chances of getting a house in Hull; and that the wife's departure was due to the intervention of her mother who came down and took her daughter away. Be that as it may, the wife has resided at the mother's house in Leeds ever since.

Both sides rely on the events of December, 1945, as being evidence of an act of desertion on the part of the other. It seems to me that the separation between the parties dates from December, 1945. The wife says that it was due to the husband in effect turning her out and sending her from Hull back to her mother, and that since that date she has, from time to time, seen the husband on a day's visit when he went to Leeds to see the children. There has been no resumption of cohabitation and nothing to interrupt the desertion which, according to the wife, was originally started by the husband. If I were to accept as truthful the wife's story of how the separation came about and the subsequent events, this case would not present the slightest difficulty. It would be a clear case of desertion on the part of the husband. On the other hand, if I accept the husband's evidence, the separation in December, 1945, was due entirely to the wife's conduct. The question then arises whether that desertion persisted for the necessary statutory period, having regard to the evidence which has been given as to the subsequent history.

As to the final parting between the two parties I accept the husband's account of that. I think that the wife left Hull in December, 1945, because she was tired of the marriage and saw no point in continuing in Hull, waiting for a non-existent house in a place which she did not like, ultimately to resume cohabitation with a man of whom she was getting rather tired. I am satisfied that the separation between the parties was brought about by what amounted to an act of desertion on the part of the wife. Again, if I accepted the wife's evidence as to subsequent events, the rest would be easy, because she says that since that time there has been no cohabitation and no intercourse between the parties, so that there would be nothing to break the running of the desertion which by her conduct she has brought about. That, however, will not fit in with the husband's story which I must now deal with, and I am bound to say that, having accepted his account of what had taken place up to that date, I feel I must accept his account of the subsequent events which then occurred. It is very unfortunate for the husband because it makes his case much more difficult. He says that he frequently went over to Leeds, beginning at Christmas, 1945, which he spent there, and continuing during 1946 and part of 1947. He says that he went over three or four times at week-ends in 1946, that he was there for Easter week-end, 1947, and again for a week-end in August, 1947. During those times, according to him, he stayed in the same house as, and slept with, his wife, and behaved as her husband, and that marital intercourse regularly took place on those occasions up to and including August, 1947. After November, 1947, he gave up trying to see his wife and I do not think he saw her again until after the launching of the present proceedings. It is common ground that early in 1950, after the presentation of the petition, he did have an interview with his wife. He then made a last effort at reconciliation inviting the wife to withdraw her pleadings. The wife denies that is so, but on that I accept the evidence of the husband and I have no doubt that he did make a genuine effort, even as late as this year, to become reconciled to the wife, but that she refused his overtures.

The husband's answer, on which he seeks relief on the ground of his wife's desertion, is dated July 17, 1950. Bearing in mind that on his own showing the parties stayed together and that marital intercourse took place between them as recently as August, 1947, it is obvious that the question arises whether the husband is in a position to prove the three years' continuous desertion immediately preceding the presentation of the answer required by the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, s. 2. I must consider, therefore, whether I can properly regard the desertion as having commenced in December, 1945, and as having been continuous since then, or whether I am bound to conclude that the desertion only started after the last visit in August, 1947. Counsel for the husband has argued that, once desertion has started, the mere fact that the parties cohabit in the course of a genuine effort by one of them at reconciliation is not necessarily enough to interrupt the running of the statutory period of desertion.

On that proposition, I will first refer to the decision of LORD MERRIMAN, P., in Mummery v. Mummery (1). In that case the wife was proceeding against her husband on the ground of desertion, but it appeared that, during the three years' period on which she was relying, the parties had met on a single occasion and had had intercourse at the instance of the deserting husband. The learned President came to the conclusion that in the circumstances the period of desertion was not in law interrupted by the single act of intercourse which took place. I think it would be helpful if I read what I regard as the material part of his judgment, because, as I see it, he states the principle involved in terms which are wide enough to embrace the present case. The learned President said ([1942] 1 All E.R. 555):

"It seems to me that the whole question turns on what cohabitation means, and what a resumption of cohabitation means. Now, LORD MERRIVALE said more than once that no judge has ever attempted a comprehensive definition of desertion and that no judge would ever succeed in doing so. Amongst the descriptions of desertion which he gave was one which has always appealed to me. He said that desertion was a withdrawal, not from a place, but from a state of things (Pulford v. Pulford (2), at p. 21). Similarly, I doubt whether any judge could give a completely exhaustive definition of cohabitation, and certainly I am not going to attempt to do so. At least a resumption of cohabitation must mean resuming a state of things—that is to say, setting up a matrimonial home together. That involves, so it seems to me, a bilateral intention on the part of both spouses so to do. The question, then: is does coming together for a single night raise an irrebuttable presumption that the parties have resumed cohabitation even for that short time. Put in another way, does it raise an irrebuttable presumption that the wife, in consenting to that state of things, has condoned the previous desertion? I am bound to say that I think that it would lead to an absurd state of things if one were bound to hold that that is so. Quite clearly, it can be nothing but praiseworthy on the part of a deserted wife to make every legitimate attempt to regain her husband's affection, company and support. It would, for example, be quite ludicrous if, because during a period of desertion the parties met by arrangement to talk over their difficulties, and the deserted wife did her very best to persuade her husband to come back, while he remained obdurate, one were bound to hold that meetings of that sort, however protracted, and even if they involved spending the night under the same roof together or several nights under the same roof together, interrupted or brought to an end the state of desertion. Why, then, should a wife who goes a step further in the hopes of effecting a reconciliation, and allows her husband to sleep the night with her, be held to have condoned the offence and to have resumed cohabitation when it is clear, beyond the slightest shadow of doubt, that the husband at the same time had no intention whatever of resuming cohabitation? I do not think that I am obliged so to hold. I think the law is that, as regards the wife at any rate, an act of sexual intercourse is not conclusive on the question of condonation; and that it does not raise an irrebuttable presumption that cohabitation has been resumed."

Clearly in that case LORD MERRIMAN, P., stated the proposition of law on which he was relying in terms wide enough, it seems to me, to cover the present case. It may be argued that what the President said was peculiar to the case before him, which is a conclusive authority only in a case where a single act of intercourse took place and where the innocent party was the wife. Here we have, not one occasion, but a number of occasions to deal with, and it may be said that this is not, like Mummary v. Mummary (1), a case of an innocent party permitting intercourse on only one occasion at the instance of the other party. The facts in this case are, undoubtedly, different from those in Mummary v. Mummary (1), and if that case stood alone, wide as the President's words are, I might have experienced some difficulty in holding that they extended to cover the present case. But I have also received assistance from Bartram v. Bartram (3), a decision of the Court of Appeal.

The facts in Bartram v. Bartram (3) are very different from those of the present case, but they are similar in one material respect, in that it was a husband's petition. The question there was whether desertion on the part of the wife was terminated by the fact that she returned to live under the same roof as the husband. It was not suggested that intercourse took place or that they had any common life, but it was said that she lived for some time preceding the presentation of the petition under the same roof as the husband, in circumstances in which they met each other and on some occasions had meals together. It was in relation to that state of affairs that the Court of Appeal expressed the opinion to which I am about to refer. Though the facts were different, there are passages in the judgment of BUCKNILL, L.J., which seem to me to state the principle on which the present husband's case must be weighed. BUCKNILL, L.J., said ([1949] 2 All E.R. 272):

" . . . I may refer to another passage in a judgment, also by the learned President, in Mummery v. Mummery (1) where he said ([1942] 1 All E.R. 555): 'Similarly, I doubt whether any judge could give a completely exhaustive definition of cohabitation, and certainly I am not going to attempt to do so. At least a resumption of cohabitation must mean resuming a state of things—that is to say, setting up a matrimonial home together. That involves, so it seems to me, a bilateral intention on the part of both spouses so to do.'"

That is the quotation from Mummery v. Mummery (1) which I have already read. BUCKNILL, L.J., continued (ibid.):

" In Hopes v. Hopes (4) the husband failed to prove his case because he never succeeded in proving desertion. He never proved that there was any actual separation of husband and wife, although he did prove the intention on the part of the wife to desert. Therefore, the case failed on the threshold. In the present case, the husband has established actual desertion by the wife for many months. That being so, it seems to me that the husband is entitled to say that the desertion once established continues until it is proved that it has been brought to an end. The wife does not suggest for one moment that she brought it to an end. The question is: Do the facts proved establish that it was brought to an end? In my view, it can only be brought to an end if the facts show an intention on the part of the wife to set up a matrimonial home with the husband. If the facts do not establish any intention on the part of the wife to set up a matrimonial home, the mere fact that, as a lodger, she went to live under the same roof as her husband, because she had nowhere else to go, does not remove the desertion which she had already started and which continued to run."

ASQUITH, L.J., said (ibid., 273):

" . . . it seems to me wrong to hold that the three years' period was interrupted by any resumption of cohabitation, for such resumption involves, in the language of LORD MERRIMAN, P., in Mummery v. Mummery (1), a bilateral intention on the part of both spouses to set up a matrimonial home together."

Lastly, DENNING, L.J., said (ibid.):

" Hopes v. Hopes (4) does not apply because there the period of desertion never began to run. Here the period of desertion had begun to run before the parties came to live together again under the same roof. Once the period of desertion has begun to run, it does not cease to run simply because the parties attempt a reconciliation and for that purpose come together again for a time. That was laid down by LORD MERRIMAN, P., in Mummery v. Mummery (1) and has never been doubted since. Indeed, I would say in such a case the period of desertion does not cease to run unless, and until, a true reconciliation has been effected . . . Any other view would greatly hamper attempts at reconciliation, because it would mean that the deserted party would be disinclined to take the other back for fear of losing his legal rights in case the reconciliation was unsuccessful."

That case, it appears to me, carries with it an authoritative statement on principle by the Court of Appeal, and it is for me to apply that principle as best I can to the present case. I am satisfied on the facts that the period of desertion brought about by the wife began to run in December, 1945. There is no evidence that any "true reconciliation" has ever been effected between the parties since. I take that phrase from the judgment of DENNING, L.J. It is equally true to say that in this case there is no evidence of any intention on the part of the wife since December, 1945, to "set up a matrimonial home" with the husband—the phrase used by BUCKNILL, L.J., and ASQUITH, L.J. There is no evidence here since 1945 of any bilateral intention on the part of both spouses to set up a matrimonial home together. On the contrary, it appears to me that the wife has maintained throughout her determination to live separate and apart from the husband. It was the husband who made repeated efforts to bring about a reconciliation, going over for that purpose from Hull to Leeds. In my judgment, such efforts at reconciliation can only be regarded as meritorious conduct on the part of the husband, and I should be sorry if, through such conduct, the husband were to lose any right to relief which he otherwise would have. But, having regard to the matters to which I have referred, I am satisfied that, on the true view of the law, notwithstanding the periodical visits by the husband for the purpose of effecting reconciliation, and notwithstanding the fact that intercourse took place during those visits, in law the desertion started by the wife in December, 1945, has never ceased to run, but continued running for a period exceeding three years immediately preceding the presentation of the husband's answer.

I would add this. It may very well be that each time an act of intercourse took place between these parties, the husband must be taken to have condoned the previous desertion of the wife, but each time the wife refused to go back to Hull and resume cohabitation with the husband there it seems to me that she was guilty of a fresh act of desertion which revived the previous desertion. In law the proper answer seems to me again to be that the initial desertion started by the wife in December, 1945, must be regarded as continuing. For these reasons it seems to me that the husband is entitled to a decree.

Decree nisi.

Solicitors: G. I. Chisholm, Law Society's Divorce Department, Leeds (for the petitioner); Richard Witty & Co., Hull (for the respondent).

[Reported by G. M. SMAILES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

NOTE.

GEORGE WIMPEY & CO., LTD. v. JOHN.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Hilbery and Parker, JJ.),
December 15, 1950.]

Carriage of Goods—Carriage for hire—Delivery of goods “subjected to a process or treatment in the course of trade or business carried on” by contractor—Open-cast coal mining—Carriage of coal from site to and from screening plant—Road and Rail Traffic Act, 1933 (c. 53), s. 1 (5) (b).

CASE STATED by Carmarthen justices sitting at Ammanford.

On May 27, 1949, the appellants, a firm of contractors, entered into a contract with the Ministry of Fuel and Power whereby they undertook, inter alia, to excavate coal and transport it by road from certain open-cast mining sites owned by the Ministry to a screening and washing plant, or, in the case of rejected coal, from that plant back to the sites. For that purpose the appellants used a number of goods vehicles in respect of which they held private carriers', i.e., “C,” licences. The appellants were summoned on eight informations charging them with using goods vehicles for the carriage of goods for hire or reward other than under a “B” licence, contrary to s. 1 (1) of the Road and Rail Traffic Act, 1933. The justices found the offences proved and imposed a fine of £2 on each summons.

[FOR THE ROAD AND RAIL TRAFFIC ACT, 1933, s. 1, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 24, p. 675; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST Supplement, Carriers, Nos. 1579-1606.]

Glyn-Jones, K.C., and Stewart-Brown for the appellants.

J. P. Ashworth and Morris Morgan for the respondent (clerk to the licensing authority, South Wales Traffic area).

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: Whether the appellants were carrying on the business of open-cast coal miners or not, they were certainly carrying on the business of contractors and as contractors (to use the expression “contractors” as meaning people engaged in engineering, constructional or other work of that description), on the findings of the justices they have brought themselves within s. 1 (5) (b) of the Act of 1933. They were delivering goods which had been, or were to be, “subjected to a process or treatment in the course of a trade or business carried on” by them. The trade or business carried on by them undoubtedly was the carriage of coal to the screening plant and the carriage therefrom of coal which had either been accepted or rejected.

Solicitors: McKenna & Co. (for the appellants); Treasury Solicitor (for the respondent).

Appeal allowed.

J.D.P.

GARFORTH-BLES v. GARFORTH-BLES.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Pearce, J.), December 20, 21, 1950.]

Variation of Settlement—Variation inimical to interests of child—Withdrawal of funds from settlement by husband—Husband guilty party—Facts to be considered.

In 1939 the parties were married, and in 1940 a child was born. The parties had entered into an ante-nuptial settlement under which the wife's fund was settled on the wife for her life and after her death on the husband for his life, and thereafter the fund was given to the children or remoter issue of the marriage as the husband and wife jointly should appoint. The husband's fund was directed to be held on similar trusts mutatis mutandis, the husband taking the first life interest. In 1948 the marriage was dissolved on the ground of the husband's adultery. On the question of the variation of the settlement, the husband and the wife agreed that the rights, powers, and interests of each in the other's fund should be extinguished as if the one had died in the lifetime of the other, but on behalf of the child objection was taken to the husband's request that he be at liberty to revoke the trusts of the settlement relating to a moiety of his fund and to appoint that moiety or any part thereof to any after-taken wife or issue of any marriage. The value of the wife's fund was approximately £6,000, and the husband's fund, which consisted only of reversionary interests, approximately £12,000.

HELD: having regard to the facts that the variation agreed would remove one life interest standing between the child and her reversion to each fund, and that, as the husband had settled all his property as part of his fund and had no expectations, the husband might, if no revocation were permitted, have such a feeling of injustice as to impair the satisfactory relationship which seemed to exist between the husband and the child, the husband ought to be allowed to revoke the trusts relating to two-fifths of his total fund, subject to his appointing the remaining three-fifths to the child.

[AS TO PRINCIPLES ON WHICH SETTLEMENTS WILL BE VARIED, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 803-807, paras. 1280-1285; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 521-528, Nos. 5632-5703.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Prinsep v. Prinsep, [1929] P. 225; 98 L.J.P. 105; 141 L.T. 220; Digest Supp.
- (2) Whitton v. Whitton, [1901] P. 348; 71 L.J.P. 10; 85 L.T. 646; 27 Digest 519, 5600.

MOTION to confirm the report of the registrar on an application to vary an ante-nuptial settlement after the dissolution of the marriage of the parties. The decree had been granted on the wife's petition on the ground of the husband's adultery. The registrar recommended inter alia that the husband should be at liberty to revoke the trusts of the settlement in respect of a moiety of his fund, and to appoint that moiety or any part thereof to any after-taken wife or issue of any marriage. On behalf of the child of the marriage, objection was taken to that recommendation. The facts appear in the headnote and the judgment.

Karminski, K.C., and R. J. A. Temple for the husband.

S. A. Morton for the wife.

H. V. Brandon for the child of the marriage.

PEARCE, J.: This is an application to confirm a report of the registrar as to the variation of an ante-nuptial settlement. The husband asks that the report be confirmed. Counsel for the child asks that it should be varied, though no notice to that effect has been given. The wife takes a neutral attitude on the point of difference between the husband and the child. The parties all agree that the registrar's report should be confirmed so far as it extinguishes the rights, powers, and interests of the husband in the wife's fund as if he had died in the wife's lifetime and also in so far as it extinguishes the rights, powers, and interests of the wife in the husband's fund as if she had died in the husband's lifetime. The parties also agree with the registrar's submissions dealing with the appointment of new trustees and with costs. They disagree on the submission of the registrar that the court should grant the husband's request that he be at liberty to revoke the trusts of the settlement relating to a moiety of his fund and to appoint the said moiety or any part thereof to any after-taken wife or issue of any marriage. Counsel for the husband argues that it is fair to allow the husband to do this because of the following facts. The child will have a reversion to the whole of the £6,000 in the wife's fund, since the child can now have no brothers or sisters to share it with her, and also to the £6,000 which will, if the husband's request be granted, remain in the husband's fund. This reversion is subject to an appointment by the husband in favour of the child's own children, which is possible, but not probable. The child also has a reversion on the wife's death to £2,750 under another settlement, but this will be shared equally by future children, if any, of the wife by her present or any future husband. The child also, he argues, has expectations from the wife's side. The wife herself has something like £10,000, and the wife's father is well-to-do, but he has three children other than the wife, and five grandchildren. The child also has the benefit of a consent order against the husband of £220 free of tax for her maintenance until she is twenty-two years of age. The child also, I am told, receives the tax allowance in respect of this. The husband argues that this is a more generous order than the court would have made and that it lasts for longer than a court order could have lasted had the husband not consented. The husband says (though this is disputed) that this order was made while the question of variation was under consideration and should be taken into account as a benefit accruing to the child when the question of variation is considered.

Against this, counsel for the child argues that no benefit to the child that is not part of this actual variation of the settlement should be taken into account, and that the original settlement does not allow the husband to settle funds even on a wife taken after the decease of his first wife, so that, subject to the appointment to remoter issue, the child's interest had vested and should not be disturbed. He also argues that the husband's request is a detriment to the child, and that it ought to be wholly refused since no corresponding benefit for the child is produced by the proposed variation. He also takes the point, though he admits that on the cases it cannot be successfully taken in this court, that I have no power to grant the husband's request. The Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 192, provides that this court may make such orders with reference to the application of the whole or any part of the property settled for the benefit of the children of the marriage or the parties to the marriage as the court thinks fit. The discretion so given is a wide one. It must, of course, be used in accordance with the settled general principles that have been laid down from time to time.

Various cases have been cited to me, but, though those cases are helpful in showing the general principles, it is to the facts of this particular case that I must apply my discretion. It seems clear from the cases cited to me and also from unreported cases in which a similar relief has been granted to respondents that I have power to grant the husband's request if on the facts it is just to do so. The words of HILL, J., in Prinsep v. Prinsep (1), cited with approval in more than one case, seem to me helpful in considering this question. He said ([1929] P. 236):

"The main object of variation is to make proper provision for the injured spouse and the children of the marriage. And prima facie, settlements ought not to be interfered with further than is necessary for that purpose. But the court which has annulled the marriage must not only protect the injured party, but also be fair to the wrongdoing party."

The child's expectations on the maternal side do not weigh with me. She had those in any event. Moreover, it is reasonable to suppose that any wife whom the husband may marry in the future will be as well-to-do as the first wife, and that any child born of such marriage will have as good expectations on the maternal side as this child has. The generous nature of the husband's maintenance of the child does not weigh with me, though it is right that it should be put before the court as part of the general picture. A generous father may reasonably hope to receive a more sympathetic hearing than one who has no regard for his paternal liabilities. But I must protect the interests of the child, and I must be satisfied that justice requires the proposed variation, and that it benefits, or at the very least, does nothing to the disadvantage of, the child.

In this case the proposed variation will remove one of the two life interests that stand between the child and her reversion to the mother's fund of £6,000. The removal of this life interest is a substantial benefit: see the words of SIR FRANCIS JEUNE, P., in Whitton v. Whitton (2) ([1901] P. 353.) The proposed variation will also remove one of the life interests that stand between the child and so much of the husband's fund of £12,000 as is left in the settlement after the variation. The husband tells me that he is prepared to appoint to the child (as opposed to any remoter issue) all that remains in the husband's fund. The effect of this will be that, although probably the child would have received this benefit in any case, she is now assured that the funds in the husband's fund will come to her and will not be appointed to her children. Since this gives her now the certainty of receiving that reversion, it is of considerable value.

There is a further consideration that is, in my view, to the child's interest in allowing the husband to remove a part of his fund from the settlement. He brought into the settlement reversions that were substantially all that he possessed. He now has, apart from these funds, no expectations and very little property. If, as seems likely in view of his age, he re-marries, he has extremely little to settle on any future wife or children. If, by my order, I refuse the husband's request and devote exclusively to this child all the money that came from the husband and allow none of it to go to any future wife or child of his, it may quite reasonably give him a feeling of injustice and impair the satisfactory relationship between father and child, a relationship of whose existence his generous dealing with the question of her maintenance gives some indication. Moreover, in the eyes of fair-minded members of the family, or friends, and of the child herself when she grows up, such an order will probably seem unjust and an excessive preference of the child's interests to those of her father. To produce this result would cause a loss to the child which the retention of the money would not compensate. To produce a happier result by the surrender of some part of the husband's fund would, in my view, be a benefit to the child. There may be cases where financial stringency might compel one to disregard such a benefit, owing to the necessity of keeping every available penny for the child, but this is not such a case. In my view, it is reasonable and just that the husband should be granted his request in part, but I think that a moiety is rather too large a portion for the husband to remove from the fund, and the fair amount is two-fifths. With this variation I confirm the report, subject to the husband's appointing the remaining three-fifths of the husband's fund to the child.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Pickering, Kenyon & Co. (for the husband); Braby & Waller (for the wife); Neish, Howell & Haldane (for the child of the marriage).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

COLE v. MILSOME.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lloyd-Jacob, J., sitting as a judge of the King's Bench Division), December 18, 1950.]

Bill of Exchange—Requirements of form—Document in form of cheque—"Pay cash or order"—Not payable "to or to order of specified person or to bearer"—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (c. 61), s. 3 (1).

Bill of Exchange—Consideration—Payment of cheque into bank—Drawing of cheques on account at request of drawer's agent.

A document drawn in the form of a cheque was made payable to "cash or order." It was passed by the holder to a third party who, at his request, paid it into her bank account and then drew against it cheques to meet various commitments of the holder. Subsequently the bank refused payment on the document. In an action on the document by the third party against the drawer, HELD: a document payable to "cash or order" was not payable "to or to the order of a specified person, or to bearer" within the meaning of s. 3 (1) of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, and, therefore, was not a bill of exchange within the meaning of that section.

A cheque was delivered by the agent of the drawer to the payee to whom the drawer was not indebted, but who received it in good faith, with the request, made by the agent, that the payee should pay the cheque into her account and draw cheques in favour of persons whom he indicated amounting substantially to the amount of the cheque. Subsequently payment of the drawer's cheque was stopped. In an action on the cheque by the payee against the drawer,

HELD: the payee had acted pursuant, as she believed, to a request of the drawer, conveyed by her agent, that the amount specified in the cheque should be used for the purposes indicated by the agent, and, therefore, the paying by the payee of the cheque into her account and the drawing of cheques by her on her account against it was sufficient consideration to support an action on the cheque by the payee against the drawer.

[AS TO BILLS MADE PAYABLE TO BEARER, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 2, pp. 618-620, paras. 845-848; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 6, pp. 46, 47, Nos. 337-342.]

AS TO WHAT CONSTITUTES CONSIDERATION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 2, pp. 646-650, paras. 890-893; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 6, pp. 114-117, Nos. 768-786.]

Case referred to:

(1) North & South Insurance Corpn., Ltd. v. National Provincial Bank, Ltd., [1936] 1 K.B. 328; 105 L.J.K.B. 163; 154 L.T. 255; Digest Supp.

ACTION for two sums claimed to be due on two cheques which, on presentation, were dishonoured.

The plaintiff was employed by one Hignett, who induced her to receive two cheques, to endorse them, to pay them into her bank account, and to draw cheques against them to meet certain obligations of Hignett. Both cheques were drawn by the defendant. The first cheque was made payable to "cash or order", and the second to the plaintiff in person. It was contended for the defendant that the cheques could not be sued on as bills of exchange, the first because it was not payable "to or to the order of a specified person or to bearer" within the meaning of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 3 (1), and the second because there was no consideration as between the plaintiff and the defendant for its transmission. The facts appear in the judgment.

H. J. Phillimore for the plaintiff.

de Montmorency for the defendant.

LLOYD-JACOB, J.: This is a claim by Mrs. Cole, the plaintiff, against a Miss Milsome, the defendant, for £302 10s., the sum of two cheques, one for £137 10s. and the other for £165, drawn by the defendant on her bank, Barclays Bank, Ltd., Thornton Heath branch, the first on Mar. 25 and the second on Mar. 28, 1949. The real issue between the parties is who is to suffer for the fraudulent behaviour of an intermediary, one Hignett, who was known to both parties and who transmitted the cheques.

The document, dated Mar. 25, 1949, which for convenience I call a cheque, was drawn by the defendant for the sum of £137 10s. It was brought to the plaintiff by Hignett who asked her to cash it in the sense of paying it into her own account and drawing against it a number of cheques to meet various commitments which he had. The defendant submits that the document is not properly so called a bill of exchange, and, therefore, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover as against the drawer the sum specified in it. The document is in the form of a cheque. It consists of printed and written words on what is, in ordinary common parlance, called a cheque form. The only material part for this purpose is the direction as to payment, which is: "Pay cash or order," the words "pay" and "or order" being printed and the word "cash" having been inserted in ink. To be a bill of exchange within the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, the document must satisfy the language of that Act, and, in particular, I should refer to s. 3 (1) and s. 7 (1). Section 3 (1) reads as follows:

"A bill of exchange is an unconditional order in writing, addressed by one person to another, signed by the person giving it, requiring the person to whom it is addressed to pay on demand or at a fixed or determinable future time a sum certain in money to or to the order of a specified person, or to bearer."

It is conceded that this document is an unconditional order in writing. It is addressed by the defendant to her bankers, Barclays Bank, Ltd., at the branch I have mentioned. It is signed by the defendant and it requires the bank to pay on demand a sum certain in money, namely, £137 10s. (which is both written and expressed in figures). The only question which arises is as to the payee, and I have to determine whether the expression "pay cash or order" is a payment to the order of a "specified person, or to bearer." The document can only qualify as a bill of exchange if the expression "pay cash or order" be read as indicating payment to bearer, a question which is not entirely free from authority.

Section 7 (1) deals with the case where a bill is not made payable to bearer, as in the present case, and provides that the payee must be named or otherwise indicated therein with reasonable certainty. Although that is not directly in point, it shows that one of the essentials of a bill of exchange is reasonable certainty regarding the person to whom payment is directed. So far as concerns payment to bearer, "bearer" is defined in s. 2, as "... the person in possession of a bill or note which is payable to bearer."

That does not carry the matter any further on the point with which I have to deal because I have to determine whether on its fair construction this bill is payable to bearer. If it is, no question arises but that it was presented to the bank by a person who was holding the document bona fide and could, therefore, be regarded as the bearer of the document.

My attention was directed to a judgment of BRANSON, J., in North & South Insurance Corp., Ltd. v. National Provincial Bank, Ltd. (1). In that case the learned judge was dealing with a document which in all material respects is identical with that with which I have to deal. The circumstances were not the same because the bank to whom the order was directed had paid the sum set out in the cheque and the action there was on behalf of the liquidator of the company which drew the cheque in an endeavour to recover from the bank the amount of money which the bank had paid and with which they had debited the company's account. In the result, the learned judge decided the case in favour of the defendants on the view that by necessary implication the document was a direction to the bank to pay the sum of money set out to the bearer. Had that decision been one which interpreted the language of s. 3 in favour of the defendants in that case, I should have been disposed to follow it, but the case did not decide that, on the proper construction of s. 3 (1), a payment expressed to be to "cash or order" was a payment to bearer. Indeed, in the early part of his judgment the learned judge expressed his opinion that the document in question could not properly be called a cheque at all and drew attention to the fact that under s. 73 of the Act a cheque must be a bill of exchange. He recalls the language of s. 3 (1), including the words "or to bearer", and notes that sub-s. (2) provides that an instrument which does not comply with these conditions is not a bill of exchange. He then goes on to consider the scope of the words, "or to the order of a specified person," but he does not in terms deal with the other alternative, namely, that of a document addressed to bearer. Therefore, this is not a precise authority on the point which I have to decide.

I have come to the conclusion, with some reluctance, that the language used in this document, namely, "pay cash or order," cannot fairly be construed as constituting a bill of exchange within s. 3 (1) of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882. In those circumstances, the plaintiff must fail in that part of her claim relating to this document because, in the circumstances in which it came into her possession, she is not entitled to claim except on the footing that it does constitute a bill of exchange.

With regard to the second document, it is not suggested that it is not in form a bill of exchange. It was drawn by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff or her order, and was for the sum of £165. The plaintiff has satisfied me that she was wholly innocent of any improper motive in her dealings with these two cheques. She appears to have occupied a position in the employ of Hignett, and it was as part of and pursuant to her employment that the occasion arose for dealing with matters involving money. After she had received the first cheque (which I have dealt with) and had drawn cheques substantially for the amount therein shown, within three days Hignett again called on her, presented to her the second document, and sought her assistance in meeting certain obligations which in total amounted to something less than the £165. The plaintiff was entirely ignorant of the fact that the earlier cheque had been dishonoured, and, at Hignett's request, she drew cheques on her own account for a little over £100 of the amount, and a day or two later drew a cheque for some £60 odd, the total amounting substantially to the full amount of this cheque. It so happened that, before they were cleared, she received notice from her bankers that the defendant's cheque had been stopped, and she told me in evidence that she has managed to stop the various cheques which she drew in connection with this £165, but precisely what her liabilities or obligations are in respect of them I have no evidence.

It is submitted by the defendant with regard to this document that, although it was a bill of exchange received in good faith by the plaintiff, the plaintiff is not in a position to recover against the defendant in respect of it because there has been no consideration as between the plaintiff and the defendant for its transmission. Counsel for the defendant has rightly conceded that the burden is on him to prove the absence of consideration, and that is a burden which cannot easily be discharged in the absence of any affirmative evidence. Here the plaintiff and the defendant were immediate parties to the deal. It is not suggested that the defendant was under any obligation to the plaintiff for this or for any sum of money, and, therefore, it is argued that the plaintiff must have received this document in the full understanding that it was not in respect of any transaction whereby she had given any consideration. It is said that such consideration as she did give, namely, the provision of banking facilities to Hignett, cannot properly be regarded as consideration given or offered to the defendant.

I take the view that in the circumstances which happened this cheque was delivered to the plaintiff by Hignett as agent for the defendant and was transmitted to her by him as such agent with an admitted request that the plaintiff should draw cheques on her account in respect substantially of the total. It seems to me that the whole question I have to decide is whether, in seeking that convenience from the plaintiff, the intermediary Hignett was acting, or can fairly have been assumed by the plaintiff to be acting, as the agent of the defendant. I take the view that the receipt of this cheque, its endorsement by the plaintiff, its payment into her bank, and the drawing by her of cheques against the amount, were made by her pursuant (as she believed) to an implied request by the defendant that the amount set out in this cheque should be utilised for the purpose which Hignett was representing to her was the purpose of its transmission to her and the fact that it was drawn in her name. I am satisfied that in receiving this cheque, in endorsing it, in paying it into her own account, and in drawing cheques against it, the plaintiff was moved and actuated by the representations of Hignett which she believed he was making as agent for the person who had drawn the cheque. In those circumstances, it does not seem to me I can hold that the completion of this cheque by the defendant amounted to nothing more than a voluntary promise on her part to pay the plaintiff so long as she was minded so to do and that it could be withdrawn at any time before payment was completed. The plaintiff informed me on oath that after these cheques had been stopped, when she communicated with the defendant by telephone, complaining of the fact that the cheques had been stopped and informing the defendant that she (the plaintiff) had exposed herself to liability by drawing cheques against the amount, the substance of the reply she got was that she was not to worry and she would receive her money. That seems to me to be wholly inconsistent with an attitude on the part of the defendant that she had written out the cheque expressly payable to the plaintiff merely to indicate a voluntary promise on her part which could be withdrawn at any time before the bank had honoured the draft. In my view, I must read into this transaction the necessary business implications which follow from the transmission of a document drawn in this form to the expressed payee in the circumstances which I have stated. In the result, the plaintiff is entitled to recover the sum of £165 from the defendant.

Judgment for the plaintiff for £165 with costs.

Solicitors: Elvy Robb & Co. (for the plaintiff); Henry Boustred & Sons (for the defendant).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

HALPERN v. HALPERN.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Collingwood, J.), December 6, 21, 1950.]

Variation of Settlement—"Settlement"—Part of house conveyed by wife to husband for no consideration—Provision for husband, and in view of continuance of matrimonial relations—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 192.

The parties were married on Mar. 12, 1942. On July 5, 1945, for no stated consideration, the wife conveyed to her husband a half-share in a house of which she owned the freehold. On Mar. 31, 1950, the wife was granted a decree nisi of divorce, which was made absolute on May 16, 1950. On an application by her for variation of the conveyance to the husband as being a post-nuptial settlement,

HELD: the conveyance by the wife to the husband was for the purpose of making a provision for him because he was her husband and it was made with a view to the continuance of matrimonial relations between the parties, and, therefore, it constituted a post-nuptial settlement within s. 192 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, and the court had power to deal with it under that section.

Principles stated by DENNING, J., in Smith v. Smith ([1945] 1 All E.R. 585), applied.

[AS TO VARIATION OF SETTLEMENT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 800-803, paras. 1274-1278; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 517-523, Nos. 5576-5647, Digest Supp., and 2nd Digest Supp.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Prinsep v. Prinsep, [1929] P. 225; 98 L.J.P. 105; 141 L.T. 220; Digest Supp.
- (2) Hubbard (otherwise Rogers) v. Hubbard, [1901] P. 157; 70 L.J.P. 34; 84 L.T. 441; 27 Digest 520, 5623.
- (3) Chalmers v. Chalmers, (1892), 68 L.T. 28; 27 Digest 520, 5622.
- (4) Bosworthick v. Bosworthick, [1927] P. 64; 95 L.J.P. 171; 136 L.T. 211; Digest Supp.
- (5) Stone v. Stone & Brownrigg, (1864), 3 Sw. & Tr. 372; 33 L.J.P.M. & A. 95; 10 L.T. 140; 164 E.R. 1319; 27 Digest 516, 5551.
- (6) Dormer (otherwise Ward) v. Ward, [1900] P. 130; 69 L.J.P. 65; 82 L.T. 469; revsd., [1901] P. 20; 69 L.J.P. 144; 83 L.T. 556; 27 Digest 521, 5629.
- (7) Gunner v. Gunner & Stirling, [1948] 2 All E.R. 771; [1949] P. 77; [1948] L.J.R. 1904; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (8) Brown v. Brown, [1936] 2 All E.R. 1616; [1937] P. 7; 105 L.J.P. 103; 155 L.T. 418; Digest Supp.
- (9) Bown v. Bown & Weston, [1948] 2 All E.R. 778; [1949] P. 91; [1948] L.J.R. 1912; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (10) Smith v. Smith, [1945] 1 All E.R. 584; 114 L.J.P. 30; 173 L.T. 8; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPLICATION by the wife, a petitioner in a divorce suit, for the variation of a conveyance to her husband of freehold property, which, she alleged, constituted a post-nuptial marriage settlement. The facts are set out in the judgment of COLLINGWOOD, J.

Baskerville for the wife.

E. O. Roberts for the husband.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 21. COLLINGWOOD, J., read the following judgment. This is an application by the wife (the petitioner for divorce), for variation of a post-nuptial settlement. The parties were married on Mar. 12, 1942, and there is one child of the marriage, a girl born Nov. 12, 1944. In November, 1942, the wife's father purchased the freehold property known as "Folda," Kirriemuir, Scotland, in the name of his daughter, expressly directing that the title deeds should be completed in her name. The husband contends that the property was given to the wife and himself jointly as a wedding present, and in support of this he relies on a letter from his father-in-law to him dated May 17, 1943, but, in my opinion, this is inconsistent with the express directions referred to above. On July 5, 1945, the wife, for no stated consideration, conveyed a half-share in the property to the husband. She states that this was done at his request in order that he could hold the property jointly with her and thus have a better opportunity of obtaining naturalisation. On Feb. 15, 1950, the wife filed a petition for divorce, on Mar. 31, 1950, she was granted a decree nisi, and on May 16, 1950, the decree was made absolute.

Counsel for the wife contended that the conveyance of July 5, 1945, was a post-nuptial settlement within the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 192. Counsel for the husband submitted that the deed was not a "settlement" at all, and, therefore, not a marriage settlement. There is no precise definition of the term "post-nuptial settlement." In Prinsep v. Prinsep (1) HILL, J., held that, in deciding whether a settlement comes within the purview of the section, the material question is ([1929] P. 232):

"Is it upon the husband in the character of husband or on the wife in the character of wife, or upon both in the character of husband and wife? If it is, it is a settlement on the parties within the meaning of the section. The particular form of it does not matter. It may be a settlement in the strictest sense of the term, it may be a covenant to pay by one spouse to the other, or by a third person to a spouse. What does matter is that it should provide for the financial benefit of one or other or both of the spouses as spouses, and with reference to their married state."

The case most strongly relied on by counsel for the husband was Hubbard (otherwise Rogers) v. Hubbard (2). In that case a husband executed a deed by which he assigned to a trustee a leasehold house on trust to assign the same at once to the wife absolutely, and the trustee assigned accordingly. It was held by the Court of Appeal, reversing the decision of SIR FRANCIS JEUNE, P., that the assignment was not a "settlement," in any sense, and could not, therefore, be a settlement within s. 5 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859, and that the court had no jurisdiction to vary its provisions. RIGBY, L.J., said ([1901] P. 161):

"I am inclined to say that the decision of the learned President himself in Chalmers v. Chalmers (3) is directly in point, and is to be preferred to his decision in the present case."

In Chalmers v. Chalmers (3), the wife petitioner had, some twenty years before the date of the decree, assigned to her husband certain property of which she then stood possessed subject to mortgages. The President held that the assignment was not a "settlement" within the meaning of the Act, but that on a petition by the wife for maintenance the court could order, and did order, the husband to secure to the wife, by way of maintenance, the property which she had formerly assigned to him, subject to outstanding mortgages. The same view and the same course were taken by the registrar in the present case.

The matter was again considered by the Court of Appeal in Bosworthick v. Bosworthick (4). There, in 1902, a wife, married in 1897, executed a bond whereby she secured to her husband an immediate annuity for his life. The marriage was dissolved in 1925 on the petition of the wife, who applied for an order for discharge of the bond. It was contended on behalf of the husband that a bond for payment of an annuity was not a "settlement." It was held that a liberal interpretation, according to their obvious purpose, must be given to s. 5 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859, and s. 192 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, and that, although the bond did not involve the settlement of property or a charge on property for successive interests, it nevertheless amounted to a post-nuptial settlement within the meaning of those sections and that the court had power, consequent on the dissolution of the marriage, to discharge the bond. LORD HANWORTH, M.R., after pointing out that no light was thrown on the meaning of "settlement" in this section by looking at other Acts dealing with settlement—as, for instance, the Bankruptcy Acts—said ([1927] P. 68):

"It is not unimportant to see that at a very early stage, within a few years of the passing of the Act of 1859, LORD PENZANCE, referring to s. 5 of that Act, said in Stone v. Stone & Brownrigg (5): 'I am not prepared to say that the separation deed was not a post-nuptial settlement within the meaning of that section; undoubtedly property was settled, and I think the section should be liberally construed'."

LORD HANWORTH, M.R., also referred to Dormer (otherwise Ward) v. Ward (6), in which the Court of Appeal held that a covenant to pay a yearly sum constituted settled property, the disposition of which could be varied under the Act, and rejected the argument that the covenant merely created a debt, and he continued (ibid., 71):

"... if we were to hold that there was no jurisdiction in the present case, I think that we should be running counter to the decision of this court in Dormer (otherwise Ward) v. Ward (6), which we cannot do. On consideration of the authorities, the ground of my decision is that the section is to be construed liberally and widely, and I do not intend to narrow the meaning of the word 'settlement'."

SCRUTTON, L.J., said (ibid.):

"About what we might have done if there had been no authority on this point, I decline to speculate, but I think that the ordinary Chancery barrister would have recoiled from the proposition that a deed containing a covenant to pay £300 per annum was a settlement of property. There are a series of decisions in the Divorce Court to show that a much wider meaning has been given to the word 'settlement' than it has received in equity."

ROMER, J., said (ibid., 72):

"I do not think we get any assistance from the Settled Land Act or the Bankruptcy Act, or from the way in which the word 'settlement' is usually employed by conveyancers. What we have to do is to consider the meaning of the word in these particular sections. We have had numerous authorities cited to us going as far back as 1861, and amongst them an authority which is binding on this court, and, in my judgment, those authorities establish that where a husband has made a provision for his wife, or a wife for her husband, in the nature of periodical payments, that amounts to a settlement within the meaning of the sections. That may appear to be a very liberal construction of the sections, but I think that it is no more liberal a construction than should be given to them having regard to the obvious purposes for which they were enacted by the legislature."

In Gunner v. Gunner & Stirling (7) by the terms of an insurance policy effected by the husband on his life the payees were identified as the person or persons entitled under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, to receive the policy moneys, and the insurance was effected under the provisions of that Act for the benefit and separate use of the wife of the assured absolutely. The marriage was subsequently dissolved by reason of the wife's adultery and the husband sought to vary the provisions of the policy. It was contended on his behalf that the effect of the policy was to create a trust in favour of the wife absolute on the death of her husband and that it gave her an immediate vested interest in the policy moneys, and that, while it was not a "settlement" in the strict sense, it was one within the meaning of s. 192 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925. For the wife it was contended that it was a gift and not a settlement. WALLINGTON, J., held that a trust had been created whereby the wife as main beneficiary was given an immediate vested interest in the rights under the policy, that the policy had been effected to make provision for the wife in her character as wife, and that the court had the necessary jurisdiction under s. 192 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, to vary the policy in question as being a post-nuptial settlement. WALLINGTON, J., considered Chalmers v. Chalmers (3), Hubbard (otherwise Rogers) v. Hubbard (2) and Brown v. Brown (8) which were the three cases principally relied on by counsel for the husband in the present case. He continued ([1948] 2 All E.R. 777):

"In Chalmers v. Chalmers (3), there was an absolute assignment of property subject to mortgages. SIR FRANCIS JEUNE, P., in his judgment used this phrase (68 L.T. 29): 'A settlement means the settlement of property subsisting between husband and wife, and the Act gives power to alter or vary it when, and only when, the relation of husband and wife has ceased to subsist. The power to dispose of it absolutely does not seem to be the test.' That was a case in which the court held there was no settlement variable under the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859, s. 5, because there was a complete and completed assignment by the wife to the husband and the property had entirely passed. Hubbard (otherwise Rogers) v. Hubbard (2) was somewhat, though not exactly, similar. There the husband had assigned to a trustee a leasehold house and some furniture, on trust to assign the same at once to the wife absolutely, and the trustee assigned the same accordingly. The wife having obtained a decree of nullity, the Court of Appeal held that the assignment was not a settlement within the provisions of s. 5 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859. Brown v. Brown (8) was a case in which a wife had purchased an annuity and the society granting the annuity had covenanted to pay it to the husband or his assigns. The wife had parted with her money and there was no possibility of anything coming back to her on the terms of the transaction, and the court held that that could not be a settlement within the meaning of this section."

This case was followed and applied in Bown v. Bown & Weston (9) where, in consideration of a single premium paid by a husband, a life assurance company issued a policy whereby they undertook to pay a certain sum on his death. The wife of the assured was specified as the beneficiary during her lifetime. WALLINGTON, J., held that the policy, which was issued for the benefit of the wife in her character of a wife, was a post-nuptial settlement within the meaning of s. 192 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, although there was no trust, the policy not being issued under s. 11 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882.

The case principally relied on in support of the wife's case was Smith v. Smith (10). The facts are set out in the judgment of DENNING, J., in these words ([1945] 1 All E.R. 585):

"On Nov. 6, 1929, the parties married. On Nov. 4, 1933, a house was bought in their joint names. They lived in it as their home and brought up their three children there. On Oct. 11, 1943, the husband presented a petition for divorce against his wife, and on Feb. 8, 1944, he was granted a decree nisi. On Aug. 16, 1944, a decree absolute was pronounced dissolving the marriage. The wife is still in the house. The husband wants possession of it. To that end he says that it is the subject of a 'post-nuptial settlement' within the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 192. The wife says it is not.

A In point of law the purchase of the house was a joint affair. The conveyance was taken in the joint names of husband and wife. They entered jointly and severally into covenants with the vendor restricting the use of it. The greater part of the purchase price was raised from a building society on a mortgage of the house under which husband and wife were jointly liable for the repayments and for performance of the covenants. B In point of fact, however, the moneys for the purchase were provided solely by the husband, and the mortgage was paid off by him by instalments, the final repayment being in February, 1940.

C The conveyance expressly defined the interests of husband and wife in much the same way as would otherwise be imported by statute from the fact that it was taken in their joint names. The house was expressly conveyed to the husband and wife 'in fee simple as joint tenants,' and it was expressly stated that they were to stand possessed of it 'upon trust to sell the same with power of discretion to postpone any sale' and to stand possessed 'of the net proceeds of sale' and 'of the net rents and profits until sale in trust for the husband and wife as joint tenants beneficially.' The result was that the husband and wife held a joint tenancy of the legal estate in the land (which could not be severed) and an equitable joint tenancy in the income of the land pending sale and of the proceeds eventually arising from the sale (which could be severed by taking appropriate steps). D The presumption is that the interest of the wife was intended by the husband as an advancement by him. So long as husband and wife were living together in the house, they, of course, shared the occupation and acquiesced in a postponement of sale, and if they had continued in that way till one died, the survivor would take the whole legal and beneficial interest in it. E If they together let or sold the house, either of them could sever the equitable joint tenancy in the income or proceeds whereupon each would be entitled to one-half. No letting or sale could, however, be effected by one without the consent of the other, except by order of the Court of Chancery, which would consider whether in the particular circumstances it was right and proper that such an order should be made. F Neither party has yet applied for such an order.

Counsel for the petitioner submitted that the provision of the house was for the future benefit of both the spouses and was a 'settlement.' He relied on Bosworthick v. Bosworthick (4) and Prinsep v. Prinsep (1). G Counsel for the respondent submitted that it was a gift to the wife of a half-share in the house and was not a 'settlement.' He relied on Hubbard (otherwise Rogers) v. Hubbard (2) and Brown v. Brown (8).

I find it difficult to reconcile the decisions in Hubbard (otherwise Rogers) v. Hubbard (2) and Brown v. Brown (8), with the principle that runs through the rest of the cases on this subject. That principle, as I understand it, is that where a husband makes a continuing provision for the future needs of his wife in her character as a wife, which is still continuing when the marriage is dissolved, the provision is a 'settlement' which can be brought before the court to see whether the provision should continue now that she has ceased to be a wife. The same applies to a provision by a wife for her husband or by each or either for both. The provision usually takes the form of periodical payments either with the intervention of trustees as in an ordinary marriage settlement, or without them as in a separation deed or a bond; but it may take other forms. The transfer of an investment into a wife's name whether it be a house or shares, or an annuity, seems to me to be in its nature just as much a continuing provision for her future needs as is a periodical payment. The fact that it is made for no consideration other than natural affection and is in that sense a gift does not mean that it is not a 'settlement.' The bond securing the annuity in Bosworthick's case (4) was in that sense a gift. Again, the fact that it is assignable does not mean that it is not a 'settlement.' A wife is often free to assign her interest under an ordinary marriage settlement or a separation deed, but it is none the less a 'settlement.' If she should assign her interest, the court might treat the proceeds in her hands as representing the property; and a co-respondent, or indeed any person, who takes an assignment from her with notice that proceedings are pending as to the application of the property, will find that the arm of the court is long enough to reach the property in his hands. Neither Hubbard (otherwise Rogers) v. Hubbard (2) nor Brown v. Brown (8) directly covers this case. This freehold house was a continuing provision for the future needs of both husband and wife in their character as such. Neither could dispose of it without the consent of the other except by taking proceedings in Chancery. Applying the principles I have stated, I think it was a 'post-nuptial settlement'."

H

In my opinion, the present case comes within the test laid down by DENNING, J., in the case which I have just cited and within the wide and liberal meaning of the term "settlement" in s. 192 to be derived from the cases to which I have referred. The conveyance by the wife to the husband was for the purpose of making a provision for him, not, it is true, in respect of the matrimonial home, but of a "house," and I do not think that when DENNING, J., speaks of a "house" that that is restricted to the matrimonial home. It was, I think, a conveyance by the wife to the husband because he was her husband, and with a view to the continuance of the matrimonial relations between them, and constituted a "settlement" which can be brought before the court to decide whether the provisions thereof should continue now that he has ceased to be her husband. In my opinion, it is a post-nuptial settlement within s. 192, according to the principles which have been laid down in the cases to which I have referred.

Application to vary settlement granted.

Solicitors: Digby & Co. (for the wife); Henry S. L. Polak & Co. (for the husband).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

HOWKINS AND ANOTHER v. JARDINE.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Somervell and Jenkins, L.JJ., and Hodson, J.), December 12, 13, 20, 1950.]

Agriculture—Agricultural holding—Notice to quit—Land and cottages—Land, but not cottages, used for agriculture—No severance of cottages—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948 (c. 63), s. 1 (1), (2).

On Apr. 1, 1935, the landlords' predecessor in title let to the tenant on a yearly tenancy seven acres of agricultural land on which stood three cottages which, at all material times, were not occupied by persons engaged in agriculture. On Mar. 23, 1949, the landlords served a notice to quit in respect of the land and cottages and the tenant served a counter-notice under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, s. 24 (1). The Minister of Agriculture gave his consent to the notice, but the tenant appealed to the Agricultural Land Tribunal which allowed his appeal, and, in consequence, the notice to quit became ineffective. The landlords then began proceedings for possession of the cottages, contending that the refusal to give consent to the notice to quit applied only to the land and not to the cottages so that the notice was effective as regards the cottages.

HELD: "agricultural land" in s. 1 (1) and (2) of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, meant land let substantially for agricultural purposes; the land comprised in the present tenancy was substantially "used for agriculture" and the Act did not provide for the severance from the rest of the tenancy of the cottages although they were being used for non-agricultural purposes; and, therefore, the notice to quit had no effect with regard to the cottages, and the landlords' claim failed.

Dunn v. Fidoe ([1950] 2 All E.R. 685), distinguished.

[FOR THE AGRICULTURAL HOLDINGS ACT, 1948, s. 1, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., 1948 STATUTES, pp. 26, 27.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Lancaster & Macnamara, [1918] 2 K.B. 472; 87 L.J.K.B. 1250; 119 L.T. 440; 2 Digest 42, 232.
- (2) Dunn v. Fidoe, [1950] 2 All E.R. 685.
- (3) Re Russell & Harding, (1922), 128 L.T. 476; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the tenant from an order made by His Honour JUDGE TUCKER at Uttoxeter County Court on Oct. 27, 1950, declaring that the landlords were entitled to possession of three cottages situate at Stubwood, Staffordshire, and mesne profits from the date of expiry of a notice to quit given by the landlords in respect of a tenancy comprising the cottages and seven acres of agricultural land. The facts appear in the judgment of SOMERVELL, L.J.

Heathcote-Williams, K.C., and Kisch for the tenant.

Ferns for the landlords.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 20. The following judgments were read.

SOMERVELL, L.J.: On Apr. 1, 1935, the late landlord, whose executors are now the landlords, let to the tenant three cottages and seven acres of land at Stubwood, Staffordshire, at a rent of £52 a year on a tenancy from year to year with a provision for six months' notice to quit. The cottages were on the seven acres. At that time the tenant lived in one of them. The lease contained provisions usual in a lease of an agricultural holding. To adopt the terminology used in one of the cases, I have no doubt that it was in substance a lease of an agricultural holding. In 1942 the tenant acquired a farm in the neighbourhood and went to live there. At the date of these proceedings none of the three cottages was occupied by persons engaged in agriculture. On Mar. 23, 1949, the landlords served a notice to quit in respect of the three cottages and land, the subject-matter of the lease. Section 23 (1) of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, provides that a notice to quit an agricultural holding as defined by that Act has to be a twelve months' notice, notwithstanding any provision to the contrary in the contract of tenancy. The notice served was a twelve months' notice. Under s. 24 (1) a tenant, on receipt of such a notice, can serve a counter-notice. The tenant did so. The effect of a counter-notice is that the notice to quit has no effect unless the Minister of Agriculture consents to its operation. The procedure is dealt with in s. 25 (2), and there is no suggestion that the proper procedure was not followed here. The Minister gave his consent. Under s. 25 (4) a landlord or tenant dissatisfied with the Minister's decision has a right of appeal to the Agricultural Land Tribunal. The tenant appealed, and the tribunal allowed his appeal. The effect of that was that the notice to quit was inoperative. The landlords then started these proceedings in Utttoxeter County Court. In their points of claim, after setting out what I have recited above, the landlords raised the issues with which this appeal is concerned. They depend on the construction of provisions of the Act of 1948 to which I will refer. It was contended that the counter-notice related only to agricultural land comprised in the agreement, in other words, it must be read as not relating to the cottages which were occupied by non-agricultural tenants, and, alternatively, that the refusal of consent did not relate to the three cottages. The landlords, therefore, claimed possession as against the tenant of the rents and profits of the cottages. They claimed, and the county court judge so held, that they were entitled to a declaration to that effect with mesne profits from the expiry of the notice to quit.

The position is on the face of it remarkable. The tenancy agreement remains in existence, the three cottages being taken out of it, the rent and other terms, so far as the judge's decision is concerned, remaining unaltered. The argument turns on s. 1 of the Act of 1948, which reads as follows:

"(1) In this Act the expression 'agricultural holding' means the aggregate of the agricultural land comprised in a contract of tenancy, not being a contract under which the said land is let to the tenant during his continuance in any office, appointment or employment held under the landlord. (2) For the purposes of this and the next following section, the expression 'agricultural land' means land used for agriculture which is so used for the purposes of a trade or business and includes any other land which, by virtue of a designation of the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries (hereafter in this Act referred to as 'the Minister') under sub-s. (1) of s. 109 of the Agriculture Act, 1947, is agricultural land within the meaning of that Act."

Counsel for the landlords submitted that these words take out of the scope of the Act any parcel, however small, which is not at some relevant date being used for an agricultural purpose. It follows, I think, that the words must bring in as an agricultural holding any parcel of the whole of what is demised used for agriculture, even though the lease was plainly not in the ordinary sense an agricultural lease—for example, a large hotel with three or four acres of pasture. On this view the parcels within the land let which constitute the agricultural holding will fluctuate. A cottage when occupied by a postman is outside the Act. If he leaves and it is occupied by an agricultural worker it comes within the Act. There seem to me two issues. Does the definition provide for severance in any case or is it necessary to find that the tenancy is in substance one of agricultural land? Does the presence of a shop in a row of cottages in the lease of a hundred acre farm take that cottage out of the provisions of the Act leaving the remainder of what is demised within? Secondly, if it severs, does it sever on the basis of user of isolated plots or cottages which happen at the moment not to be used for agricultural purposes—cottages occupied, as here, by non-agricultural workers, or, say, a pasture field, part of a large farm, used for a time as a playing field and not pastured? Or, if it severs, does it only do so in the case of something which is clearly severable by its nature, say, an inn let with a farm, but carried on wholly independently of the farm?

Construing the words in the context of the Act, I have come to the conclusion that the definition does not effect a severance and that for the Act to apply the tenancy as a whole must be in substance a tenancy of agricultural land. There is some authority and an argument based on previous Acts dealing with the same subject-matter supporting the view that this is wrong, and that the definition does, at any rate in certain cases, effect a severance. On this basis, however, I am clear that it only does so in cases where what is non-agricultural is severable by its nature as, for example, an inn or factory independent of the farm and farmlands. For the wider proposition counsel for the landlords relied on the words "used for agriculture" in s. 1 (2). In my view, this sub-section is not directed to severance, but to take out of the Act land which is used for the purposes of agriculture within the definition in s. 94, but not as a trade or business. If severance is to be found, it must be found in s. 1 (1).

A Before coming to the main argument I will mention one point which can be disposed of shortly. Counsel for the tenant submitted that the county court judge had no jurisdiction, the matter of the whole holding having been submitted to and decided by the land tribunal. This would be, in effect, a plea of res judicata. Counsel for the landlords submitted that this point had not been taken below and could not be taken here. We were satisfied that it had not been taken below. There was no evidence before us as to the course of argument before the land tribunal. If the point had been taken, such evidence might well have been relevant. We, therefore, decided that the point could not be taken in this court.

B The argument for the landlords, in so far as it is based on history, was as follows. In Re Lancaster & Macnamara (1) a farm and an inn were let under one tenancy at one entire rent. The business of the inn was entirely separate from the farm. On the expiry of the lease the tenant claimed compensation in respect of improvements to the farm. The court held that this could not be done as the subject of the letting was not a holding within the definition. C The relevant words in the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908, s. 48 (1), were

D " 'holding' means any parcel of land held by a tenant, which is either wholly agricultural or wholly pastoral, or in part agricultural and as to the residue pastoral . . . "

E The inn, which was of considerable size, was clearly not within these words. It was argued, as here, that the words allowed a severance so that the farm would be within the Act and the inn outside it. The argument, to my mind, was certainly forcible on that definition as on the present one. SIR C. SWINFEN EADY, M.R., considered the machinery and other provisions of the Act and rejected the argument as quite impossible.

The position was regarded as anomalous and was dealt with by s. 33 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, which reads as follows:

F " (1) Where the land comprised in a contract of tenancy is not a holding within the meaning of this Act by reason only of the fact that the land so comprised includes land (hereinafter referred to as 'the non-statutory land') which, owing to the nature of the buildings thereon or the use to which it is put, would not, if it had been separately let, be a holding within the meaning of this Act, the provisions of this Act relating to compensation for improvements and disturbance shall, unless otherwise agreed in writing, apply to the part of the land exclusive of the non-statutory land as if that part were a separate holding. (2) This section shall not apply in relation to a contract of tenancy made before Jan. 1, 1921."

G We were told there was no similar section in the Act of 1948. Parliament cannot have intended, counsel for the landlords submitted, to revive the Re Lancaster & Macnamara (1) anomaly. Therefore, it must have presumed that the definition H solved it by severance. I do not think there is great force in this. The present Act, unlike the Act of 1923, gives the power, applied in the present case, to extend tenancies. There would be no ground for affording this protection to an inn. There would, therefore, have to be machinery, which is lacking, for apportionment of rent. There seems, I agree, no reason why in a combined lease the tenant should not be able to claim for improvements to a farm. Section 33 may, however, have created anomalies as well as solved one. It may be that it was thought simpler to proceed on the basis that those who want the benefits conferred by the Act must see that they get leases which are in substance agricultural leases and do not cover other subject-matter.

The authority relied on by the county court judge, and by counsel for the landlords before us, is Dunn v. Fidoe (2). In that case twelve acres of pasture and orchard were let with an inn. The tenant had made substantial profits from the land mainly by the sale of fruit. The house, the inn, though not a farm house, had been adapted for use with the land, and TUCKER, L.J., read the county court judge's findings as meaning that these premises, that is, the inn, in which the tenant lived were a necessary part of the land. The land was of small value compared to the inn. The landlord served a notice to quit. The tenant invoked the procedure of s. 24. The Minister did not give his consent. The landlord sought an order for possession in the county court. The judge held that the land and the inn together constituted an agricultural holding, and, therefore, no order could be made as the Minister's consent had been refused. It is to be noted that the landlord was not, as here, seeking to sever and claim the inn only. The actual issue of severance and its consequences was not before the court. TUCKER, L.J., did, however, base his decision on the view that the definition in s. 1 (1) clearly contemplated a tenancy which comprised in part agricultural and in part non-agricultural land, the agricultural part being an agricultural holding within the Act. Counsel for the landlord had argued that the test was the dominant or main user. TUCKER, L.J., accepted this formula as the test under the earlier definition which I have cited. He regarded it as no longer the test because the new definition provided for severance in cases where the dominant user might be said to be non-agricultural if, of course, there was agricultural land. That test, therefore, being out of the way, he had no difficulty in coming to the conclusion on the findings I have cited that the whole was an agricultural holding. In a short judgment ASQUITH, L.J., agreed that the appeal failed and added ([1950] 2 All E.R. 689):

"The findings of fact of the learned county court judge make it unnecessary to decide some of the interesting and critical questions of law around which the argument revolved."

I would conclude from this that he did not think it necessary to rely on the construction put by TUCKER, L.J., on the definition. In any event, in the latter part of the judgment TUCKER, L.J., expressly leaves open the question whether a notice to quit could be held inoperative under the Act in respect of the agricultural portion only in a case where the tenancy covered also a building "totally unconnected" with the agricultural land. I do not think, therefore, that that decision is to be treated as one binding on this court in respect of the argument put forward by the landlord here. If, then, I am free to consider the matter, I have come to the conclusion that an examination of the Act as a whole shows that the definition should not be construed as effecting a severance of a tenancy. In the first place, I think the words do not compel such a conclusion. The words "comprised in a contract of tenancy" are, I think, apt to cover the whole of what is demised, though in certain contexts they might indicate any part. The word "aggregate," I think, has reference to the definition of agriculture in s. 94, where all the various activities to be included are set out. I think the words used, if anything, indicate severance less than the earlier definition where that argument was negatived having regard to other provisions of the Act.

I will, therefore, consider the present Act. If severance had been intended, the first thing one would expect to find is machinery for apportionment of rent in cases where the tenant gets protection for part only of the subject-matter of the tenancy. Counsel for the landlords submitted that this was to be found in s. 8. Section 8 (1) is obviously necessary having regard to the fact that the Act gives power to prolong contractual tenancies as such beyond the date when, according to their terms, they could have been terminated. Its wording is inapt to cover the suggested severance contended for here. One would need some such words as these: "Where a notice to quit has been held inoperative under s. 24 in respect of an agricultural holding which is part only of the lands comprised in the original tenancy," and so on, giving the arbitrator power to take into account what has been severed in settling the reduced rent. Sub-section 2 makes it clear to my mind that this section is inapt for the purpose for which counsel for the landlord contends. One would expect words similar to those found in s. 33 of this Act. That is the last of three sections dealing with cases where the Act expressly provides for notice to quit in respect of part of an agricultural holding. This is authorised by s. 31 for a variety of purposes—for example, where the land is required for the provision of allotments. Section 32 gives the tenant the right to treat such a notice as a notice to quit the whole holding. Section 33 provides that where the landlord resumes possession of part of the holding under s. 31 or in virtue of a provision in the contract of tenancy the tenant shall be entitled to a reduction of rent

" . . . of an amount to be settled by arbitration under this Act, proportionate to that part of the holding and in respect of any depreciation of the value to him of the residue of the holding caused by the severance or by the use to be made of the part severed."

In other words, where the Act provides for severance, machinery is set up for enabling the rent to be reduced and provides for the basis of the reductions. Assistance is, I think, also to be gained from the wording of s. 3 and s. 24. Section 3 (1) reads as follows:

"A tenancy of an agricultural holding for a term of two years or upwards shall, instead of terminating on the expiration of the term for which it was granted, continue (as from the expiration of that term) as a tenancy from year to year, but otherwise on the terms of the original tenancy so far as applicable, unless, not less than one year nor more than two years before the date fixed for the expiration of the term, a written notice has been given by either party to the other of his intention to terminate the tenancy."

The opening words themselves, I think, suggest that the Act contemplates a tenancy of an agricultural holding, not a tenancy which is of or includes such a holding. If counsel for the landlords is right, this section would not operate on a cottage occupied by a postman. The tenancy quoad that cottage would cease on the expiry of the term. Again there is no machinery for adjustment of the rent, and such a construction would lead to great confusion. Section 23 and s. 24 use the words

"notice to quit an agricultural holding or part of an agricultural holding."

The latter words are necessary having regard to s. 31. If counsel for the landlords is right, one would expect in these sections words expressly covering the case where the notice to quit operates, as it must at common law, on the whole subject-matter, but where part only of the subject-matter is within the Act. The main structure of the Act, its wording, and what it does not contain are, therefore, in my opinion, against the construction which the county court judge put on s. 1. The judge was referred to, and naturally relied on, the passages which I have summarised in the judgment of TUCKER, L.J., in Dunn v. Fidoe (2). In that case TUCKER, L.J., referred to the fact that no provision seemed to have been made, at any rate in express terms, in the rest of the Act for the consequences of severance. No doubt on this issue, which was directly raised in this case, we have had the advantage of a much fuller consideration of the difficulties so arising which, as the Master of the Rolls said in Re Lancaster & Macnamara (1), are relevant to the meaning to be given to the definition.

I have, therefore, come to the conclusion, this being in substance an agricultural tenancy and the definition not providing for severance, that the tenant succeeds. If I had felt myself bound by Dunn v. Fidoe (2) to hold that the definition does provide for severance in certain cases, I would have held that this did not cover cottages such as those on this plot of land not being occupied for the time being by agricultural workers. There is, of course, no such thing as permanence in human affairs, but an inn will presumably continue as an inn and a factory as a factory, though either might, no doubt, be converted into an agricultural building. A cottage, however, may at any time change hands. An agricultural worker may succeed to someone not engaged in agriculture. To treat such cottages, covered in what is in substance an agricultural tenancy, as coming within and going out of the Act according to the occupation of the tenants at the moment would be a result so absurd that only the clearest words would make me come to such a conclusion. For these reasons I think the appeal must be allowed.

JENKINS, L.J.: I agree. The landlords' argument, which prevailed before the county court judge, is substantially to this effect: (i) The definition of "agricultural holding" in s. 1 of the Act of 1948 is so framed that where land in part agricultural and in part non-agricultural is held under a single contract of tenancy at one entire rent the agricultural part is an agricultural holding to which the provisions of the Act apply whereas the tenancy quoad the non-agricultural part is unaffected by the Act. (ii) It follows that in such a case, although under the contract of tenancy a valid notice to quit can only be given with respect to the whole of the land comprised in the contract, a notice so given, provided that in point of length it complies with s. 23 (1) of the Act, is, nevertheless, effective to determine the tenancy quoad the non-agricultural land comprised in the contract, notwithstanding that it is rendered ineffective quoad the agricultural land owing to the withholding by the Minister under s. 24 (1), or on appeal by the Agricultural Land Tribunal under s. 25 (4), of the requisite consent to its operation. (iii) In the present case the tenancy comprises (a) an agricultural holding within the meaning of the Act consisting of the seven acres less the three cottages and (b) non-agricultural land in the shape of the three cottages which, as their tenants are not agriculturally employed, are not "agricultural land" within the meaning of s. 1 (2). (iv) Therefore, although consent to the operation of the notice to quit was withheld on appeal to the tribunal, such withholding of consent only made it ineffective as regards the seven acres less the three cottages, and did not prevent it from achieving a valid termination of the tenancy so far as the three cottages were concerned. (v) Admittedly, this argument involves the severance of a "mixed" tenancy of this description into two tenancies, the one being a tenancy of an agricultural holding within the meaning of the Act and the other an ordinary tenancy of non-agricultural land, for which severance no express provision is to be found in the Act. This consequence follows as a matter of necessary implication from the terms of s. 1, and any apportionment of rent necessitated by such severance can be effected by recourse to arbitration under s. 8.

It will be seen that the essential foundation of the landlords' argument is the construction placed on s. 1 of the Act. That section, read in conjunction with the definition of "contract of tenancy" contained in s. 94, provides by sub-s. (1) that the expression "agricultural holding" means the aggregate of the agricultural land (as defined by sub-s. (2)) comprised in a letting of land or agreement for letting of land for a term of years or from year to year. Sub-section (2) defines "agricultural land" as land used for agriculture which is so used for the purposes of a trade or business, and "agriculture" is defined in s. 94 as including a variety of pursuits which need not be here stated in detail. Speaking for myself, and treating the question first of all as turning simply on the construction of s. 1 in the light of the definition in s. 94 and without regard to any of the other provisions of the Act, I find it impossible to exclude from the definition of "agricultural holding" provided by s. 1 (2) "land used for agriculture" comprised in a letting or agreement for the letting of land merely on the ground that such letting or agreement for letting also includes other land not so used. So far, therefore, I find myself in accord with the view expressed by TUCKER, L.J., in Dunn v. Fidoe (2). I do not think Re Lancaster & Macnamara (1) affords any direct support for the contrary opinion, as the definition contained in s. 48 (1) of the Act of 1908 is in entirely different terms. That case does, however, afford useful guidance as to the bearing of other provisions of the Act on the effect of the definition, a matter to which I will return later. Assuming for the sake of argument that the construction which I have provisionally placed on s. 1, and for which the landlords contend, is right, does it follow that they are entitled to the relief granted by the county court judge? In my view, it does not. For this purpose I also provisionally accept the landlords' contention that the circumstances of the case, as regards the occupations of the tenants of the three cottages, are such as to support the conclusion that the agricultural holding here in question cannot include the three cottages.

On this footing, what is the position? So far as the contract of tenancy is concerned, it could be determined, if at all, only as to the whole subject-matter of the tenancy agricultural and non-agricultural, by one and the same notice to quit. How has the Act affected that state of affairs? So far as the agricultural holding is concerned, s. 23 (1) enacts that a notice to quit is invalid if it purports to terminate the tenancy before the expiration of twelve months from the end of the then current year of the tenancy. I cannot construe that provision, in its application to a "mixed" tenancy, as meaning that a notice to quit can validly be given to take effect on two different dates, namely, the contractual date as regards the non-agricultural part and the statutory date as regards the agricultural part. There is nothing in this provision to validate a notice to quit which would be invalid according to the terms of the contract of tenancy which demand that the entire contract should be determined as regards its entire subject-matter by notice expiring on one and the same date. So far, therefore, the position appears to be that a "mixed" tenancy can only be determined by the notice which the statute enjoins with respect to the agricultural holding included in such tenancy. Then, by s. 24, where notice to quit an agricultural holding is given, and the tenant within the prescribed time serves the appropriate counter-notice, the notice to quit shall not have effect unless the Minister under that section, or the agricultural land tribunal on appeal under s. 25 (4), consents to the operation thereof. What is the effect of that provision in the case of a "mixed" tenancy containing no special provisions as to giving notice piecemeal? The notice to quit, in order to be valid under the contract of tenancy, must relate to the entirety of the demised premises, agricultural and non-agricultural, and must take effect, if at all, as a determination of the entire contract as regards the whole of the property let. The Act does not say that in such a case the notice shall not have effect as regards the agricultural land, but shall nevertheless have effect as regards the non-agricultural land. It simply says the notice to quit shall not have effect. In the case put of a "mixed tenancy" where the notice to quit to be valid under the contract is necessarily given with respect to the whole of the land comprised in the contract, that provision must, I think, render the notice to quit wholly inoperative for the purposes of the contract of tenancy as regards the whole of the land comprised in it, non-agricultural as well as agricultural.

The Act confers no new power of partial determination so as to enable a "mixed" tenancy to be determined as regards the non-agricultural land while continuing as regards the agricultural land. It simply says that the only notice to quit recognised by the contract, namely, a notice to quit taking effect with respect to the whole of the demised premises, shall not have effect. That may, no doubt, be taken as meaning in the "mixed" case "shall not have effect as regards the agricultural land," but the result is, in my view, the same. The Act prevents the notice from operating as a notice determining the entire contract, and, the contract not recognising partial determination, the result so far as I can see is that the notice can have no operation at all under the contract. I think this is borne out by s. 31 which provides in sub-s. (1) that:

"A notice to quit part of an agricultural holding . . . given by the landlord of the holding shall not be invalid on the ground that it relates to part only of the holding . . ."

if it is given for certain specified purposes. That shows an appreciation of the objection under the ordinary contract of tenancy to a notice to quit part only of the demised premises and of the need for a special statutory provision to enable such a partial notice to be validly given. There is no similar provision to meet the case of a "mixed" tenancy so as to enable it to be determined as regards the non-agricultural land where it cannot be so determined as regards the agricultural land. Again, s. 33 makes provision for the adjustment of the rent payable in respect of the part of an agricultural holding retained by a tenant where possession of part has been resumed by the landlord under s. 31 (1). No similar provision is to be found in the Act to meet the case of an agricultural holding forming part of the land comprised in a tenancy where the landlord has resumed possession of the remainder (and non-agricultural part) of the demised premises. Section 8, relied on by the landlords, will not meet the case, as that section is clearly directed to the revision of an existing rent payable in respect of an agricultural holding, and what is here needed is a provision enabling a separate rent to be fixed for the first time in respect of an agricultural holding previously held under a tenancy agreement with other premises at one entire rent for the whole subject-matter of the demise.

These considerations lead me to the conclusion that, even if s. 1 of the Act is given the meaning which, taken alone, its language, read in conjunction with s. 94, appears to me to indicate, the landlords in the present case should not succeed, because the Act contains no such provisions for severance as would be required to enable a notice to quit in respect of a "mixed" tenancy to be given a separate and effective operation in regard to the non-agricultural part of the demised premises where it is rendered ineffective as regards the agricultural part by reason of the withholding of the requisite consent. Moreover, these and other considerations to be collected from the various provisions of the Act appear to me to cast grave doubt on the prima facie construction of s. 1 taken alone. It is difficult to believe that, if severance in the case of "mixed" tenancies was really intended, express provisions as to the effect of a notice to quit on the non-agricultural part, where the requisite consent is withheld as regards the agricultural part, of the demised premises would not have been included in the Act, and the same observation applies to the apportionment of rent in such a case.

Apart from these general considerations there are several provisions in the Act which appear to proceed on the assumption that the tenancy under consideration comprises the agricultural holding and nothing more, besides forms of reference to the tenant, the landlord, the tenancy or the contract of tenancy in relation to the holding which suggest the same intention. Section 3 (1) which converts "a tenancy of an agricultural holding" for a term of two years or upwards as from its expiration into a tenancy from year to year, in the absence of written notice by either party within a prescribed time of his intention to terminate the tenancy, is hardly intelligible if it is to be applied in cases in which the tenancy does not relate exclusively to an agricultural holding. A similar observation might be made with respect to s. 4. Then one finds in s. 5 provisions for settling the terms of "a tenancy of an agricultural holding," where the terms are not reduced to writing or so far as recorded in writing are incomplete. This surely can only refer to a case where the tenancy in question comprises an agricultural holding and nothing more. That, indeed, is what the expression "a tenancy of an agricultural holding" in itself strongly suggests. There are in the Act passim references to "a tenancy of an agricultural holding," "the tenant" or "the landlord" of an agricultural holding, or both (see, for instance, s. 8, s. 9, s. 12), which naturally suggest an agricultural holding as the sole subject of the letting and are hardly to be tortured into the framework of the definition given by s. 1 so far as it indicates the contrary. Perhaps even stronger are the references which occur more than once to "the contract for a tenancy of an agricultural holding" (see. s. 10) or "a contract of tenancy of an agricultural holding" (see s. 15). I need not multiply examples. Section 18, which relates to distress, refers to "a landlord entitled to the rent of an agricultural holding." That, to my mind, strongly suggests a rent attributable exclusively to an agricultural holding. Section 32, which enables a tenant who has received notice to quit part of an agricultural holding to serve a counter-notice accepting the notice to quit as a notice to quit the entire holding, is hardly consistent with the hypothesis that the tenancy might include non-agricultural land which, not being agricultural, would not form part of the holding. In such a case it is difficult to see what would happen to the non-agricultural residuum.

For these reasons I think it may well be the case that, notwithstanding the construction I am disposed to place on s. 1, read only in conjunction with s. 94, the true conclusion to be collected from the provisions of the Act as a whole is that the Act, like its predecessor of 1908, only applies where an agricultural holding is the sole subject of a given contract of tenancy, or, in other words, that the law as stated in Re Lancaster & Macnamara (1) remains in this respect unaltered. On this basis the substance of the matter must be looked at to see whether as a matter of substance the land comprised in the tenancy, taken as a whole, is an agricultural holding. If it is, then the whole of it is entitled to the protection of the Act. If it is not, then none of it is so entitled. If that is the right test to apply, then I have no doubt that the whole of the land here in question is an agricultural holding. The literal construction of the word "used" in s. 1 (2) as requiring actual use of every inch of the holding for agriculture or for the purposes of an agricultural trade or business at any given time would make the Act wholly unworkable. The cottages here in question must, I think, be regarded as ancillary to the holding of seven acres of undeniably agricultural land. The whole, including the cottages, was let under an agreement in terms clearly appropriate to an agricultural holding. The character of the demised premises as agricultural or non-agricultural land cannot, in my judgment, be made to depend on the occupation of the persons to whom the cottages may be let from time to time. Else, by parity of reasoning, if the cottages were at any time vacant the property as a whole could not constitute an agricultural holding because the vacant cottages would not for the time being be used for agriculture. In my judgment, the letting of cottages such as these to other persons because they are not required for agricultural tenants (or as may well be the case because possession cannot be obtained from the existing tenants) should not affect the result.

I would add that for similar reasons I do not think that the principle of severance of tenancies comprising both agricultural and non-agricultural land into a tenancy of an agricultural holding, on the one hand, and an ordinary non-agricultural tenancy, on the other hand, even if the Act on its true construction enjoins such severance in appropriate cases, would produce any different result in the circumstances of the present case. On the facts of this case I think the true view is that the whole of the property let, that is to say, the seven acres and the three cottages, is an agricultural holding within the meaning of the Act. In the result, therefore, although the Act presents problem of construction which, speaking for myself, I find it impossible to resolve with any confidence, I cannot see that on any construction of which the Act appears to me to be capable the landlords' claim to possession of the three cottages in the circumstances of this case is made out. Accordingly, I would allow the appeal.

HODSON, J.: I wish to add a few words of my own to the judgments which have been delivered because of the reliance placed by the landlords on the language used by TUCKER, L.J., in Dunn v. Fidoe (2). The county court judge recognised as expressly left open the question whether s. 1 (1) and (2) of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, effect a severance when a parcel of land is not used for agricultural purposes although the remainder of the demised land is so used. In Dunn v. Fidoe (2) TUCKER, L.J., expressed himself as follows ([1950] 2 All E.R. 689):

" . . . I think it is a possible view that, having regard to the scheme of the Act of 1948, the language of s. 1 and the provisions of s. 31 and s. 32, it may be that a notice to quit premises . . . could be held to be invalid without consent in so far as it applies to the agricultural portion but valid for the remainder."

No severance had been effected by the decision of the county court judge in that case, and the question of severance did not directly arise. He held that the land and inn comprised in the tenancy together constituted an agricultural holding within the definition of s. 1 of the Act of 1948, and this court upheld his decision on the facts of that case, the inn being used not only for its normal purpose, but also for the tenant's agricultural business. Part of the ratio decidendi of the judgment of TUCKER, L.J., appears, however, to have been that the test of dominant or main user had applied under earlier definitions, but no longer applied in view of the changed wording of s. 1 of the Act of 1948.

Under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908, the definition of "holding" in s. 1 is, so far as here relevant,

"any parcel of land held by a tenant, which is either wholly agricultural or wholly pastoral, or in part agricultural and as to the residue pastoral . . ."

In Re Lancaster & Macnamara (1), decided under the Act of 1908, an inn and farm were let together at an entire rent under a single agreement of tenancy and the subject of the letting was held not to be an agricultural holding. The rateable value of the inn was very much less than that of the land, but the test of dominant user was not applied. SIR C. SWINFEN EADY, M.R., and SCRUTTON, L.J., both proceeded on the footing that it was necessary to look and see whether or not a substantial part of the holding was used for non-agricultural purposes. SCRUTTON, L.J., said ([1918] 2 K.B. 483):

" . . . if you find any substantial part of the land used for a purpose which is neither agricultural nor pastoral, Parliament . . . has not thought right, in my view, to give compensation either in respect of the whole land, or in respect of that part of it which is wholly devoted to pasture."

I prefer this wording to the formula "dominant or main user," which was put forward by counsel for the landlord in Dunn v. Fidoe (2). I think the test as put in the judgment I have quoted justifies the decision in Dunn v. Fidoe (2) irrespective of the change which TUCKER, L.J., considered had been brought about by the definition contained in s. 1 of the Act of 1948.

I am of opinion that the reasoning applied in Re Lancaster & Macnamara (1) applies here, and the court has in each case to consider whether land as a whole comes within the definition of s. 1 of the Act of 1948, and in arriving at this conclusion to decide whether a substantial part is at the relevant date used for a purpose which is not agricultural. In my judgment, the holding under our consideration, let, as it was, by an agricultural lease, is not taken out of the definition of an agricultural holding in s. 1 of the Act of 1948 because of the user of the three cottages, even though two of them were never occupied by farm labourers either at the time of the letting or subsequently. I am fortified in this conclusion by the decision in Re Russell & Harding (3), decided under the Act of 1908, where the farmhouse let by an agricultural lease was turned into a guest house during the tenancy without, in the opinion of the court, altering the status of the land demised from that of an agricultural holding. In view of the nature of the cottages themselves I am not driven to the conclusion that a substantial part of the land was used for non-agricultural purposes so as to take the holding out of the definition of s. 1 of the Act of 1948. If I were driven to such a conclusion, I should be of opinion that the whole holding was outside the definition, and for the reasons already given by SOMERVELL, L.J., that severance could not be effected. I agree, therefore, that the appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Taylor, Jelf & Co., agents for Eddowes, Simm & Waldron, Ashbourne (for the tenant); Collyer-Bristow & Co., agents for Wilkins & Thompson, Uttoxeter (for the landlords).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

irmed. H.L. [1952] 1 All E.R. 501.

KEMSLEY v. FOOT AND OTHERS.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Somervell, Jenkins and Birkett, L.JJ.), November 30, December 1, 14, 1950.]

Libel—Fair comment—Article criticising conduct of newspaper—Need for facts on which comment made to be stated in alleged libel.

In an action claiming damages for libel the plaintiff, K., a shareholder and director of companies owning newspapers, alleged that the libel was contained in an article, written and published by the defendants, which was headed "Lower than [K.]" and which, making no further direct reference to K., was an attack on a report contained in a newspaper with which K. was not connected. K. claimed that the words meant, and were understood to mean, that he was a person who used his position as a director of newspaper companies to procure the publication of statements he knew to be false. The defendants in their defence denied the innuendo and pleaded: "Further or in the alternative if and so far as the said words refer to [K.] they are a fair comment made in good faith and without malice on a matter of public interest namely the control by [K.] of the newspapers . . . referred to in para. 1 of the statement of claim . . . Particulars of the specific facts on which the said words are a fair comment are delivered separately." K. argued that the defence of fair comment was not available because the facts, or some of them, on which the comment was made were not contained or specifically referred to in the article.

HELD: the criticism of a person alleged to be responsible for the conduct of a newspaper, directed to the manner in which that newspaper presented news, was prima facie to be dealt with on the same lines as criticism of a book or play, and, therefore, it was not necessary, at least where, as here, the general nature of the comment was indicated in the rest of the article, that there should be in the article citations or examples by reference to which the reader could judge the fairness of the comment.

McQuire v. Western Morning News Co. ([1903] 2 K.B. 100), applied.
Roos v. Stent (1909), (T.S. 988), distinguished and criticised.

HELD, further, procedure under R.S.C., Ord. 19, r. 27, or Ord. 25, r. 4, to have the defence struck out was not appropriate to this case, and should be employed only in plain and obvious cases. If there was a point of law requiring serious discussion, an objection should be taken on the pleadings, and the point set down for argument under R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 2.

[AS TO FAIR COMMENT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 486-496, paras. 593-606; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 32, pp. 141-151, Nos. 1730-1824.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) London Corpn. v. Horner, (1914), 111 L.T. 512; 11 Digest 177, 554.
- (2) Hubbuck & Sons v. Wilkinson, Heywood & Clark, [1889] 1 Q.B. 86; 68 L.J.Q.B. 34; 79 L.T. 429; 32 Digest 209, 2599.
- (3) Carr v. Hood, (1808), 1 Camp. 355, n.; 32 Digest 147, 1779.
- (4) Strauss v. Francis, (1867), 4 F. & F. 1107; 15 L.T. 674; 32 Digest 147, 1783.
- (5) McQuire v. Western Morning News Co., [1903] 2 K.B. 100; 72 L.J.K.B. 612; 88 L.T. 757; 32 Digest 151, 1826.
- (6) Roos v. Stent, (1909), T.S. 988; 32 Digest 44, f.
- (7) Hunt v. Star Newspaper Co., Ltd., [1908] 2 K.B. 309; 77 L.J.K.B. 732; 98 L.T. 629; 32 Digest 139, 1702.
- (8) Burton v. Board, [1929] 1 K.B. 301; 98 L.J.K.B. 165; 140 L.T. 289; Digest Supp.
- (9) Merivale v. Carson, (1887), 20 Q.B.D. 275; 58 L.T. 331; 52 J.P. 261; 32 Digest 152, 1837.
- (10) Mangena v. Wright, [1909] 2 K.B. 958; 78 L.J.K.B. 879; 100 L.T. 960; 32 Digest 140, 1722.
- (11) Campbell v. Spottiswoode, (1863), 3 B. & S. 769; 32 L.J.Q.B. 185; 8 L.T. 201; 27 J.P. 501; 122 E.R. 288; 32 Digest 149, 1802.
- (12) Aga Khan v. Times Publishing Co., Dawson v. Same, [1924] 1 K.B. 675; 93 L.J.K.B. 361; 130 L.T. 746; 32 Digest 153, 1847.
- (13) O'Brien v. Salisbury (Marquis), (1889), 54 J.P. 215; 32 Digest 172, 1009.
- (14) Lyons v. Financial News, Ltd. (No. 1), (1909), 53 Sol. Jo. 671; 32 Digest 152, 1846.

APPEAL by the defendants from an order of PARKER, J., made on a summons under R.S.C., Ord. 19, r. 27, and Ord. 25, r. 4, issued by the plaintiff in a libel action to have struck out a paragraph of the defence of each of the defendants, which raised a plea of fair comment, and the particulars delivered thereunder, on the ground that they were vexatious and contrary to the rules of pleading and tended to prejudice, embarrass and delay the fair trial of the action, and disclosed no reasonable cause of action, and were frivolous. PARKER, J., struck out the paragraph and the particulars.

The first and second defendants appeared in person, and adopted the arguments of the third and fourth defendants.

Gardiner, K.C., and H. J. Baxter for the third and fourth defendants.

Sir Walter Monckton, K.C., Diplock, K.C., T. G. Roche and Du Plessis for the plaintiff.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 14. The following judgments were read.

SOMERVELL, L.J.: The point raised can be indicated in outline. The plaintiff submits that for the defence of fair comment to be available, the facts, or, at any rate, some of the facts, on which the comment is a comment must be contained or referred to in the alleged libel or in the article or document from which the words complained of are taken. A "bare comment" may be justified as true—that, of course, would be a question for the jury—but no plea of fair comment can be raised. He submits that the present libel falls within such a principle. The defendants are not concerned to dispute that there may be subject-matters and circumstances in which such a principle is applicable. They dispute its applicability to the present case, in which, as will be seen, the alleged libel deals with the conduct of newspapers and with the honesty of their presentation of news in regard to political issues and personalities. They claim that in the circumstances of the case a plea of fair comment is open to them. The “facts” are, they submit, what I will call the plaintiff’s newspapers. They admit their liability to give particulars of what they rely on in those newspapers as justifying their comment as fair.

The type of case appropriate for application under these rules was considered, among other cases, in London Corpn. v. Horner (1) and Hubbuck & Sons v. Wilkinson, Heywood & Clark (2), a decision of this court. These cases are referred to in the ANNUAL PRACTICE under R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 4, and counsel for the plaintiff at one time submitted that so strict a principle did not apply to R.S.C., Ord. 19, r. 27. An examination of the latter case makes it, I think, clear that, although the application, as here, was under both rules, it was R.S.C., Ord. 19, r. 27, that was substantially in question. The effect of the cases is accurately summarised in the ANNUAL PRACTICE, and I think applies to both rules. They should be applied only in plain and obvious cases, and, if there is a point of law which requires serious discussion, an objection should be taken on the pleadings and the point set down for argument under R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 2. Counsel for the third and fourth defendants relied on these cases, but he delivered a full argument on the merits, to which counsel for the plaintiff replied. The court must, of course, go into the merits to some extent to see whether the point is one for serious discussion. We all came to the conclusion that the point of law was one that required serious discussion and that the procedure under these rules was not appropriate. Both parties, however, desired us, if we felt able to reach a clear conclusion on the material before us, to treat the issue raised as one for our decision. The matter having reached this court and been fully argued, we propose to do so, though this must not be taken as a precedent justifying resort to these rules in other than plain cases.

The plaintiff, in para. 1 of the statement of claim, which is admitted, states that he is, and is widely known to be, a director of and shareholder in companies owning newspapers and generally known to the public as a “newspaper proprietor.” He has no connection with the “Evening Standard.” The first three defendants are editors or on the editorial staff of a weekly newspaper called “Tribune.” The fourth defendant publishes the “Tribune,” and the fifth is the printer and does not appear in this appeal. The alleged libel was contained in an article in the “Tribune” of Mar. 10, 1950. To understand the article it is necessary to state that one Fuchs, said to be a communist, had just been convicted and sentenced to a long term of imprisonment under the Official Secrets Act, 1920, s. 1, for communicating information likely to be useful to an enemy. The Mr. Strachey referred to in the article was, and is, the Secretary of State for War. The article admittedly written by the first defendant and published by all is headed “Lower Than Kemsley.” In the statement of claim is added in brackets: “meaning the plaintiff.” Though this is not admitted in the defence, it was not disputed for the purpose of the argument before us.

The article, parts of which I will read, is an attack on the “Evening Standard” for certain headlines coupling the name of the convicted Fuchs with that of the Secretary of State for War. These are the extracts from the article:

“The prize for the foulest piece of journalism perpetuated [sic] in this country for many a long year—and that is certainly saying something—must go to Mr. Herbert Gunn, editor of the ‘Evening Standard,’ and all those associated with him in the publication of the attack on John Strachey last week. Since that newspaper has now sought to cover up its original story with long and misleading disputations on the matter, it is worth re-printing the headlines which appeared in the 'Evening Standard' on Thursday, Mar. 2. Those headlines read as follows: 'Fuchs and Strachey: A great new crisis. War Minister has never disavowed communism. Now involved in M.I.5 inefficiency probe'. This 'great new crisis' was completely fabricated in the 'Evening Standard' office . . . But it is obvious from these headlines which we have reprinted what the 'Evening Standard' was suggesting. It was suggesting that Strachey might be a supporter of communism in the same sense in which Fuchs was a communist. Otherwise the conjunction of headlines had no point at all . . . We would have liked to have seen the decent journalists who may be left in other newspaper offices demanding that their craven editors should speak a word in the cause of honest journalism . . . And any journalist worth the name should consider his attitude to the disgraceful perversions, distortions, and innuendoes which some newspapers sedulously purvey."

That, I think, is sufficient to give the general nature of the article. The innuendo in para. 4 of the statement of claim is as follows:

"The said words meant and were understood to mean that the plaintiff was a person who used his position as a director of newspaper companies to procure the publication of statements he knew to be false and that his name was a byword in this respect, so that the best method of bringing home to the readers of the article what was, in the writer's view, the extreme dishonesty in this respect of the other persons referred to in the article was to say that they were 'lower than the plaintiff'."

Now, of course, when the matter comes for trial the plaintiff may or may not succeed in establishing the innuendo, but for the purpose of his present application it must be taken as what the words meant and were understood to mean. In other words, the comment is not completely in the air—such as a statement that "A. is unfit for human society," without any indication to the reader in the statement or the surrounding circumstances as to the nature of the acts which render him unfit. The defendants in their defence, after matters to which I have referred, deny the innuendo, and then, in para. 5, plead as follows:

"Further or in the alternative if and so far as the said words refer to the plaintiff they are a fair comment made in good faith and without malice on a matter of public interest, namely, the control by the plaintiff of the newspapers (other than the 'Evening Standard') referred to in para. 1 of the statement of claim. Particulars of the specific facts on which the said words are a fair comment are delivered separately."

It is this paragraph which the learned judge has struck out. There was no argument before us on the particulars as such. If the learned judge was right, the particulars fall with the paragraph. If the paragraph stands, the particulars, as left by the learned master's order, stand so far as we are concerned. I should also add that the particulars as delivered with the defence were struck out as objectionable in form and the further and better particulars delivered are now before the court.

It was not disputed before us that the matters involved were of public interest. Although the so-called "rolled-up" plea in its various forms and the questions that have arisen as to particulars thereunder are comparatively modern, the plea of fair comment or fair criticism is, of course, of considerable antiquity. In Carr v. Hood (3) the plaintiff, an author, complained that as an author he had been immoderately ridiculed in a publication of the defendant. LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J., in the course of his judgment, said (1 Camp. 557):

"We really must not cramp observations upon authors and their works . . . Reflection on personal character is another thing. Show me an attack on the moral character of this plaintiff, or any attack upon his character unconnected with his authorship, and I shall be as ready as any judge who ever sate here to protect him; but I cannot hear of malice on account of turning his works into ridicule."

A In Strauss v. Francis (4), although after argument the proceedings were withdrawn, the court regarded the right of criticism as covering very violent words which in the libel complained of were unsupported by quotations, or references to passages, or any general description of the book which was the subject-matter. It was said to be the worst attempt at a novel that had ever been perpetrated, and the words complained of referred to its vulgarity, profanity, B indelicacy, and its irrelevant abuse of great men living and dead. Of course, at the trial the book in passages from it became relevant, or, at any rate, might become relevant, in order to see whether this was criticism at all or a malicious attempt to injure the author as a man as distinct from an honest criticism of his work. In one sense, of course, his character was attacked, but it was not an attack unconnected with his authorship. A more modern case relied C on by counsel for the third and fourth defendants was McQuire v. Western Morning News Co. (5). That case concerned a criticism of a play described as a musical absurdity, comprised of nothing but nonsense. The songs were said to be common, not to say vulgar, and there were other highly critical statements. There was no citation from the play and no songs were quoted, nor was there any description of the play or its plot. There was nothing in the article to D enable a reader to judge of the fairness of the comment. That could only be done by those who had seen the play which had been presented for the first time the evening before the article. Like other criticism of works of literature or art on their first appearance, it was primarily addressed to those seeking guidance whether they should read the book or see the play or other work of art. The defence was that it was fair and bona fide criticism, that is, fair comment E on the play and its performance which were matters of public interest. The trial judge left the issue to the jury, who found for the plaintiff. This court entered judgment for the defendant. They held there was no evidence on which a rational verdict for the plaintiff could be founded.

These cases show that, in criticising something put before the public, as is a play or book, for its approval or disapproval, the defence is, or, at any rate, F may be, open although there are no citations or examples by reference to which the reader can judge of the fairness of the comment. This is, perhaps, even more clearly applicable to works of art in the popular sense. A man can criticise paintings or sculpture without producing reproductions of the works criticised. The facts, counsel for the plaintiff submits, in such cases are sufficiently referred to and are available. This is true in one sense, but the G object of the article in McQuire's case (5) was to discourage anyone from paying the price necessary to ascertain the facts. The facts were, no doubt, available to those who were prepared to pay for a seat and could be accommodated during the run of the play. In considering whether a comment is a bare comment within counsel's principle it is important to consider the subject-matter to which the comment is directed. It is obviously relevant that the subject-matter is, like a book, play or newspaper, something published and so H submitted to the public for approval or disapproval.

There is a different class of case, to which I will refer now because it is relevant when I come to consider the case mainly relied on by the plaintiff. The act or acts of a public man, unlike a play after its first night or a book just published, may be both undisputed and under such vigorous discussion at the moment that what might in form seem to be a bare comment might to any reader be plainly referable to that act or acts. I will take an example from the past.

Many people regarded those who negotiated the Treaty of Utrecht as having betrayed their country. A bare comment on the loyalty of one of the negotiators might so obviously be understood as referring to the fact of the treaty and the negotiator's part in it that I would hesitate to say the writer would be shut out from the plea of fair comment although there was no express reference to the treaty. At the other end of the scale one may imagine a comment reflecting on the integrity of a subordinate official, whose activities had so far received no publicity, where it might be held that the defence was not available unless the facts relied on were substantially set out or indicated. A

I will now refer to the case mainly relied on by counsel for the plaintiff. It was Roos v. Stent (6). Roman-Dutch law had adopted our law as to fair comment, and the careful judgments in that case are based on the English authorities, and, in particular, on what is admittedly a dictum of FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., in Hunt v. Star Newspaper Co., Ltd. (7). Passages from the judgments are quoted in English text-books and they deserve, if I may say so, serious consideration. It is necessary shortly to set out the facts. In 1898 the government of the then South African Republic had given financial assistance to the formation of a cold storage company, known as the Koelkamers Company. Three of the directors were to be appointed by the government and three elected by the shareholders. Later, another storage company, the Imperial, succeeded in acquiring a majority of the shares, and was, therefore, in a position to elect the three elected directors. In 1908 violent attacks, which became widely known, were made by a Mr. Gillingham, a shareholder, against the elected directors of Koelkamers. He called them thieves and swindlers, accused them of producing false balance sheets, and so on. The suggestion, of course, was that they had the Imperial company's interests in mind and not those of Koelkamers. The Attorney-General refused to prosecute the directors, nor was Mr. Gillingham prosecuted. Civil proceedings, as INNES, C.J., says, were out of the question as Gillingham was insolvent. The plaintiff was one of the directors at the time. The article containing the libel appeared shortly after. It dealt with the high price of meat in Pretoria, where Koelkamers operated. The last sentence ran as follows: C D E

"Here is an opportunity for the Koelkamers to do something in the public interest and to show that at the present moment, at any rate, the company is being honestly run for the benefit of its own shareholders."

The defendants admitted that the words were an attack on the directors in the past, of whom the plaintiff was one, and meant that these directors had had regard to the interests of the Imperial company rather than Koelkamers. The court held that the words were defamatory. F

The question then arose with which we are concerned: Could the defendants plead fair comment? INNES, C.J., who delivered the first judgment, held that no reference to any of Mr. Gillingham's specific charges could fairly be deduced from the words used by the writer of the article. This is, I think, all-important. I am not concerned with whether I should have come to the same conclusion. It may well be that Mr. Gillingham's accusations were so violent and vague that they could not be treated as "facts" on which anyone was entitled to comment. The fact that INNES, C.J., so held indicates to my mind that his decision might have been different if, for example, Mr. Gillingham had made one specific charge to which any normal reader would have regarded the comment as directed. In considering the nature of the defence INNES, C.J., says ((1909), T.S. 998): G H

"it must be clear to those who read it what the facts are and what comments are made upon them. And for two reasons. Because it is impossible to know whether the comments are fair unless we know what the facts are: and because the public must have an opportunity of judging of the value of the comments."

He then cites the passages from FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., in Hunt v. Star Newspaper Co., Ltd. (7) ([1908] 2 K.B. 319). The sentence particularly relied on is (ibid.):

"If the facts are stated separately and the comment appears as an inference drawn from those facts, any injustice that it might do will be to some extent negatived by the reader seeing the grounds upon which the unfavourable inference is based."

FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., was dealing with cases where comment and fact are intermingled in the words complained of, but INNES, C.J., extracted a general principle, whether it be right or wrong, from this sentence.

Now, it seems to me quite plain, and McQuire's case (5) shows it, that there are many cases where the reader cannot judge from what he reads whether the comment is fair or not. INNES, C.J., later disclaims the view that all the facts must be set out, but he says there must be some reference in the article which clearly indicates what facts are being commented on. SMITH, J., puts it in this way ((1909), T.S. 1009):

"Can the defence of fair comment be successful in a case in which none of the facts upon which the comment is founded appear in the article itself? I think there may be cases where the facts are so notorious that they may be incorporated by reference."

It was decided that no facts were indicated or referred to. The comment was "in the air" and the plea of fair comment was not available. The defendant could have justified, but he had not sought to do this. I am not suggesting that that decision on its facts and in the circumstances as found, applying English law, was wrong, but, in considering the general statements made, it is important to bear in mind that the subject-matter was the honesty of a director. It was not a play, book, newspaper or exhibited work of art, something put before the public, although it was a matter of public interest and the public had known of Gillingham's violent accusations. I think this is shown clearly by SMITH, J.'s reference to cases where the facts are notorious. It is, however, an abuse of language to say that when a book is just published or after the first night of a play the facts on which the comment is based are notorious, and yet there is no need to set out or specifically refer to passages. All that is necessary is a "reference" to the play. The general statements in that case to which I have referred, if regarded as applicable generally, and, in particular, to comments on published matter, are not, in my view, an accurate statement of our law

I think that Burton v. Board (8) assists the defendants' submission. The libel complained of was in letters to a newspaper. Fair comment was pleaded and the defendant gave particulars setting out the facts on which he was commenting. He specified a number of letters which the plaintiff had written to the same paper. It seems clear that these had not been specified in the defendant's letters or it would have been unnecessary to specify them in the particulars. The issue was whether the defendant could do this without justifying the words in the ordinary sense. It was held that he could. HORRIDGE, J., had struck out a number of the particulars as embarrassing, but this court restored them and held that the defendant could plead fair comment without justifying.

Criticism of those alleged to be responsible for the conduct of a newspaper, directed to the manner in which that newspaper presents news, seems to me prima facie to be dealt with on the same lines as criticism of a book. To say, of the author of a book written, for example, on one side or the other in party politics, that the author in his book dishonestly presented his case would seem to me to fall within the cases to which I have referred. The writer would not be shut out from the plea of fair comment because he had not given or referred to examples in his criticism. The only difference that I can see is that in criticising the general manner in which newspapers are conducted, the comment, if fair, must be based on a great deal of material over a considerable period of time. This, if anything, might seem to assist the defendants' argument. To give the whole material would be impossible. To give two or three examples might be misleading in the sense that no newspaper proprietor can see and approve everything that appears in all his papers. There might be circumstances attaching to the examples selected which would acquit the proprietor of all personal responsibility, whereas, if the whole material was available, the comment might be regarded as fair. I am not saying that, if a comment gave no indication of the nature of the class of facts to which it was directed—for example, "The 'Daily X' is a disgraceful paper"—the principle contended for by the plaintiff might not apply. It would depend on surrounding circumstances, but here the general nature of the comment is indicated and for our purposes can be taken to be as stated in the innuendo. I have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the learned judge applied a wrong principle and that the appeal should be allowed.

JENKINS, L.J.: I agree that the appeal should be allowed, and for the reasons stated in the judgment just delivered and also in the judgment about to be delivered by BIRKETT, L.J., which I have had the opportunity of reading, I concur entirely in those judgments, and find nothing I can usefully add.

BIRKETT, L.J.: The present appeal raises, as I think, questions of very great importance. The defence of fair comment is now recognised to be one of the most valuable parts of the law of libel and slander. It is an essential part of the greater right of free speech. It is the right of every man to comment freely, fairly, and honestly on any matter of public interest, and this is not a privilege which belongs to particular persons in particular circumstances. It matters not whether the comments are made to the few or to the many. Whether they are made by a powerful newspaper or by an individual, whether they are written or spoken, the defence that the words are fair comment on a matter of public interest is open to all. When defendants who wish to rely on this defence are deprived of it, the importance of the matter is manifest to all, and the character of the defence, as I have just summarised it, is not without importance in the consideration of the facts in the present appeal.

It is now very well established that this defence of fair comment has a wide application. In Merivale v. Carson (9), LORD ESHER, M.R., made this plain in what is now a celebrated passage (20 Q.B.D. 280):

"Every latitude must be given to opinion and to prejudice, and then an ordinary set of men with ordinary judgment must say whether any fair man would have made such a comment . . . Mere exaggeration, or even gross exaggeration, would not make the comment unfair. However wrong the opinion expressed may be in point of truth, or however prejudiced the writer, it may still be within the prescribed limit. The question which the jury must consider is this—would any fair man, however prejudiced he may be, however exaggerated or obstinate his views, have said that which this criticism has said . . .?"

In Hunt v. Star Newspaper Co., Ltd. (7), FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., said ([1908] 2 K.B. 319) that those observations of LORD ESHER, M.R., were to be applied to literary criticism, but not to the imputation of motives to an individual. This was not the point on which the decision in that case turned, and neither COZENS-HARDY, M.R., nor BUCKLEY, L.J., said anything to support this view, and, indeed, BUCKLEY, L.J., said the exact opposite (ibid., 323): "The defence of fair comment extends to the imputations of motive." He also said (ibid., 324):

"Whether the criticism be upon a literary production or the conduct of a public man, it is for the jury, I think, to find whether the imputation based upon facts truly stated does or does not honestly represent the opinion of the person who gives expression to it and was not without foundation."

A These words "facts truly stated" were relied on by counsel for the plaintiff in his argument as supporting the view that some facts, at least, must be stated. I will deal with the argument at a little greater length in a few moments, but I will say here that these words, which appear in many judgments of the courts, do not, I think, help to decide the question which is before us now. In my opinion, these words apply to every defence of fair comment, however pleaded, and were intended to mean what is now universally accepted, that, if a comment is made on facts, the facts, however ascertained, must be true facts. To falsify or distort facts and then to comment on them as though they were true facts would mean that the comment could not possibly be fair and the defence of fair comment would have no application. The only exception to this rule would be where the facts were as stated by PHILLIMORE, J., in Mangena v. Wright (10). The words of CROMPTON, J., in Campbell v. Spottiswoode (11) (3 B. & S. 778) are not without their bearing on the questions to be determined in this appeal:

D "Nothing is more important than that fair and full latitude of discussion should be allowed to writers upon any public matter, whether it be the conduct of public men, or the proceedings in courts of justice or in Parliament, or the publication of a scheme or of a literary work. But it is always to be left to a jury to say whether the publication has gone beyond the limits of a fair comment on the subject-matter discussed. A writer is not entitled to overstep those limits . . ."

E It cannot be doubted, I think, that the conduct of a newspaper is a public matter, and that the final judgment on fairness or unfairness is to be given by a jury on the subject-matter discussed, that is, the conduct of the newspaper.

There are various forms in which the plea of fair comment may be pleaded. In the case before us, the defence in para. 5, which has been struck out, reads:

F "Further or in the alternative if and so far as the said words refer to the plaintiff they are a fair comment made in good faith and without malice upon a matter of public interest namely the control by the plaintiff of the newspapers (other than the 'Evening Standard') referred to in para. 1 of the statement of claim. Particulars of the specific facts upon which the said words are a fair comment are delivered separately."

G If the plea is made in this form, or in what is called the "rolled-up plea", but without stating that the comments are made on "the said facts," particulars must be given of the matters of public interest on which the comment is based if they are not given in the pleading, and the defendant is entitled to deliver particulars of the facts on which he based his comments.

In Aga Khan v. Times Publishing Co. (12), SCRUTTON, L.J., said ([1924] 1 K.B. 682):

H "Where the comment is alleged generally to be 'on a matter of public interest' particulars are, as far as I know, always ordered, in order that it may be seen what facts beyond those stated in the libel the defendant intends to rely on."

It is clear, therefore, and, indeed, it was not contended otherwise, that all the facts need not be stated, but when the matter is submitted to the judgment of a jury particulars of the facts relied on must be supplied.

Now, in my opinion, the form of the pleadings in this case are of the utmost importance in coming to any conclusions on the various submissions made before us. The plaintiff, in para. 1 of the statement of claim, had said:

"The plaintiff is and is widely known to be a director of and shareholder in companies owning newspapers and is generally known to the public as a 'newspaper proprietor' ", and in para. 3 of the statement of claim had set out in full the article in the "Tribune" of Mar. 10, 1950, which was the libel alleged. The only words which referred directly to the plaintiff were contained in the heading of the article, "Lower than Kemsley." The remainder of the article referred to what was called "the foulest piece of journalism perpetuated [sic] in this country for many a long year" by the editor of the "Evening Standard" and those associated with him. Paragraph 4 of the statement of claim set out the innuendo: A

"The said words meant and were understood to mean that the plaintiff was a person who used his position as a director of newspaper companies to procure the publication of statements he knew to be false and that his name was a byword in this respect, so that the best method of bringing home to the readers of the article what was in the writer's view the extreme dishonesty in this respect of the other persons referred to in the article was to say that they were 'lower than the plaintiff'." B

At this stage of the action, whatever may be the position at the trial, the form of the innuendo put on the words by the plaintiff himself seems to me to be of cardinal importance. The plaintiff is alleging that the comment is dealing with his position as a director of newspaper companies, and the way in which he used that position to procure the publication of false news, and that in this respect his name was a byword. The plaintiff is there saying in the pleading that the matters commented on are matters of public notoriety, and that the ordinary reader would understand from the words complained of that what was being commented on was the conduct of the plaintiff in the conduct of the newspapers with which he was connected. It was conceded that the words "Lower than Kemsley" were capable of being construed as comment, but it was argued before the master, before PARKER, J., and before us that the defence of fair comment was not open to the defendants because none of the facts on which the comment was based was contained in the article complained of, neither were those facts specifically referred to. Counsel for the plaintiff, in addition to the submission already referred to, argued that the words "Lower than Kemsley," being the only words which referred to the plaintiff, must be taken to be what he called "a naked comment," and, while the defence of justification was open to the defendants, the defence of "fair comment" was not, and the naked comment in the special circumstances of this case must be treated as though it were a statement of fact. C

Before the defence of fair comment became applicable, some facts must be stated or some specific reference made to them. D

With the exception of the observations of FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., in Hunt v. Star Newspaper Co., Ltd. (7), to which I have referred, there is no distinction to be drawn in the application of the defence of fair comment, whether the subject-matter of the comment be a newly published book, or the first-night production of a stage play, or the presentation of a new film, or the first performance of an orchestral work, or the conduct of a public newspaper, or anything which is submitted to the judgment and taste of the general public. They are all offered to the public as matters of public interest or concern and must, of course, be subject to public criticism. In the case of a newly published book, or the first-night production of a stage play, or the exhibition of a new film, or the first performance of an orchestral work, the critic will usually make E

F

G

H

some reference to some of the facts on which his comment is based, but this is by no means true in every case. A critic might very well say: "In my opinion, this book, or this play, or this film is an unworthy, or, indeed, a disgraceful, production, and ought not to receive any encouragement from the public." No facts are stated in the criticism, none is specifically referred to, but nobody doubts that in such a case the critic could rely on the defence of fair comment if an action were brought. No doubt, the facts on which he based his comment would have to be supplied, but at the time of publication the ordinary member of the public to whom the words were addressed would have no means of knowing there and then, or of judging, whether the comments were fair or unfair. He would know the subject-matter, that is, the book, the play, or the film, and the facts are in a sense available, for he can buy the book or go to see the play or the film if he wishes so to do. McQuire v. Western Morning News Co. (5) is a very good illustration. No facts were included in a very damaging criticism of a newly produced play, and most certainly no reader of the criticism was in any position to judge of the fairness or otherwise of the comment, yet the defence of fair comment was set up, and, though it failed in the court of first instance, it succeeded in the Court of Appeal.

If the defence of fair comment is open to a defendant in commenting on a book offered to the public when no facts are stated, it is difficult to see why a different rule should apply when the subject-matter is a public newspaper offered to the public. Counsel for the plaintiff relied very strongly on Roos v. Stent (6), and the headnote in that case lends strong support for his argument. Apart from the fact that the South African court placed great reliance on the passages from FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., in Hunt v. Star Newspaper Co., Ltd. (7), to which I have referred, and that the subject-matter was not a book or play or newspaper, the basis of the decision would appear to be that as a matter of construction no reference to any facts could be incorporated by reference, and that it was, therefore, a "naked comment." SMITH, J., seems to say that, if facts could have been so incorporated, the decision might have been different. In any event, in view of the English authorities, I do not think that the South African case can be an authority for the general proposition that before the defence of fair comment is applicable the facts must be set out in the matter complained of so that the reader may judge of the fairness of the comment or otherwise. I do not think it is possible to lay down any rule of universal application. If, for example, a defamatory statement is made about a private individual who is quite unknown to the general public and has never taken any part in public affairs, and the statement takes the form of comment only and is capable of being construed as comment and no facts of any kind are given, while it is conceivable that the comment may be made on a matter of public interest, nevertheless the defence of fair comment might not be open to a defendant in that case. It is almost certain that a naked comment of that kind in those circumstances would be decided to be a question of fact and could be justified as such if that defence were pleaded, but, if the matter is before the public, as in the case of a book, a play, a film, or a newspaper, then I think different considerations apply. Comment may then be made without setting out the facts on which the comment is based if the subject-matter of the comment is plainly stated. This seems to me to accord with good sense and the true public interest. In the illustration given by counsel for the defendants: "This newspaper [naming it] does not represent the views of the public, and is not worthy to do so," it would not be practicable to set out the facts on which the comment was based. They might cover twenty years of the newspaper's history, and to set out one or two facts and ignore the others might distort the issue in a much more damaging way. But to say in such a case that the commentator should be deprived of the critic's most valuable defence, fair comment, would be unjust to the defendant and injurious to the public interest, which is best served by free, frank, and open discussion undeterred by the fear that the criticism would have to be justified in the fullest sense and sustained by the knowledge that it will be enough to show that the comment was fair. "He is under no duty to prove that his opinion coincides with that of a jury, but only that he was fair and honest in expressing his view."

In the case before us the comment is made as a heading to an article which alleged that another newspaper, unconnected with the plaintiff, was guilty of lowering the standards of journalism, and thereby commented that the plaintiff was guilty of low standards of journalism too. The Kemsley newspapers, if I may use a convenient phrase, are public newspapers and to the knowledge of the public report news and conduct public controversy. The subject-matter of the comment is not in doubt. It is admittedly a public matter, and in those circumstances I cannot see how the case of a public newspaper can be different from that of a published book. The facts are not specifically referred to, but at this stage of the action I think the facts on which the comment is based must be taken to be the facts of the public newspapers controlled by the plaintiff and the conduct of the said newspapers. I think the defence of fair comment can be raised, and that the order of PARKER, J., should be reversed.

In the RE-STATEMENT OF THE LAW OF TORTS, adopted and promulgated by the American Law Institute, it is of interest to observe that in chapter 25, para. 606, dealing with what is termed "privileged comment," it is laid down that defamatory criticism is "privileged" if the criticism is based on a true statement of the facts or on facts otherwise known or available to the recipient as a member of the public, and to be "privileged comment" under this rule the facts on which the opinion is based must be stated or they must be known or readily available to the persons to whom the comment or criticism is addressed, as in the case of a newspaper criticism of a play or a review of a book.

It was said in the present case that the "Tribune" had repeatedly referred in previous issues to the question of the "Kemsley newspapers" and that they had been the subject of much public discussion. For the purpose of my judgment I exclude this matter and prefer to deal with the question as though there had been no previous discussion. The decision to which I have come is supported, I think, by the decided cases. In O'Brien v. Salisbury (Marquis) (13) LORD SALISBURY made a speech in which he referred to a speech made by Mr. William O'Brien, M.P., at Ballyneale in September, 1888, and commented on it in the severest terms. The defences set up in answer to the action for slander brought by Mr. O'Brien were justification and fair comment. The speech of Mr. O'Brien had been reported in the "Times" and had been the subject of comment in the House of Commons. LORD SALISBURY commented on the speech as a matter of public notoriety and concern, and as a fair and bona fide comment on the speech and the matters to which it referred. FIELD, J., said of the report (54 J.P. 216):

"It was surely of the very essence of the defendant's case that he should be at liberty to prove, if he could, that the persons taking unlet farms had been subjected to the treatment which he had alleged, in order not only to show that the allegation which he had made as to treatment was true, but also that what he had said was in the nature of comment upon facts to which he had referred, and which were capable of proof. If he had not been permitted to prove those facts they might have been taken as non-existent, and his comments, therefore, baseless."

In Lyons v. Financial News, Ltd. (No. 1) (14) FLETCHER MOULTON, I.J., said (53 Sol. Jo. 671):

"In this case the particulars just stated the grounds on which the defendants were going to say that the matter commented upon was a matter of public interest. The second set of particulars were of the facts which were going to be relied upon by the defendants, some of which were expressly stated in the libel, and some of which, though relevant to the matter of the libel, were not expressly stated therein. The defendants told the plaintiff that they were going to rely on all those facts stated in the particulars to justify or to show that the comment they made was fair. He doubted whether an order could have been made on the defendants requiring them to give such particulars as appeared in their statement of defence, but they had put them forward, and his Lordship was not satisfied that they would embarrass the plaintiff at all. The order appealed from would therefore be set aside and this appeal allowed."

The last quotation I desire to make is from ODGERS ON LIBEL AND SLANDER, 6th ed., p. 166:

"Sometimes, however, it is difficult to distinguish an allegation of fact from an expression of opinion . . . If the defendant accurately states what some public man has really done, and then asserts that 'such conduct is disgraceful,' this is merely the expression of his opinion, his comment on the plaintiff's conduct. So, if without setting it out he identifies the conduct on which he comments by a clear reference."

There is, of course, the further matter which, in my view, is decisive in the proceedings before us. The application to the master and to PARKER, J., was made, as is customary, under Ord. 19, r. 27, and Ord. 25, r. 4, though counsel for the plaintiff relied on R.S.C., Ord. 19, r. 27. It would, of course, have been possible to leave this matter until the trial of the action, though the objections to that course are overwhelming, and it would have been possible to invoke the provisions of R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 2. I am clear that the procedure under R.S.C., Ord. 19, r. 27, was quite inappropriate to the facts of this case, and I think PARKER, J., was wrong in applying it. For all these reasons I think this appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Hale, Ringrose & Morrow (for the third and fourth defendants); Theodore Goddard & Co. (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. LONDON SESSIONS APPEAL COMMITTEE.

Ex parte ROGERS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Hilbery and Devlin, JJ.), January 17, 1951.]

Quarter Sessions—Appeal—“Order made on conviction”—Committal for sentence—Appeal against committal—Competency—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), s. 36 (2).

The applicant was convicted before a court of summary jurisdiction of obtaining money by false pretences and was committed to quarter sessions for sentence under s. 29 (1) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1948. He appealed to quarter sessions against the committal.

HELD: a committal to quarter sessions for sentence was not an “order made on conviction” within the meaning of s. 36 (2) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, and, therefore, there was no right of appeal to quarter sessions against the committal under s. 36 (1).

[FOR THE CRIMINAL JUSTICE ACT, 1948, s. 36 (2), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 14, p. 1016.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) R. v. Middlesex Quarter Sessions, Ex p. Director of Public Prosecutions, [1950] 1 All E.R. 916; [1950] 2 K.B. 589; 114 J.P. 276.
- (2) R. v. London Sessions Appeal Committee, Ex p. Beaumont, ante p. 232.

MOTION for an order of mandamus.

The applicant was convicted by a metropolitan magistrate of two offences of obtaining money by false pretences when applying for public assistance and was committed for sentence to the County of London Quarter Sessions. The applicant appealed against the committal order to the appeal committee of the quarter sessions, but that court held that, as the order was not one made on conviction, there was no right of appeal therefrom, and, therefore, they had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal.

Heathcote-Williams, K.C., and Evelyn Russell (R. D. Ross with them) for the applicant.

Southall for the respondents.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is an application for an order of mandamus directing the appeal committee of the London Sessions to hear and determine an appeal lodged by the applicant against an order by a court of summary jurisdiction committing him to quarter sessions for sentence under s. 29 (1) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1948.

When one examines the structure of s. 29, it seems to me to be clear that from the time when the justices decide to send the offender to quarter sessions for sentence the case is to be regarded as though it were a committal for trial, the only exception to the procedure on a committal for trial being that quarter sessions will not have to inquire into the facts of the case, but will treat it as though the offender was before them on a plea of Guilty. Section 29 (3) provides:

"Where an offender is so committed for sentence as aforesaid, the following provisions shall have effect, that is to say—(a) The appeal committee or court of quarter sessions shall inquire into the circumstances of the case, and shall have power to deal with the offender in any manner in which he could be dealt with by a court of quarter sessions before which he had just been convicted of the offence on indictment."

In other words, they are to deal with him as though he had been convicted before them. It is for that reason that in R. v. Middlesex Quarter Sessions, Ex p. Director of Public Prosecutions (1), it was decided that an order made under s. 29 (1) committing an offender for sentence was a nullity. In that case quarter sessions had no power to deal with the prisoner since the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1906, under which he was charged, provides by s. 2 (5) that quarter sessions shall not have jurisdiction to try prosecutions on indictments for offences under the Act. Section 29 (3) continues:

"(b) The Poor Prisoners Defence Act, 1930, shall apply as if the offender were committed for trial for an indictable offence . . . (c) The Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908, shall apply in relation to the proceedings before the appeal committee or court of quarter sessions as it applies in relation to the prosecution of an offence before a court of quarter sessions; and (d) If the appeal committee or court of quarter sessions passes a sentence which the court of summary jurisdiction would not have had power to pass, the offender may appeal against the sentence to the Court of Criminal Appeal . . ."

That means that if the offender is sentenced to more than six months by the court of quarter sessions, he can appeal to the Court of Criminal Appeal. If, however, quarter sessions see fit to pass only the same sentence as the justices can pass, he does not have a right of appeal. When that section is read as a whole it makes it clear that a person who is committed for sentence is to be treated in the same way as if he were indicted at quarter sessions.

Section 36 provides:

"(1) A person convicted by a court of summary jurisdiction shall have a right of appeal—(a) if he pleaded Guilty or admitted the truth of the information against his sentence; (b) in any other case, against the conviction or sentence, to a court of quarter sessions in manner provided by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts; and a person sentenced by a court of summary jurisdiction in respect of an offence of which he was convicted by another court of summary jurisdiction shall have a like right of appeal against his sentence. (2) For the purpose of the last foregoing sub-section, the expression 'sentence' includes any order made on conviction by a court of summary jurisdiction, not being—(a) a probation order or an order for conditional discharge; (b) an order for the payment of costs; (c) an order under s. 2 of the Protection of Animals Act, 1911 (which enables the court to order the destruction of an animal); (d) an order made in pursuance of any enactment under which the court has no discretion as to the making of the order or the terms thereof."

It is argued in the present case that that gives the applicant a right of appeal against the order of committal, because the order is said to be an order "made on conviction." It seems to me, however, clear that a mere committal for sentence cannot be an order made on conviction by a court of summary jurisdiction within the meaning of sub-s. (2), for so to hold would nullify this new procedure which Parliament has set up. Where a court of summary jurisdiction commits an offender to quarter sessions for sentence because it does not think it can impose a sufficiently severe sentence, is it to be open to quarter sessions to say they do not think the justices ought to have come to their conclusion and send the case back to the justices? I cannot think that that was meant and what DEVLIN, J., said in the course of the argument is very applicable here, namely, that where one has a possible construction which on the bare words of the section may be open to an argument, but would make nonsense of the new provisions which these sections are designed to set up, we ought not to give the enactment that construction. I do not think that a committal for trial can be included in the words "any order made on conviction by a court of summary jurisdiction" so as to be included in the sentence. These words, as I said in R. v. London Sessions Appeal Committee, Ex p. Beaumont (2), include such matters as disqualification for holding a driving licence or licence for firearms, or an order for the forfeiture or restoration of goods—things which are part of the judgment of the court. I think the justices were right in holding in the present case that they had no power to entertain this appeal.

HILBERY, J.: I concur.

DEVLIN, J.: I concur.

Application dismissed.

Solicitors: Freeborough & Co. (for the applicant); Solicitor to the National Assistance Board (for the respondents).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re SMITH'S LEASE. SMITH v. RICHARDS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Roxburgh, J.), January 16, 1951.]

Landlord and Tenant—Lease—Assignment—Covenant not to assign without consent—Provision for circumstances in which refusal not to be deemed unreasonable—Validity—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 19 (1).

By a lease dated Nov. 1, 1948, the lessor demised a flat to the lessee for a term of seven years, and it was provided that the lessee "will not at any time assign underlet or part with possession of the said premises or any part thereof for all or any part of the tenancy hereby created . . . without the previous written consent of the lessor . . . such consent . . . not to be unreasonably withheld . . . Provided always that any refusal by the lessor to consent to any particular assignment or . . . underletting . . . shall not be deemed to be an unreasonable withholding of consent by reason only that the lessor at the time of intimating any such refusal may offer to accept from the lessee a surrender of the tenancy hereby created and in the event of any such offer being made by the lessor the lessee . . . shall either . . . withdraw her application for the lessor's consent to assign or . . . underlet the said premises or shall surrender to the lessor the tenancy hereby created . . ."

The lessee applied for the lessor's consent to a proposed assignment and the lessor refused it, but offered to accept a surrender of the lease. The lessee claimed that, having regard to the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, s. 19 (1), the lessor's refusal was unreasonable.

HELD: the parties to the lease could not curtail the operation of s. 19 (1) by stipulating circumstances in which the lessor's refusal should not be deemed unreasonable, and refusal on the ground that the lessor desired to obtain possession for himself was unreasonable.

Balfour v. Kensington Gardens Mansions, Ltd. (1932) (49 T.L.R. 29) and Creery v. Summersell and Flowerdew & Co., Ltd. ([1949] Ch. 751), applied.

[AS TO UNREASONABLE WITHHOLDING OF CONSENT, see HALSBURY, Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 20, pp. 349-352, paras. 421, 422; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 382-384, Nos. 5279-5291.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Balfour v. Kensington Gardens Mansions, Ltd., (1932), 49 T.L.R. 29; Digest Supp.

(2) Creery v. Summersell and Flowerdew & Co., Ltd., [1949] Ch. 751; [1949] L.J.R. 1166; 2nd Digest Supp.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS for a declaration that on the true construction of a lease dated Nov. 1, 1948, made between the defendant (as lessor), of the one part, and the plaintiff (as lessee), of the other part, and in the events which had happened the refusal of the lessor to grant a licence to assign the said lease was unreasonable, and that notwithstanding such refusal the lessee without any licence from the lessor was entitled to make the proposed assignment.

H. H. Harris and A. J. Phelan, for the lessee.

Robert S. Lazarus for the lessor.

ROXBURGH, J.: By a lease dated Nov. 1, 1948, the defendant demised to the plaintiff a suite, or flat, with four rooms, kitchenette and bathroom, comprising the fourth floor of a building known as 17 Upper Wimpole Street in the county of London for a term of seven years from Nov. 11, 1948, at the yearly rent of £250 payable quarterly in advance.

Clause 2 (13) (A) of the lease provides that the lessee

"will not at any time assign underlet or part with possession of the said premises or any part thereof for all or any part of the tenancy hereby created to any person of colour (such prohibition against a person of colour being absolute) nor without the previous written consent of the lessor to any other person whomsoever such consent however in the case of any assignment or unfurnished underletting to any person other than a person of colour not to be unreasonably withheld and not to be required in the case of a furnished underletting of the premises for any period not exceeding six calendar months at any one time Provided always that any refusal by the lessor to consent to any particular assignment or unfurnished underletting of the said premises or a furnished underletting thereof for a period exceeding six calendar months shall not be deemed to be an unreasonable withholding of consent by reason only that the lessor at the time of intimating any such refusal may offer to accept from the lessee a surrender of the tenancy hereby created and in the event of any such offer being made by the lessor the lessee within three calendar months after receiving such offer shall either withdraw her [sic] application for the lessor's consent to assign or (as the case may be) underlet the said premises or shall surrender to the lessor the tenancy hereby created without prejudice to the liability up to the date of such surrender of either party against the other under any of the covenants on their respective parts herein contained."

On Sept. 26, 1950, the lessee's solicitors wrote to the lessor's solicitors as follows:

"Mr. James B. Millar, at present staying at the Cavendish Hotel, Jermyn Street, is prepared to take an assignment of our client's lease, and we should be obliged if you would therefore ask your client whether she is prepared to consent to this assignment. Mr. Millar has a permanent position at the Colonial Office . . . As Mr. Millar is anxious to have possession as soon as possible, your early reply will oblige."

The lessor's solicitors replied on Sept. 27, 1950:

"Our client is not willing to give her consent for your client to assign his lease to Mr. James B. Millar as therein requested, but offers, in accordance with the provision in that behalf contained in the lease, to accept from your client a surrender thereof."

Whereupon the lessee's solicitors reply:

"We are in receipt of your letter of yesterday's date and note your client refuses her consent to an assignment of our client's lease to Mr. J. B. Millar. Your letter makes it quite clear that your client's only reason for refusal of her consent is because of the proviso in the lease as to a surrender. We have advised our client that in view of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, s. 19, the provision as to surrender is ineffective, and that therefore your client is withholding her consent unreasonably. We are renewing our application to assign, as set out in our letter of the 26th instant, to enable your client to re-consider her decision."

The lessor's solicitors then wrote a letter which refers to the proviso that I have read, and thereupon the solicitors embarked on a correspondence.

It is quite plain, to my mind, on the correspondence that the reason why the lessor refused licence to assign was simply and solely because she desired to have the lease surrendered to her and she deemed herself entitled to require the surrender in lieu of giving her licence to assign, and, if the lease had to be construed without regard to the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, that is the broad effect of the stipulation which I have read. Therefore, the sole question for my decision is whether, having regard to the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, s. 19, that stipulation is void. Section 19 (1) provides:

"In all leases whether made before or after the commencement of this Act containing a covenant condition or agreement against assigning, underletting, charging or parting with the possession of demised premises or any part thereof without licence or consent, such covenant condition or agreement shall, notwithstanding any express provision to the contrary, be deemed to be subject—(a) to a proviso to the effect that such licence or consent is not to be unreasonably withheld . . .”

The question is: Can the parties curtail the operation of that statutory provision by postulating in the lease that certain things shall not be deemed unreasonable? In my judgment, the answer is in the negative. First, it must, I think, be in the negative on principle because, if it were possible for the parties to stipulate in the lease that certain things should not be deemed to be unreasonable, they could surely stipulate that nothing should be deemed to be unreasonable and that would be a complete stultification of the Act. Secondly, the matter is, in my view, covered expressly by one decision, and, by implication, by another. Taking the latter first, because it is the earlier in date, in Balfour v. Kensington Gardens Mansions, Ltd. (1), the facts as given in the headnote are:

“The lease of a flat . . . contained the following covenant by the tenant: ‘Not to assign, sub-let, or part with the possession of the flat or any part thereof without the previous written consent of the lessors or their agent, such consent to any assignment or sub-lease to an individual not to be unreasonably withheld on proof being furnished of the respectability and financial responsibility of the proposed assignee or sub-tenant. Provided always that the lessors may as a condition of such consent to any assignment or sub-lease require the proposed assignee or sub-lessee to enter into direct covenants with the lessors to perform and observe all the covenants on the tenant’s part herein contained, and non-compliance with such condition shall be deemed to be a reasonable ground for refusing such consent notwithstanding the respectability and financial responsibility of the proposed assignee or underlessee.’ The tenant desired to sub-let the flat to a respectable and responsible tenant at £450 a year, the best rent obtainable, but the landlords refused their consent except on the terms that the sub-tenant should enter into a direct covenant with them to pay the rent of £700 a year reserved by the lease.”

MACNAGHTEN, J., held that in the circumstances the landlords had unreasonably refused their consent to the sub-letting. He does not in his judgment deal in terms with the present point, but he must have been of the opinion that the express proviso could not restrict the ambit of the section because otherwise he could not have reached the conclusion which he reached, since that which the landlords were requiring was something expressly stated in the lease itself to be not unreasonable. Therefore, it seems to me that, by implication, that is a clear decision that the parties cannot restrict the ambit of s. 19 by stipulating that this or that shall not be deemed to be unreasonable.

Then, again, HARMAN, J., in Creery v. Summersell and Flowerdew & Co., Ltd. (2) deals shortly and clearly with this point. There the covenant (contained in cl. 5) was “not to . . . underlet . . . without the consent (not to be unreasonably withheld) of the lessor first had and obtained save that the lessor reserves the right to decline to give his consent if in his opinion the proposed . . . under-lessee is for any reason in his discretion undesirable as an occupant . . . or under-lessee.”

HARMAN, J., said in dealing with this point ([1949] Ch. 759):

“Clause 5 starts in a familiar form, but seeks to reserve to the lessor rights to withhold his consent which are invalid in so far as they go beyond s. 19 (1) (a) of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927. Reasonableness is the only touchstone by which the validity of a refusal of consent must be tested.”

Therefore, in my judgment, both on principle and on authority, the parties cannot restrict the ambit of s. 19 by stipulating expressly that this or that shall be deemed to be reasonable. The question is objective: Is it reasonable? That question has to be decided without regard to the interpretation which the parties have put on that expression. If that be so, it has long since been settled that it is not a reasonable ground for refusing consent to an assignment that the landlord desires to obtain possession of the premises for himself, and counsel for the lessor in fact conceded that that was the position if I should take the view that the language which the parties had used about the matter in this particular case was invalid. Accordingly, in my judgment, consent was unreasonably refused. I am asked to make, and I make, a declaration "that on the true construction of the above-mentioned lease and in the events which have happened the refusal of the defendant to grant a licence to assign the said lease to James B. Millar was unreasonable and that notwithstanding such refusal as aforesaid the plaintiff without any licence from the defendant is entitled to assign the said lease to the said James B. Millar."

Order as stated. Lessor to pay the lessee's costs taxed as between party and party.

Solicitors: Rollit, Sons & Haydon (for the lessee); Edwin Coe & Calder Woods (for the lessor).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

HUNTER v. TOWERS AND ANOTHER.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Hilbery and Devlin, JJ.), January 18, 1951.]

Street Traffic—"Articulated Vehicle"—Breakdown vehicle towing lorry—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 17 (2)—Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 670), reg. 3.

By the Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations, 1947, reg. 3, an "articulated vehicle" is defined as "a heavy motor car or a motor car with a trailer so attached to the drawing vehicle that part of the trailer is superimposed upon the drawing vehicle, and when the trailer is uniformly loaded not less than twenty per cent. of the weight of its load is borne by the drawing vehicle."

A breakdown vehicle was fitted with a crane by means of the cable of which it towed a motor lorry in such a manner as to prevent the front wheels of the lorry from being in contact with the road surface. Not less than twenty per cent. of the weight of the lorry (transmitted through the cable and jib of the crane) was borne by the breakdown vehicle, but no part of the lorry was in physical contact with the breakdown vehicle, the two vehicles being held apart by a rigid tow-bar.

HELD: no part of the lorry was superimposed on the breakdown vehicle, and, therefore, the two vehicles together did not constitute an articulated vehicle within reg. 3.

[FOR THE ROAD TRAFFIC ACT, 1930, s. 17, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 24, pp. 590, 591.]

CASE STATED by justices for the West Riding of Yorkshire, sitting at Doncaster.

On an information preferred by the appellant, a chief superintendent of police, under the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 17 (2), against the respondents, the justices held that a lorry drawn by a breakdown vehicle constituted an "articulated vehicle" within the Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations, 1947, reg. 3, and that, therefore, having regard to reg. 85 of those regulations, s. 17 (2) did not apply.

Withers-Payne for the appellant.

F. W. Gibson for the respondents.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is a Case stated by justices for the West Riding of Yorkshire before whom the respondents were charged under the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 17 (2), for that they "unlawfully did cause a trailer to be drawn by a certain motor vehicle not being a heavy or light locomotive, namely, a motor tractor, there not being carried either on the vehicle or on the trailer for the purpose of attending to the trailer one person in addition to the driver of the vehicle."

The facts show that a breakdown vehicle was sent out by the respondents to tow in a broken-down Bedford motor lorry. The breakdown vehicle was fitted with a crane which extended over its rear, and the cable of the crane was attached to the Bedford lorry in such a manner as to prevent the front wheels of the lorry from being in contact with the road surface. Not less than twenty per cent. of the weight of the Bedford lorry (transmitted through the cable and jib of the crane) was borne by the Fordson motor breakdown vehicle, but no part of the Bedford lorry was in physical contact with the Fordson motor breakdown vehicle, the two vehicles being held a distance apart by a rigid tow-bar. The justices held that the two vehicles should be regarded together as an "articulated vehicle" and so exempt from carrying a second man.

The Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 670), reg. 3, defines an articulated vehicle as "a heavy motor car or a motor car with a trailer so attached to the drawing vehicle that part of the trailer is superimposed upon the drawing vehicle, and when the trailer is uniformly loaded not less than twenty per cent. of the weight of its load is borne by the drawing vehicle."

The first thing that has to be shown is that part of the trailer, that is, the Bedford lorry, was superimposed on the drawing vehicle, namely, the breakdown vehicle. The justices' findings show that no part of the trailer was superimposed on the drawing vehicle, and, therefore, quite apart from the question whether the drawing vehicle was a heavy motor car or a motor car—being, in fact, a motor tractor—it is clear that the two vehicles were not an articulated vehicle. Therefore, the justices came to an incorrect decision in law and this matter must go back with an intimation that the case was proved.

HILBERY, J.: I concur.

DEVLIN, J.: I also concur.

Appeal allowed with costs; case remitted with direction to convict.

Solicitors: Cummings, Marchant & Ashton, agents for R. C. Linney, Wakefield (for the appellant); Smith & Hudson, agents for Laverack, Son & Wray, Hull (for the respondents).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

ALEXANDER v. SPRINGATE.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Streatfeild, J.), January 18, 1951.]

Rent Control—Notice to quit—Notice given after tenancy referred to tribunal—Validity and effect—Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946 (c. 34), s. 5.

A In June, 1950, the tenant of two furnished rooms in a dwelling-house referred her tenancy agreement to a rent tribunal. On July 7 she received a notice to quit the premises, expiring on July 17, which was valid subject to the effect of the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946, s. 5. On July 19 the tribunal gave its decision reducing the rent.

B HELD: the notice to quit was not made a nullity by virtue of the provisions of s. 5, but, having regard to that section, was effective to determine the tenancy three months after the decision of the rent tribunal.

[FOR THE FURNISHED HOUSES (RENT CONTROL) ACT, 1946, s. 5, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 13, p. 1089.]

ACTION for possession.

C The defendant was the tenant of two furnished rooms in a dwelling-house of which the plaintiff was landlord. In June, 1950, she referred the tenancy agreement to a rent tribunal under the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946. On July 7, 1950, she received notice to quit from the plaintiff. On July 19 the rent tribunal reduced the rent. The tenant claimed that the notice to quit was rendered a nullity by s. 5 of the Act. For the landlord it was contended that the effect of the section was merely to postpone the date of the termination of the tenancy until three months after the date of the decision of the rent tribunal.

D Weitzman for the landlord.

C. H. Duveen for the tenant.

E STREATFEILD, J.: This is an action for possession of two rooms at the landlord's house at No. 67, Greenfield Gardens, N.W.2, which were let by the landlord to Mrs. Edith Springate in or about March, 1950, at a rent of £2 15s. a week. During the summer of 1950 the tenant began proceedings before a rent tribunal, as a result of which the rent was reduced from £2 15s. to £2 5s. On July 7, 1950, during the pendency of those proceedings, a notice in the following terms was served by the landlord's solicitors on the tenant to quit the premises:

F "We hereby give you notice to quit and deliver up possession of the two rooms on the first floor situate at No. 67, Greenfield Gardens, N.W.2, in the county of Middlesex, which you hold of Mrs. Clara Alexander as tenant, on July 17, 1950, or at the end of the week of your tenancy which shall expire next after one week from the date of the service of this notice."

G It is admitted that that notice was served, and the tenant's case is that it is invalid or a nullity having regard to the provisions of the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946. It has not been seriously contested that, apart from s. 5 of that Act, the notice is not a good notice, and I hold that it is.

The question of law for my consideration is one which, as I understand it, has not in terms been decided before, and it arises on the proper construction of s. 5 of the Act of 1946. That section provides:

H "If, after a contract to which this Act applies has been referred to a tribunal by the lessee or by the local authority (either originally or for reconsideration), a notice to quit the premises to which the contract relates is served by the lessor on the lessee at any time before the decision of the tribunal is given or within three months thereafter, the notice shall not take effect before the expiration of the said three months . . ."

The decision of the rent tribunal was given on July 19, 1950, and it is contended by the landlord that that notice became effective on Oct. 19, 1950. Counsel for the tenant, on the other hand, has contended that the words of the section render the notice completely null so that it is of no effect at all. The words which fall to be considered are the concluding words of the section: "the notice shall not take effect before the expiration of the said three months." The words do not seem to me to be capable of the construction that what otherwise is, on the face of it, a good notice at once becomes a bad notice for all time. What it appears to imply is that the notice is still recognised as being what it was, viz., a good notice, with only the difference that it shall not take effect before the expiration of three months. A

A question appears to have arisen in some correspondence, to which my attention has been drawn, in the SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, vol. 94, p. 797, as to what it meant by a notice to quit "taking effect." It seems to me that that is a simple problem. If one gives notice to terminate the employment of one's servant, the date of the "taking effect" of that notice is that on which the employment terminates, not the date on which the notice is given, in the same way as if in the services one informed a soldier that his demobilisation, i.e., the end of his service, was to take place with effect from next Wednesday, that would mean that the notice would take effect next Wednesday. In the present case it seems to me that the problem is answered by the very phrase "notice to quit." A notice to quit is a notice to the tenant to quit the premises. It does not take effect as a notice when it is given. The effect is the result which the notice seeks to achieve, viz., the termination of the tenancy. So, as it seems to me, the words "take effect" clearly can only apply to the time when that tenancy is to terminate in the words of the notice to quit. Accordingly, in my view, the proper construction of s. 5 of the Act of 1946 is that a notice, which otherwise on the face of it is good, remains a good notice, but its effect is postponed until three months after the decision of the rent tribunal if by its terms it was to take effect at an earlier date. In other words, this appears to be a statutory extension of the notice to quit itself, and I think that the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, in s. 11 recognises that that is the proper construction of s. 5 of the Act of 1946. B C D

In his book on the RENT ACTS, 5th ed., p. 89, Mr. MEGARRY appears to make a contrary submission. He says: E

"If a notice to quit expires during a period of ineffectiveness, the Act appears to render it a nullity and not to postpone its operation until the end of the period, although the Act of 1949 seems to assume the contrary."

With the greatest possible respect to Mr. MEGARRY, I hold the contrary. In my view, the proper construction of s. 5 is that which I have stated, and, accordingly, this was a good notice when it was served. The only effect of s. 5 of the Act of 1946 is that, instead of the tenancy being terminated on the date which is stated in the notice, viz., July 17 or at the end of the week of the tenancy expiring next after the week from the service of the notice, the termination was automatically extended until three months after the decision of the rent tribunal, i.e., Oct. 19, 1950. The notice effectively terminated the tenancy on that date, and it follows that as from that date the landlord has been entitled to possession. F G

Order for possession against the tenant.

Solicitors: Gale & Phelps (for the landlord); Walford & Co. (for the tenant).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re WHITEHOUSE.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Devlin, JJ.), January 23, 1951.]

Criminal Law—Bail—Conviction by court of summary jurisdiction—Committal for sentence to quarter sessions—Notice of appeal to quarter sessions against conviction—Right to apply to High Court for bail—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), s. 29 (1), s. 37 (1) (a).

Where a court of summary jurisdiction convicts a prisoner and commits him to quarter sessions for sentence under the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, s. 29 (1), the High Court has power under s. 37 (1) (a) to grant bail to the prisoner if he gives notice of appeal against his conviction.

Per curiam: the power of the High Court in such cases to grant bail must be exercised with extreme care.

[EDITORIAL NOTE. As pointed out in the judgment in this case, under the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, s. 31, as substituted by the Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Act, 1933, s. 1 (amended by the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, sched. IX), justices have power to grant bail to any person who has been convicted before them and has given notice of appeal "against a conviction, sentence, order, determination or other decision." The power to commit "in custody" to quarter sessions for sentence a person convicted by a court of summary jurisdiction first conferred by s. 29 (1) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, gave rise to considerable doubt as to the position arising when a person so committed gave notice of appeal against his conviction by the justices and applied for bail. Applications for bail have been made, unsuccessfully, on the ground that the decision to commit for sentence was an "order" or "determination" within the Act of 1879. On the contrary, it was argued that committal for sentence was not in any sense of the word a "determination" of the proceedings, but merely a sort of interim order, and that the trial was not complete until quarter sessions had pronounced sentence, after which a right of appeal lay to the Court of Criminal Appeal against sentence with a further right to apply to the High Court for bail pending the hearing of the appeal under s. 14 (2) of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907. The present decision of the Divisional Court, therefore, settles a doubtful point by making clear that there is a statutory right to apply for bail under s. 37 (1) (a) after committal for sentence when notice of appeal against conviction has been given, though the granting of bail should be exercised with due regard to the applicant's past record.

FOR THE CRIMINAL JUSTICE ACT, 1948, s. 29, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 14, p. 1013, and for s. 37 (1) (a), see Continuation Vol., 1948, p. 180.]

APPLICATION for bail.

On Jan. 9, 1951, the applicant was convicted by the Liverpool stipendiary magistrate of feloniously receiving a postman's uniform and other clothing, the property of the Postmaster-General, well knowing they had been stolen, and was committed to quarter sessions for sentence under the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, s. 29 (1). On Jan. 10 he gave notice of appeal to quarter sessions against his conviction, and applied for bail to the High Court. The application came before BARRY, J., in chambers, and he referred it to the Divisional Court. The applicant contended that the High Court had power to grant bail under the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, s. 37 (1) (a).

G. R. F. Morris for the applicant.

J. G. Burrell for the Postmaster-General.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This application raises a question of considerable importance. Under s. 29 (1) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, a person convicted by a court of summary jurisdiction can be committed to quarter sessions for sentence if the justices, after conviction, obtain information as to his character and antecedents and then form the opinion that they are such that greater punishment should be inflicted in respect of the offence than they have power to inflict. It is abundantly clear that where justices think fit to exercise their powers under s. 29 (1) they have no power to grant bail, but it is said that the High Court has power to grant bail because of the provisions of s. 37 (1) (a).

I am bound to say that, contrary to an opinion which I formerly held, but did not express, I think that the argument of counsel for the applicant is right. Section 37 (1) begins:

"Without prejudice to the powers vested before the commencement of this Act in any court to admit or direct the admission of a person to bail—
(a) the High Court may release from custody a person who has given notice of appeal to a court of quarter sessions against a conviction or sentence of a court of summary jurisdiction, on his entering into a recognisance conditioned for his appearance at the hearing of the appeal . . ."

Those words are very wide. Before that sub-section was passed a person who had been convicted and sentenced by a court of summary jurisdiction could serve notice of appeal and apply to the justices for bail under s. 31 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, as substituted by the Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Act, 1933, s. 1. There was no doubt that if justices refused to admit a defendant to bail he could always appeal to this court, and, therefore, it looks as though the one case in which it was necessary expressly to confer a power on the High Court to release from custody a person who had given notice of appeal against a conviction by a court of summary jurisdiction was where he has been committed for sentence under s. 29 (1) under which the justices have no power to grant bail. On the words of s. 37 (1) (a) it appears to me that the High Court has power to entertain an application in those circumstances. Such an application is obviously one which ought to be exercised with extreme care, and I hope that bail will only be granted in exceptional cases. It is certainly curious that Parliament has given this right of appeal under s. 37 (1) (a) and has not in that sub-section made any reference to s. 29 (1). Inasmuch, however, as the words of s. 37 (1) (a) are so wide, it seems impossible to say that the High Court has not been given power to release a person who has been convicted and committed for sentence under s. 29 (1).

HUMPHREYS, J.: So far as I am concerned, my Lord has given the judgment of the court.

DEVLIN, J.: I agree.

[After counsel had addressed the court on the merits the application was refused.]

Application refused.

Solicitors: Mawby, Barrie & Letts, agents for Silverman & Livermore, Liverpool (for the applicant); Solicitor, General Post Office (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

TAYLOR v. PARRY.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Hilbery and Devlin, JJ.), January 18, 1951.]

Bastardy—"Single woman"—Married woman living with husband at date of application for affiliation order—National Assistance Act, 1948 (c. 29), s. 1, s. 42 (1), (2)—Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872 (c. 65), s. 3.

On Dec. 18, 1948, the respondent, then a widow, gave birth to an illegitimate child of which the appellant was the putative father. The respondent subsequently re-married, and, while living with her husband, she applied for an affiliation order against the appellant. ●

HELD: the alteration in the poor law, made by the National Assistance Act, 1948, s. 1, s. 62 (3), and sched. VII, and the provision of s. 42 (1) (b) and (2) that a woman (and, consequentially, not her husband) should be liable to maintain her illegitimate child, did not affect the law relating to bastardy, and, therefore, the respondent was not a "single woman" within the Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872, s. 3, and was not entitled to an affiliation order under s. 4.

[AS TO REQUISITES FOR JURISDICTION IN AFFILIATION PROCEEDINGS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 2, pp. 582-584, paras. 802-804; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 3, pp. 387, 388, Nos. 253-269.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Jones v. Evans, [1945] 1 All E.R. 19; [1944] K.B. 582; 114 L.J.K.B. 29; 171 L.T. 138; 108 J.P. 170; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) R. v. Luffe, (1807), 8 East 193; 103 E.R. 316; 3 Digest 388, 263.
- (3) R. v. Collingwood, (1848), 12 Q.B. 681; 17 L.J.M.C. 168; 12 L.T.O.S. 105; 116 E.R. 1025; 3 Digest 388, 264.
- (4) R. v. Pilkington, (1853), 2 E. & B. 546; 21 L.T.O.S. 165; 118 E.R. 872; sub nom., Ex p. Grimes, 22 L.J.M.C. 153; 3 Digest 388, 265.
- (5) Jones v. Davies, [1901] 1 K.B. 118; 70 L.J.Q.B. 38; 83 L.T. 412; 65 J.P. 39; 3 Digest 388, 266.

CASE STATED by Reading justices.

At a court of summary jurisdiction, sitting on July 19, 1950, the appellant was adjudged the putative father of a female bastard child and was ordered to pay 10s. a week for the child's maintenance and education. The respondent, the mother of the child, was first married in December, 1937. In 1945 her husband died, and in January, 1948, she met the appellant, and as a result of her association with him the child was born on Dec. 18, 1948. Later, the respondent married her present husband and was living with him at the time when she laid her complaint against the appellant. The justices were of opinion that since s. 14 (3) of the Poor Law Act, 1930 (re-enacting in substance the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834, s. 57), had been repealed by s. 1 and s. 62 (3) of, and sched. VII to, the National Assistance Act, 1948, they were entitled to apply the law as it stood prior to the passing of the Act of 1834 and so to hold that, although the respondent was living with her husband at the time of the complaint, she was nevertheless to be regarded as a "single woman" within the meaning of s. 3 of the Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872. It was contended for the appellant that the Act of 1948 did not affect the bastardy law, and that, therefore, the respondent was not a "single woman" and the order of the justices could not stand.

Cusack for the appellant.

Widgery for the respondent.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: The justices have set out in the Case a reasoned opinion which, in their view, entitled them to come to the conclusion that the respondent could be regarded, notwithstanding her re-marriage, as a single woman, but I am clearly of opinion that this court must allow the appeal.

Under the Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872, an application for an order in bastardy can only be made by a single woman. That conception has gone back in the history of bastardy for a great many years to a time when bastardy orders could be obtained, not by the mother, but only by the parish officers who were, or might be, liable for the maintenance of the bastard, and the courts have for many years decided that where a woman is living in such circumstances that, though she is married, she is, in effect, a single woman because she is living completely apart from her husband, she may obtain a bastardy order as a single woman. The last case on the subject is Jones v. Evans (1) in which it was decided that the wife of a soldier serving compulsorily overseas, who during his absence has committed adultery which has not been condoned, is a "single woman" within the meaning of s. 3 of the Act of 1872, and, therefore, entitled to lay a complaint in bastardy. ATKINSON, J., delivering the judgment of the court, referred to R. v. Luffe (2), R. v. Collingwood (3) and R. v. Pilkington (4), and summed up the matter in this way ([1945] 1 All E.R. 23):

"In our view, the facts in the present case constituted the appellant a 'single woman.' There was a de facto separation of considerable length and an uncondoned matrimonial offence which had lost for the appellant her title to maintenance by her husband and her right to live with him. The appeal, therefore, succeeds."

The argument of counsel for the respondent comes to this, that the only reason why, in the case of a child born before she married, a wife was not entitled to be regarded as a single woman if she applied for a bastardy order after she married was that by marrying she obtained a husband who by law was bound to maintain her illegitimate child. By the National Assistance Act, 1948, s. 1, s. 62 (3), and sched. VII, the Poor Law Act, 1930, including s. 14 (3) which put the obligation of maintaining a wife's illegitimate child on her husband, was repealed, and by s. 42 of the Act of 1948 it is provided:

"(1) For the purposes of this Act—(a) a man shall be liable to maintain his wife and his children, and (b) a woman shall be liable to maintain her husband and her children."

That Act puts the obligation of maintaining an illegitimate child on the mother, because the child is not the husband's child. But because that Act has been passed, which contains no reference to the Act of 1872 and does not purport to deal with the law relating to bastardy, we cannot hold that a woman living with her husband at the time when she applies for the order is a single woman. It would be a reductio ad absurdum. There is nothing absurd in holding that a married woman whose husband has deserted her, or is serving a sentence of imprisonment, or has been sent overseas on military or naval service, is, for the purpose of the Bastardy Acts, a single woman, because she is living entirely by herself, but it would be the strongest possible thing to hold that the Act of 1948 has overruled a long line of authority, including such authority as Jones v. Davies (5), which lays down in the clearest possible terms that a married woman, who at the date of the application is living with her husband, cannot obtain an order for the affiliation of her bastard child under the Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872, s. 3.

Had the attention of Parliament been called to the fact that this considerable alteration in the law would, or might, affect the right of a married woman to obtain a bastardy order, Parliament might have inserted some provision in the Act which would deal with the matter, because one can see that it is a hard case. The husband is no longer liable to maintain his wife's illegitimate child which she had at the time he married her and she cannot apply to the justices for an order. Unless, however, we can find something in the Act which deals with that question, we cannot hold that by an alteration of the poor law, the whole of the law relating to bastardy has been altered and that we are at liberty to read the words "single woman" as meaning a married woman whose husband is not under an obligation to maintain her child owing to this alteration of the law. For these reasons I am of the opinion that the justices came to a wrong determination and the order they made must be quashed.

HILBERY, J.: I am of the same opinion. I think counsel for the appellant was not overstating it when he said that this order could not stand in face of such a decision as Jones v. Davies (5).

DEVLIN, J.: I also concur.

Appeal allowed. No order as to costs.

Solicitors: Preston, Lane-Claypon & O'Kelly, agents for Charsley Leonard & Co., Slough (for the appellant); Torr & Co., agents for Francis & Parkes, Reading (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

DORMAN, LONG & CO., LTD. v. HILLIER.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Hilbery and Devlin, JJ.), January 18, 1951.]

Factory—Safe means of access—Movement of injured workman during performance of work—Repair of roof—Removal of iron sheets—Workman's fall through unsafe part of roof while removing sheet—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 26 (1).

To effect repairs to the roof of a factory of which the appellants were occupiers workmen had to strip corrugated iron sheets off the roof, access to which was by way of a ladder and then by treading on purlin bars. One of the workmen had thus reached part of the roof and had removed a sheet and was standing on a purlin bar in the act of passing it down when he stepped back with one foot on another sheet which was unsafe, fell through it, and was killed.

HELD: the work on which the workman was engaged was to strip as a whole the part of the roof where he was working and he was not performing different branches of the work according to which sheet he was removing at any particular moment; at the time of the accident he had arrived at the place of the work and the unsafe sheet on which he stepped was part thereof and not a means of access thereto; and, therefore, the appellants were not guilty of a failure to provide a safe means of access to the work, contrary to the Factories Act, 1937, s. 26 (1).

Observations of LORD GREENE, M.R., in Hopwood v. Rolls Royce, Ltd. (1947) (176 L.T. 517), applied.

Whitby v. Burt, Boulton & Hayward, Ltd. ([1947] 2 All E.R. 324), doubted.

[FOR THE FACTORIES ACT, 1937, s. 26, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 9, p. 1018.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Whitby v. Burt, Boulton & Hayward, Ltd. [1947] 2 All E.R. 324; [1947] K.B. 918; [1947] L.J.R. 1280; 177 L.T. 556; 111 J.P. 481; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Hopwood v. Rolls Royce, Ltd., (1947), 176 L.T. 514; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Callaghan v. Fred Kidd & Son (Engineers), Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 525; [1944] K.B. 560; 113 L.J.K.B. 381; 170 L.T. 368; 2nd Digest Supp.

CASE STATED by justices for the North Riding of Yorkshire.

At a court of summary jurisdiction, sitting at Redcar, on July 21, 1950, an information was preferred by the respondent, Raymond Hillier, an inspector of factories, against the appellants, Dorman, Long & Co., Ltd., alleging that they, being the occupiers of a factory within the meaning of the Factories Act, 1937, contravened s. 26 (1) of the Act in failing to provide safe means of access to the place on the roof of the factory where persons had to work, and that in consequence of such contravention a workman, Thomas Butterwick, suffered bodily injury. It was contended by the respondent that the place where the accident happened was part of the means of access to the place of the workman's work and that the case was covered by the authority of Whitby v. Burt, Boulton & Hayward, Ltd. (1). For the appellants it was contended that the means of access was the means of approaching a place, and that at the time of the accident the workman had reached his place of work and was not going to it, and that his movement in stepping back on to the sheet was taken in the course of his work and not in order to gain access to his work. The justices were of the opinion that Whitby v. Burt, Boulton & Hayward, Ltd. (1) was almost identical with the facts of this case, that the sheet through which the workman fell was part of the means of access, that it was unsafe, and that, consequently, there had been a contravention of the statute. They, therefore, convicted the appellants and fined them £50.

G. N. Black for the appellants.

S. B. R. Cooke for the respondent.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is a Case stated by justices for the North Riding of Yorkshire, before whom the appellants were prosecuted for contravention of the provisions of s. 26 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937,

"in that safe means of access were not so far as was reasonably practicable provided to the place on the roof over the forty tons bay at the said factory where persons had to work and that in consequence of such contravention one Thomas Butterwick suffered bodily injury."

The justices convicted and stated this Case.

The facts which the justices find are that the roof of a factory occupied by the appellants was under repair by a firm named Thomas Bell & Co. who were under contract to the appellants. It seems to me that really what has to be decided in this case is whether the responsibility for a breach of the statutory provisions falls on the appellants or whether it falls on Thomas Bell & Co., who were the actual employers of the deceased man. The justices found:

"The said roof consisted of a main roof and of a jack roof, which was a smaller roof, covering the higher part of the main roof. Both the main roof and the jack roof consisted of corrugated iron sheets, supported on purlin bars which were three inches wide and five feet apart. On Feb. 2, 1950, the three men [including Butterwick] started work at about 8.30 or 8.40 in the morning. They were engaged in stripping the sheets off parts of the said roof. For the first hour, until about 9.30 or 9.40 in the morning, they were working upon the main roof. They then went on to the jack roof, where they were to strip off certain sheets. They reached this place by climbing a short ladder to the jack roof, and then walking along the said purlin bars. They were able to see where the said purlin bars lay because their position was indicated by bolts protruding through the corrugated iron sheets. Butterwick safely reached this place. Having reached the said place [the men] began to remove the said sheets, and removed two of them. The said Thomas Butterwick removed a sheet and was standing on a purlin bar in the act of passing it down when he stepped back with one foot on another sheet behind him which had not yet been moved, fell through it, and was killed. The sheet through which he fell was in an unsafe condition."

The section under which the appellants were charged is s. 26 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, which provides:

"There shall, so far as is reasonably practicable, be provided and maintained safe means of access to every place at which any person has at any time to work."

The question here is whether there was a failure to provide a safe means of access as distinct from a failure to provide a safe place of work, with which we are not concerned. The justices thought that the case was entirely covered by a decision of DENNING, J., in Whitby v. Burt, Boulton & Hayward, Ltd. (1). It was contended on behalf of the appellants that the justices misinterpreted that case, and that the decision of DENNING, J., was not in accordance with other authorities.

When DENNING, J., decided that case there had been decided a week or two before in the Court of Appeal a case which was not cited to the learned judge. That was Hopwood v. Rolls Royce, Ltd. (2). The question whether an accident happens owing to the place of access being unsafe or whether the danger is in the place of work is very often a very fine and difficult point, but in Hopwood v. Rolls Royce, Ltd. (2) LORD GREENE, M.R., gave this guidance when he said (176 L.T. 517):

"There must be a safe means of access to the particular branch of the man's work on which at the moment he is about to engage himself. That would exclude movements taken while doing one operation or one set of operations, and would confine the section to cases where it can truly be said that if a man is moving from one branch of his work to another branch of his work, his route in doing so is a means of access. I may say at once that the word 'branch' is one that I do not find quite satisfactory, but I do not pause to search for a better word because I think that my meaning is reasonably clear."

He illustrates that by saying (ibid., 518):

"In Callaghan v. Fred Kidd & Son (Engineers), Ltd. (3), there were two branches of the man's work, one to be carried out on grindstone No. 1 and the other to be carried out on grindstone No. 2, and he was entitled to a safe means of access from the first branch to the second."

In the present case the work which the man was doing was stripping the jack roof, and I think it is too artificial to say that there were different branches of work according to which sheet he was removing at any particular moment. Four sheets had to be removed, and the workman was at the place where he was to remove, not one sheet, but the four sheets. Unhappily he stepped on and fell through one of the four sheets, which was unsafe, but when he did so he had got to the place where he had to work and was actually working. I think it would be altogether too artificial to say that he was proceeding from one piece of work to another piece of work. The facts show that the place where he was working was unsafe, but there is nothing to show that the means of access to that place were unsafe.

The justices thought that the decision of DENNING, J., in Whitby v. Burt, Boulton & Hayward, Ltd. (1) was indistinguishable from this case. It is not necessary for us to say whether we are prepared to agree in all respects with the decision of DENNING, J. I think that had Hopwood v. Rolls Royce, Ltd. (2) been cited to him he might easily have come to a different conclusion. Hopwood v. Rolls Royce, Ltd. (2) is binding on this court, and Whitby v. Burt, Boulton & Hayward, Ltd. (1) is not. In Whitby's case (1) DENNING, J., held that a man who had to remove a number of nails on a roof, proceeding from place to place on the roof to do it, at the time he crawled along to get at a particular nail was using a means of access, but I think great difficulties arise if that view is right.

As HILBERY, J., put it in the course of the argument, it would seem to follow that, if a man is engaged to strip tiles off a roof, every time he moves from one tile to another, or stretches out his hand to get at another tile, or moves the position of his body, he will be using a means of access. I think that would be too artificial. I think if I employ a man to move some tiles off my roof, prima facie, I am providing him with a safe means of access if I provide him with a safe ladder to get to the place where he has to do his work. However, it is not necessary for us to give a concluded opinion whether Whitby v. Burt, Boulton & Hayward, Ltd. (1) is right. I prefer to test the present matter by means of the principle LORD GREENE, M.R., suggested in Hopwood v. Rolls Royce, Ltd. (2). Applying that principle, it seems to me that the actual operation this man was engaged on was all one so far as these four sheets are concerned. Whether there has been a breach of some regulation by somebody or not, in my opinion, there was no breach of s. 26 (1) of the Factories Act under which the appellants were charged. For these reasons I think the appeal must be allowed.

HILBERY, J.: I concur.

DEVLIN, J.: I agree with what my Lord has said, and with the observations he has made on Whitby v. Burt, Boulton & Hayward, Ltd. (1). I would add only one observation to deal with what I understood to be an alternative argument advanced by counsel for the respondent, namely, that a place could be both a means of access and a place of work at the same time, and, therefore, he was entitled to succeed although the workman might be engaged on one set of operations. In my judgment, there is no true alternative there. It may be that a particular vehicle, if I may so put it, may be at one time a means of access to a place of work and at another an appliance actually used in the work. For example, a painter painting the side of a ship may be raised in a cradle which may be a means of access to get to the place where he has to work, and once he gets to that place and moves along with it foot by foot and yard by yard, it may be used as an appliance, but that does not do more than establish that a particular thing may be both a means of access and an appliance at different times. The proposition of counsel for the respondent goes further and is based on a passage in the judgment of LORD GREENE, M.R., in Hopwood v. Rolls Royce, Ltd. (2), where it is said that a place may be, as I gather, at one and the same time both a means of access and a place of work. I should like to guard myself against saying that that proposition must now be regarded as authoritatively established. It may have to be considered later on how far it is part of the ratio decidendi of the case and how far it commanded the assent of ASQUITH, L.J., who was the other lord justice forming the majority of the court.

The passages relied on are, first, where LORD GREENE, M.R., said (176 L.T. 517):

"It seems to me that, in the case which I put, the pathway from bench No. 1 to bench No. 2 has two aspects. First of all, it is itself a place of work, because his work being to carry the block from bench No. 1 to bench No. 2, he performs that work by walking along the route between the two and the whole route is a place of work. But for the purpose of arriving at bench No. 2 the pathway is a means of access to that place of work, and under the section, in my opinion, the workman is entitled to have that pathway as a safe means of access to bench No. 2."

Later, LORD GREENE, M.R., said, in reference to Callaghan v. Fred Kidd & Son (Engineers), Ltd. (3) (ibid.):

"In one sense his place of work might be considered to be the grinding area comprising the two grindstones; on one argument it might be said that the obligation of the section extends only to the point when he had reached the grinding area and that, as soon as he had reached that point, he was not using a means of access to his place of work but was in fact, working in his place of work which he had ex hypothesi already reached."

Then he puts the alternative to that argument. But when he came to state the principle which governs the matter he stated it in the passage which has already been quoted by my Lord. From that it seems to me that if it can be held that a place may be at one and the same time a place of work and a means of access, then it is necessary to see for which purpose it is being used, or may require to be used, at the material time. It seems to me to be clear on the facts of the present case that it was being used as a place of work and not a means of access. Accordingly, I think that alternative argument fails.

Appeal allowed with costs; conviction quashed.

Solicitors: Tarry, Sherlock & King, agents for Cohen, Jackson & Scott, Stockton-on-Tees (for the appellants); Solicitor, Ministry of Labour and National Service (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

ROSE v. MATT.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., and Devlin, J.), January 19, 1951.]

Criminal Law—Larceny—"Owner"—Special property in goods—Bailee—Deposit of goods as security—Goods taken away by depositor—Larceny Act, 1916 (c. 50), s. 1 (2) (iii).

A purchaser of goods deposited with the vendor, as security for the purchase price, a travelling clock which belonged to him, it being agreed that, if the purchaser did not pay for the goods within one month from the date of the purchase, the vendor should be entitled to sell the travelling clock. The purchaser then took the goods away. Later, returning to the shop when the vendor was not there, the purchaser took the clock away without paying the price of the goods. He did this to prevent the vendor from selling the clock, but without any intention of charging him with its loss.

HELD: the vendor, as bailee, had a special property in the clock, and, therefore, he was the owner thereof within s. 1 (2) (iii) of the Larceny Act, 1916; the respondent intended to deprive him of his special property, and, consequently, he was guilty of larceny under s. 1 (1).

[AS TO LARCENY BY OWNER OF OWN GOODS NOT IN HIS POSSESSION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 9, p. 506, para. 864; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 15, p. 900, Nos. 9874-9882.]

Case referred to:

(1) R. v. Wilkinson & Marsden, (1821), Russ. & Ry. 470; 15 Digest 900, 9877.

CASE STATED by Stamford justices.

At a court of summary jurisdiction sitting on Oct. 7, 1950, the appellant, a superintendent of police, preferred an information under the Larceny Act, 1916, s. 2, charging the respondent with having stolen a travelling clock of the value of £3 from one Simpson. For the appellant it was contended that Simpson, as bailee of the clock, had a special property therein and so was the owner thereof within s. 1 (2) (iii) of the Act. For the respondent it was contended (i) that the travelling clock was lodged by him with Simpson as security, but the property in the clock remained with him and Simpson had only a special interest in it arising from its deposit with him; (ii) that the definition of "owner" in the Act of 1916 did not affect the position between an owner at common law and a bailee; and (iii) that the owner who had parted with the possession of the property could not be convicted of larceny unless it could be established that the bailee had thereby become chargeable. The justices were of opinion that, although Simpson was the "owner" within the meaning of the definition in s. 1 (2) (iii) of the Act of 1916, the respondent, in taking the clock, did not intend to charge him with its loss and there was no evidence that the taking of the clock had had the effect of so charging him. They, therefore, dismissed the information. The facts are set out in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J. A T. R. Fitzwalter Butler for the appellant.

The respondent did not appear.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is a Case stated by justices for the borough of Stamford, and it raises what appears to be a new point in the law of larceny, although I think that for all essential purposes the matter is to be decided on the same lines as those on which the conviction of larceny was upheld in R. v. Wilkinson & Marsden (1). B

The Larceny Act, 1916, is entitled:

"An Act to consolidate and simplify the law relating to larceny triable on indictment and kindred offences." C

We have now only to look at that Act to find what amounts to larceny. The old cases may be of assistance in the construction of the Act, but, if the words of the Larceny Act, 1916, are clear, that Act governs the decisions which this court must give.

The present case is one, it is said, where a man is charged with stealing his own goods. The respondent had bought some goods from one Simpson and had paid a deposit of £1 on them. Wishing to obtain delivery of the goods, he took a travelling clock, which is the article he is charged with stealing, and asked Simpson to accept it as security. Simpson agreed, and informed the respondent that, if he did not bring the money within a month, he (Simpson) would sell the clock. On a later date the respondent returned to the shop when Simpson was not there, and fraudulently took possession of the clock. When interviewed by the police, he said that he had taken the clock away because he did not want Simpson to sell it. Simpson had a special property in that clock. He had the right to hold it as security. By taking it away from Simpson within the month, the respondent was depriving, and he intended to deprive, Simpson of his special property in it, because he intended to prevent him from exercising the right he would otherwise have had of selling the clock. D

The Larceny Act, 1916, s. 1 (1), defines larceny in this way: E

"A person steals who, without the consent of the owner, fraudulently and without a claim of right made in good faith, takes and carries away anything capable of being stolen with intent, at the time of such taking, permanently to deprive the owner thereof . . . " F

By sub-s. (2) (iii): G

"the expression 'owner' includes any part owner, or person having possession or control of, or a special property in, anything capable of being stolen." H

The justices took the view that this was not larceny because, they found, the respondent did not take the clock with the intention of making a fraudulent charge against Simpson of having converted the clock or having refused to return it, for, if a bailee refuses to return goods bailed to him or is unable to produce them and cannot show that he lost them without negligence, the owner can maintain an action against him.

It is clear that many of the old cases dealing with the question whether in these circumstances a man is guilty of larceny have been decided on the ground that the defendant intended to charge the bailee in an action of detinue and that he had taken the goods fraudulently for that purpose. For instance, in HALE'S PLEAS OF THE CROWN, vol. 1, p. 513, one finds this passage:

"... if A bails goods to B and afterwards animo furandi steals the goods from B with design probably to charge him for them in an action of detinue, this is felony ..."

The justices in the present case were referred to R. v. Wilkinson & Marsden (1), a case which had been reserved for the opinion of all the judges. There the owners of goods, intending to deprive the revenue of duties, put the goods in a boat belonging to Marsh & Co., a firm of lightermen, to have them taken to a ship, and then fraudulently took the goods back out of the custody of the lightermen. It was held (Russ. & Ry. 472) by a majority of the judges to be larceny

"... because Marsh & Co. had a right to the possession until the goods reached the ship; they had also an interest in that possession, and the intent to deprive them of their possession wrongfully and against their will, was a felonious intent as against them, because it exposed them to a suit upon the bond."

It might have exposed them to a suit on the bond, but whether or not the defendants so intended does not seem to have been the governing consideration. Now that the law has been clarified by the Larceny Act, 1916, the owner of the goods who has entrusted them to another person in such circumstances that that other person has a special property in the goods is guilty of larceny if he fraudulently takes them away from that person. There is no question here that the respondent was acting fraudulently and so the justices have found.

This case, therefore, must go back to the justices with an intimation that it is covered by s. 1 (2) (iii) of the Larceny Act, 1916, and that in the circumstances proved the respondent was guilty of larceny and that they must convict.

DEVLIN, J.: I agree.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Vizard, Oldham, Crowder & Cash, agents for T. Norton, Son & Hamilton, Grantham (for the appellant).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

CONWAY v. GEORGE WIMPEY & CO., LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Cohen, Asquith and Birkett, L.JJ.), January 19, 22, 1951.]

Negligence—Negligence of servant—Liability of master—Accident to unauthorised passenger in lorry—Extent of duty to take care.

The defendants, a firm of contractors, were engaged in building work at an aerodrome, and they provided lorries to convey their employees to the various places of their work on the site. In the cab of each lorry was a notice indicating that the driver was under strict orders not to carry passengers other than the employees of the defendants during the course of, and in connection with, their employment, and that any other person travelling on the vehicle did so at his own risk. The driver of the lorry in question in the present case had also received clear oral instructions to that effect. In fact, it was not unusual for men not employed by the defendants to make use of the defendants' lorries as a means of transport, but it was found that the defendants did not know of that practice. The plaintiff, a labourer employed by another firm of contractors engaged on work at the aerodrome, while on his way to work, was permitted by the driver to ride on one of the defendants' lorries for some distance across the aerodrome. In dismounting the plaintiff was injured owing to the driver's negligence, and he claimed damages from the defendants for the negligence of their servant.

HELD: in the absence of proof that the defendants knew or must have known that persons other than their own employees were carried in the lorries, the plaintiff, while on the lorry on the occasion in question, was a trespasser, and, therefore, the defendants were not under any duty of care to him.

Seemle, the act of the driver in taking the plaintiff as passenger was outside the scope of his employment.

Per ASQUITH, L.J.: "I should hold that taking men other than the defendants' employees on the vehicle was not merely a wrongful mode of performing an act of the class which the driver in the present case was employed to perform, but was the performance of an act of a class which he was not employed to perform at all."

Twine v. Bean's Express, Ltd. (1946) (175 L.T. 131), applied.

Decision of SELLERS, J. ([1950] 2 All E.R. 331), affirmed.

[AS TO THE DUTY TO TAKE CARE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 23, pp. 571, 572, para. 825; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 36, pp. 12-16, Nos. 33-60.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Twine v. Bean's Express, Ltd., (1946), 174 L.T. 239; affd. 175 L.T. 131; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Limpus v. London General Omnibus Co., (1862), 1 H. & C. 526; 32 L.J.Ex. 34; 7 L.T. 641; 27 J.P. 147; 158 E.R. 993; 34 Digest 129, 939.
- (3) Hay (or Bourhill) v. Young, [1942] 2 All E.R. 396; [1943] A.C. 92; 111 L.J.P.C. 97; 167 L.T. 261; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the plaintiff from an order of SELLERS, J., made on June 20, 1950, and reported [1950] 2 All E.R. 331.

The plaintiff claimed that the defendants were liable for the negligence of a lorry driver employed by them, as a result of which he suffered physical injury. The case was tried with a jury who found that the driver was equally responsible with the plaintiff for the accident. The question of the defendants' liability was, by agreement between the parties, left to the judge who found that the driver was acting outside the scope of his employment in carrying the plaintiff, and that the defendants were not liable for his negligence. On appeal it was contended for the plaintiff that, although the driver had acted in excess of his actual authority, the defendants must be taken to have known that persons other than their own employees were being carried in the lorries, and that, by allowing this practice to grow up, the defendants had invested the driver with an apparent authority, in excess of his actual authority, to carry men generally, whether or not they were employed by the defendants. The facts appear in the judgment of ASQUITH, L.J.

C. N. Shawcross, K.C., Seuffert and O. J. V. Kitson for the plaintiff.

H. H. Edmunds for the defendants.

COHEN, L.J.: I will ask ASQUITH, L.J., to deliver the first judgment.

ASQUITH, L.J.: For a short time before this accident the plaintiff had been employed as a labourer by contractors other than the defendants on Heath Row aerodrome. The majority of the employees on this site were in the defendants' service, and for the purpose, inter alia, of moving their employees from point to point of the site the defendants found it convenient to institute a kind of omnibus service within its perimeter by means of motor lorries driven by drivers employed by them. These drivers, including the driver who is involved in the present case, received clear oral instructions from the defendants that the men they were to ferry backwards and forwards must be the defendants' employees exclusively. Moreover, in the cab of each lorry a notice was displayed in these terms:

"The driver of this vehicle has strict orders to carry no passengers other than the employees of George Wimpey & Co., Ltd., during the course of, or in connection with, their employment. Any other person travelling on this vehicle does so at his own risk."

The lorry in question was an open lorry designed for the carriage, not of men, but of materials, and access to its platform could only be obtained by scrambling over the back or the sides. It had the word "WIMPEY" in very large letters inscribed on its sides. Notwithstanding the very explicit prohibitions to which I have referred, it became no very unusual thing for men working for contractors other than the defendants to request and to obtain a lift on these lorries. This was precisely what the plaintiff did on May 1, 1948. After travelling a short distance in the lorry, he sustained, while dismounting, the injuries of which he complains and which he attributes to the negligence of the defendants. As a result of those injuries, he had to have one leg amputated below the knee.

The learned judge has found the following further facts which he thought might be material to the issues before him. First, that the plaintiff did not know that he had no right to obtain a lift on the lorry. Secondly, that the defendants' drivers in general did not knowingly carry men who were not the defendants' servants. Thirdly, that this particular driver did not know that the plaintiff was not one of the defendants' employees. Lastly, the learned judge adds this ([1950] 2 All E.R. 332):

"It was not suggested, and certainly it was not established, that the defendants knew that men other than their own were using the lorries in this way."

It is to be noted that in the sentence I have quoted the learned judge was speaking of knowledge on the part of, or imputable to, the defendants themselves, having dealt in the previous findings with knowledge possessed by the driver. In the result, the learned judge concludes that it was outside the scope of the driver's employment to give the plaintiff this lift, and that the defendants were not liable. He reinforces this conclusion by praying in aid the authority of the Court of Appeal in Twine v. Bean's Express, Ltd. (1).

In that case the husband of the plaintiff was employed in the Savings Bank Department of the Post Office, and the defendants were contractors employed by the Post Office in general work as carriers. The drivers of the defendants' vans were authorised to carry certain classes of persons as passengers on the vans, but were otherwise forbidden to carry passengers. The plaintiff's husband was not one of the persons whom the drivers were authorised to carry. On the material date the plaintiff's husband, by permission of the driver, but without the knowledge or consent of the defendants, was riding on a van of the defendants when the van collided with an omnibus and he was killed. It was held that in carrying the deceased man as a passenger the defendants' driver was acting outside the scope of his employment, that the deceased man at the time of the accident was a trespasser on the van, that the defendants had not been guilty of any breach of duty towards him, and that the claim, therefore, failed. LORD GREENE, M.R., having referred to the finding of the judge that the deceased man was a trespasser said (175 L.T. 132):

"That being so, it seems to me there is an end of the matter, because if the question is asked: Was the driver, Harrison, in giving a lift to the deceased man, acting within the scope of his employment? The answer is clearly 'No.' He was doing something that he had no right whatsoever to do, and qua the deceased man he was as much on a frolic of his own as if he had been driving somewhere on some amusement of his own quite unauthorised by his employers."

Counsel for the plaintiff sought to distinguish that case from the present case and there was one distinction which might be material to the present phase of the argument, viz., that in Twine's case (1) the plaintiff was informed by the driver himself that he (the plaintiff) had no right to travel on the van, whereas in the present case the plaintiff was not told that. The plaintiff in Twine's case (1) was not only a trespasser de facto, but he never imagined he was anything else. The argument of counsel in the present case appeared at times to assume that the plaintiff could not be a trespasser unless he knew he was one. That assumption is unfounded in law. It was conceded by counsel that, if the plaintiff were, at the material time, in fact a trespasser, he could not recover. No doubt, he had the permission of the driver to come on the lorry, but for him to recover against the defendants, as distinct from the driver, it must appear that he was riding on the lorry at the invitation or with the licence, actual or constructive, of the defendants themselves. If he was as against them a trespasser, then, whatever his rights against the driver, he could no more recover from the defendants than could the plaintiff in Twine's case (1). It is elementary that if A, professedly acting on behalf of B, purports to give me leave to enter on B's land, and A has no actual authority to do so, I am a trespasser if I act on this permission, and none the less so because I do not know of A's want of authority. So here, there can be no doubt that the driver had no authority to give any such permission. He was peremptorily forbidden to do so in the plainest terms. The plaintiff, on getting on the lorry, was prima facie a trespasser, and to displace this awkward conclusion plaintiff's counsel has had to resort to a number of contentions none of which is, in my view, covered by the pleadings. On the pleadings the plaintiff alleged an invitation by the defendants, but when he was asked for particulars of that invitation, the only particulars he gave consisted of the driver's invitation itself. I think these unpleaded contentions on which the plaintiff is forced to rely amount to this, that, although the driver acted in excess of his actual authority, the defendants had invested him with an apparent authority in excess of his actual authority. The actual authority was admittedly to carry the defendants' men alone; the apparent authority was to carry men who were working on the aerodrome, whether employed by the defendants or not. They had caused or allowed it to appear, so the argument runs, to people like the plaintiff that they had their permission to travel on their lorries, and in these circumstances the defendants must be treated as estopped from relying on the actual limits of the driver's authority.

The steps by which this result is reached must logically be the following, if it is to be reached at all. First, there has to be shown knowledge by the defendants that their lorry drivers had made a practice of disregarding the prohibition; secondly, acquiescence by the defendants in that practice; and, thirdly, acquiescence in such a manner as to represent to the plaintiff that the driver's authority was not limited to carrying the defendants' men. I cannot see how the plaintiff can get over the first of these three hurdles, not to mention the second and the third. The learned judge has expressly found, and there was evidence, in my view, on which he could so find, that it had not been established that the defendants knew that their drivers gave lifts to unauthorised persons. To this awkward finding two answers were attempted. First, it was said that this finding applies only to actual, and not to imputed, knowledge, and that, as four of the defendants' employees gave evidence that they knew of the practice, the defendants must be treated as having known of it. I do not consider that the knowledge of these men, who had nothing to do with the defendants' transport department but were engaged as concrete mixers, can be properly imputed to the defendants, and the point, if not abandoned, was certainly not pressed. The second answer was that the defendants must have known, given that their lorries plied within the limits of the site and that workmen working for several different contractors were there, that a practice of this kind must inevitably grow up, and that they must be taken to have known that it did grow up, but when there is a clear finding supported by evidence that they did not know, how can it be said that they must have known? I do not see how that contention can be substantiated. Unless, at all events, knowledge by the defendants is proved, the whole of this argument based on ostensible authority fails in limine. I am, accordingly, of opinion that the plaintiff never ceased to be a trespasser, and that the case is directly covered by Twine's case (1). If that is right, it is sufficient to dispose of the appeal.

The case, however, was also argued from a different angle of approach—that of scope of employment. The two approaches, of course, overlap or interlock to some extent. As is pointed out in Twine's case (1) by UTHWATT, J., in the court of first instance (174 L.T. 240):

“... it was outside the scope of the driver's employment for him to bring within the class of persons to whom a duty to take care was owed by the defendants, a man to whom, contrary, to his instructions, he gave a lift ...”

Those words seem to me directly in point here. To put it differently, I should hold that taking men other than the defendants' employees on the vehicle was not merely a wrongful mode of performing an act of the class which the driver in the present case was employed to perform, but was the performance of an act of a class which he was not employed to perform at all. In other words, the act was outside the scope of his employment for the same reason that the act complained of in Twine's case (1) was held to be outside the scope of the driver's employment there. I am not unaware that a prohibition has been held in some cases not to curtail the scope of employment, as in Limpus v. London General Omnibus Co. (2), but I think it does so in the present case. However, on the view I take of this case, it is unnecessary to decide whether this second ground is valid or was established. I would dismiss the appeal.

BIRKETT, L.J.: I agree.

COHEN, L.J.: I agree, and I only want to add a word on a part of the judgment which is somewhat difficult to follow. The learned judge is reported as having said ([1950] 2 All E.R. 332):

“The argument was that the defendants ought to have known what was happening and that the plaintiff and others like him would use the lorries, and, therefore, they owed a duty to such persons as those who might reasonably be anticipated by them to be likely to be injured by the negligent driving of their servant: Hay (or Bourhill) v. Young (3). Such considerations are relevant in considering the duty and obligations of the driver of the vehicle, but, in my view, they are not relevant in considering the responsibility of the defendants.”

Counsel for the plaintiff said that, if the argument was as stated, it did concern the responsibility of the defendants. When, however, one looks at Hay (or Bourhill) v. Young (3) one sees clearly that that case had nothing to do with the responsibility of employers for the acts of their servants. The only question at issue was whether the executor of a motor cyclist, who had been killed in an accident, could be held responsible to a woman who had heard the noise of the collision with a motor car while standing on a stationary tram car some fifty feet from the point of impact and as a result suffered fright, sustained severe nervous shock and gave birth to a child prematurely. The question whether the employer of the motor cyclist might be responsible for any damage for which the motor cyclist was responsible did not arise. That is, I think, what the learned judge must have meant when he said that the argument had nothing to do with the responsibility of the defendants. For the reasons that my Lord has given, I entirely agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: J. H. Milner & Son (for the plaintiff); Stanley & Co. (for the defendants).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

GOULD v. MINISTER OF NATIONAL INSURANCE AND ANOTHER.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Ormerod, J.), December 11, 12, 1950, January 11, 1951.]

National Insurance—"Self-employed person"—Music-hall artist—National Insurance Act, 1946 (c. 67), s. 1 (2) (a) (b).

The appellant, a music-hall artist, entered into a written contract with the second respondent to appear in a variety "act" at a theatre for one week. The contract, inter alia, provided that the appellant might be transferred to other theatres of the same management, prohibited his appearance at certain other theatres, specified penalties for non-appearance in accordance with the contract, provided for his acting as deputy at other theatres in an emergency, and contained an undertaking that his performance would not be dangerous. Rules attached to it required him to attend rehearsals at times stipulated by the management, stipulated the times of performance, dealt with illness and provided that, if required, the appellant should submit to medical examination, dealt with the use of improper words and gestures, authorised a fine or cancellation of the agreement if the appellant was in the theatre when intoxicated, empowered prohibition of the whole or part of his performance if it was considered unsuitable or unpleasing, prohibited variation from the words of songs or dialogue previously approved, and required the appellant to produce a new or revert to an old "act" on request.

HELD: (i) although the second respondent was empowered under the contract to prohibit an objectionable part of the appellant's performance and to require him to produce a new "act" or revive an old one, those and the other provisions of the contract and rules were necessary for the proper working of the theatre, and the performance of the appellant depended on his skill, personality, and artistry with which the contract gave the second respondent no right to interfere; the contract, therefore, was one for services and not of service; and the appellant was a "self-employed" person within the meaning of the National Insurance Act, 1946, s. 1 (2) (b), and not an "employed person" within s. 1 (2) (a).

(ii) the question, being one of the construction of the contract, was one of law, and, therefore, under s. 43 (4) of the Act and the National Insurance (Determination of Claims and Questions) Regulations, 1948, made thereunder the appellant was entitled to appeal to the High Court against a decision of the Minister of National Insurance that the appellant was not an "employed person."

[FOR THE NATIONAL INSURANCE ACT, 1946, s. 1 (2), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 16, p. 673.

FOR THE NATIONAL INSURANCE (INDUSTRIAL INJURIES) ACT, 1946, s. 1, and sched. I, see ibid., pp. 801 and 895, respectively.]

Cases referred to:

- A (1) Re Winter German Opera, Ltd., (1907), 23 T.L.R. 662; 42 Digest 909, 58.
 (2) Short v. Henderson, Ltd., (1946), 115 L.J.P.C. 41; 174 L.T. 417; 39 B.W.C.C. 62; 2nd Digest Supp.
 (3) Binding v. Great Yarmouth Port & Haven Comrs., (1923), 92 L.J.K.B. 377; 128 L.T. 743; 16 B.W.C.C. 28; 34 Digest 260, 2220.

B CASE STATED by the Minister of National Insurance under reg. 4 of the National Insurance (Determination of Claims and Questions) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1144) (made under s. 43 of the National Insurance Act, 1946), and under R.S.C., Ord. LV(B) as amended by R.S.C. (No. 2) 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1439 (L.16)).

C The appellant was a music-hall artist who had entered into a written contract with the second respondent, acting on behalf of several companies, under which he undertook to appear in a variety "act" at a theatre for one week from Sept. 6, 1948. The first respondent, the Minister of National Insurance, had decided that during that week the appellant was not an "employed person" within the meaning of the National Insurance Act, 1946, s. 1 (2) (a), but was a "self-employed person" within the meaning of s. 1 (2) (b) of the Act. For the appellant it was contended that he was a servant of the management by reason of the degree of control it exercised over his performance. The respondents contended
 D that the degree of control was only such as was necessary for the proper running of the theatre and compliance with the licensing regulations, and did not permit the management to direct the manner in which the appellant's performance was to be given.

Sir Charles Doughty, K.C., and Doughty for the appellant.

E J. P. Ashworth for the Minister of National Insurance, the first respondent.
Beney, K.C., and E. V. Falk for the second respondent.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 11, 1951. ORMEROD, J., read the following judgment. This is an appeal by Mr. Frederick A. Gould, professionally known as Nat Hope, under the regulations made under s. 43 of the National Insurance Act, 1946, against F the decision of the Ministry of National Insurance that the appellant was not, during the period between Sept. 6, 1948, and Sept. 11, 1948, an employed person within the meaning of s. 1 (2) (a) of the Act, but was a self-employed person within the meaning of sub-s. (2) (b).

G The facts which came before the court by way of Case stated by the Minister under the provisions of the regulations are that the appellant, who is a music-hall artist, entered into a contract in writing dated Aug. 31, 1948, with one Prince Littler, the second respondent, acting on behalf of a number of companies set out in a schedule to the contract, to appear with a female partner in a variety act described as a comedy duo at a certain specified theatre for one week from Sept. 6, 1948. The contract was in the standard form in general use by music hall artists and known as the "Arbitrator's Award 1919
 H Contract," and a copy of the contract and conditions thereto are attached to and form part of the Case Stated. The appellant and his partner, in pursuance of the contract, duly performed the variety act at the Grand Theatre, Derby, for a week from Sept. 6, 1948. On these facts the Minister decided: (i) that during the period in question the appellant was a person gainfully employed in Great Britain; (ii) that the said contract was not a contract of service; and (iii) that during the said period the appellant was included in the class of self-employed persons for the purposes of the National Insurance Act, 1946.

On Jan. 10, 1950, the Minister gave notice in writing of this decision to the parties concerned. There is no question about the first of these three findings, and in effect, this appeal is against findings (ii) and (iii).

By s. 1 (2) (a) of the National Insurance Act, 1946, an employed person is defined as a person “ . . . gainfully occupied in employment in Great Britain, being employment under a contract of service.”

The question for decision in this appeal is whether the contract should be regarded as a contract of service or whether it is nothing more than a contract for services, to use words which have been used by the courts in many of the decisions to which I was referred in the course of the argument. It is necessary, therefore, to refer to the terms of the contract and to the attached rules and regulations, which by cl. 19 are to be read and construed as forming part of it. Clause 4 provides that with the consent of the artist, not to be unreasonably withheld, he may be transferred during the whole or any part of the agreement to any other theatre owned or controlled by the management. Clause 5 prohibits him from appearing at other theatres within certain prescribed distances and times. Clause 7 provides for penalties to be paid by the artist if he fails to appear at any performance except through illness or accident. Clause 8 provides for his acting as deputy in an emergency at other theatres owned or controlled by the management in the same town. Clause 9 is an undertaking by the artist that his performance will not be dangerous to the audience, other artists, or the theatre employees. By cl. 15 the artist may be obliged to perform at the theatre in certain circumstances if there has been a change of management, and by cl. 19 the artist agrees to abide by all reasonable rules which may from time to time be made by the management for the good and orderly conduct or special requirements of their theatres. There are other clauses, but the ones that I have mentioned are those which appear to be relevant to the question in issue.

Emphasis in the argument was laid more particularly on the rules and regulations attached to the contract. Of these, r. 1 stipulates that the artist shall attend rehearsals with band parts at times stipulated by the management. Rule 2 stipulates the time at which the artist shall be at the theatre ready to perform. Rule 3 sets out the procedure to be adopted in case of illness, and provides that the artist shall, if required, submit to medical examination. Rule 4 deals with the use of improper words or gestures. Rule 5 provides that the artist may be fined one week's salary or his engagement may be cancelled if he is in the theatre in a state of intoxication. Rule 7 gives the management power to prohibit the whole or any part of the performance which they may reasonably consider unsuitable or unpleasing to the audience, and prohibits any variation from the words of songs or dialogue previously approved. By r. 8 the artist agrees to produce a new or to revert to any old song, sketch, or act at the reasonable request of the management. Rule 9 provides that the artist shall respond to encores as the management shall reasonably direct, and r. 11 prohibits smoking in the dressing-rooms or in close proximity to the stage. There are other rules, but they do not appear to affect the question that I have to consider.

It was contended on behalf of the appellant that the terms of the contract, when read with the rules and regulations, are such as to establish such a degree of control over the appellant that he must be regarded as a servant. The requirement to attend for rehearsal and to submit himself for medical examination if necessary, and the provisions with regard to appearing at other theatres owned by the management and being barred from appearing at theatres not owned by them, were all urged as instances of control going beyond that which would constitute the contract one for services only, and particular emphasis was laid on r. 7 and r. 8, which deal respectively with the right of the management to prohibit the whole or any part of a performance, and to require the appellant to produce a new or revert to any old song, sketch, or act. For the respondent it was contended that the degree of control which is imposed by the contract is only such as is necessary for the proper running of the theatre and compliance with the licensing regulations, and in no way gives the management the right to direct the manner in which the performance should be given.

- A A large number of cases was referred to in the course of the argument where a similar question had arisen in the administration of other statutes, and, particularly, the Workmen's Compensation Acts, but, as WARRINGTON, J., said in Re Winter German Opera, Ltd. (1) (23 T.L.R. 662), the question in this and similar cases must turn on the particular facts of each particular case, and the authority of other cases, and particularly of cases based on different statutes, is of very little assistance. It is easy in some cases to say that the contract is a contract of service and in others that it is a contract for services, but between these two extremes there is a large number of cases where the line is much more difficult to draw. Although the authority of cases based on different statutes may be of very little assistance in deciding any particular case, it is possible to extract from these authorities a common principle on which the decisions are founded. It is clear that the real question is one of the degree of control exercised by the person employing the artist, and this, as I see it, means not only the amount of control but the nature of that control and the direction in which it is exercised. In Short v. Henderson (2), a case in the House of Lords under the Workmen's Compensation Acts, LORD THANKERTON (115 L.J.P.C. 47) recapitulates with approval the four indicia of a contract of service derived by the Lord Justice-Clerk from the authorities referred to by him. These are: (a) the master's power of selection of his servant; (b) the payment of wages or other remuneration; (c) the master's right to control the method of doing the work; and (d) the master's right of suspension or dismissal. He goes on to say that the particular requirement of a contract of service is the right of the master in some reasonable sense to control the method of doing the work, and that this factor of superintendence and control has frequently been treated as critical and decisive of the legal quality of the relationship.

- It is clear in this case that the management had the power to select the artist, that the artist was paid a remuneration which in the agreement is called a salary, and that in certain circumstances the management reserved the right to cancel the contract. There were, in addition, other conditions in the contract by which the appellant agreed to be bound. In my view, however, they were simply conditions necessary to the proper working of the theatre. Indeed, they were conditions by which, in a suitably modified form, modified in a way that would not affect the issue, any concert artist who was appearing at a concert for a single night might reasonably agree to be bound, and I cannot imagine that in such circumstances anyone would argue that the contract was a contract of service. As I see this contract, there is nothing which imposes on the appellant any control over the method in which he performs his act. It is true that the management has the right to prohibit any part of the performance which they think may offend the audience, and that the right is reserved to require the appellant to produce a new song or sing an old one, and so on, but the performing of the act depends entirely on the skill, the personality, and the artistry of the appellant, and this is a matter with which the contract gives the management no right to interfere. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the contract in question in this case is a contract for services only, and not a contract of service, and that the Minister was right in treating the appellant as a self-employed person.

It was submitted by counsel for the second respondent, that as the appellant's right to appeal was restricted to an appeal on matters of law this appeal must be dismissed if on the contract it could be said that there was evidence by which the Minister could find that the contract was one for services only. In support of his submission he cited a number of decisions of the Court of Appeal in cases under the Workmen's Compensation Acts where the question had been treated as a question of fact. I note, however, that in the one case under the Workmen's Compensation Act cited to me where the contract was contained entirely in a written document—Binding v. Great Yarmouth Port & Haven Comrs. (3)—ATKIN, L.J., said (92 L.J.K.B. 381):

"The question before us . . . seems to me to be a question of pure law, namely, the construction of a written agreement."

In view of the opinion that I have expressed it is not necessary for me to decide this point, but I think I should say that as this case depends entirely on the construction of a written agreement I should regard it as a question of law, and, therefore, one which can be the subject of appeal under the appropriate section of the statute. It follows from what I have said that the appeal will be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Clare & Clare (for the appellant); The Solicitor, Ministry of National Insurance (for the first respondent); Hall, Clark, Goldhawk and Jutsum & Co. (for the second respondent, Mr. Prince Littler).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re SMALLWOOD (deceased). SMALLWOOD v. MARTINS BANK, LTD. AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Roxburgh, J.), January 17, 18, 19, 22, 1951.]

Family Provision—Evidence—Intention of testator—Statement, not in writing, made by testator to deponent—Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938 (c. 45), s. 1 (7).

In an application by a widow for provision to be made for her under the Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938, s. 1 (1), it was sought to put in evidence a statement by a son of the testator in which he said: "The testator on many occasions told me that the plaintiff was drinking too much and that he had found bottles of whisky and gin hidden in her wardrobe . . . These matters much distressed the testator. In 1929 the plaintiff left the testator for a short time, and in 1930 they entered into a deed of separation, but they were reconciled in the following year. The testator also told me that in 1933 the plaintiff had an affair with [a person named] and that he had forgiven her. From 1931 onwards the relations between the plaintiff and the testator steadily deteriorated. The plaintiff's main interest was indulging in a social life and in endeavouring to obtain an entry into a higher social circle, and these matters did not interest the testator. The testator told me frequently that the plaintiff was continually nagging and quarrelling with him, that she was frequently the worse for drink, and that in 1947 she had seriously assaulted him. During the war, the testator travelled to London nearly every week and came and saw me. On these occasions he complained to me most bitterly of the plaintiff's conduct. The testator was also in the habit of spending week-ends either with me or my sisters in order to escape from the plaintiff, and I know that he dreaded going back to her. In 1947 the testator's health was bad and he was so unhappy with the plaintiff that he felt it was essential that there should be a separation."

HELD: section 1 (7) of the Act was not confined to evidence of the reasons given by the testator for making the dispositions made by his will, or for not making any provision, or any further provision, as the case might be, for a dependant, but extended to evidence of facts from which the court could infer the reasons of the testator for making the dispositions made by his will, or for not making any provision, or any further provision, as the case might be, and, therefore, the son's statement was admissible.

Re Vrint ([1940] 3 All E.R. 470), applied.

[FOR THE INHERITANCE (FAMILY PROVISION) ACT, 1938, s. 1, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 9, pp. 795-797.]

B Cases referred to:

(1) Re Vrint, [1940] 3 All E.R. 470; [1940] Ch. 920; 109 L.J.Ch. 431; 163 L.T. 306; 2nd Digest Supp.

(2) Re Pugh, [1943] 2 All E.R. 361; [1943] Ch. 387; 112 L.J.Ch. 311; 169 L.T. 284; 2nd Digest Supp.

C ADJOURNED SUMMONS by which application was made by the widow of the testator for provision to be made for her out of the testator's estate under the Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938, s. 1 (1). Objection was taken to certain evidence on the ground that (it being otherwise inadmissible) s. 1 (7) of the Act of 1938 did not render it admissible. The relevant part of the evidence is set out in the judgment and in the headnote.

D Ungoed-Thomas, K.C., and W. G. H. Cook for the plaintiff, the widow.
Lodge for the first defendant, the executor.

R. W. Jennings, K.C., and B. S. Tatham for the second, third and fourth defendants, annuitants under the will.

M. J. Albery for the fifth and sixth defendants, residuary legatees.

E ROXBURGH, J.: This is an application under the Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938, s. 1 (1), by the testator's widow. A statement by one of the testator's sons, parts of which are said to be inadmissible in evidence, contains the following paragraph:

"The testator on many occasions told me that the plaintiff was drinking too much and that he had found bottles of whisky and gin hidden in her wardrobe ... These matters much distressed the testator. In 1929 the plaintiff left the testator for a short time, and in 1930 they entered into a deed of separation, but they were reconciled in the following year. The testator also told me that in 1933 the plaintiff had an affair with [a person named] and that he had forgiven her. From 1931 onwards the relations between the plaintiff and the testator steadily deteriorated. The plaintiff's main interest was indulging in a social life and in endeavouring to obtain an entry into a higher social circle, and these matters did not interest the testator. The testator told me frequently that the plaintiff was continually nagging and quarrelling with him, that she was frequently the worse for drink, and that in 1947 she had seriously assaulted him. During the war, the testator travelled to London nearly every week and came and saw me. On these occasions he complained to me most bitterly of the plaintiff's conduct. The testator was also in the habit of spending week-ends either with me or my sisters in order to escape from the plaintiff, and I know that he dreaded going back to her. In 1947 the testator's health was bad and he was so unhappy with the plaintiff that he felt it was essential that there should be a separation."

In fact, there was a deed of separation on Oct. 22, 1947. The testator made the will in question on Apr. 3, 1948, and died on Oct. 9, 1948. Now some portions of this paragraph are obviously inadmissible unless they are admissible under s. 1 (7) of the Act of 1938, but I think it is necessary to treat the paragraph, or that part of it which I have read, as a whole.

Counsel for the widow takes two points. First, he says that this paragraph is not a statement of the testator's reasons, and that, therefore, it does not come within the sub-section. Alternatively, if it is, he says it is not within the ambit of the section because it is not a statement in writing by the testator. I must confess that at first sight I should have thought that counsel's first point was a good one. I should have thought that this sub-section was directed to statements by the testator of his reasons, and did not extend to statements by the testator of facts which the court may hold to have constituted his reasons. I find it impossible, however, to reconcile that prima facie view with the decision in Re Vrint (1), which has stood unchallenged since 1940. In that case the plaintiff widow had taken proceedings for maintenance against the testator in a petty sessional court, and an order had been made thereon on Sept. 10, 1935. In contemplation of the hearing, the testator's solicitor had prepared in the ordinary course of business, on his oral instructions, a proof of the evidence which he was ready to give. It had been dictated by the solicitor to a typist, by whom it was transcribed, and had then been sent to the testator, who had returned it without correction, but unsigned and without any covering letter. "Counsel for the defendant tendered it in evidence to enable the court to ascertain what were the testator's reasons for the provisions he made in his will". I think that must be an accurate statement of what counsel was trying to do. It is almost unthinkable that that proof contained any statement in terms about the testator's testamentary intentions, and, if it had contained any such statement, I feel sure that it would have been mentioned either in the report or in the judgment. It seems to me certain that the documents must have contained statements about the widow from which the court could infer what were the testator's reasons for making no provision for her, and I think that the sentence which I have quoted shows that that is what counsel was trying to do. Counsel tendered the document in evidence, not to show what reasons the testator gave, but to enable the court to ascertain what were the testator's reasons. I think that follows from the way BENNETT, J., stated the problem himself. He said ([1940] 3 All E.R. 472):

"The question is whether the court is entitled to look at that document [the proof] for the purpose of ascertaining the testator's reasons for making the disposition he did make in his will."

It is to be noted that he does not say "in order to find a statement of the testator's reasons." Having thus posed the problem himself, the learned judge held that the document was admissible. Therefore, I feel no doubt that I ought to follow BENNETT, J., in what is, on any view, a difficult point, and I feel that I ought to hold that the section is not confined to evidence of the reasons given by the testator for making the dispositions made by the will or for not making any further provision, as the case may be, but extends to evidence of facts from which the court can infer the reasons of the testator for making the dispositions made by his will, or for not making any provision, or any further provision, as the case may be.

The second point made by counsel for the widow is founded on a passage in MORTON, J.'s judgment in Re Pugh (2). MORTON, J., said ([1943] 2 All E.R. 364):

"I am prepared to assume in favour of the widow without deciding it that verbal statements alleged to have been made by the testator to the widow in his lifetime come within the terms of the sub-section, although the inclusion of the words 'including any statement in writing signed by the testator and dated' may possibly throw some doubt on that point."

I have to decide what MORTON, J., was able to assume without deciding. He does throw some doubt on the point, but he certainly does not say that he thinks it is an assumption that ought not to be made.

A I cannot myself see on this point any real distinction between the present case and Re Vrint (1), because in Re Vrint (1) though the statement was in writing, it was not a statement which the testator had written nor a statement which he had signed. The testator gave oral instructions to the solicitor and the solicitor dictated the statement to a typist, who transcribed it, and it was then sent to the testator who returned it. I cannot see any substantial difference between such a document and a statement by the testator to another person. The only difference is that in one case the statement had been recalled to the mind of the testator, and in the other case, no doubt, it was not. I do not, therefore, think that the point is open in view of Re Vrint (1). If, however, it is open, I must confess that the words of the section are "such evidence . . . as it considers sufficient," which are as wide as they could be, and, though it is rather surprising that there should, in those circumstances, have been added the words "including any statement in writing signed by the testator and dated," having regard to the word "including" it cannot, I think, possibly be that by reason of those words the generality of the words "such evidence of those reasons as it considers sufficient" has to be curtailed. Therefore, in my judgment, this second point fails also, and the evidence is admissible.

Solicitors: Gibson & Weldon, agents for Berry & Berry, Tunbridge Wells (for the plaintiff); Jordan & Lavington (for all the defendants).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

D

E

applied. Re SPENSLEY'S WILL ceased. WRAY v. WRAY AND OTHERS.
RUSTS. [1952] 2 All E.R. 49.
HOUSE OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Jenkins and Hodson, L.JJ.), January 18, 19, 1951.]

Will—Revocation—Principles of construction of revocatory clause—Partial revocation by codicil.

F

By her will, made in April, 1945, H. appointed C., G. and E. to be her executors and trustees and gave to each of them who accepted the office a legacy of £50. She bequeathed certain other legacies, gave directions with regard to her dwelling-house and other real property, and gave her residuary estate to her trustees on the usual trusts for sale and conversion and investment and on trust to apply the income for the benefit of F. during her life "and after her death my trustees shall hold the capital and income from such investments in trust for [C.] absolutely Provided that if [C.] shall die in my lifetime . . . I direct that the same shall be dealt with as if [C.] had survived me . . . and be transferred and paid to his personal representatives and form part of his estate and be treated as directed by his will." On Dec. 20, 1945, C. made his will and gave his residuary estate on trust to pay the income to G. for her life and subject thereto to his four children absolutely. On Nov. 12, 1948, H. made a codicil to her will making certain further pecuniary bequests (including a legacy of £100 to G.) and provided by cl. 4: "I revoke the appointment of [G.] in cl. 2 of my will as executrix and direct that my said will shall take effect as if her name was omitted from my will and as if she were dead." On Jan. 27, 1949, H. died, C. having predeceased her.

G

H

HELD: on the true construction of cl. 4 of the codicil (bearing in mind the tendency of the court in construing such revocatory clauses not to be too strict in giving full effect to all the words used) the testatrix did not intend thereby to exclude G. from benefiting under the referential trusts of her residuary estate, and, therefore, G. was entitled to receive the income of the said residuary estate during her life.

Re Freeman ([1910] 1 Ch. 681) and Re Percival (1888) (59 L.T. 21), applied. A

[AS TO PARTIAL REVOCATION OF A WILL, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 34, pp. 78-80, paras. 110, 111; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 44, pp. 324-330, Nos. 1560-1609.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Re Cousen's Will Trusts, [1937] 2 All E.R. 276; [1937] Ch. 381; 106 L.J.Ch. 261; 157 L.T. 32; Digest Supp. B

(2) Re Percival, (1888), 59 L.T. 21; 44 Digest 328, 1595.

(3) Re Freeman, [1910] 1 Ch. 681; 79 L.J.Ch. 678; 102 L.T. 516; 44 Digest 330, 1608.

APPEAL by the first defendant, Gladys May Wray, from an order of VAISEY, J., dated Oct. 26, 1950, holding that, on the true construction of cl. 4 of the codicil to the will of Hetty Wray, deceased, the first defendant was by that clause excluded from benefiting under certain trusts incorporated by reference into the said will. The facts appear in the judgment of SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R. C Pennyquick, K.C., and Mendel for the first defendant, Gladys May Wray.

McMullen for the plaintiff, the trustee of the will of Hetty Wray.

Cross, K.C., and Raymond Walton for the remaining defendants, interested (subject to the interest, if any, of the first defendant) in the corpus of the residuary estate of Hetty Wray. D

SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R.: The question in this case is whether a short paragraph in a codicil has the effect of excluding the first defendant from an interest for life which she otherwise would take, not by direct gift in the will, but by the operation of the will of another person, the trusts of that other person's will being made applicable to this testatrix's estate by reference in the manner with which I will proceed to deal. E

We are concerned with the will and codicil of Hetty Wray, who died on Jan. 27, 1949. By that will Miss Wray appointed, in cl. 2, her brother Charles, her sister-in-law, Charles' wife, Gladys May Wray (who is the first defendant and the appellant before us), and her nephew, the plaintiff in the action, Edward Geoffrey Wray (who was the son of Charles by a first marriage), executors and trustees, and she gave to each such executor who accepted the office a £50 legacy free of duty. In cl. 3 she gave two legacies. One was a pecuniary legacy to a sister, Frances, and the other was a substantial gift to the brother, Charles, already mentioned, whom failing the gift was to go to a nephew, Charles' son. There was then a provision as to her dwelling-house in favour of Frances, and another provision in regard to some other real property, also in favour of Frances. She then proceeded to deal with her residue. There were the usual provisions for sale and conversion, and the operative trusts were that the trustees were to hold the investments on trust to apply the income for the benefit of the sister Frances. Then there was a provision to which I will not refer, and the clause (cl. 6) proceeds: F

"and after her [Frances'] death my trustees shall hold the capital and income from such investments in trust for my said brother Charles Wray absolutely Provided that if the said Charles Wray shall die in my lifetime [as he did] or in the lifetime of my said sister Frances Wray [she also predeceased the testatrix] I direct that the same shall be dealt with as if the said Charles Wray had survived me and my said sister Frances Wray and be transferred and paid to his personal representatives and form part of his estate and be treated as directed by his will." G

H

Before I come to the codicil, it will, I think, be convenient if I explain what is the relevant law as appearing in Re Cousen's Will Trusts (1), the validity of which decision counsel for the first defendant has not challenged.

A On the face of it it might have been supposed that such a gift would produce the result that the fund disposed of was simply transferred for all purposes to the estate of the other named person and would go to the persons benefited by that other person, or, if those beneficiaries had died, to their estates, but Re Cousen's Will Trusts (1) laid it down that, notwithstanding such a formula as "and form part of his estate," and so on, the result of such a provision is that the persons who may be specified (in this case) by Charles take Hetty's estate as direct beneficiaries of Hetty, with the further consequence that to be entitled so to take those beneficiaries must survive Hetty herself. To illustrate the point by a simple example, if it be supposed that Charles, who did predecease B the testatrix, had left the whole of his estate to his wife, Gladys, and if it be supposed that Gladys herself had also predeceased Hetty, then this provision would be wholly ineffective, for Gladys, not having survived Hetty, would take nothing, and her estate could take nothing, albeit that she was the universal legatee and devisee under Charles' will.

C I have stated that the validity of that decision is not challenged, and I am not to be taken as suggesting that it could be challenged, but, as JENKINS, L.J., observed during the argument, to the lay mind it is, perhaps, a somewhat technical legal rule. It would, or it might, appear to an inexperienced person that by a provision such as that with which we are concerned you are simply saying that in the event supposed you hand over your estate to the personal representatives of somebody else, and those personal representatives treat what they D receive for all purposes as an accretion to their own estate. For the reasons that I have indicated, that is not so.

E Hetty's will was dated April, 1945. Frances died not long afterwards, but at that time the material will of Charles, which has given rise to the present problem, had not been made. On Dec. 20, 1945, Charles made his will and gave his residue on trust to pay the income to his wife, the first defendant, Gladys May Wray, for life, and subject thereto the capital was divided amongst his four children by his former marriage, namely, the plaintiff and the remaining three defendants, all married women. On Nov. 12, 1948, Hetty Wray, the testatrix, made the codicil, cl. 4 of which gives rise to the point which we have to determine. By cl. 1 she gave a number of pecuniary legacies, the first of F which was in favour of the nephew whom I have already mentioned. The next is in favour of his wife, and there were others in favour of the stepchildren. The last but one was in favour of the first defendant, Gladys May Wray, to whom the testatrix gave £100 which was not, in point of fact, larger than some of the other legacies in the same clause. In cl. 2 of the codicil the testatrix dealt with the provision that she had made in cl. 4 of the will in favour of Frances, and that G she did because, as she said by recital, her sister Frances was dead. Although the rest of the document is in typescript, cl. 4 was inserted in manuscript by the solicitors' clerk who was advising the testatrix and was an attesting witness. I mention that fact because in some way counsel for the first defendant relied on that circumstance, but I myself have been unable to see any sound argument which can be rested on it, and, therefore, I will take no further time in dealing H with that point.

Clause 4 is:

"I revoke the appointment of Gladys May Wray in cl. 2 of my will as executrix and direct that my said will shall take effect as if her name was omitted from my will and as if she were dead."

The question is whether, having regard to the rule in Re Cousen's Will Trusts (1), which I have stated, that provision has the effect that Charles' testamentary disposition giving a life estate to his widow must now be treated quoad Hetty's estate as ineffective, so as to make Hetty's residue go by virtue of Charles' disposition shorn of the life estate direct to the plaintiff and the last three defendants. VAISEY, J., held that it had that effect.

On a matter of this sort, turning on the language of a will, I always feel reluctant to differ from the judge of first instance, and no one can doubt that the problem does present difficulties, but after listening to the argument I confess that I have come to a clear conclusion that this cl. 4 was not intended by the testatrix to have so far-reaching an effect. If the matter were free from authority I am not sure that I should not be compelled, in spite of the impression that this codicil has had on my mind, to come to the contrary view, for without any authority I might, I think, be constrained to say that the duty of the court was to give effect so far as possible to all the words used, including the last few words of this clause, "and as if she were dead," and that to give true effect to that formula, i.e., to make it do something which had not already been done by the preceding words, you would have to say that these referential trusts were limited in their effect. The matter is not, however, free from authority.

We have been referred to two cases, the first of which is Re Percival (2) and the second of which is Re Freeman (3). Both were decisions of this court. Both were cases in which a clause in a codicil containing language perfectly general prima facie in its effect was held, nevertheless, to be restricted to the particular subject-matters with which the clauses by their opening words were introduced to deal. It is a truism to observe that every case must obviously depend on its own particular facts. The language in the present case is quite different in certain respects, to some of which I shall advert in a moment, from the language in either of the two cases cited. That I fully appreciate. Counsel for the last three defendants, the step-daughters, said, as the learned judge said, that Re Freeman (3) ought to be regarded as having reached a high watermark in matters of this kind, and that the tide should not be allowed further to encroach. I am not sure that I fully understand what is meant by that phrase. I think that these cases do show a disposition on the part of the court in cases of revocations in codicils to depart somewhat from the general rule that I have indicated of giving effect where possible to all the words used and to confine such revocatory clauses to the particular subject-matter with which they are introduced to deal. Put otherwise, they emphasise in cases of this kind that that which has by a will been clearly given should not be treated as taken away by a codicil unless that intention is quite clearly expressed.

Re Percival (2) will, I think, illustrate what I have tried to express. That was a case in which a testatrix bequeathed to a grand-daughter a watch and to another grand-daughter a brooch. Later in the will the first grand-daughter was given a legacy of £200. Then came the codicil, which was, so far as material, as follows:

"Whereas by my said will I have bequeathed my watch to my grand-daughter, Mary Emma Maude Dutton, and my brooch, containing a portrait of my late husband, to my grand-daughter, Jane Beatrice Margaret Boote ... Now I hereby revoke and make void the said legacies and bequests in my said will contained in favour of the said Mary Emma Maude Dutton and Jane Beatrice Margaret Boote ..."

who were the named grand-daughters. So far the matter is obvious and simple. Then the clause goes on:

"... and declare that my said will shall be read and construed in all respects as if the names of the said Mary Emma Maude Dutton and Jane Beatrice Margaret Boote had not been inserted therein, and in all other respects I confirm my said will."

The question obviously was whether the second part of that clause revoked the pecuniary legacy of £200 to the first of the grand-daughters. If effect were given to the words used in their ordinary sense that must have been the result, for not otherwise could the will be read and construed "in all respects" as if her name had not been inserted therein, but this court held that, looking at the clause in its context and in the light of the whole testamentary dispositions, it could not have been in the mind of the testatrix to deal with anything more than the specific gifts of the watch and the brooch. That was, I think, a strong case. It is true, and this is a very forcible point, that that result was much assisted, as counsel for the step-daughters has observed, by the circumstance that the clause was introduced by a recital, and a recital is a strong indication that what follows in the operative part deals with what is intimated by the recital and nothing more. Counsel makes the same point with regard to Re Freeman (3). At the risk of taking a little time I will state, as briefly as I can, the facts in Re Freeman (3). There was there, as in this case, the appointment of three persons, one of whom was a Mr. Bowyer Nichols, to be executors and trustees, and there was a specific legacy to each executor proving. Then legacies were given to various persons, including Mrs. Bowyer Nichols, and the residue was ultimately to be divided equally between three persons, viz., Lady Duckworth, Mr. Bowyer Nichols, and Mr. G. F. Leverson, or such of them as should survive. The name "Bowyer Nichols" (except as being also his wife's name) occurred only at the beginning where the appointment of executors was to be found, and in the residuary clause. The relevant part of the codicil was as follows:

"Secondly by my said will I have appointed Bowyer Nichols to be one of the executors thereof and I have given him a legacy of £1,000 for his trouble in acting as such executor Now I hereby revoke the appointment of the said Bowyer Nichols as such executor and also the said legacy of £1,000 given to him as aforesaid And I appoint Harry Freeman of 26 Carlisle Terrace Plymouth in the county of Devon to be an executor of my said will in the place of the said Bowyer Nichols, and I give to the said Harry Freeman a legacy of £200 free of legacy duty for his trouble in acting as such executor . . ."

As JOYCE, J., observed, there is no punctuation, but starting with a capital letter the codicil then said:

"And I declare that my said will shall be construed and take effect as if the name of the said Harry Freeman were inserted in my said will throughout instead of the name of the said Bowyer Nichols and in all other respects I confirm my said will."

There the question was whether effect could be given to that language, and, in particular, to that final passage, save by substituting for the name of Bowyer Nichols in the only other place in which it did occur in the will the name of Harry Freeman, namely, with regard to the residue? Again, the Court of Appeal—although KENNEDY, L.J., expressed his own doubts on the matter—came to the conclusion that, as in Re Percival (2), the clause, truly construed in its context, related and was intended to relate only to the appointment of executors.

As I have indicated, counsel for the step-daughters relies strongly on the absence in the present case of opening recitals, and it might also be said that it is one thing to strike a name out and it may be another thing to substitute by so oblique a method one person for another as residuary legatee. However, those two cases, although the words are obviously different from those in this case, show, I think, a tendency for the court in revocatory clauses of this kind not to be too strict in trying to give full effect to all the words used.

Let me come to the clause here in question, for this is plainly a matter of the meaning of the words that this testatrix has used. I note that there is here no recital. To that extent, perhaps, counsel for the step-daughters has an easier case than he would have had if there had been here a recital. The clause is all one sentence, not a long one, occupying only just over three lines: "I revoke the appointment of Gladys May Wray in cl. 2 of my will as executrix and direct " etc. It is conceded that some of this language is tautologous, but it is a point in this case that merely stating that the will "shall take effect as if her name was omitted from my will" would not have had any effect as regards this residual gift, because the right of Gladys May Wray to take by virtue of the referential trusts did not depend on her name being mentioned in this will at all and it was not mentioned in cl. 6 of the will. Therefore (said counsel for the step-daughters), the point of adding "and as if she were dead," is to make this clause apply to cl. 6 of the will. Of course, per contra if the words "and as if she were dead" had been put in it was not necessary to say anything more. There is some tautology, on any view of the case. Counsel for the step-daughters said that, if this clause was intended only to have the limited effect for which the first defendant contends, it should have gone on, after the reference to the revocation of the appointment in cl. 2, to direct that "the said cl. 2" should have effect, whereas in fact it says "my said will shall take effect." That is after all no more strong language than using such words as "in all respects," or "throughout," which were the words in Re Percival (2) and Re Freeman (3).

In the end, as counsel for the step-daughters rightly said, this is a question of the impression made on the mind of the reader, and further elaboration will not, I think, assist. Bearing in mind the tendency which I think is to be discerned from the two cases that I have cited, I conclude, and it is clear to my own satisfaction, that this clause, "I revoke the appointment of Gladys May Wray" etc., was not intended to have any effect on, or to be related in any way to, these referential trusts. I must say that I think it very unlikely that a testatrix, who had provided, as this testatrix had provided, that in the specified events which occurred it was for her brother, Charles, to determine by his will how her estate was to go, should choose this very oblique way of providing that his selection should be subject to the limitation that Gladys should not take under it, particularly as she could have chosen this roundabout way of doing it only if she had absorbed the lesson of Re Cousens (1), or if her advisers had and had explained it to her. It is, perhaps, rather a peculiar feature of the case that we have no evidence whether, when she made this codicil, she had any knowledge of what Charles' will was. It might have been an easier question to answer if that fact had been known, but in the absence of evidence we must assume that she was still prepared to leave it to Charles to decide, and he might, of course, alter his mind from time to time as to how, in the events supposed, his estate would go.

It seems to me that there are also other considerations. It will be observed that if Charles survived he took absolutely. Hetty's estate would be added to his own, and, if Charles then died and left a will in the form which his will actually took (which was probable), then Gladys would take, in effect, a life interest in Hetty's estate after Charles had enjoyed it. If the testatrix was anxious that Gladys should in no circumstances take anything of hers, it is a little odd that it was left to the accident whether Charles did or did not survive Hetty. I think also, on the whole, that it would be odd, if we are to suppose that cl. 4 had so wide a disinheriting effect as counsel for the step-daughters argued, that in the earlier part of the same codicil she gave Gladys a legacy of £100. That gift might, no doubt, be a solatium for other losses, but, then, she did not know that Gladys was losing anything. She did not know when this codicil was made what interest Gladys might take under Charles' will. At least the gift shows that cl. 4 was not actuated by a desire that Gladys should take nothing in any circumstances.

I have referred to the fact that there is here a dual formula, "as if her name was omitted from my will," and, "and as if she were dead." Those circumstances were absent from Re Freeman (3) and Re Percival (2), but it is to be noted that this use of the phrase "and as if she were dead" has its ancestry in one of the well-known conveyancing books of precedents, PRIDEAUX'S PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING, 22nd ed., and is a form recommended for use in a clause in terms intended only to operate to revoke the appointment as executor, although, of course, if its terms are given full effect it would wholly eliminate the person in question from any benefit under any part of the will. I will not, however, pursue the matter further. I agree that, taking the view I do, and as things have turned out, Gladys May Wray takes a life interest under Hetty's will, although Hetty said that her will was to be construed as though Mrs. Wray were dead.

A The apparent anomaly, I think, overlooks the technicality of Re Cousens (1). The truth is that in the events which have happened Hetty Wray's estate went over to her brother Charles' estate, and Gladys takes an interest, in strictness under Hetty's will but by reason of the fact that she was the life tenant under Charles' will and not because she was given any life tenancy or other interest in terms under Hetty's will at all. For these reasons, with due diffidence as I
B am differing from the opinion of VAISEY, J., I conclude that by this phrase this testatrix did not intend to prevent the terms of Charles' will having the effect which otherwise they would have, viz., conferring on the first defendant a life interest in the residue of Hetty's estate.

C JENKINS, L.J.: I agree. The principle to be applied in a case such as this is, I apprehend, that an interest clearly given by a will is not to be held revoked in the absence of clear words of revocation. That comes to this, that, if there is a gift under a will and an ambiguous clause in a codicil which may or may not be intended as a revocation, the gift in the will should be allowed to stand. Illustrations of that principle are to be found in Re Percival (2) and Re Freeman (3), to which my Lord has referred. Those cases show that in pursuance
D of that principle in a will in which there is a clause containing an express revocation of a particular disposition followed by superadded words in the same clause capable of being given a wider import so as to revoke other dispositions to which the clause in its inception was not directed, the court will lean to the view that the words of revocation, which, taken alone, would appear to be of general import, are to be regarded as restricted to the particular matter to which the clause is directed. The question in each case where the point arises must be
E whether, on the true construction of the relevant clause in conjunction with the remainder of the testamentary disposition, it is proper to hold that the words of revocation are so limited. As I have said, the leaning of the court is to limit them in that way if it is reasonably possible to do so as a matter of construction.

F In the present case cl. 4 of the codicil, as my Lord has pointed out, is one single sentence:

"I revoke the appointment of Gladys May Wray in cl. 2 of my will as executrix and direct that my said will shall take effect as if her name was omitted from my will and as if she were dead."

G It is one continuous sentence. It begins by directing itself to a particular clause and to a particular matter, viz., the appointment of Gladys as executrix, and it finishes with superadded words which, if taken alone, might be held to be of more general import. The question is on which side of the line that clause should be regarded as falling, having regard to the leaning of the court to which I have already referred. I agree with my Lord that the difficulty is wholly occasioned by the use of the concluding words "as if she were dead." If the H clause had stopped with the provision "as if her name was omitted from my will," it would automatically have been limited to the provisions of cl. 2 of the will appointing her executrix and giving her a legacy of £50, because that is the only place in the will in which her name is mentioned, but the words "as if she were dead" are prima facie of wider import, and would in themselves be apt to take away any interest to which they applied, even although it was an interest given to Gladys otherwise than by name. The question is whether they are to be construed in that unrestricted fashion.

In my view, as my Lord has held, the answer to that question should be, "No." My reasons for so holding as a matter of construction of this will and codicil are these. It is to be observed that, in the very codicil in which cl. 4 occurs, the testatrix gives Gladys a sum of £100. Clearly she is meant to take that sum of £100 provided she survives the testatrix. If the testatrix meant the words "and as if she were dead" to be given the wider effect which is attributed to them by the learned judge, it seems to me hardly conceivable that she would, without further explanation or clarification, have given by the very same instrument this legacy to Gladys. The result of the construction adopted by the learned judge is that, while Gladys obviously is to be treated as surviving the testatrix, if she in fact survives her, for the purposes of the legacy given her by the codicil, she must nevertheless be treated for the purposes of the will as having predeceased the testatrix, and, indeed, as having been actually dead at the date of the codicil. That anomaly, if I may so describe it, seems to me to point strongly to the view that the words "and as if she were dead" must be given a limited construction.

Next, one finds in cl. 2 of the codicil that, the testatrix's sister, Frances, having died, the testatrix thought it advisable to revoke the interest given to her, which she does in these words:

"My sister Frances Wray being now deceased I do hereby revoke cl. 4 and all other provisions of my said will in her favour And also I do hereby revoke the bequest of the said shares in Humber Fruit Brokers Ltd. contained in cl. 3 of my said will."

That shows that when the testatrix is minded to revoke a gift she, or those advising her, know the proper formula, and the specific expressions to use for that purpose. In my judgment, that, too, supports the view that the words "and as if she were dead" in cl. 4 should not be given the wide meaning. Then, I think, an important circumstance is to be found in the character of the gift which is said to be revoked. I have already adverted to the effect on the construction of these documents of the legacy given to Gladys by the codicil, and, as I have already mentioned, I regard that as a strong indication in favour of limiting the application of the words "and as if she were dead."

With that in mind one examines the character of the gift said to be revoked. It is not as a matter of language a gift taken under the testatrix's will at all. As a matter of law, no doubt, it is an interest taken under the testatrix's will, and it is an interest which can only be taken by a beneficiary who survives the testatrix. That is clear, but it is nevertheless an interest given by reference to the will of another person, the testatrix's brother, Charles, who was alive and thus capable of making a new will in any terms he chose at the date when the codicil was penned. It seems to me that the view taken by the learned judge has less to support it when the gift is in that referential form than it would in the case of an express and direct gift made in the ordinary way by the will. This is something which is not within the four corners of the testatrix's will at all. It is a gift which depends entirely on the testamentary dispositions of Charles. Having regard to its peculiar character, speaking for myself, I should find great difficulty indeed in holding, and I am not prepared to hold, that the mere occurrence of the words "and as if she were dead" in cl. 4 of the codicil can be said to operate with sufficient clarity, or at all, as a revocation of a gift of this peculiar referential character.

Finally, one must bear in mind that the testatrix ends her codicil with the words: "Subject as aforesaid I confirm my said will." One of the provisions of the will was that, if Charles should die in the lifetime of Frances or in the testatrix's lifetime, the residuary estate should be dealt with as if Charles had survived the testatrix and Frances and be paid to his personal representatives and form part of his estate and be treated as directed by his will. That provision is confirmed. It is true that it is confirmed "subject as aforesaid," but it is a strong thing, in my view, to construe the words "and as if she were dead" in cl. 4 of the codicil as abridging or curtailing the effect of that disposition so as to read into it a stipulation to the effect: "Provided always that Gladys shall be disqualified from participating by virtue of this referential trust under any testamentary disposition of Charles in any part of my residuary estate." I think it would be extremely difficult on the strength of cl. 4 of the codicil to treat the disposition in favour of Charles' estate as modified in this way.

- A Accordingly, ending where I began, it seems to me that the question of revocation or no revocation should be resolved in favour of the first defendant in accordance with the leaning of the court disclosed by the cases, and that cl. 4 of the codicil, notwithstanding the difficulties of construction which have been properly pointed out by counsel for the step-daughters, should be construed as limited in its operation to the appointment of Gladys as executrix and the concomitant legacy to her of £50. Accordingly, I agree that the appeal should be allowed.

B HODSON, L.J.: I agree with VAISEY, J., that on the first reading of the revocatory cl. 4 in the codicil the conclusion at which he arrived seems to be the obvious one. The clause reads as follows:

- C "I revoke the appointment of Gladys May Wray in cl. 2 of my will as executrix and direct that my said will shall take effect as if her name was omitted from my will and as if she were dead."

The last part of that clause directing that the will shall take effect as if her name was omitted from the will and as if she were dead seemed to me at first sight as plain as possible, and an indication that the testatrix intended that the first defendant, Gladys May Wray, should take no interest whatever in her estate, but, in the first place, it has to be recognised that Gladys May Wray was not named in the clause of the will under which she benefits in the events which have happened. She takes a benefit under the will, apart from cl. 2, having been placed in that position by the will of her husband, but under that part of the will of the testatrix she takes only under a referential trust in which her name does not appear at all.

- E Having heard the arguments addressed to the court and considered Re Percival (2) and Re Freeman (3), to which reference has been made, and the arguments which were accepted in those two cases, I am led to the same conclusion in this case. In other words, cl. 4 of the codicil must be read as dealing with its particular subject-matter only, so that, in order that it may be properly understood, some such words as "for this purpose" must be implied before the word "direct." The clause then reads: "I revoke the appointment of Gladys May Wray in cl. 2 of my will as executrix and for this purpose direct that my said will shall take effect as if her name was omitted from my will and as if she were dead."

- G The argument addressed to the court in Re Percival (2) and Re Freeman (3), which led the court to come to the conclusion which it did, was, no doubt, supported by the fact that in each case the recital directed the attention of the testatrix to the subject-matter of the particular bequest which was treated as being the only part of the document to be revoked. As counsel for the step-daughters has pointed out, in the present case there is no recital and there is nothing to emphasise the particular nature of the subject-matter, and, therefore, the less reason to depart from the plain meaning of the words in their unqualified construction. On the other hand, there are features in the two cases which seem to me to point the other way. For example, in one case the words "in all respects" appear together with the word "will," and in the other case the word "throughout," as emphasising the unqualified nature of the revocation on the face of it. Notwithstanding those strong words, the court found that the revocation was limited to the particular subject-matter. Moreover, in each of those cases the names of the persons affected appear in the will itself, so that it was stronger, as it seems to me, to ignore the plain words or to construe the plain words in a limited manner than it is in this case, where the name of the first defendant does not appear in the will itself; and indeed, as it seems to me, on construction of this particular document the words of revocation in the codicil are inapt to refer to this referential trust. The use of the word "name" in itself is inapt, because there are no names in the referential trust except the name of the person by reference to whom the trust is to be ascertained.

Moreover, there is another special reason in this case why I think that the words of revocation ought to be cut down in their meaning, in that the first defendant did receive a legacy of £100 under the codicil. That seems to me, at any rate, to be a pointer indicating that those wide words should not be construed to their fullest extent and should not carry their greatest weight. I think that the language of cl. 4 of the codicil, taken as a whole, can lead to only one conclusion, i.e., that the testatrix was directing her mind to the revocation of the appointment of the first defendant as executrix and the legacy attached thereto, and had no effect to disinherit her so far as the referential trust was concerned. I agree, therefore, that the appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed. Declaration accordingly. Costs of all parties as between solicitor and client to be paid out of the residuary estate.

Solicitors: Russell Jones & Walker, agents for Pearlman & Rosen, Hull (for the first defendant); Smith & Hudson (for the plaintiff and all other defendants).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

JELLIFF v. HARRINGTON.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Devlin, JJ.), January 22, 1951.]

Street Traffic—General trade licence—Motor car used for towing caravan—Caravan not a mechanically propelled vehicle—Road Vehicles (Registration and Licensing) Regulations, 1949 (S.I. 1949, No. 1618), reg. 29, art. D (4).

The respondent, a garage proprietor, carried on business as a repairer of and dealer in mechanically propelled vehicles and also as a repairer of and dealer in caravans which were not mechanically propelled. He was summoned under reg. 29, art. D (3), of the Road Vehicles (Registration and Licensing) Regulations, 1949, for using a motor car under a general trade licence to tow for delivery to a purchaser a trailer caravan which was not mechanically propelled.

HELD: under reg. 29, art. D (4), authority to use a general trade licence was confined to that part of the business of the licence holder which was directly "connected with the business as a manufacturer or repairer of or dealer in mechanically propelled vehicles," and such a licence could not be used in connection with the separate business of dealing in trailer caravans which were not mechanically propelled vehicles.

Dark v. Western Motor & Carriage Co. (Bristol), Ltd., ([1939] 1 All E.R. 143), referred to.

[AS TO GENERAL TRADE LICENCES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 28, pp. 426, 427, paras. 924, 925; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST Supp. Street and Aerial Traffic, 188a, 188b.]

Case referred to:

(1) Dark v. Western Motor & Carriage Co. (Bristol), Ltd., [1939] 1 All E.R. 143; Digest Supp.

CASE STATED by Great Yarmouth borough justices.

On Sept. 15, 1950, at a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Great Yarmouth, an information was preferred by the appellant against the respondent under reg. 29, art. D (3), of the Road Vehicles (Registration and Licensing) Regulations, 1949, alleging that the respondent had used a vehicle on a public road under a general trade licence for a purpose, viz., the towing of a caravan, other than a purpose for which such vehicle was authorised by reg. 29, art. D (4). It was proved or admitted that on May 12, 1950, the respondent was driving a motor car and was towing behind it a two-wheeled caravan which was not fitted with any means of mechanical propulsion. The car was being used under a valid general trade licence, issued to the respondent as proprietor of a garage. He had sold the caravan to a customer and was towing it to a site under the contract of sale. He was a dealer in and repairer of mechanically propelled vehicles and also a dealer in and repairer of trailer caravans. It was contended for the appellant that towing a caravan in such circumstances was not an authorised user. The justices dismissed the information.

Southall for the appellant.

Boileau for the respondent.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is a Case stated by Yarmouth borough justices, before whom the respondent was charged with using “a vehicle upon a public road under a general trade licence for a purpose, to wit, the towing of a caravan, other than a purpose for which such vehicle was authorised by art. D (4) of the said reg. 29 to be used under such licence . . .”

The justices dismissed the summons after reading a circular from the Ministry of Transport, and I am inclined to think that we can assume that they thought that, if the selling of the caravan was in the ordinary course of a motor dealer's trade, that was enough.

Regulation 29, art. D (4) provides as follows:

“Subject to the provisions of para. 1 and para. 2 of this article a mechanically propelled vehicle . . . may be used upon a public road under a general trade licence . . . with or without a trailer for any purpose connected with the business as a manufacturer or repairer of or dealer in mechanically propelled vehicles of the holder of the licence . . .”

I cannot hold that the sale and delivery of a caravan is connected with the business of a manufacturer or repairer of, or dealer in, mechanically propelled vehicles. It may be that a manufacturer or repairer of, or a dealer in, mechanically propelled vehicles deals in caravans, but so may many people. In my opinion, this regulation means that the use to which the general trade licence is being put must be in connection with mechanically propelled vehicles. I think that that is the true ratio decidendi of Dark v. Western Motor & Carriage Co. (Bristol), Ltd. (1). It is true that what was being used there was a motor car with a trailer attached, and there is no reason why a trailer should not be attached, but on the trailer there was loaded a motor boat. It was apparently a part of the business of the garage to overhaul the engines of motor boats, but it was held that, as the motor boat was not connected with the business of the manufacture or repair of mechanically propelled vehicles, because a boat is not a vehicle for the purpose of this regulation, an offence had been committed.

A garage proprietor may deal in caravans which are not mechanically propelled vehicles, but I think this regulation is meant to confine the user of trade licences to that part of the business of the person using them which is connected with mechanically propelled vehicles. Therefore, I think that the justices came to a wrong determination in point of law. I understand why they came to it. They were shown a letter from the Ministry of Transport which they ought not, strictly speaking, to have looked at, expressing an opinion as to the scope of this regulation. The court takes a different view. If the Minister thinks it desirable that what was done here should be permitted under trade licences, it will be easy for him to prepare, issue, and lay before Parliament regulations to that effect. The present regulation does not have that effect, and this case must go back to the justices with an intimation that the offence was proved. In assessing the penalty, however, they can take into account the fact that the respondent was misled by the letter from the Ministry.

HUMPHREYS, J.: I am of the same opinion. I think in para. 5 of the Case the words "the respondent is a dealer in and repairer of mechanically propelled vehicles and also a dealer in and repairer of trailer caravans" are sufficiently clear to enable the court to say that the respondent had two separate businesses. One was the business of a dealer in and repairer of mechanically propelled vehicles, and the other was that of a dealer in and repairer of trailer caravans. To hold otherwise would support an argument that, if a garage proprietor had any other business which he was carrying on at the garage, he might use his trade plates for the purposes of that business. I agree that the natural meaning of this regulation is that a person must not use his trade plates except in direct connection with the mechanically propelled vehicles in connection with which he has the business of manufacturing, repairing, or dealing in mechanically propelled vehicles.

DEVLIN, J.: I have reached the same conclusion substantially on the same ground as that which has just been expressed by HUMPHREYS, J. It is for the respondent to show that he was using the vehicle at the material time "for any purpose connected with the business as a manufacturer or repairer of or dealer in mechanically propelled vehicles of the holder of the licence."

The only finding in the Case which appears to me to be relevant to that is the paragraph which appears on the face of it to say that the respondent carried on two businesses, one as a repairer of mechanically propelled vehicles and the other as a dealer in and repairer of trailer caravans. If that be not the right construction of the paragraph, it still leaves the respondent without any other finding on which he could rely. It was for him to obtain a finding that he was carrying on one business only, and that it was as a part of that business that he was taking this caravan to the place where he was taking it. There was certainly no finding that it was part of the respondent's business, or part of the ordinary business, of a garage keeper to repair trailer caravans. I have not to consider what the position would be if the justices had made such a finding—whether it would be one that could be supported as a matter of ordinary knowledge or not. It is sufficient to say that there was no evidence in the Case to justify such a finding, and no such finding. It is said that in those circumstances we ought to remit the case to the justices to consider such a finding. I do not think that would be the proper course. The position is that, it being for the respondent to prove the necessary facts to bring himself within the exception to the clause, he called no evidence with regard to it. If the justices have rightly set out the contentions before them, he did not even contend that on the facts he proved he came within the words of the regulation. All he did was to put before the justices some documents issued by the Minister of Transport which were said to interpret the regulation and to say that he came within it. I do not think it would be right, that having been the line taken in the court below, to remit the case for further findings of fact on which the respondent could have called evidence had he been so minded. For these reasons I agree with the conclusions my Lord has expressed.

Appeal allowed with costs; case remitted with direction to convict.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for F. R. A. W. Conway, town clerk, Great Yarmouth (for the appellant); Piesse & Sons, agents for Russell Steward & Stevens, Norwich (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

WHINCUP v. JOSEPH WOODHEAD & SONS (ENGINEERS), LTD., AND ANOTHER.

[LEEDS AUTUMN ASSIZES (McNair, J.), November 24, 1950.]

Factory—Building operation—Safe means of access—Operation in factory by independent contractor—Duty of occupier—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 26 (1), s. 107 (1), (2)—Factories Act, 1948 (c. 55), s. 14 (4) (a).

A The plaintiff, who was employed by the first defendants, a firm of independent contractors, to repair some glass in the roof of a factory occupied by the second defendants, fell through the roof to the floor and was injured. On the question of the liability to the plaintiff of the second defendants for a breach of s. 26 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937,

B HELD: section 107 of the Act of 1937, which provides that certain provisions of the Act (not including s. 26 (1)) shall apply to building operations, deals only with building operations which are not conducted in a factory and is not intended to relieve the occupier of a factory from the obligations imposed on him by the main body of the Act, and the whole of the Act of 1937, including s. 26 (1), applies to the occupier of a factory in respect of an accident occurring in the course of building operations
C which are conducted in the factory, even though the building operations are carried out by an independent contractor: Whitby v. Burt, Boulton & Hayward, Ltd. ([1947] 2 All E.R. 324), followed; that position was not altered by s. 14 (4) (a) of the Factories Act, 1948, the effect of which was that where, on its proper construction, s. 26 (1) of the Act of 1937 applied
D to the factory in question and imposed an obligation on the occupier of providing a safe means of access, its application was not to be prejudiced by the fact that, by virtue of s. 107 of the Act of 1937, that Act also applied to building operations in that factory carried on by building operators. The second defendants were, therefore, liable to the plaintiff.

[FOR THE FACTORIES ACT, 1937, s. 26 (1), s. 107 (1), (2), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 9, pp. 1018, 1085, 1086, respectively; and
E FOR THE FACTORIES ACT, 1948, s. 14 (4), see ibid., p. 1145.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Whitby v. Burt, Boulton & Hayward, Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 324; [1947] K.B. 918; [1947] L.J.R. 1280; 177 L.T. 556; 111 J.P. 481; 2nd Digest Supp.
F (2) Lavender v. Diamints, Ltd., [1949] 1 All E.R. 532; [1949] 1 K.B. 585; [1949] L.J.R. 970; 2nd Digest Supp.

ACTION for damages for breach of statutory duty and negligence.

The second defendants, J. W. Harrison, Ltd., who were the occupiers of a factory, engaged the first defendants, a firm of building contractors, to repair some panes of glass in the roof of the factory. The roof on which the work was
G required to be done was that of one of seven bays of which the factory consisted. The roof was constructed of slopes of asbestos sheets with glass panels let into them. The roofs of two contiguous bays sloped down to a gutter over which the lower edges of the asbestos sheets protruded, leaving a gap of about seven inches between their edges. To repair the glass a workman had to walk along this gutter. There was no handrail to assist him when doing so. Originally above
H each of the gutters in the bays duckboard pathways had been constructed, but these had become rotten and had been removed. The plaintiff, an employee of the first defendants, who had been sent to carry out the repairs to the glass panes, was walking along the gutter when he stumbled and fell through the asbestos sheeting to the floor some thirty feet below, suffering injury. The judge found that the gutter without the duckboards was dangerous and did not provide a safe means of access to the work, and that the plaintiff's accident resulted from the absence of a safe means of access. The factory was one to which the Factories Act, 1937, applied, and the operation was one to which the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, applied. The learned judge found that the first defendants were liable to the plaintiff for a breach of reg. 5 of the regulations of 1948. On the question of the liability of the second defendants under s. 26 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, it was contended that the sub-section did not apply to the occupier of a factory in respect of an accident occurring in the course of a building operation.

J. Charlesworth for the plaintiff.

McKee for the first defendants.

R. W. Payne for the second defendants.

McNAIR, J.: The first defendants claim contribution from the second defendants under s. 6 (2) of the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935. For the purpose of this claim they seek to establish, as does the plaintiff, that the second defendants are liable under the Factories Act, 1937, or at common law.

The case against the second defendants is based on a breach of the obligation imposed on them as occupiers of the factory by s. 26 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, which is in substantially the same terms as reg. 5 of the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, in respect of the provision of a safe means of access. The second defendants' answer to this claim is two-fold. They rely, first, on s. 107 of the Factories Act, 1937, and, alternatively, on s. 14 (4) of the Factories Act, 1948.

Section 107 of the Act of 1937 provides as follows:

" (1) Subject as hereinafter in this section provided, the provisions of this Act hereinafter in this sub-section mentioned shall apply to building operations undertaken by way of trade or business . . . that is to say: . . .

(b) the provisions of Part II, with respect to steam boilers and air receivers . . . "

It is said that, as the provisions of Part II, which are so applied do not include s. 26, that section has no application in the case of occupiers in respect of an accident occurring in the course of a building operation, which, by definition, includes the operation in question. This contention was rejected by DENNING, J., in Whitby v. Burt, Boulton and Hayward, Ltd. (1). I should respectfully follow this decision even if, unaided, I should not have reached the same conclusion, but the decision seems to me to be clearly correct. Section 107 is not, in my view, a limiting section. It is an extending section intended to embrace within the scope of the obligation imposed by the Act persons carrying on building operations in relevant places as if they were occupiers, and it is not intended to relieve persons who are occupiers from the obligations imposed by the main body of the Act. Furthermore, I do not read the reservation on this point of TUCKER, L.J., in Lavender v. Diamints, Ltd. (2) ([1949] 1 All E.R. 535) as expressing any real doubt as to the correctness of DENNING, J.'s decision.

Counsel for the second defendants, however, while reserving the question of the correctness of the decision in Whitby's case (1), argued that the position had been altered by s. 14 (4) of the Factories Act, 1948. He argued that the object of s. 14 (4), read together with the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, which came into force on the same day as s. 14 (4), namely, Oct. 1, 1948, was to provide for building operations a separate and distinct code in which the obligation was imposed on the operators, whether operating in a factory or not, while leaving the code provided by the Factories Act, 1937, itself to apply to operations other than building operations. He argued that any other construction involved serious duplication and inconsistency. He relied in support of this contention in particular on s. 64, s. 66, s. 67 (2), s. 77 and s. 151 (6) of the Act of 1937.

I have considered s. 14 (4) with care, and I am unable to find that there is any such duplication or inconsistency. It was said that the effect of the other construction was to involve that two persons were deemed in law to be in occupation of the factory, but it seems to me that s. 107 (2) is at pains to provide to the contrary, because it says:

"The provisions of this Act in their application to building operations shall have effect as if any place where such operations are carried on were a factory, and any person undertaking any such operations to which this Act applies were the occupier of a factory . . ."

That, in my view, means, not that the building operator is deemed to be in occupation, but merely that the relevant provisions of the Act are to apply to him as if he were in occupation. It is merely a draftsman's device of attracting to the building operator obligations which under the Act are imposed on occupiers. Furthermore, it seems unreasonable to suppose that in 1948 Parliament designedly relieved the occupiers of obligations already imposed on them, if the decision of DENNING, J., is correct, in connection with building operations. However that may be, the express words of s. 14 (4) of the Act of 1948 seem to mean that, if s. 26 (1) on its proper construction applies to the premises in question and imposes the obligation on the occupier of providing safe means of access, its application is not to be prejudiced by the fact that, by virtue of s. 107, the Act is also applied to building operations on those premises carried on by building operators. I regard s. 14 (4) of the Act of 1948 in this respect as declaratory of the law as laid down by DENNING, J., in Whitby's case (1). I accordingly hold that the second defendants were also liable to the plaintiff for breach of statutory duty in failing to provide safe means of access. Having reached this conclusion, it is unnecessary for me to state whether there was any liability at common law.

As regards contribution inter se, I can see no reason for making any distinction between the two defendants. I hold that the contribution inter se should be limited to fifty per cent. of the liability of each.

Judgment for plaintiff against both defendants for £833, with costs.

Solicitors: W. H. Thompson (for the plaintiff); Bromley & Walker, Leeds (for the first defendants); Wiley Hargrave & Co., Leeds (for the second defendants).

[Reported by G. M. SMAILES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

ROE v. HEMMINGS AND ANOTHER.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Devlin, JJ.), January 24, 1951.]

Customs—Illegal export—Goods brought to "quay or other place"—"Other place" —Residence of defendant—Import, Export and Customs Powers (Defence) Act, 1939 (c. 69), s. 3 (1) (b).

The respondent was charged under s. 3 (1) (b) of the Import, Export and Customs Powers (Defence) Act, 1939, with having brought to a "place," namely, his residence, certain prohibited goods for the purpose of being exported.

HELD: the word "place" in para. (b) was not to be construed ejusdem generis with the word "quay" which immediately preceded it, and, therefore, the residence of the first respondent was a "place" within the meaning of s. 3 (1) (b).

Emerson v. Woods ([1942] N.I.R. 118) and A.-G. for Palestine v. Fakhry Ayyas ([1947] A.C. 332), applied.

[FOR THE IMPORT, EXPORT AND CUSTOMS POWERS (DEFENCE) ACT, 1939, s. 3, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 32, 1939, p. 960.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Emerson v. Woods, [1942] N.I.R. 118.
- (2) A.-G. for Palestine v. Fakhry Ayyas, [1947] A.C. 332; [1947] L.J.R. 879; 2nd Digest Supp.

CASE STATED by a metropolitan magistrate.

At a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Thames Magistrate's Court on Sept. 26, 1950, the appellant, an officer of customs and excise, preferred an information against the first respondent, Percy Alfred Hemmings, a night-watchman employed in Swedish ships in London docks, charging him with having brought to his residence a quantity of coffee for the purpose of its export, contrary to s. 3 (1) (b) of the Import, Export and Customs Powers (Defence) Act, 1939. The second respondent, William George Rowell, a grocer, was summoned for aiding and abetting in the commission of the offence.

It was proved or admitted that during May, 1950, the second respondent delivered to the first respondent at his house 666 pounds of coffee. No money passed between the respondents at the time of delivery. The first respondent sold the coffee to Swedish or other seamen who exported it. Both respondents knew that the coffee was to be sold to seamen and would be taken to their ships and either consumed there or taken to Sweden. At all material times the export of coffee from the United Kingdom without a licence was prohibited. On behalf of the respondents it was contended that the words "or other place" in s. 3 (1) (b) must be construed ejusdem generis with the preceding word "quay," and that the first respondent's residence was not such a place. The magistrate, being of the opinion that the first respondent's residence was not a place ejusdem generis with a quay, dismissed the information and the appellant appealed.

J. P. Ashworth for the appellant.

The first respondent, Hemmings, did not appear and was not represented.

Fearnley-Whittingstall, K.C., and H. E. Myers for the second respondent, Rowell.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is a Case stated by the Metropolitan magistrate sitting at the Thames Magistrate's Court. The first respondent, Hemmings, was charged with bringing to a certain place for export certain prohibited goods, and the second respondent, Rowell, was charged with aiding and abetting him. The magistrate dismissed the summons on these grounds.

"I was of opinion that both respondents knew perfectly well that the second respondent was selling coffee so to speak through the hands of the first respondent to Swedish and other seamen. It was proved that over a period of one month six hundredweights of coffee were sold in that way by the second respondent to the first respondent and that on May 16, 1950, there were only one hundred and fifty-four pounds of coffee left. Nevertheless, I was of opinion that the contention on behalf of the respondents was correct, and that the first respondent's residence at 187, West Ferry Road was not ejusdem generis with a quay. Accordingly, I dismissed all the said informations."

Section 3 (1) of the Import, Export and Customs Powers (Defence) Act, 1939, under which the respondents were summoned, provides:

"If any goods—(a) are imported, exported, carried coastwise or shipped as ships' stores in contravention either of an order under this Act or of the law relating to trading with the enemy, or (b) are brought to any quay or other place, or waterborne, for the purpose of being exported or of being so carried or shipped in contravention either of an order under this Act or of the law relating to trading with the enemy, those goods shall be deemed to be prohibited goods and shall be forfeited . . .”

A serious penalty is imposed which, in addition to other penalties under other Customs Acts, may amount to £500. The magistrate dismissed the summons entirely on the ground that the first respondent's place of residence was not ejusdem generis with a quay, since he held that the words “or other place” must be construed as ejusdem generis with “quay.” That point was dealt with in Northern Ireland in Emerson v. Woods (1) where ANDREWS, C.J., held, for reasons with which I entirely agree, that the words “or other place” are not to be confined to something ejusdem generis with “quay.” That case was cited to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in A.-G. for Palestine v. Fakhry Ayyas (2), and the advice their Lordships there tendered to His Majesty was to the same effect. It is, therefore, clear that the magistrate, to whom, it is fair to say, these two cases were not cited, was wrong in holding that the words “or other place” must be construed as ejusdem generis with “quay.” The case will go back to the magistrate with an intimation that he placed a wrong construction on the section and should conclude the hearing of the case.

HUMPHREYS, J.: I entirely agree.

DEVLIN, J.: I agree.

Case remitted.

Solicitors: Solicitor, H.M. Customs and Excise (for the appellant); Tarlo, Lyons & Co. (for the second respondent).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re BAILEY (deceased). BARRETT v. HYDER AND OTHERS.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Jenkins and Hodson, L.JJ.), January 19, 22, 1951.]

Will—Necessary implication—Gift over on death of B in A's lifetime—B surviving A but predeceasing testatrix.

By her will, dated in April, 1929, a testatrix gave her residuary estate to trustees on trust for conversion and investment and “to pay the income arising therefrom to my [daughter E.] during her life and after her death as to capital and income in trust for my sister-in-law [M.] absolutely if she shall be living at the death of my said daughter but if she shall predecease my said daughter then upon trust for my nephew [G.] absolutely.” In July, 1935, E. died, and in March, 1944, M. died. In February, 1949, the testatrix died, without having altered her will. G. claimed to be absolutely entitled to the residuary estate.

HELD: the gift to M. lapsed for a reason independent of the condition imposed by the will, namely, her death during the lifetime of the testatrix; the gift to G. was limited to operate only if M. predeceased the daughter; in the circumstances it did not appear that the testatrix must a fortiori have intended the disposition over to G. to take effect in the event which had actually happened; the principle in Jones v. Westcomb (1711) (Prec. Ch. 316) did not apply; and, therefore, the gift to G. did not take effect.

Re Graham ([1929] 2 Ch. 127), approved.

Brookman v. Smith (1872) (L.R. 7 Exch. 271), applied.

Re Fox's Estate ([1937] 4 All E.R. 664) and Jones v. Westcomb (1711) (Prec. Ch. 316), distinguished.

[AS TO APPLICATION OF GIFT OVER TO OMITTED EVENTS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 34, pp. 382-385, para. 428; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 44, pp. 1172-1182, Nos. 10148-10218.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Jones v. Westcomb, (1711), Prec. Ch. 316; 24 E.R. 149; 44 Digest 1175, 10165.
- (2) Re Graham, [1929] 2 Ch. 127; 98 L.J.Ch. 291; 141 L.T. 197; Digest Supp. A
- (3) Re Fox's Estate, [1937] 4 All E.R. 664; Digest Supp.
- (4) Re Bowen, [1948] 2 All E.R. 979; [1949] Ch. 67; [1949] L.J.R. 413; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) Brookman v. Smith, (1872), L.R. 7 Exch. 271; 41 L.J.Ex. 114; 26 L.T. 974; 44 Digest 1176, 10177.
- (6) Tarbuck v. Tarbuck, (1835), 4 L.J.Ch. 129; 44 Digest 1139, 9849. B
- (7) Davies v. Davies, (1882), 47 L.T. 40; 44 Digest 1159, 10037.

APPEAL by the first defendant, William George Henry Hyder, from an order of ROMER, J., dated Oct. 13, 1950.

ROMER, J., held that on the true construction of the will of Charlotte Bailey, deceased, the condition on which the residuary estate of the testatrix was to be given to the first defendant had not been complied with and that a partial intestacy resulted. It was argued on behalf of the first defendant that the testatrix's intention disclosed by the will was that the beneficiary (of the three beneficiaries named) living at the date of distribution should take, and that, therefore, although the precise event (expressed in the will) on which the first defendant was to take was not, in fact, the event which defeated the prior interests, the court was bound to treat this as an "a fortiori" case and apply the rule in Jones v. Westcomb (1711) (Prec. Ch. 316) as it was applied in Re Fox's Estate ([1937] 4 All E.R. 664). C D

Salt, K.C., and H. E. Francis for the first defendant, who claimed as residuary legatee.

C. A. Settle, Mendel and Harold Lightman for those claiming as next of kin. E
P. S. A. Rossdale (M. Bowles with him) for the plaintiff, the trustee of the will.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R.: By her will, which was dated in April, 1929, the testatrix, Charlotte Bailey, so far as relevant, gave all her residue to trustees on trust for conversion and then to hold the resulting investments

"to pay the income arising therefrom to my said daughter Eva Ellen during her life and after her death as to capital and income in trust for my sister-in-law Mary Alice Bailey absolutely if she shall be living at the death of my said daughter but if she shall predecease my said daughter then upon trust for my nephew George Hyder absolutely." F

It is apparent from the language which I have read that on the face of it the testatrix provided, subject to a life interest in her daughter's favour, for a gift to her sister-in-law (hereinafter called Mrs. Bailey), conditionally on her surviving the testatrix's daughter, and that the testatrix then provided for the alternative event of Mrs. Bailey not surviving the testatrix's daughter, in that event the property being given to George Hyder, the first defendant and the appellant before us. G

The daughter, Eva Ellen Leeson, died in July, 1935, shortly after the making of the will. On the face of it, therefore, from that date the provision in the will to the effect that George Hyder should take absolutely in the event of Mrs. Bailey predeceasing the daughter could never take effect, but it is to be noted that the testatrix (who, one must assume, knew of the death of her own daughter though there is no evidence about it) did not then or at any time thereafter alter the will. In March, 1944, Mrs. Bailey died, and in February, 1949, the testatrix died also. It will be seen that an event, therefore, occurred for which in terms H no provision was made by the will, viz., that both the daughter and Mrs. Bailey predeceased the testatrix herself. If the result is that the gift over in favour of George Hyder cannot now take effect, it follows that the testatrix has died intestate as to her residue. No doubt, that is a circumstance proper to be taken into account in considering the question presented for our determination, for it has been said that certainly where there is ambiguity the court should tend to that view of the construction which would not produce an intestacy. On the other hand, the fact that on a certain view an intestacy would follow does not justify the court either in giving an unnatural meaning to the words or altogether re-writing the will so as to produce a result which might appear to be more satisfactory.

In the circumstances I have mentioned the present proceedings were started, the plaintiff being the trustee of the will, and the first defendant, George Hyder, claiming, notwithstanding the imperfection of the language used by the will, to be entitled to the residue. The remaining defendants are, with the first defendant, as far as we know, the testatrix's next-of-kin. The matter came before ROMER, J., and he felt constrained to decide in favour of the next of kin. He observed:

"I confess that, were I free from authority and able to treat myself as the supreme authority, I would find that the necessary degree of probability had been attained, and that, therefore, the principle [in Jones v. Westcomb (1)] ought to be applied."

The learned judge then considered Re Graham (2) and, a later decision in this court, Re Fox's Estate (3), and a decision of WYNN-PARRY, J., in Re Bowen (4). He felt himself bound by the authority of Re Graham (2) to hold that the will must take effect according to its language, and that, accordingly, there was no provision in the events which happened sufficient to pass the beneficial interest to George Hyder. For myself, I confess that I sympathise strongly with the opinion expressed in the language which I have read of ROMER, J., for, on reading this will, I find it impossible to persuade myself that, had the testatrix been asked the question: "Having regard to the death of your daughter and your sister-in-law, what do you intend to happen to your residue?", she would have done other than answer: "In that event it should go to George Hyder." Having considered the authorities, however, I have felt, like the learned judge, constrained to hold that, posing that question and suggesting that answer, there is nevertheless not sufficient to justify this court in doing what I think would amount to a re-writing of the will, and that, if the court did so, we should be acting in disregard of the decisions, particularly of Brookman v. Smith (5), a decision of the Exchequer Chamber which binds this court.

I also feel bound to say that in the course of the argument I have felt impressed by the circumstance that both my brethren have felt less difficulty than I have.

In a case of this kind it would be perhaps a convenient starting point to look at the passages cited from THEOBALD ON WILLS, 10th ed. There are two passages I would like to cite. At p. 456 I find:

"When there is a gift over upon a certain contingency, it will not take effect, unless the exact contingency happens. Thus, if there is a gift to A with a gift over if he dies in the testator's lifetime, and A dies simultaneously with the testator, the gift over does not take effect. There are here two distinct and independent events, in which the gift to A will lapse: death in the testator's lifetime and death simultaneously with the testator, one of which the testator has contemplated and the other not. No doubt it may be said that the gift over might be read as equivalent to 'if A does not survive me to B'; but this would be making a will for the testator, since the event that has happened does not include the event contemplated, and it cannot be said that, if the gift over was to have effect, if A died in the testator's lifetime, a fortiori it was to have effect, if A died simultaneously with the testator."

The passage beginning "a fortiori" is an anticipation of the so-called rule in Jones v. Westcomb (1), which is later referred to on p. 456, and was mentioned by ROMER, J. To that I must in due course return, but, first, I will read the second of the passages which I have indicated. There is a series of numbered paragraphs under the general heading on p. 458 "Gifts over upon death of the legatee under a given age." Number 2 is:

"If A dies over twenty-one in the testator's lifetime, the gift over does not take effect. In this case, since A, if he had survived, would have taken an indefeasible interest, the failure of the gift to him is due to lapse only, which the testator cannot be supposed to have contemplated, and the event, on which alone there is a bequest to the claimant, has not occurred."

Again, under No. 3 (c) there is a similar rule applicable in the case of a gift to a class at twenty-one, but I think it will take up time unduly for me to read that in full. From those passages, if they are correct, it would appear to follow that the law stands thus. If there is a gift to take effect on a certain condition, plus a gift over on non-fulfilment of the condition, and the first gift lapses for reasons independent of the condition, the court, generally speaking, cannot by inserting some new passage in the will get rid of the effect of the lapse and fill the gap which it has created. If, as I think, that is the law, it must apply to this case. There was here a gift after the death of the life tenant (the daughter) to pay the capital and income to Mrs. Bailey absolutely, if she should be living at the daughter's death. She was, of course, living at the daughter's death, but the gift lapsed because she was not living at the testatrix's death. The will provided for the alternative event—alternative, that is, to the condition attached to the first gift—if Mrs. Bailey should predecease the daughter, which she did not do. Mrs. Bailey, having survived the daughter, would, if she had survived the testatrix, have taken the residue absolutely, but her not surviving the testatrix caused the gift to lapse. In other words, the gift did not fail as a result of the non-fulfilment of any condition or term imposed by the will, but because the law requires that a beneficiary under a will should survive the testatrix in order to take the benefit conferred.

That the law is as I have stated emerges, I think, from certain of the cases which have been cited and were relied on and formed the basis of EVE, J.'s decision in Re Graham (2). It may be convenient to go at once to Re Graham (2) as, I think, on its facts (though the language is not, of course, identical) it is indistinguishable from the present case. Therefore, if we were to hold that the first defendant should succeed in this case we should have to say that Re Graham (2), decided twenty-one years ago by EVE, J., was wrongly decided. In Re Graham (2) a testatrix, after giving a life interest to her parents and to the survivor of them, bequeathed her estate in trust for her husband, if living after the death of the testatrix's parents. She proceeded ([1929] 2 Ch. 129):

"Should he, however, have predeceased both my parents the trust fund shall be held in trust . . ."

for certain other persons. The fact was that the husband did survive both the testatrix's parents, so that, the condition in the will being satisfied, had he survived his wife, he would have taken the whole property, but he, like Mrs. Bailey in this case, predeceased the testatrix, and that fact caused the gift to lapse according to the general law. The learned judge, in a reserved judgment, held that the court could not re-write the will, and however strongly it might be supposed that, if asked, the testatrix would have so provided by her will, nevertheless the court must give effect to the will and its terms, and in the circumstances, therefore, the gift over could not take effect because the event on the happening of which alone it was expressed to take effect had not occurred.

The learned judge based himself in arriving at that conclusion on a series of cases, the last of which was Brookman v. Smith (5) in the Exchequer Chamber. It is unnecessary for me to go through them all, but I am satisfied that they cannot be distinguished from the present case in the way that counsel for the first defendant suggested, that is, on the ground that here the whole emphasis of the provision in the will was on the period of distribution as distinct, for example, from the attainment of a given age as the condition of the gift taking effect, in which latter case, if the beneficiary attained that age (assuming he survived the testator or testatrix) it would be unnecessary for him or her to survive the period of distribution.

That no such valid distinction can be drawn appears from Tarbuck v. Tarbuck (6) which was expressly affirmed in the Court of Exchequer Chamber. In Tarbuck v. Tarbuck (6) the testator devised an estate to his son, A, for life with remainder equally among his children and their heirs as tenants in common. There was a similar devise to another son, B, and his children, and there was a provision that, if one died without children, the estate of that one should go to augment the estate given to the other. Then there was this final provision:

"... but if both his sons should die without leaving lawful issue, then he gave the estates over to C in fee."

A, the first-mentioned son, had issue, but both he and his son predeceased the testator. B had no issue. Therefore, when the testator died it was impossible for the gift to A's son to take effect. But the gift over to C was expressed to be on the term that both A and B died without leaving lawful issue, an event which did not happen. In those circumstances SIR CHARLES PEPPYS, M.R., held that effect could not be given to the gift over. I think I need read only this part of the judgment (4 L.J.Ch. 132):

"It is, as I conceive, clear, that if James and Jonathan had survived the testator, the devise to the nephews and nieces could not have taken effect under the circumstances which happened; and it is, I think, established by authority, that the situation of the parties is not altered by their having died before the testator ... I am therefore of opinion, that the event, on which the nephews and nieces were to take, did not happen ..."

Consequently, there was, as here, an intestacy.

That case, of course, would not bind this court, but in Brookman v. Smith (5), Tarbuck v. Tarbuck (6) was considered by the Court of Exchequer Chamber. Brookman v. Smith (5) was a case of rather more elaboration, but I think the matter can be sufficiently stated in this way. Under the relevant will there was a provision by the testator that certain property should go in these terms:

"And in case every child born, or to be born, [of his daughter] shall die under the age of twenty-one years and without leaving issue, to the use of the heirs and assigns [of the testator's daughter] as if she had continued sole and unmarried."

It happened that there were three children born to his daughter. Two had died in infancy before the date of the will, but at that time one of the children was still alive, and lived to attain majority, but that child also predeceased the testator, and the daughter never had any more children. When the testator died, the question then arose whether the daughter could claim according to the terms of the ultimate limitation. The court decided negatively, for it was said that the event on which (and on which alone) the gift over took effect had not occurred, viz., that of children of the daughter all dying under twenty-one. As I have indicated, one of them lived to twenty-three, but predeceased the testator. The court decided (and in the course of the judgment Tarbuck (6) was clearly approved) that that result must follow. I think it would be proper for me to read a short passage from the judgment of COCKBURN, C.J. (L.R. 7 Exch. 273):

"Now, does the ultimate limitation come into effect? In what case is it to come into effect? It is to come into effect in case any child born—'to be born' we may leave out, because no children were afterwards born—shall die under the age of twenty-one years, and without leaving issue. Did that state of things exist? It did not. A child had been born, which child did not die under the age of twenty-one years, but attained that age, and then died in the lifetime of the testator, without leaving issue. What we are asked to do is to take those words, 'shall die under the age of twenty-one years without leaving issue,' to mean, 'shall, having attained the age of twenty-one years, die in the lifetime of the testator,' because that is what in point of fact has taken place. It seems to me that we should be making a new will, if we were to introduce an entirely new term to meet a new contingency which is not provided for. A great deal has been said about the intention of the testator, which, however, must be more or less speculative. It is possible that he may have had some intention as to the particular event which has happened, but I see no evidence of it. I think it far more probable that the case which has since arisen, and to which we are called upon to apply the terms of this will, was not present to the minds either of those who drew the will, or of the testator who executed it. At the time the will was made there was a child living, and in all probability that child might be expected to outlive the testator, his grandfather."

I need not, I think, read any more, except to say that the Chief Justice observed that testators normally make their wills on the assumption that the persons they intend to benefit will survive them, and, accordingly, do not make provision for what is to happen if they do not.

At one time, I must confess that I thought that, looking at this will, and reading the language without any excursion into realms of speculation, it left on my mind so strong a conviction that the testatrix must have intended the first defendant to take if Mrs. Bailey herself did not survive to enjoy the residue, that the court would be justified in so construing the words or so adding to them by inserting new phrases as to give effect to that intention. I think, indeed, if it is a question of guessing, that the guess in favour of the first defendant, George Hyder, would be even easier than it might have been in Brookman v. Smith (5). Still it is the fact, for reasons of which we know nothing, that this will, made in 1929, was left unaltered by this testatrix for years not only after her own daughter had died, but also after her sister-in-law had died. Apart from speculation, there is the further difficulty that the language which the testatrix has used is not the language one sometimes finds in wills drawn by people themselves without expert assistance, clumsy, inapt and on the face of it ambiguous. This is a lawyer-drawn will, and the language used and the conditions expressed in that language are precise, and Brookman v. Smith (5) seems to me to lay it down, for this court to follow, that in a case such as this there is no right for the court to introduce words into this will which will fill the gap created, not by the happening of some event mentioned by the testatrix, but by the lapse of the gift through, and only through, the designated beneficiary having failed to survive the testatrix. As I have already said, since Mrs. Bailey did survive the testatrix's daughter, if she had survived the testatrix, she would have taken absolutely.

That, then, was the state of the law in 1929, and it only remains to consider whether any subsequent authorities have in any degree affected the position. Very naturally, counsel for the first defendant have placed great emphasis on the decision of this court in Re Fox's Estate (3), not so much because that case on its facts sufficiently resembles this case as to be itself an authority affecting this will, but because the principle of Jones v. Westcomb (1) was there elucidated by ROMER, L.J., in language which, it is said, enables, and, indeed, compels, us to apply the Jones v. Westcomb (1) rule in this case to the relief of the first defendant. I have come to the conclusion that that is not so, and that Fox's case (3) leaves the law (so far as relevant to this case) as it was before and as it was stated in the passages in THEOBALD which I have read.

The matter has been fully argued, and I think it is only just to those arguments that I should deal at a little length with this part of the first defendant's argument. In Re Fox's Estate (3) the testator had no professional assistance in making his will. The will was in these terms ([1937] 4 All E.R. 665):

- A "I give to my executors all my substance upon trust as to one fourth part thereof for my daughter Fanny Sarah Fox for her separate use as to one other fourth part for my daughter Anna Charlotte Perry for her sole use for her life, and after her decease for her children if she shall leave children . . ."

After provisions relating to the other two fourth parts he went on (ibid.):

- B "I declare that benefit hereunder shall become vested on the coming of age of the legatee and that any legacy which by the death of any person shall lapse shall go to my said daughter Fanny Sarah."

The effect of the first part of the declaration was that in respect of the gift in remainder to the children of Anna Charlotte Perry the gift was conditional on those children attaining twenty-one. In fact, Anna Charlotte Perry survived the testator by a very great number of years (over half a century, I think), but she died without having had any issue. The question then arose, having regard to the final words, "that any legacy which by the death of any person shall lapse," whether the gift introduced by those words in favour of Fanny took effect? It

- C could not be suggested that the legacy which was given to the children of Anna at twenty-one "lapsed upon the death of any person." The death of Anna would not cause the "lapse," because Anna only had a life interest. The question, therefore, was: Since the language obviously was intended to cover the case supposing Anna had children and they died under twenty-one, would it also cover the case if she never had any children at all? This court came to the conclusion that the greater included the less, that is to say, if the condition was expressed to take effect on the death of the children under a certain age it must a fortiori take effect if there were no children ever born at all. The conclusion followed the rule in Jones v. Westcomb (1), to which I have already made more than one reference. The facts of that case are fully stated in Fox's case (3) by SIR WILFRID GREENE, M.R. ([1937] 4 All E.R. 666):

- E "That was a case where a testator bequeathed a term of years to his wife for life, and after her death to the child she was enceinte with at the date of the will, and, if such child should die before attaining the age of twenty-one, then one third part to his wife, and two third parts to other persons. The only event in which the property was to be disposed of, in that case, was on the death of that child before twenty-one. In point of fact, the wife was not enceinte at all. It was held, nevertheless, that the bequest took effect."

G The principle of Jones v. Westcomb (1), I think, is stated accurately (and the statement has been cited and relied on in this case and in other cases) by ROMER, L.J., in these terms (ibid., 669):

- H "The principle [of Jones v. Westcomb (1)] is applicable, therefore, only in those cases where the court, looking at all the relevant circumstances of the case, including, of course, the will itself, comes to the conclusion that the testator must a fortiori have intended the disposition over to take effect in the event which has actually happened, although it is not the event which he has specified in his will as the one in which the gift over is to take effect."

It is the main plank of the argument of counsel for the first defendant that this is, as was Re Fox's Estate (3), an a fortiori case, and for this reason. The whole point, say they, of making the provision which this testatrix did that

Mrs. Bailey should only take the estate if she survived the life tenant, the daughter Eva Ellen, was the testatrix's insistence that she, Mrs. Bailey, should be actually there and alive at the date of distribution to take the property for her personal enjoyment. It is obvious if that is so (it is argued) that the testatrix must be treated as having laid down two conditions which had to be satisfied, that is, that Mrs. Bailey would take only if she survived both the daughter and also the testatrix, for, unless she survived the testatrix, the law would (as the testatrix must be taken to have known) cause the gift to lapse. If that is, therefore, the real meaning of the first part of the clause, then, since the testatrix only provided for the gift to the first defendant in the event of Mrs. Bailey predeceasing Mrs. Leeson, it must follow a fortiori that the same result will occur if Mrs. Bailey, whether she survived the daughter or not, does not survive the testatrix. That is an attractive argument, but I have already indicated that I cannot see that its acceptance would be consistent with Brookman v. Smith (5), nor can I see that it follows from the statement of principle which I have read from Jones v. Westcomb (1). It is to be observed that in Jones v. Westcomb (1) there was after the life interest a gift to a person believed to be in being, or about to come into being, to take effect at twenty-one and then a gift over expressed to take effect in the event of that person not attaining twenty-one. To give effect to this gift over it was unnecessary to add to, or alter in any way, the meaning or construction of the first gift, the gift to the child believed to be in its mother's womb. All that it was necessary to do was to say that the gift over expressed to take effect on the child not attaining twenty-one should also take effect on the child not coming into existence at all. There was no inconsistency by adding that rider, so to speak, to the second part of the gift. There was, in other words, in Jones v. Westcomb (1) no question of a person who, had he survived the testator, would have become absolutely entitled, but the gift to whom lapsed by reason of earlier decease. The same is equally true of Re Fox's Estate (3). The will there was more difficult to construe in one sense, but the point again was that there was no need to alter in any way or affect the original gift in remainder to the children of Anna. The only question was whether a provision, expressed to take effect on the death of those children under twenty-one, should operate also in the event that there were no children at all who would ever attain twenty-one. The difficulty, by way of contrast, in the present case, is that, if we look at the first part of this clause, it is to the original gift in remainder that the first essential addition or emendation must be made. You are faced with the difficulty that you are going to try to read the gift over in a sense completely contradictory to the language which is there used. The language used is: "If Mrs. Bailey shall predecease my daughter, then . . ." You have to make that fit in the precisely opposite event of Mrs. Bailey having survived the daughter, but having predeceased the testatrix. That is the problem which confronted the Court of Exchequer in Brookman v. Smith (5), and required an addition beyond anything which the court said could legitimately be made.

To make this will meet the facts as counsel for the first defendant want them met you have got, so far as I can see, first of all to say that the gift to Mrs. Bailey expressed to be conditional on her surviving the testatrix's daughter must also be expressed to be conditional on her surviving the testatrix, for only if you have got those words in do you get the necessary condition for the application of the rule in Jones v. Westcomb (1), namely, that the gift over is incomplete because it in terms only provides for one of the two events which were conditional on the previous gift taking effect. I, therefore, think that there is an important distinction between Jones v. Westcomb (1) and Re Fox's Estate (3), on the one hand (and the older decisions which I have already mentioned), and EVE, J.'s decision in Re Graham (2), on the other. I think the distinction can be expressed in the language which I originally read from THEOBALD on p. 458, where he says, referring to the Re Graham (2) class of case:

"In this case, since A [Mrs. Bailey] if [she] had survived, would have taken an indefeasible interest, the failure of the gift to [her] is due to lapse only, which the [testatrix] cannot be supposed to have contemplated, and the event, on which alone there is a bequest to the claimant [George Hyder], has not occurred."

A I think that is the conclusion from those cases. I think it is correct. I think it does not affect the Jones v. Westcomb (1) type of case or Re Fox's Estate (3) which is, for the reasons I have tried to state, essentially different.

I have dealt at length with this part of the argument out of respect to counsel for the first defendant and also because it is necessary in conclusion to say a word about one other case, Re Bowen (4). In that case WYNN-PARRY, J., was able to do what ROMER, J.—and, indeed, I myself—would have liked to have
B done in this case, namely, to hold that Jones v. Westcomb (1) applied so that the ultimate gift over took effect. There was, however, a difference between Re Bowen (4), on the one hand, and Re Graham (2) and this case, on the other. I will read the words of part of the will in Re Bowen (4). The relevant gift was of

C "my real and personal estate to my trustees upon trust for my dear mother during her life and from and after her decease upon trust for my uncle Evan Bowen. In the event of my said uncle Evan Bowen dying in my mother's lifetime then I give my said real and personal estate " to a named person. It is to be noted that the gift to Evan Bowen was not expressed to be conditional on his surviving the testator's mother. The gift was an absolute one subject to a life interest of the mother, and it did not depend

D on Evan Bowen surviving the mother. Evan Bowen did not survive the testator. The gift over did not, so to speak, match the earlier gift, because it was expressed to be in the event of Evan Bowen "dying in my mother's lifetime." If the testator's mother had survived the testator and Evan had also survived the testator, but died in the mother's lifetime, it might well have been a question whether the gift over took effect according to its strict terms or whether he
E had an absolute interest. That question did not arise, but, as there was no express condition to the gift to Evan Bowen, in the first place those who argued for the ultimate remaindermen—those corresponding with the first defendant, George Hyder, here—had not the difficulty (as in this case) of having to add to the express condition in the first part of the gift. Because the gift to Evan Bowen was not expressed to be conditional that particular problem was not presented,
F and the case was, therefore, on its terms different from the case before EVE, J.—Re Graham (2). So WYNN-PARRY, J., was able to say ([1948] 2 All E.R. 982):

G "In the case now before me it appears to me, on the true construction of this will, that the gift to the uncle was not conditional. I think that the case of Re Graham (2) is distinguishable, and I feel free to apply the test indicated by ROMER, L.J., in Re Fox's Estate (3)."

Because that case is different from the present case it is unnecessary for me to say anything more about it. I, therefore, express no view whether that case was rightly or wrongly decided. That is a matter beyond the interests of the decision of the present case. Suffice it to say that it did differ in a material respect, at any rate in the view of the learned judge, and clearly differed in H language from this case. I think it does not afford any guidance to the decision of this case, and I, therefore, say no more about it. I come back to the first conclusion which I have already indicated, repeating, I confess, my strong feeling of regret, but, in the face of the law as I find it to be and notwithstanding the very strong impression that this will has made on my mind as to what the testatrix's intention would have been expressed to be had she contemplated the events which happened, I, nevertheless, am of opinion that this appeal must be dismissed.

JENKINS, L.J.: I agree that the appeal fails, and I share the regret already expressed by my Lord that, as a matter of established principle, it is impossible for this court to repair the imperfections which the events that actually happened have disclosed in the disposition of this testatrix's residuary estate. But it is not the function of a court of construction to improve on or perfect testamentary dispositions. The function of the court is to give effect to the dispositions actually made as appearing expressly or by necessary implication from the language of the will applied to the surrounding circumstances of the case. In the present case the gift, already referred to by my Lord, is a trust to pay the income arising from the testatrix's residuary estate to her daughter Eva Ellen during her life

A

"and after her death as to capital and income in trust for my sister-in-law Mary Alice Bailey absolutely if she shall be living at the death of my said daughter but if she shall predecease my said daughter then upon trust for my nephew George Hyder absolutely."

B

As my Lord has said, the daughter Eva died in 1935; the sister-in-law survived her, but died in 1944; and the testatrix herself died in 1949. It is thus apparent that the event on which the gift to the testatrix's nephew George was to take effect, according to the express terms of the will, did not happen, because the sister-in-law did not predecease the daughter. Prima facie, therefore, the gift to the nephew George failed in accordance with the cardinal principle read by my Lord from THEOBALD ON WILLS, 10th ed., p. 456:

C

"When there is a gift over upon a certain contingency, it will not take effect, unless the exact contingency happens."

D

It is sought by the first defendant to escape from that general rule on the principle to be deduced from Jones v. Westcomb (1) as explained by the Court of Appeal in Re Fox's Estate (3). I agree with my Lord that it is impossible to bring this case within that class of exception. On examination I think it will be found that all the cases in which the Jones v. Westcomb (1) principle has been applied are cases in which the contingency has either been expressed in imperfect or ambiguous terms or relates to an event of which it may be said in the language of ROMER, L.J., in Fox's case (3) and in the language cited by him from THEOBALD ON WILLS that the gift over "must a fortiori have been intended to take effect" in the event which actually happened.

E

I need not multiply examples. In Jones v. Westcomb (1) itself a child who it was assumed would be born was not born. The gift over was expressed to take effect in the event of the death of the child before twenty-one, and it was held that the gift over took effect in the actual event of the child never coming into existence at all. That, I think, is clearly an a fortiori case. The event provided for may be said to include the event which happened. Similarly, in Re Fox's Estate (3) the gift over was to take effect in the event of what the testator inaccurately termed lapse owing to the death of any legatee. What actually happened was that a daughter, whose children were to take in remainder after her, died never having had any children. It was held that the event of a failure in that way of the daughter's children should be included by implication as one of the events in which the gift over was to take effect. Another example is Davies v. Davies (7), where the testator gave his residuary estate in trust for his wife for life providing she should survive him for twelve months and remain unmarried, and he gave his wife certain powers of disposition over the estate. There was a gift over in case of his wife dying within the twelve months from his own decease. The wife died in his lifetime and it was held that the gift over took effect. That, I think, could fairly be described as an a fortiori case, and also, perhaps, as a case where the language of the gift over was not wholly accurate and might be capable of bearing a construction making it equivalent to: "If my wife shall not be alive at the expiration of the period of twelve months from my decease."

F

G

H

In the present case, however, the testatrix, as it seems to me, has provided in clear and unambiguous language, on the one hand, the event in which the gift to the sister-in-law is to take effect—that is, “if she shall be living at the death of my said daughter”—and, on the other hand, the event in which the gift to George Hyder is to take effect—that is, “if she, the sister-in-law, shall predecease my said daughter.” The first event happened and the second did not.

A I find it impossible to hold that, as a matter of necessary implication from the language used by the testatrix, an intention is sufficiently expressed, or must be imputed to her, of making a gift to her nephew George not only in the event expressed in the will, but in the opposite event which actually happened of the sister-in-law surviving the daughter, should the sister-in-law, having so survived, die in the lifetime of the testatrix. In my view, it is impossible to hold
B that the testatrix contemplated or provided for this combination of events at all. It may very well be that, had it been pointed out to her that the sequence of events which took place might happen and that in such case there would be an intestacy, she would have been anxious to supply the deficiency, and in all probability she would have said that in those circumstances also she wished her nephew George to take. But it is one thing to say
C that, if it had been pointed out to the testatrix that she had not provided for a certain eventuality, she would probably have provided for it in a certain way, and quite another to hold that the contingencies expressed in her will in clear terms must be added to or altered in order to give effect to what would probably have been the testatrix’s intention if she had appreciated that the contingencies as expressed did not provide for that other possible state of affairs. That course,
D I think, clearly is not open to us on the authorities, or, indeed, on any principle of construction. In my view, this case falls within the principle stated in Tarbutt v. Tarbutt (6) and in Brookman v. Smith (5) as opposed to the line of cases in which the Jones v. Westcomb (1) principle has been adopted. This is a case in which, as in Re Graham (2), the first taker of an absolute interest under the term of the will had satisfied the condition of the gift in the lifetime of the testatrix, and the testatrix cannot be supposed to have contemplated the failure
E of the gift by lapse. The condition on which the sister-in-law was to take had been fulfilled in the testatrix’s lifetime by her surviving the daughter, and the failure was due to lapse and lapse alone. For these reasons I agree with my Lord, as I have said with regret, that the appeal should be dismissed. I also agree with him that it is unnecessary to decide whether Re Bowen (4) is validly
F distinguishable on the ground on which the learned judge who tried the case found himself able to distinguish it.

HODSON, L.J.: I agree with the construction placed on this will by the learned judge. In the events which have happened it has been found that the gift over cannot take effect. That is quite clear on the plain words of the will itself, but it was argued before the learned judge on the principle of Jones v. Westcomb (1) that the court was at liberty to uphold the gift if it could find that
G if the testatrix had contemplated the events which happened there was an overwhelming probability that she intended the remaining gift to take effect. To my mind, that is putting an argument on the basis of Jones v. Westcomb (1) which that case will not bear. As my Lords have pointed out, it could be said in Jones v. Westcomb (1) that the greater included the less. That cannot be said
H here where it is necessary for the first defendant to contend that the exact opposite of what has happened produces the necessary result from his point of view. I think the learned judge was right in the view which he took that this case was on all fours with Re Graham (2), in a considered judgment in which EVE, J., considered the old cases including Brookman v. Smith (5). The language of COCKBURN, C.J., following the passage which the Master of the Rolls has already read, seems to me to be directly in point in considering this particular case. He said (L.R. 7 Exch. 274):

"Are we to force the words of the will, or rather to interpolate new words into it, in order to make it meet this altered and, as I think, in all probability, unforeseen state of things? I think we cannot do that. If there is anything ambiguous in the will, and from the context you can gather the intention of the testator, it is possible that in such a case you may make the language of the remainder of the will meet what you clearly conceive to be the meaning of the man making it. But I see nothing in that which is expressed, and nothing in the rest of the will which would lead me to suppose that it was intended to provide for this contingency, which it would have been so easy to provide for, which a few words would have made perfectly clear, and which, if it had been present to the mind of the testator, he would have provided for. I do not think that we are to make the words of the will embrace that which they do not embrace, and which I do not think, by implication, they were intended to embrace. That would have been my view of the case, independently of the authority of the case of Tarbuck v. Tarbuck (6), which is directly in point. That decision seems to me to be based on sound principles, nor can I find that it has been anywhere overruled, either directly or indirectly . . ."

In this case there is no ambiguity, and it seems to me impossible to say that by necessary implication the contingency which has arisen must be treated as having been provided for. I agree that the appeal fails.

Appeal dismissed. Costs of all parties as between solicitor and client to be paid out of the residue of the estate.

Solicitors: Adam Burn & Son (for the first defendant); Henry Boustred & Sons, agents for Percy Walker & Co., Hastings; and Crofts & Ingram and Wyatt & Co., agents for Sprott & Sons, Crowborough, and Judge, Hackman & Judge (for other defendants); Lovell, Son & Pitfield, agents for Robinson & Allfree, Ramsgate (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

NOTE.

McCULLOCH v. HANNAM.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., and Devlin, J.), January 19, 1951.]

Food and Drugs—Analyst's certificate—Added water in milk—Statement of opinion—Admission of certificate in evidence—Food and Drugs Act, 1938 (c. 56), s. 81 (1)—Public Analysts Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 840), reg. 4.

CASE STATED by Dorchester (Dorset) justices.

On July 22, 1950, an information was preferred by the appellant, Thomas McCulloch, sampling officer of the Dorset County Council, against the respondent, Frank Leslie Ralph Hannam, milk producer and retailer, charging him with having had in his possession for sale milk to which water had been added, contrary to the Food and Drugs Act, 1938, s. 24 (1) (c). The appellant put in the following certificate in the form prescribed by reg. 4 of the Public Analysts Regulations, 1939, made under s. 66 of the Food and Drugs Act, 1938:

"I, the undersigned, public analyst for the county of Dorset, do hereby certify that I received on June 2, 1950 . . . a sample submitted as a sample of milk for analysis which was marked No. B 3447 dated June 2, 1950, signed W. K. Nattrass, sealed . . . and weighed . . . about seven fluid ounces. I further certify that I have analysed it, and as a result of my analysis I am of opinion that: the constituents of the sample included the following substances in proportions as under:

Total milk solids 10.54 per cent.
including:—

A milk fat 3.20 per cent.
 milk solids other than milk fat 7.34 per cent.

and that it consisted of: milk not more than eighty-seven parts per cent: added water at least thirteen parts per cent. This opinion is based on the above figures and on the Sale of Milk Regulations, 1939. The presence of added water was confirmed by the freezing point. No change had taken place in the constitution of the article that would interfere with the analysis."

B The respondent did not require that the analyst should be called as a witness. Evidence was called by the respondent to show that no water could have been, or was, added to the milk. The justices dismissed the information, being of the opinion that the statement in the certificate that the milk consisted of thirteen parts of added water was a statement of opinion, and, therefore, not admissible as evidence under s. 81 of the Act unless the analyst was called as a witness.

Fay for the appellant.

The respondent did not appear.

D LORD GODDARD, C.J.: The justices took too narrow a view of the effect of s. 81 of the Food and Drugs Act, 1938. The question was whether a certificate of a public analyst was sufficient evidence of the fact that a certain sample of milk contained added water and the justices say that, in spite of the evidence to the contrary given by the respondent, they would have found that there was added water if they could have accepted the analyst's certificate as evidence. Section 81 (1) provides:

E "In any proceedings under this Act, the production by one of the parties of a document purporting to be a certificate of a public analyst in the prescribed form, or of a document supplied to him by the other party as being a copy of such a certificate, shall be sufficient evidence of the facts stated therein, unless, in the first-mentioned case, the other party
F requires that the analyst shall be called as a witness."

The prescribed form provides that the analyst can state: "I further certify that I have analysed it"—that is, the sample—"and as the result of my analysis I am of opinion that," and then he sets out his opinion. In this case the analyst found that the sample contained "milk not more than eighty-seven parts per cent.: added water at least thirteen parts per cent." The G justices thought that, unless the analyst was called to give evidence, that was not enough, because the opinion that the sample consisted of added water of at least thirteen parts per cent. was a statement of opinion and not of fact, but everything which the analyst states with regard to his analysis is a matter of opinion. It cannot be more than that. It is rebuttable and the statutory form obviously contemplates that the analyst will give his certificate in this
H form. We think the case must go back to the justices with an intimation that in the opinion of this court the analyst's certificate was admissible as evidence in full and prima facie shows that there were at least thirteen parts of added water in this milk.

Case remitted.

Solicitors: Booth & Blackwell, agents for C. P. Brutton, Dorchester (for the appellant).

F.A.A.

BRITISH AND COLONIAL FURNITURE CO., LTD. AND OTHERS v. WILLIAM McILROY, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Jenkins and Hodson, L.J.J.), January 25, 1951.]

Landlord and Tenant—New lease—Interim order—Application by tenant—Undertaking by landlord not to dispossess tenant during proceedings for new lease—Right of tenant to interim order—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 5 (1), (13).

Tenants of business premises applied for an interim order under s. 5 (13) of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, authorising them to continue in possession of the premises pending the completion of proceedings taken by them for the grant of a new lease under s. 5 (1) of the Act. At the hearing of the application the landlords gave an undertaking to the court that they would take no steps to dispossess the tenants before the termination of the proceedings and no interim order under s. 5 (13) was made.

Held: the landlords having offered an undertaking which, in the view of the court, was satisfactory, the court was entitled, in its discretion, to accept that undertaking in lieu of making an interim order under s. 5 (13).

Semble: although s. 5 (13) was framed permissively, once it was shown that proceedings under s. 5 (1) for a new lease could not be completed before the termination of the tenancy, the court should, in the absence of special circumstances, make an interim order.

[AS TO TENANT'S RIGHT TO A NEW LEASE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 297-301, paras. 340-345; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST Supp.]

APPEALS by the tenants of business premises from a decision of PARKER, J., dated Dec. 20, 1950, whereby he refused to make interim orders under s. 5 (13) of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, on the ground that the landlords had given an undertaking not to take steps to dispossess the tenants of the premises during the hearing of proceedings for the grant to them of new leases.

Weitzman and Hawser for the tenants.

Winn for the landlords.

JENKINS, L.J.: These are two appeals by two tenants of the same landlords in proceedings under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927. The short effect of that Act is that tenants who, or whose predecessors in title, have been carrying on business in leasehold premises for a specified minimum period may claim at the termination of their tenancy on quitting their holding compensation for goodwill, subject to the statutory requirements being complied with. Section 4 of the Act deals with compensation for goodwill. In s. 5 there are provisions that where a tenant would be entitled to claim compensation for goodwill, but alleges that the compensation he would receive would not make good the loss he would suffer by disturbance, he can claim a new lease in lieu of compensation. In such a case an application is made to the prescribed tribunal for a new lease, combined, as a rule, with a claim for compensation in the alternative. In the present case both tenants are claiming a new lease, and the parties agreed, as they were entitled to under s. 21 (1) (a), that the matter should be dealt with by the High Court instead of in the county court which is the usual tribunal for this purpose.

In a case in which there is a claim for a new lease it is obviously important that the tenant should be able to remain in the premises in question without a break pending the decision of the matter. Otherwise the object of the Act, namely, the preservation of the tenant's business and goodwill in the particular premises, would be frustrated, because it would be open to the landlord, between the termination of the contractual tenancy—if I may so describe it—and the commencement of a new lease granted under the order of the tribunal, to eject the tenant on the ground that the tenancy had come to an end. To deal with that situation s. 5 (13) of the Act provides:

"Where it appears to the tribunal that proceedings under this section cannot be completed and a new lease in accordance with the order of the tribunal entered into before the termination of the tenancy of the tenant, and that the delay is not due to any default on the part of the tenant, the tribunal may make an interim order authorising the tenant to continue in possession of the premises for such time after the termination of his tenancy and on such terms as the tribunal may allow."

A

In the present two cases applications were made for directions, including the question of interim protection under s. 5 (13). Those applications came before SLADE, J., in chambers on Dec. 14, 1950. On that occasion the landlords' solicitors offered an undertaking that the landlords would take no steps to dispossess the tenants before the termination of the proceedings. On that undertaking being offered, the learned judge made no order under s. 5 (13) in either case, and the undertaking was embodied in the orders made as an undertaking given to the court. It appears that the tenants, having further considered the position, were not satisfied with that undertaking, and the two applications were brought on again on Dec. 20, and were dealt with by PARKER, J. All objections to their being re-heard were waived, and PARKER, J., decided that no order varying the order of SLADE, J., should be made. This is an appeal from the two orders of PARKER, J., to that effect, one in each of these two proceedings.

B

C

Counsel for the tenants contend that it follows from the obvious intention of s. 5 (13) and the type of protection it is designed to give that, although the sub-section is framed permissively in the form that the tribunal "may" make an interim order, so as to give the tribunal discretion in the matter, yet, once it is shown that the proceedings cannot be completed and implemented by the grant of a new lease (if so ordered) before the termination of the tenancy, then, unless the tenant has been in default in some way or there are other special circumstances, the tribunal ought to make an interim order. That, prima facie, is the right view of the sub-section. A case in which an interim order was refused would, I should say, be an exceptional one because it is essential to the effective operation of the Act that a tenant who may get a new lease should be left undisturbed until the matter has been determined. Counsel, however, as it seems to me, carry that argument to a wholly excessive length. They say that, even if the landlord appears before the court and gives an undertaking to the court which will fully protect the tenant in his interim possession of the premises, nevertheless, the court is obliged to say: "No, an order will be made. An undertaking will not be accepted." That is a contention which I am constrained to reject. In interlocutory proceedings it is a matter of everyday occurrence, where the court is asked to make an order for which there is a prima facie case and the party against whom the order is sought appears and offers an undertaking which the court regards as meeting the case, for the court to say: "In view of this undertaking no order will be made." That seems to me to be a regular and proper exercise of the discretion.

D

E

F

G

Counsel for the tenants say, however, that in these two cases the orders ought to have been made because certain pending legislation, namely, the Leasehold Property (Temporary Provisions) Bill, if, and when, it comes into force, and providing it comes into force in the form in which the Bill now stands, will give some advantage to a tenant in occupation under an interim order which would be denied to a tenant who is in possession under an undertaking given to the court in lieu of an actual order under sub-s. (13). To demonstrate that this pending legislation would, or might have, that effect we were invited to look at and to construe the print of the Bill. We refused to do that. In my judgment, it is contrary to all principles that we should decide these two cases not simply on matters relevant to the particular landlord and tenant legislation as it stands, but by reference to possible alterations in the law which may be made under legislation yet to be passed. Indeed, I cannot see how the possible operation of future legislation can have any bearing on the question whether the learned judge properly exercised his discretion under s. 5 (13). The only object of sub-s. (13) is to maintain the status quo until the claim for a new lease has been adjudicated on under the provisions of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927. It is not designed to give any ulterior advantage to one side or the other. It is simply to keep the matter open in order that the new lease, when granted, may achieve its purpose of protecting the tenant in the enjoyment of the premises without the disturbance which might otherwise take place at the determination of the contractual tenancy. In my judgment, the undertaking which was given to the court in each of these two cases gave the tenant all the protection he could reasonably require or could be regarded as entitled to under s. 5 (13). I, therefore, hold that there is no substance in either of these appeals, which fail and should be dismissed.

H

HODSON, L.J.: I agree.

Appeals dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Paisner & Co. (for British & Colonial Furniture Co., Ltd.); Sidney Torrance & Co. (for Maurice Lennard & Warde's Hollywood Film Star Shoes, Ltd.); Hale, Ringrose & Morrow (for the landlords).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

READ'S TRUSTEE IN BANKRUPTCY v. SMITH (PORTMAN BUILDING SOCIETY, Third Party).

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Roxburgh, J.), December 19, 20, 21, 1950, January 24, 1951.]

Judgment—Tender—Claim for £149—£106 paid into court—£136 awarded to plaintiff—Amount for which judgment should be given—Costs.

The plaintiff claimed from the defendant £149 16s. 9d. in respect of work done by him on behalf of the defendant. The defendant alleged that, having regard to the cost of remedying certain defects in the work, £106 11s. 9d. was the reasonable price therefor, and offered that amount to the plaintiff. The plaintiff refused to accept the offer, and the defendant paid £106 11s. 9d. into court. The court held that the sum due to the plaintiff was £139 16s. 9d., and it was argued by the defendant that, in view of the offer of payment of £106 11s. 9d., judgment ought to be given for £33 5s. with liberty to the plaintiff to take out of court £106 11s. 9d., and, consequently, that under the County Courts Act, 1934, s. 47 (1) (a) (i), the plaintiff was not entitled to costs.

HELD: the defendant could not plead tender because he had not offered the full amount claimed and did not in his defence admit the contract on which the action was founded, and in the absence of a good plea of tender there must be judgment for the plaintiff for £139 16s. 9d. with costs.

Dixon v. Clark (1848) (5 C.B. 365), applied.

James v. Vane (1860) (29 L.J.Q.B. 169), not applied.

[AS TO COSTS AFTER PAYMENT INTO COURT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 26, p. 99, para. 187; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Practice, pp. 874-876, Nos. 4156-4163.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Dixon v. Clark, (1848), 5 C.B. 365; 16 L.J.C.P. 237; 136 E.R. 919; 12 Digest 321, 2658.

(2) James v. Vane, (1860), 2 E. & E. 883; 29 L.J.Q.B. 169; 2 L.T. 281; 121 E.R. 330; 12 Digest 327, 2726.

ACTION by the trustee in bankruptcy of Charles Read to recover £149 16s. 9d., being the balance of the price of work and labour done by the bankrupt for and on behalf of the defendant.

A The defendant served a third-party notice on the Portman Building Society claiming an indemnity. The defendant paid £106 11s. 9d. into court, and, ROXBURGH, J., having held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover £139 16s. 9d. against the defendant, the form of the order to be made in the circumstances was considered in connection with the question of costs.

C. A. Settle for the plaintiff.

M. R. Hoare for the defendant.

B Hewins for the third party.

ROXBURGH, J.: In his defence, the defendant said:

C "If and in so far as the said bankrupt, his servants or agents, did any work in and about the said premises either for and on behalf of the defendant or at all (which is not admitted) such work was undertaken in purported pursuance of two specifications prepared by [one, Stiff,] for and on behalf of the Portman Building Society, the mortgagees of the said premises. If and in so far as it is alleged that the said work was executed pursuant to any contract express or implied between the said bankrupt and the defendant (which is not admitted) such contract was an entire contract for the complete execution of the whole of the works specified as aforesaid, and no sum became, or could become, due or payable in respect of the execution of a part only of such works. Neither the said bankrupt nor any person on his behalf completed the whole of the said works. Further or alternatively, in so far as any of the items of work specified as aforesaid were executed, the same were not completed fully or efficiently or at all, but were defective. The defendant admits that the reasonable total price for the proper and efficient execution of such of the said items as were executed would be the said sum of £204 16s. 9d., but says that the reasonable costs of remedying the said defects is £43 5s., in consequence whereof the reasonable total price for the said items is £161 11s. 9d. and no more."

E £55 had been paid by the defendant, and, making allowance for that payment, F the net amount claimed by the plaintiff was approximately £149, and the net amount which the defendant was prepared to pay was approximately £106. The defence continued:

G "The defendant accordingly, by letter to the plaintiff's solicitors, dated Dec. 27 aforesaid, . . . tendered a cheque for the said sum of £106 11s. 9d. but the said solicitors, by letter dated Dec. 28 aforesaid, refused to accept the same, and upon the same being again tendered as aforesaid by letter to the said solicitors, dated Dec. 29 aforesaid, such tender was again refused. No objection was taken with regard to any of the said tenders that the same were by cheque, but only that the amount tendered as aforesaid was insufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim. The defendant H accordingly brings into court the said sum of £106 11s. 9d."

I have, in my judgment, awarded the plaintiff £139, which is £10 less than he claims, and £33 more than the defendant paid into court. On that judgment, what does the plaintiff recover? But for an authority which is causing me much difficulty, I should have answered without hesitation that he recovers £139, and that the judgment should direct that the plaintiff should be at liberty to take out of court the £106 paid into court in part satisfaction of the judgment. Counsel for the defendant argues, however, that that is wrong. He says that the court ought to order that the plaintiff do recover £33, and he be at liberty to take the sum paid into court out of court in addition to the said sum of £33.

Pausing there for a moment in a somewhat obscure branch of the law, it is plain that this was not a tender in the technical sense. In Dixon v. Clark (1) WILDE, C.J., says (5 C.B. 376):

"The argument further involved the general question, whether a tender of part of an entire debt is good: and several ancient and modern authorities bearing on this question, were referred to, but no case directly in point was cited; nor have we been able to find any. On consideration, however, we are of opinion, upon principle, that such a tender is bad . . . In actions of debt and assumpsit, the principle of the plea of tender, in our apprehension, is, that the defendant has been always ready (toujours prêt) to perform entirely the contract on which the action is founded; and that he did perform it, as far as he was able, by tendering the requisite money; the plaintiff himself precluded a complete performance, by refusing to receive it. And, as, in ordinary cases, the debt is not discharged by such tender and refusal, the plea must not only go on to allege that the defendant is still ready (uncore prêt), but must be accompanied by a profert in curiam of the money tendered. If the defendant can maintain this plea, although he will not thereby bar the debt . . . (for that would be inconsistent with the uncore prêt and profert in curiam), yet he will answer the action, in the sense that he will recover judgment for his costs of defence against the plaintiff—in which respect the plea of tender is essentially different from that of payment of money into court. And, as the plea is thus to constitute an answer to the action, it must, we conceive, be deficient in none of the requisite qualities of a good plea in bar."

In this case there were two defects which prevent the offer of payment from being regarded as a tender in the technical sense. First, only a part of the sum due was tendered. I have held that the sum due was £139, and the sum tendered was only £106. I am not concerned with appropriation in this case. It was an entire claim, and the sum of £106 was tendered in satisfaction of the entire claim. Moreover, so far from being toujours prêt to perform entirely the contract on which the action is founded, the defendant, in his defence, did not admit it. Therefore, it seems to me that, regarded from the technical point of view, this is not a good plea of tender.

I pass to the difficult case, James v. Vane (2). In that case (29 L.J.Q.B. 169) the declaration contained counts for goods sold and delivered, work and service done and materials provided, use and occupation of rooms and apartments, and upon accounts stated. Plea, except as to £26 10s. 6d., parcel, etc., never indebted. Secondly, as to the said sum of £26 10s. 6d., that the defendant was always ready and willing to pay to the plaintiff the said sum of £26 10s. 6d., parcel of the money claimed, and that before action he tendered and offered to pay the same to the plaintiff, but he refused to accept it, and that the defendant now brought into court the said sum of £26 10s. 6d. ready to be paid to the plaintiff. Pausing there, that looks like a good plea of tender, if—and that, of course, was the footing on which it was pleaded—the sum due was £26 10s. 6d. and no more. In other words, I think that was intended to be a technical plea of tender, which would have been well founded if the court had not awarded a larger sum. The report states:

"Issues were taken and joined upon these pleas. At the trial, which took place at the last Durham Assizes, it appeared that the action was brought to recover two sums of £24 8s. 10d. and £4 10s. 6d., and the jury found as to £26 10s. 6d., that the defendant did tender and offer to pay the same to the plaintiff, but he refused to accept it, and that the said sum was not enough by £2 8s. 10d. to satisfy the claim of the plaintiff in respect of the matter to which the within plea was pleaded."

Pausing there, it would seem to follow that it was a bad plea of tender because, as I have already said, it is established by authority that a lesser sum cannot be tendered in satisfaction of a larger sum so as to make a good tender. The report continues:

A "The judge refused to certify that the cause was a proper one to be tried before him, and, upon taxation, the master decided that the plaintiff was entitled to costs upon the higher scale, and taxed them accordingly. Subsequently, Hindmarch obtained a rule, calling upon the plaintiff to show cause why the master should not review his taxation."

B If there is, in fact, a good tender in law, it seems to me clear that the judgment should be that the action be dismissed with costs, but, of course, the plaintiff, notwithstanding that the action is dismissed with costs, is allowed to take out of court the sum paid into court. Therefore, if the defence had been made good in the present case, the order would have been that the action be dismissed with costs, but the plaintiff be at liberty to take out of court the £106 paid into court. Again, supposing the claim had been for two sums of, say, £100 and £30, and supposing the defence of tender had been made good as to £100 and the £100 had been brought into court, and the £30 claim had been resisted, C but had ultimately been found to be good, I am equally clear judgment would be for £30 and not £100. But is it the same thing if no good plea of tender is established? Apart from this authority, I should have thought, plainly, not. It is said that the plaintiff might have accepted the £106. Of course he might, but he could only accept it in full satisfaction of his claim. He was not in a position to take the £106 and then go on with the action. If he had been in D that position, then it might fairly be said all he would have recovered in the action was the £33, but, if he was not prepared to accept the £106 in full satisfaction, he could not take any of it. He had no option, as far as I can see, but to pursue the claim. He chose to pursue it for £149.

E Where is the doctrine to end? Supposing, before action brought, but with proceedings threatened, a solicitor writes and says: "My client will pay half of your claim if you are prepared to accept it in full satisfaction." Is it to be said in the action, on the footing that the claim is wholly successful, that the plaintiff has not recovered the whole debt, but only half of it, because he could have had the other half without any action? It seems to me that such reasoning will not do.

F If I were quite clear what the court decided in James v. Vane (2), I should be bound, of course, to give effect to that decision, but I must confess to considerable bewilderment. COCKBURN, C.J., says (29 L.J.Q.B. 171):

G "Upon the substantial justice of the case I have no doubt. Where a plaintiff claims an amount which is the result of one demand, and which cannot be separated, he may say to the defendant when a smaller sum is tendered to him, 'I will not take less than the whole sum which I claim,' but where the whole demand is made up of an aggregate of items, and the defendant comes and says, 'I acknowledge that I owe you so much, and there is your money for you,' the plaintiff is wrong if he refuses to take it; and quoad that amount, he ought not to be allowed to keep the claim alive in its entirety, for the purpose of suing the defendant upon it in the superior court, so as to get costs upon the higher scale."

H That passage makes me certain that there were some facts in James v. Vane (2) which are not elucidated in the report. It does not suggest in the report that the £26 10s. 6d. tendered was appropriated to any one of the claims. It looks as though that sum was paid in in answer to the claims aggregating over £28, and, therefore, the sum paid in, on the face of it, was insufficient. The plaintiff, as far as I can see, was wholly entitled to go on with his action for the £28 19s. 4d. How it could be said he was only doing it for the purpose of suings the defendant in a superior court so as to get his costs on the higher scale I cannot see. There must have been some facts which do not appear in the report. The Chief Justice continues (ibid.):

"His claim is really for the excess above that which he ought to have taken when it was offered to him," but it was offered to him in full satisfaction of his demand, and he could not take it except in full satisfaction of his demand, and, ex hypothesi, he was not bound to take it, because he was entitled to demand more. There, again, there must be something which remains obscure owing to some omission from the report. The Chief Justice goes on (ibid.):

"If he declines to accept that which the defendant was always ready to deliver over to him, and thus goes on with the action with a view of getting higher costs, he ought to be prevented from getting them. That is the substance of the matter . . ."

If that was the substance of the matter in James v. Vane (2), it is certainly not the substance of the matter in this case, for there is no doubt whatever that, while I do think that this action ought to have been brought in the county court, there is no reason whatever for suggesting that the plaintiff did not accept the £106 because he wanted to get costs on the higher scale. He obviously could not accept the £106 except on the footing that he abandoned £33 of his lawful claim. I am convinced—though I do not know what the distinction is—that there must be a very great distinction between James v. Vane (2) and the present case. The Chief Justice continues (ibid.):

". . . and then arises the question, whether the plaintiff must be allowed to get them upon any technical ground? My brother PICOTT says, that a plea of tender is not in bar of the action, and, therefore, that the plaintiff must be considered as recovering the whole, because the effect of the action is, that he gets the whole; but when the matter is looked at, it appears not to be so. The effect is this: suppose an action is brought for a given sum of money, and a tender is pleaded of that amount, and the money is brought into court; if the plaintiff does not take it, and goes on with the action, the defendant would have judgment and costs and, therefore, upon technical grounds, and upon the law of the case, the plaintiff has only recovered the excess above the sum which was tendered to him, and that excess which he has recovered is not sufficient to entitle him to have his costs taxed upon the higher scale."

I must confess I cannot follow the sequence of thought involved in the word "therefore." A good plea of tender is a defence, and, accordingly, the action fails and is dismissed with costs, but a bad plea of tender is no defence, and, therefore, the action succeeds—and succeeds, as far as I can see, to the full amount of the claim. Why, because when a good plea of tender is made out the judgment takes a special form, it should follow that whenever a bad plea of tender is pleaded the plaintiff should recover, not the amount of his debt, but only the amount of his debt less something which was proffered under the bad plea I confess I have difficulty in seeing.

CROMPTON, J., says (ibid.):

"If a tender had been pleaded of the whole amount claimed, he could not be said to recover that amount by getting judgment in the action. The effect of the plea of tender, and of its being proved, is, that the plaintiff is deprived of costs upon the higher scale, for he has made claim for something that he does not recover."

There, again, with all respect, I cannot follow it. The effect of a plea of tender, and of its being proved, is not that the plaintiff is deprived of costs on the higher scale, but that his action is dismissed with costs. That is quite clear, and it is so stated by COCKBURN, C.J. CROMPTON, J., continues (ibid.):

"If he would recover nothing if the whole had been tendered to him, the same rule applies here, and shows that he only recovers that amount which is in excess of the sum tendered."

- A I cannot help thinking, where CROMPTON, J., uses the word "tendered," he means tendered in a technical sense, and he has somehow overlooked the fact that there was no tender in the technical sense in James v. Vane (2), or, possibly, the truth is that there was a technical tender for some reason which the report does not disclose, in which case, of course, the reasoning is very easy to follow. In refusing to apply James v. Vane (2), which is an authority that, so far as
- B I know, has not before now been discussed, I feel justified because I am certain that there must be circumstances in that case which differentiate it from the present one. I cannot believe that the law is that when anybody brings money into court, or even offers money out of court, judgment ought to be given only for the difference between the sum recovered and the sum offered merely because, if the plaintiff had been content to do so, he could have taken the sum offered
- C in full satisfaction without any proceedings. Therefore, I hold that the plaintiff has recovered, or will recover, in this action £139, and that he be at liberty to take out of court the £106 paid into court in part satisfaction of this judgment.
- D The form of order which I have made with deliberation, for the reasons which I have given, of itself shows that the plaintiff has recovered more than £100. That being so, ought I to deprive him of any costs? In my view, the County Courts Act, 1934, s. 47, is intended to supply a code in this matter, and although, no doubt, the discretion of the court over costs is very wide, in a matter which is wholly within s. 47 it seems to me that it would be unwise for me to depart from that code. I think I had better say, in case the matter should go to the Court of Appeal, that, if there had been no such code and if I had thought that my discretion was wholly at large, I should have awarded
- E the plaintiff only such costs as he would have had if he had brought this action in the county court, but, having regard to the code in s. 47, to the fact that he has recovered over £100, and to the fact that his conduct is open to no criticism except on this one point of having brought this action in the High Court, I do not think that I ought to treat my discretion as wholly at large.

Order accordingly.

- F Solicitors: Tarry, Sherlock & King (for the plaintiff); Warmingtons (for the defendant); Hewlett & Co. (for the third party).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

FERGUSON v. WEAVING.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Hilbery and Devlin, JJ.), January 17, 18, 26, 1951.]

Intoxicating Liquor—Offences—Consumption after permitted hours—Aiding and abetting—Knowledge of offence by licensee's servants—No knowledge in licensee—Liability of licensee—Licensing Act, 1921 (c. 42), s. 4 (b).

Police officers visiting licensed premises found persons consuming intoxicating liquor outside the permitted hours, contrary to s. 4 (b) of the Licensing Act, 1921. The respondent, the licensee, who was not at any material time present in that part of the premises where the offence was committed, had taken all reasonable precautions to prevent consumption after the closing time, but the waiters she employed had not carried out her instructions.

HELD: in view of the terms of s. 4 knowledge could not be imputed to the respondent to make her guilty of aiding and abetting the commission of the offences by the persons consuming.

[AS TO OFFENCES RELATING TO PERMITTED HOURS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 19, pp. 145, 146, paras. 350-352; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 30, pp. 94-97, Nos. 724-741, Digest Supp., and 2nd Digest Supp.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Smith, (1858), 3 H. & N. 227; 157 E.R. 455; sub nom. Ex p. Smith, 27 L.J.M.C. 186; 31 L.T.O.S. 87; 22 J.P. 450; 33 Digest 361, 707.
- (2) Johnson v. Youden, [1950] 1 All E.R. 300; [1950] 1 K.B. 544.
- (3) Cundy v. Le Cocq, (1884), 13 Q.B.D. 207; 53 L.J.M.C. 125; 51 L.T. 265; 48 J.P. 599; 30 Digest 86, 667.
- (4) Somerset v. Hart, (1884), 12 Q.B.D. 360; 53 L.J.M.C. 77; 48 J.P. 327; 14 Digest 43, 122.
- (5) Somerset v. Wade, [1894] 1 Q.B. 574; 63 L.J.M.C. 126; 70 L.T. 452; 58 J.P. 231; 14 Digest 38, 79.
- (6) Linnett v. Metropolitan Police Comr., [1946] 1 All E.R. 380; [1946] K.B. 290; 115 L.J.K.B. 513; 174 L.T. 178; 110 J.P. 153; 2nd Digest Supp.

CASE STATED by the stipendiary magistrate for Leeds.

At a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Leeds on July 27, 1950, the appellant, a chief inspector of police, preferred informations against twelve persons charging them with consuming intoxicating liquor on licensed premises at a time not within permitted hours, namely, about 10.18 p.m., contrary to s. 4 of the Licensing Act, 1921, and charging the respondent, the licensee of the premises, with aiding, abetting, counselling and procuring the commission of the said offences, contrary to s. 5 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848. The twelve persons were found Guilty and fined, but the charge against the respondent was dismissed.

It was contended on behalf of the appellant that one or more of the respondent's servants either knew of or connived at the offences, that the presence or knowledge of her servants was in law her presence or knowledge, and that the respondent was not entitled to a dismissal of the charges against her merely because she was not personally present at the time of the commission of the offences. For the respondent it was contended that she had no part in or knowledge of the commission of the offences and was not guilty of aiding, abetting, counselling or procuring them.

The magistrate was of the opinion (a) that the respondent was present, not only actually on the premises, but also constructively in that part of the premises where the offences were committed through the presence of her servants who were there; but (b) that the respondent did everything she could to see that the requirements of the law were complied with; and (c) that because one or some of her servants failed in his or their duty, she could not be said to be actually or constructively assisting in the commission of the offences. Accordingly, he dismissed the information against her.

Stanley-Price for the appellant.

G. Pollock for the respondent.

Cur. adv. vult.

- A Jan. 26. LORD GODDARD, C.J., read the following judgment of the court. This is a Special Case stated by the stipendiary magistrate for Leeds, before whom certain persons, who do not appeal, were convicted of consuming intoxicating liquor on licensed premises known as the Oakwood Hotel at a time not within permitted hours. The respondent, who was the licensee of the hotel, was charged with aiding, abetting, counselling and procuring the commission of the said offences, contrary to s. 5 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, the offence itself being created by s. 4 of the Licensing Act, 1921. At the hearing an application was made to amend the information against the respondent by the deletion of the words "aid and abet," so that the information charged her only with counselling and procuring the commission of the offences. Before us it was contended on her behalf that, even if the facts on which the prosecution relied were accepted, they could only establish a case of aiding and abetting, and that there was no evidence that the respondent in any way counselled or procured the commission of the said offences. It is well known that the words "aid and abet" are apt to describe the action of a person who is present at the time of the commission of an offence and takes some part therein. He is then described as an aider and abettor, whereas the words "counsel and procure" are appropriate to a person who, though not present at the commission of the offence, is an accessory before the fact. That all these words may be used together to charge a person who is alleged to have participated in an offence otherwise than as a principal in the first degree was established by Re Smith (1). Whether, where the words "counsel and procure" alone are used, there must be a proof of something more than would establish a case of being an accessory before the fact is not one which we feel necessary to decide in this case. The main point that was argued is one of general importance with regard to offences under the Licensing Acts, and, as we are satisfied that the respondent cannot be convicted as a participant, to use a compendious expression, in the offences charged against the persons who consumed the intoxicating liquor, we give no decision on it.
- The facts found by the magistrate were that on the night in question, soon after 10 p.m., police officers entered the hotel, some going into the concert room and others into the tap-room. In the concert room some sixty or seventy people were sitting at tables, including those persons who were convicted of consuming drink after hours. Three waiters employed by the respondent were on duty in the room and the respondent's instructions to them were that at ten o'clock they were to collect glasses containing any intoxicating liquor before collecting empty glasses, and were to require persons having glasses containing such liquor either to drink it or give up the glass. The respondent was in the central part of the premises, in a place called the service bar. From there she gave two signals, one at five minutes to ten, putting off one light in the room to indicate the approach of closing time, and at ten o'clock she switched off one of the electric chandeliers and the electric fan in each room and the waiters called "time."
- H She went from the service bar into the smoke-room and from there into the lounge, and was going into the concert room when she was made aware of the presence of the police. The magistrate also found that, if the waiters had properly carried out their instructions, all glasses, whether containing liquor or not, would have been collected by ten minutes past ten, and one or more of the waiters in the concert room had failed to carry out his or their duties and instructions. The magistrate found that the respondent was not only present on the premises, but also present constructively through the presence of her servants, but whether she was present constructively is a question of law. The magistrate also found that she did everything she could to see that the requirements of the law were complied with and could not be said to be actively or constructively assisting in the commission of these offences. Accordingly, he dismissed the charge against her.

The argument for the appellant may be summarised as follows. If the respondent herself had been present or had knowledge that the customers were consuming liquor after hours and took no steps to prevent it, she would be aiding and abetting the offence. Although she herself was not present and had no knowledge, yet, as she had placed waiters in charge of the concert room and had, as it was said, delegated the management of the room to them, their knowledge was her knowledge, and she was, accordingly, guilty of aiding and abetting.

The first thing to observe is that, while s. 4 of the Licensing Act, 1921, prohibits a licensee from selling or supplying either by himself or his servants intoxicating liquor outside permitted hours, and also prohibits the consumption in licensed premises of any intoxicating liquor after those hours, it does not make it an offence in the licensee to suffer or permit the consumption of liquor after hours. While it may seem curious that Parliament did not make this an offence in a licensee, nothing would be gained by discussing whether the omission appears to be deliberate or accidental. The fact remains that consuming liquor after hours is only a substantive offence in the consumer. At the same time, there can be no doubt that, if a licensee consciously permits consumption after hours, it would amount to aiding and abetting the offence, but we have now to consider whether, as the section does not create a substantive offence in the licensee, she can be convicted of aiding and abetting by imputing to her the knowledge of her servants.

There can be no doubt that this court has more than once laid it down in clear terms that before a person can be convicted of aiding and abetting the commission of an offence he must at least know the essential matters which constitute the offence: see, for instance, Johnson v. Youden (2). The magistrate in this case has acquitted the respondent of any knowledge of the matters which constituted the principal offence, but it is said that the cases establish that the knowledge of her servants must be imputed to her, and that there are many cases in which a licensee has been convicted although he himself did not know the facts constituting the offence is, of course, beyond question. There are certain offences under the Licensing Acts which arise because the statute imposes an absolute prohibition, for instance, the offence of selling liquor to a drunken person. In Cundy v. Le Cocq (3) it was held that the prohibition against selling to such a person imposed by s. 13 of the Licensing Act, 1872, now replaced by s. 75 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, is absolute and that knowledge of the condition of the person served is not necessary to constitute the offence. On the other hand, there are many offences in which it is necessary to show either that the licensee suffered or permitted the offence to take place, or that he knowingly permitted matters which constitute an offence. There is no material difference between permitting or suffering something and knowingly allowing it to take place, for, as was said in Somerset v. Hart (4) (12 Q.B.D. 362):

"How can a man suffer a thing to be done when he does not know of it?"

The difference between an absolute prohibition and a prohibition against permitting or suffering was pointed out by COLLINS, J., in Somerset v. Wade (5), where, under other words in the same section as was under consideration in Cundy v. Le Cocq (3), the licensee was prosecuted not for selling to a drunken person but for permitting drunkenness on licensed premises. As it was there proved that the licensee did not know that the person in question was drunk the court held he could not be convicted of permitting drunkenness, though they approved the decision in Cundy v. Le Cocq (3) because the prohibition against selling to a drunken person was absolute.

We now turn to the cases in which knowledge has been imputed to a licensee because of the knowledge of his manager or servant. It is unnecessary to go through them all because the principle which applies was laid down, not for the first time, in Linnett v. Metropolitan Police Comr. (6). All the cases on the subject were quoted and, in giving judgment, I said ([1946] 1 All E.R. 382):

- A "The principle does not, in my opinion, depend merely upon the legal relationship between the two persons, the person who actually permitted with knowledge and the person who is convicted although he had no actual knowledge. The point does not, as I say, depend merely on the fact that the relationship of master and servant exists; it depends on the fact that the person who is responsible in law as the keeper of the house, or the licensee of the house if the offence is under the Licensing Act [1872], has chosen to delegate his duties, powers and authority to somebody else."
- B

- We will assume for the purpose of this case that the respondent had delegated to the waiters the conduct and management of the concert room, and if the Act of 1921 had made it an offence for a licensee knowingly to permit liquor to be consumed after hours then the fact that she had delegated the management and control of the concert room to the waiters would have made their knowledge her knowledge. In this case there is no substantive offence in the licensee at all. The substantive offence is committed only by the customers. She can aid and abet the customers if she knows that the customers are committing the offence, but we are not prepared to hold that knowledge can be imputed to her so as to make her, not a principal offender, but an aider and abettor. So to hold would be to establish a new principle in criminal law and one for which there is no authority. If Parliament had desired to make a licensee guilty of an offence by allowing persons to consume liquor after hours it would have been perfectly easy so to provide in the section. A doctrine of criminal law that a licensee who has knowledge of the facts is liable as a principal in the second degree is no reason for holding that, if she herself had no knowledge of the facts but someone in her employ and to whom she may have entrusted the management of the room did know them, this makes her an aider and abettor. As no duty is imposed on her by the section to prevent the consumption of liquor after hours there was no duty in this respect that she could delegate to her employees. While it may be that the waiters could have been prosecuted for aiding and abetting the consumers, as to which we need express no opinion, we are clearly of opinion that the respondent could not be. To hold the contrary would, in our opinion, be an unwarranted extension of the doctrine of vicarious responsibility in criminal law. The appeal will be dismissed with costs.
- C
- D
- E
- F

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for O. A. Radley, town clerk, Leeds (for the appellant); Collyer-Bristow & Co., agents for Alf. Masser & Co., Leeds (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

DOWNIE v. TURNER AND OTHI

[COURT OF APPEAL (Somervell, Jenkins and Birkett, L.J.J.), November 28, 29, 1950.]

Landlord and Tenant — Lease — Forfeiture — Waiver — Breach of covenant — Covenants against underletting without consent and against user otherwise than as private dwelling-house—Unlawful underletting—Acceptance by landlord of rent—Waiver of forfeiture for breach of covenant as to user.

By an agreement in writing, dated Nov. 9, 1940, the landlord agreed to let a dwelling-house to the tenant for one year and thereafter, subject to notice as therein provided, at a weekly rent of 35s. The agreement provided inter alia that the tenant "will not during such tenancy underlet the said premises or any part thereof without the previous consent in writing of the landlord: such consent shall not be unreasonably withheld to a good tenant . . . and the tenant agrees that he will not use the said premises for any other purpose than as a private dwelling-house . . ." In February, 1946, without obtaining the landlord's consent, the tenant sub-let part of the premises as living accommodation to the sub-tenant and his wife. On Oct. 21, 1949, the landlord served a notice to quit on the tenant, and on Nov. 22, 1949, the tenant served a notice to quit on the sub-tenant. On Apr. 4, 1950, the landlord served on the tenant a forfeiture notice under the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 146 (1). After September, 1949, the landlord continued accepting rent from the tenant until Feb. 13, 1950, with knowledge of the sub-letting. It was conceded that the landlord's acceptance of rent after September, 1949, operated as a waiver in respect of the breach of the covenant against underletting, but it was argued that the tenant was in breach of his covenant to use the premises only as a private dwelling-house, and that that breach was continuous and had not, therefore, been waived.

HELD: assuming that the unlawful sub-letting was a breach of the covenant as to user, the acceptance by the landlord of the rent after he had knowledge of the sub-letting constituted a waiver not only of the breach of the covenant against underletting, but also of the breach of the covenant with regard to user.

Walrond v. Hawkins (1875) (L.R. 10 C.P. 342), as explained by BRAMWELL, L.J., in Lawrie v. Lees (1880) (14 Ch.D. 262), applied.

[AS TO WAIVER OF FORFEITURE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 253-257, paras. 286-289; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 497-503, Nos. 6427-6504.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Penton v. Barnett, [1898] 1 Q.B. 276; 67 L.J.Q.B. 11; 77 L.T. 645; 31 Digest 484, 6327.
- (2) Atkin v. Rose, [1923] 1 Ch. 522; 92 L.J.Ch. 209; 128 L.T. 653; 31 Digest 152, 2871.
- (3) Walrond v. Hawkins, (1875), L.R. 10 C.P. 342; 44 L.J.C.P. 116; 39 J.P. 248; sub nom. Waldron v. Hawkins, 32 L.T. 119; 31 Digest 504, 6515.
- (4) Griffin v. Tomkins, (1880), 42 L.T. 359; 44 J.P. 457; 31 Digest 58, 2044.
- (5) Lawrie v. Lees, (1880), 14 Ch.D. 249; 49 L.J.Ch. 636; 42 L.T. 485; 44 J.P. 506; affd., (1881), 7 App. Cas. 19; 51 L.J.Ch. 209; 46 L.T. 210; 31 Digest 172, 3049.
- (6) Barton v. Keeble, [1928] Ch. 517; 97 L.J.Ch. 215; 139 L.T. 136; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the landlord from an order of His Honour JUDGE SIR GERALD HURST, K.C., Croydon County Court, dated July 28, 1950.

The landlord claimed possession against both the tenant and the sub-tenant and the sub-tenant's wife for forfeiture, but JUDGE HURST gave judgment for the defendants on the ground that the breaches of covenants of which the landlord complained had been waived by the landlord's subsequent acceptance of rent.

L. A. Blundell for the landlord.

Lermon for the tenant.

The sub-tenant and his wife were not represented.

A SOMERVELL, L.J.: This is an appeal from a decision of His Honour JUDGE SIR GERALD HURST, K.C. The landlord claimed possession of premises on the ground of forfeiture. The lease contained two covenants with which we are concerned. The first was a covenant in the ordinary form that the tenant

"... will not during such tenancy underlet the said premises or any part thereof without the previous consent in writing of the landlord: such consent shall not be unreasonably withheld to a good tenant."

B The second is a covenant by which:

"And the tenant agrees that he will not use the said premises for any other purpose than as a private dwelling-house or do anything thereon that may be or become a nuisance or annoyance to the said landlord or adjoining tenants or neighbours."

C The date of the agreement was Nov. 9, 1940. In February, 1946, the tenant sub-let to the sub-tenant without obtaining the consent required by the covenant. On Oct. 21, 1949, the landlord served a notice to quit on the tenant and on Nov. 22, 1949, the tenant served a notice to quit on the sub-tenant. On Apr. 4, 1950, the landlord served his notice in respect of forfeiture under the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 146 (1). That notice was ignored and proceedings were taken.

D The tenant relies on waiver, and it is common ground that after September, 1949, the landlord accepted rent with knowledge that there had been a sub-letting to the sub-tenant and that he and his wife were in the house. The landlord continued to accept rent until Feb. 13, 1950. As the learned judge stated in his judgment (and it is not disputed that it is accurate):

E "Counsel for the landlord concedes that the landlord's acceptance of rent has operated as a waiver in respect of the unlawful underletting, but he contends that the breach of covenant 'not to use the said premises for any other purpose than as a private dwelling-house' is continuous, and has, therefore, not been waived. In these circumstances, the only issue between the parties is whether or no the last mentioned breach is 'continuous' in character."

F He then referred to some cases and quoted a statement from the judgment of RIGBY, L.J., in Penton v. Barnett (1). That was a case of non-repair, where it was held that a breach of a general covenant to keep in repair was a continuing breach. Towards the end of his judgment RIGBY, L.J., said ([1898] 1 Q.B. 281):

G "If there had not been a recurring breach, but something which had happened once for all, the state of things might have been different..."

H The case now before us proceeded in the county court on the basis that the sub-letting and the occupation by the sub-tenant was a breach of the covenant not to use the premises for a purpose other than that of a private dwelling-house, and that was the basis on which the learned judge proceeded. It is plain that, if what happened amounted to a breach of the covenant not to use the premises for a purpose other than that of a private dwelling-house, that breach arose from the sub-tenancy to the sub-tenant and his occupation under the sub-tenancy. If a breach of that covenant was to be relied on, it would not be enough simply to allege that the sub-tenant and his wife were in the house. One does not cease to use one's house as a private dwelling-house because one has a married couple in it. If there was a breach, it must be because the sub-tenant under his sub-lease was given exclusive possession of a part of the house. If, as is conceded, the sub-letting was done once for all, prima facie the breach of the covenant in regard to user is also something which happened once and for all. In answer to that, counsel for the landlord submits that the continued occupation by the sub-tenant is an essential ingredient in the breach of the covenant in regard to user, whereas there would be a breach of the sub-letting covenant even if he did not occupy. I think that that is too fine a distinction on which to base a decision that the breach, if any, of the second covenant, is continuous rather than something done once and for all. Both the sub-letting and the alleged user of the house otherwise than as a private dwelling-house arose, in my opinion, from the sub-tenancy, and it is impossible, I think, in law to distinguish for this purpose and say that the one was done once for all and the other was a continuing breach.

We were referred to a number of cases, but they do not seem to me to help very much. Atkin v. Rose (2) and several of the other cases which were cited were cases where the covenant, a breach of which, it was said, was continuous, was, for example, not to exercise a particular trade. In Atkins v. Rose (2):

“The lease contained a covenant by R. that he would not use or exercise or ‘permit or suffer’ any other person to use or exercise in or upon the demised premises any trade or business other than that of a bag manufacturer.”

The business of a hairdresser was carried on, and there was some evidence that the landlord knew that it was being carried on, though there was no evidence that he knew, as the fact was, that the man carrying on the hairdresser’s business was a sub-lessee. Those cases do not assist, because the covenants deal with quite different subject-matters. Here, where there is a sub-lease for ordinary occupation as a dwelling-house, and it is sought to bring that within the general words of the wider covenant which is, obviously, primarily aimed against business use, it seems to me impossible to differentiate between the two breaches of covenant and say that one was done once and for all, but the other is continuous.

After referring to Walrond v. Hawkins (3), the learned county court judge said that the best way of defining, as it were, what was continuous, was to say it must be “... something which still remains within the tenant’s power to discontinue.”

I am not sure that that is quite right. I think that that might disregard what is very important in these cases, i.e., the landlord’s actual knowledge or the knowledge which he must be presumed to have at the time when he accepts the rent. That it is, however, a factor to be borne in mind in considering whether the breach is continuous or not is, in my view, established by the authorities, which show that there is no single formula which can be applied in all cases.

In Griffin v. Tomkins (4) premises were used in breach of contract for trading purposes, and the landlord accepted rent with some knowledge of the user. The covenant in question was a covenant against permitting or suffering. In his judgment LUSH, J., said (42 L.T. 361):

“I think this case opens a further consideration. I think it is competent to the defendant to show, as was shown here, that he had let that person in under a lease for several years, because the question is whether he permitted or suffered him to carry on business, which would seem to import voluntary acts. According to the decision of the Court of Common Pleas before mentioned [Walrond v. Hawkins (3)], where there is a subsisting tenancy at the time which he could not put an end to, he cannot be said to have permitted or have suffered it. I think, therefore, when he showed that he had already granted a lease for several years, and that the waiver was committed after that lease was granted, and after some interest was known to have existed in the tenant, that assumes a tenancy at all events during the continuance of that lease, and down to such a time as the lessee is able again to enter under that lease."

A That expression of the law shows, I think, that the power to discontinue is an element in considering whether the breach is continuous.

The effect of Walrond v. Hawkins (3) was summarised by BRAMWELL, L.J., in Lawrie v. Lees (5) thus (14 Ch.D. 262):

B "The covenant in that case was that the lessee was not to assign or demise to or permit any other person to occupy the premises or any part thereof without the consent of the lessor. What the Court of Common Pleas said was this, 'What the lessee has done is a demise, and it is a breach of the covenant not to demise, but the lessor has elected not to treat it as a breach or forfeiture, and he cannot say also that the lessee has broken the other covenant that he would not permit any other person to occupy'."

C That seems to me to negative precisely what counsel for the landlord is seeking to do here. He admits that the covenant relating to sub-letting has been waived, and he is seeking to rely on the other covenant as one which says that the tenant must not allow somebody to occupy part of the house as a private dwelling-house. I think that the learned judge was right.

D I have considerable doubt whether on the construction of this lease a sub-tenancy of part of the house to be used as a dwelling-house by the sub-tenant is a breach of the covenant whereby the tenant agrees that he will not use the said premises for any other purpose than as a private dwelling-house. We were referred to cases where, subject to similar covenants, a lessee had let out a house in tenements. It seems to me plain that in so letting the lessee is not using the house as a dwelling-house, but is conducting the business of letting out flats or tenements. In Barton v. Keeble (6) the same principle was applied by EVE, J., to a single sub-letting of three rooms. It is to be noted that the covenant there was in a long lease, and it did not, I think, contain a covenant such as the lease in the present case contained, allowing sub-letting with consent. Of course, if a lessee sub-lets for some purpose other than use as a private dwelling-house, both covenants are broken, but where he sub-lets for the purpose of use as a private dwelling-house it seems to me difficult to say that that is a breach of the first covenant, which, however, provides for consent being given which will make it not a breach and also that it is a breach of the second covenant which has no such provision for consent. I, therefore, am inclined to think that the sub-letting of part of the house for use as a dwelling-house falls within the clause with regard to sub-letting, and is taken out, even if it might otherwise have been within it, from the general covenant with regard to the use of the premises for purposes other than a private dwelling-house. On the basis of the concession made by counsel for the landlord, if that is right, it would make it impossible for him to contend that his client could succeed. For these reasons I think this appeal must be dismissed.

H JENKINS, L.J.: I agree. Counsel for the landlord has by no means succeeded in satisfying me that the learned judge did not come to a correct conclusion. I share the doubt expressed by my Lord whether in this particular tenancy agreement, containing as it does a covenant against underletting without consent, the covenant against using the premises for any purpose other than as a private dwelling-house extends to a sub-letting of part of the house for purely residential purposes. If it does so extend, there is no doubt that curious results might ensue. In the first place, I apprehend that a sub-letting with consent could not be relied on as a breach of the covenant as to user. But that is not the only possible case. The covenant is not to underlet without the consent in writing of the landlord and "such consent shall not be unreasonably withheld to a good tenant." The effect of that qualification would be that the tenant, being desirous of sub-letting, produces a prospective sub-lessee whom he claims to be a good tenant, and asks for consent to sub-let to that person. If the landlord withholds his consent, the tenant then (at his peril it is true) can sub-let to that person and has not committed a breach of the covenant in so doing if he can show that the sub-tenant is a good tenant and that the landlord withheld his consent unreasonably. I ask myself whether in those circumstances the sub-letting so effected, without any breach of the covenant against underletting, would in itself expose the tenant to a forfeiture because it technically involved the use of the premises for a purpose other than as a private dwelling-house, even though the purpose of the sub-letting and the use made of the part sub-let was purely residential.

Be that as it may, I am content, for the purposes of the present case, to assume that a mere sub-letting of part of the premises for residential purposes would in itself constitute a breach of the covenant as to user. Even so, it seems to me that the landlord's contention cannot succeed. It follows from the effect which he attributes to the covenant as to user, and which I for the sake of argument assume it to have, that the sub-letting of part of the premises ex necessitate, and of itself and without any other act on the tenant's part, was a breach of the covenant as to user, even though the sub-letting was for purely residential purposes. That being the position, what was the effect of the landlord's receipt of rent after Sept. 9, 1949, by which date he admittedly had notice of the sub-letting? The landlord knew that there was a sub-letting of part of the premises. He knew that under the terms of the tenancy agreement that sub-letting was a breach of the covenant against underletting, and also of itself necessarily constituted a breach of the covenant as to user which must automatically continue so long as the sub-tenancy lasted. That being the state of his knowledge, he received rent under the tenancy agreement, thereby confirming the tenancy notwithstanding the breach of covenant constituted by the sub-letting. In those circumstances, I think the conclusion is inevitable that the landlord must be taken to have waived, not merely the breach of the covenant against underletting itself, but also the breach of the covenant as to user so far as that breach was inseparable from, and would necessarily continue during the existence of, and merely by virtue of the existence of, the sub-letting, the breach constituted by which he had waived.

I agree with my Lord that what was said by BRAMWELL, L.J., in Lawrie v. Lees (5) as to the effect of Walrond v. Hawkins (3) is precisely in point in the present case. The landlord, having waived the breach constituted by the sub-letting, cannot rely on the continuing character of the tenant's breach of the other covenant, namely, the covenant as to user brought about by the mere fact of that same sub-letting, so as to claim a forfeiture notwithstanding his waiver of the breach constituted by the sub-letting itself. The truth is that the two breaches are no more than different aspects of one and the same act. If the act in one aspect of it is waived as an available breach of covenant, it seems to me it is necessarily waived as an available breach in its other aspect also. Accordingly, I agree that the appeal fails.

BIRKETT, L.J.: I agree. In the agreement of Nov. 9, 1940, there were two covenants with which we have been concerned. The first was not to underlet without the previous consent in writing of the landlord. After a few other matters dealing with repairs and the payment of rent and matters of that kind there comes the other:

"And the tenant agrees he will not use the said premises for any other purpose than as a private dwelling-house."

The argument of counsel for the landlord, as I understood it, was that there were two complete and separate covenants, and that there have been two quite separate and distinct breaches of those covenants. There has been a distinct breach of the covenant not to underlet without consent, and an equally clear breach of the covenant not to use. The matter is artificial and unreal, to my way of thinking, in that the act which is complained of, from which everything else follows, was the actual underletting. The tenant sub-let so that the sub-tenant and his wife might live in the house, and those two matters, namely, the sub-letting and the user as a dwelling-house, seem to me to be one and indivisible, as I suggested in the course of the argument. I share the view which has been already expressed about whether a sub-letting for residential purposes is a breach of the contract not to use other than as a private dwelling-house, but I will deal with this case on the footing that it is. Counsel for the landlord says, with regard to the first distinct covenant and the first distinct breach, that admittedly there has been a waiver by the acceptance of rent with the knowledge that the sub-tenant was living on the premises, and, therefore, he has no effective claim with regard to that covenant, but he says with regard to the other equally distinct covenant, the user, that that is distinguished by the fact that it is a continuing breach as distinct from the breach of the covenant not to sub-let which occurred once and for all. He said that that continuing breach has not been waived by the acceptance of rent, as he concedes it was in the first instance. On that the learned county court judge said:

“ . . . the only issue between the parties is whether or no the last mentioned breach [the user] is ‘continuous’ in character. Having considered [the cases] it seems to me that the touchstone to distinguish between continuous and non-continuous breaches of covenant is to ascertain whether the breach is ‘something which had happened once for all’ (per RIGBY, L.J., in Penton v. Barnet (1) ([1898] 1 Q.B. 281)) or something which still remains within the tenant’s power to discontinue.”

With regard to the words “within the tenant’s power to discontinue” counsel for the landlord, I thought, put a very powerful argument on that matter when he said that, if that were the test, then it was within the tenant’s power to discontinue, for he could provide alternative accommodation. He could possibly persuade the sub-tenant to go, or in the last and most desperate resort he could go himself. No doubt, in a proper case, indeed in this case, this is a fact which has to be considered, but it is not of itself conclusive or decisive. My own clear view about this matter is that it is impossible in this case to make that clear line of demarcation which counsel for the landlord contended for between the two covenants, the covenant to sub-let and the covenant not to use other than as a private dwelling-house. I fully agree that it is impossible to make that differentiation or distinction in this case, and that being so, I think there was not merely a waiver of the first covenant not to sub-let, but equally by the same act there was waiver of the second covenant with regard to user, if, indeed, the sub-letting was a breach at the same time of that covenant. For these reasons I agree with the judgments which have been delivered and that this appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Gilbert, Clarke & Gilbert (for the landlord); W. H. Matthews & Co. (for the tenant).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re GINGER (deceased). ROBERTS AND ANOTHER v. WESTMINSTER HOSPITAL GOVERNORS AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Roxburgh, J.), January 23, 1951.]

Will—Legacy—To found a cot in a hospital—“Found.”

By her will, dated May 30, 1940, a testatrix, who died on Nov. 23, 1948, requested her trustees to found a cot in the Westminster Hospital in memory of her uncle G. and to use for this purpose £1,000 free of duty. At the date of the will the Westminster Hospital had a scheme for the endowment of beds and cots, which provided for the perpetual endowment of a bed for £1,000 or of a cot for £600. Subject to the regulations of the hospital, persons so endowing beds and cots were to enjoy the privilege of naming such beds and cots and also of nominating patients to occupy them. At the date of the death of the testatrix, the hospital could allocate one of its existing beds to the bequest and affix nearby an appropriate inscription commemorating G., but it could not allow the trustees to nominate patients.

HELD: on the true construction of the will the right to nominate was not a condition of the bequest and by her use of the word “found” the testatrix did not mean that a new cot must be established; nor was the gift impracticable on the ground that it was not possible to allocate the bequest to any particular cot, for the testatrix’s intention was that the bequest should be applied to the maintenance of the hospital to the extent of the cost of the upkeep of one cot; and, on the governors’ undertaking to name a cot in perpetuity in memory of G. and to invest the legacy and apply the income thereof for purposes relating to hospital services, payment should be made to them.

A.-G. v. Belgrave Hospital ([1910] 1 Ch. 73), applied.

[AS TO PRINCIPLES OF CONSTRUCTION OF A WILL, see HALSBURY, Hails- ham Edn., Vol. 34, pp. 187-198, paras. 240-253; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 44, pp. 530-550, Nos. 3472-3685.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Morgan’s Will Trusts, [1950] 1 All E.R. 1097; [1950] Ch. 637.
- (2) A.-G. v. Belgrave Hospital, [1910] 1 Ch. 73; 79 L.J.Ch. 75; 101 L.T. 628; 8 Digest 300, 784.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine whether, on the true construction of the will of Emma Ginger deceased and in the events which had happened, a gift contained in the said will expressed to be given “to found a cot in the Westminster Hospital, now at Westminster, S.W.1, in memory of my uncle Godfree William Ginger late of Great College Street, Westminster” (i) ought to be paid to the board of governors of Westminster Hospital, or (ii) was a valid charitable bequest which ought to be administered by a scheme cy près, or (iii) lapsed.

Dunbar for the plaintiffs, the executors of the will.

J. L. Arnold for the first defendant, the Board of Governors of Westminster Hospital.

N. S. S. Warren for the second defendant, the residuary legatee.

Denys B. Buckley for the Attorney-General.

ROXBURGH, J.: Emma Ginger, who died on Nov. 23, 1948, by her will dated May 30, 1940, requested her trustees, the plaintiffs, to found a cot in the Westminster Hospital in memory of her uncle, Godfree William Ginger, late of Great College Street, Westminster, and to use for this purpose £1,000 free of duty.

At the date of the will the Westminster Hospital had what might be called a scheme for the endowment of beds and cots which is set out in its 222nd annual report, being its report for the year ending Dec. 31, 1939, and is as follows:

A "In response to more than one demand for information on the subject the House Committee have formulated the following scheme for the endowments of beds and cots: perpetual endowment, bed £1,000, cot £600; endowment during life of donor, bed £400, cot £250; support by annual donation, bed £50, cot £30. Subject to the general rules and regulations of the hospital, persons endowing or supporting beds and cots as above, will enjoy the privilege of naming such beds and cots, and also of nominating patients to occupy them, it being always understood that the medical officers of the hospital shall decide whether any patient so recommended is a fit and proper person to be admitted, in accordance with the laws of the hospital."

B Pausing there, the scheme is of a somewhat nebulous character. It does not suggest what is to happen if, for example, two persons each contribute £500 for the purpose of naming a bed. Were they to nominate in rotation, or had they to nominate jointly, or how was the scheme to work? Again, it does not suggest what was to happen if the endowment of the bed or cot was by will. C Had the testator's executors the right to nominate patients? The scheme is silent on this point. Nor, again, does it say what is to happen when a bed or cot is endowed by an innumerable number of small donors. I mention these matters because counsel for the residuary legatee has argued that by her will the testatrix must be deemed to have been, by implication, accepting the terms D of that scheme. I do not think so. If she was treating herself as founding a bed and was attaching any importance to rights of nominating patients, she would obviously have inquired what were the rights of nominating patients vested in the estates of deceased persons. But if, on the other hand, as counsel suggested, she is treating her trustees as founding the bed by her direction, she had no reason to assume that the scheme which was in operation in 1939 would necessarily still be in operation, without any modification whatsoever, at the date E of her death. I cannot but think that what she really had in mind was, first, to give a charitable legacy to this hospital, and, secondly, to commemorate her uncle, Godfree William Ginger.

F After her will, but before her death, the National Health Service Act, 1946, came into operation and the Westminster Hospital was designated as a teaching hospital. It now comprises a group of hospitals. So far as that point is concerned, the case is, I think, covered by Re Morgan's Will Trusts (1). At any rate, nobody has suggested the contrary. What I might call, for simplicity, the old Westminster Hospital is still carrying on the work of a hospital at St. John's Gardens. The continuity of the hospital work is beyond dispute, but that is not the end of the case. The present position is that the hospital G can allocate one of its existing beds to this bequest and affix nearby an appropriate inscription commemorating Godfree William Ginger, but it cannot allow the trustees to nominate patients.

H Counsel for the residuary legatee says that this bequest is, therefore, impracticable. First of all, he says that "found" means "establish as a new thing" and, indeed, but for authority, there would be a good deal to be said for that construction of the word "found." Secondly, he says that the right of nomination is an essential condition of this bequest. Thirdly, he says that it is not possible to allocate the bequest to any particular bed. In my view, these questions, except one, are answered by A.-G. v. Belgrave Hospital (2). The one which is not answered is the suggestion that the right to nominate is a condition of this bequest. I see nothing to lead me to hold that that is so. There is not a word about nomination of patients in the bequest. I have already said that I do not think that the testatrix can have been thinking about the right of nomination because, if she had been doing so, she would have made some inquiries as to who could nominate, and how and in what circumstances. Accordingly, as a matter of construction, I hold that the question of nomination is not involved in this bequest.

As regards the rest, I think I had better read from the headnote in A.-G. v. Belgrave Hospital (2). Alfred John Randall gave " . . . to the Belgrave Hospital for Children . . . to found a bed there to be called 'the Eleanor bed' the sum of £1,000 . . ."

The question that was there decided was that only the income of the legacy could be applied for current purposes and not the capital thereof, but in the course of that decision SWINFEN EADY, J., said a great many things which throw light on this question, if they do not decide it. First, it is stated in the summary of the facts:

"There was evidence that the annual cost of maintaining a bed or cot in a London hospital was about £75, much more than the income of £1,000 invested in trust investments."

What does that mean? I feel no doubt that it means that a rough estimate had been made of the total cost of maintaining a hospital. Then the number of beds had been taken (though I should have thought that the cost would vary according to the size of the hospital), the total cost had been divided by the number of beds, and thereby a resultant figure of £75 per bed had been obtained. It is clear that nobody calculated the actual cost of maintaining any particular bed in any particular hospital. SWINFEN EADY, J., said ([1910] 1 Ch. 75):

"Dealing with the language of the will . . . it is quite obvious that the intention of the testator was to establish something. He says 'to found a bed,' which involves the idea of establishing it; and it is established by providing a capital sum, the revenue from which may maintain it or be applied to its maintenance. The suggestion is that the language of the will would be satisfied if some bed already existing in the hospital is called the 'Eleanor bed,' and that when that is once done the fund may be applied as part of the annual income of the charity and expended in the year in which it is paid over, if necessary, and dealt with as annual income. In my opinion the idea involved in founding a bed negatives any such dealing with the fund."

He says that many different phrases are used involving the same idea, and continues (ibid., 76):

"Whether the words are 'to found a bed,' or 'to establish a bed,' or 'to endow in perpetuity a bed,' or other similar or analogous expressions, the result is the same, namely, that the fund is to be used for the purpose of investment, so that by the income thereof . . . so far as it will extend, the needs of the bed or cot may be satisfied."

Pausing there, he does not really mean the needs of the particular bed or cot, because it would be impossible for any hospital to keep a separate account in respect of each bed in the hospital and to apportion the general costs of the hospital between the respective beds. What he must mean is that the fund is to be used for the purpose of investment so that the income may be applied for the maintenance of the hospital with its beds in it, and the statement that the income will maintain a bed is merely an indication of the extent to which the income in question will maintain the hospital. Say, for example, the hospital has one hundred beds and the income is said to maintain a bed, that means that the income is approximately a one-hundredth part of the whole expenditure of the hospital.

The learned judge goes on (ibid., 77):

A "I determine that, according to the true construction of the will, the £1,000 cannot be properly applied as annual income of the charity, but should be invested and the income applied, so far as it will extend, in the maintenance of a bed to be called the 'Eleanor bed.' It was suggested that that must necessarily involve establishing some new bed, but I see no reason for that. It will be sufficient for some bed already existing in the hospital to be appropriated for this purpose, and the bed named the 'Eleanor bed,' as I gather has been done. The fund must be invested, and the income will be applied towards the maintenance of the bed."

B As I have already said, I think that does not mean the maintenance of the particular bed, but it means towards the maintenance of the hospital to the extent of one bed in the hospital. I think, therefore, that that case answers both the remaining points made by counsel for the residuary legatee. The word in that case was "found", and SWINFEN EADY, J., said that that did not necessarily involve establishing a new bed. I also gather that he meant, C not that the income was to be allocated to any particular bed, but that the income was to be applied for the general purposes of the hospital and that it would approximately maintain the hospital to the extent of one bed.

D I do not think that in this case the passing of the National Health Service Act, 1946, is of much importance. Apart from the right to nominate, the position is much the same as it was before, except that the hospital is entitled to very substantial contributions from the State towards its maintenance. There is no difficulty, as far as I can see, in the hospital giving an undertaking which will bring this case precisely into line with A.-G. v. Belgrave Hospital (2). Counsel for the board of governors has indicated the willingness of his clients to give the undertaking, and the proposed undertaking has the approval of E the Attorney-General. I shall, accordingly, direct payment of £1,000 to the board of governors of the Westminster Hospital on their undertaking to name in perpetuity a cot in memory of Godfree William Ginger, to invest the said sum in investments for the time being authorised by law, and to apply the income thereof for purposes relating to hospital services rendered by the Westminster Hospital at St. John's Gardens, or such other place to which such F hospital may be removed.

Order accordingly. Costs of all parties to be taxed as between solicitor and client and raised and paid out of the estate in due course of administration.

Solicitors: Oldman, Cornwall & Wood Roberts (for the plaintiffs); Trollope & Winckworth (for the first defendant); Blyth, Dutton, Wright & Bennett, for Menneer, Idle & Brackett, St. Leonards (for the second defendant); Treasury Solicitor.

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

CANDLER v. CRANE CHRISTMAS & CO.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Cohen, Asquith and Denning, L.J.J.), December 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 1950, January 26, 1951.]

Negligence—Accountant—Preparation of company's accounts—Knowledge that accounts to be shown to prospective investor in company—Liability of accountants to investor.

The managing director of a company instructed the defendants, a firm of accountants and auditors, to prepare the company's accounts and balance sheet. A clerk in the employment of the defendants (who was held to be acting throughout within the scope of his employment) prepared the accounts knowing that they were wanted for the purpose of inducing the plaintiff to invest money in the company. The draft accounts were shown to the plaintiff in the presence of the defendants' clerk, and, relying on their accuracy, the plaintiff subscribed £2,000 for shares in the company. The defendants subsequently certified the accounts in the form in which their clerk had shown them to the plaintiff. The accounts had been prepared negligently, but without any fraud on the part of the defendants or their clerk, and did not give a true statement of the financial position of the company. The company went into liquidation, and, there being no assets, the plaintiff lost the money which he had invested. In an action against the defendants for damages for negligence, or, alternatively, for breach of their duty, in the circumstances, to give to the plaintiff accurate information.

HELD: (i) (DENNING, L.J., dissentiente) in the absence of a contractual or fiduciary relationship between the parties, the defendants owed no duty to the plaintiff to exercise care in preparing the accounts and giving their certificate, and the plaintiff, therefore, could not maintain against them an action for negligence.

Le Lievre v. Gould ([1893] 1 Q.B. 491), applied.

Principles in Donoghue v. Stevenson ([1932] A.C. 562), discussed.

(ii) since the plaintiff had invested the sum of £2,000 before the relationship between the defendants, as auditors, and the plaintiff, as shareholder, of the company had become operative, no damage flowed from the breach of any such duty owed by the defendants to the plaintiff in that capacity.

[AS TO DUTY TO TAKE CARE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 23, pp. 568-584, paras. 823-835; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 36, pp. 12-16, 19, 20, Nos. 33-67, 87-90.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Donoghue v. Stevenson, [1932] A.C. 562; 101 L.J.P.C. 119; 147 L.T. 281; Digest Supp.
- (2) Slim v. Croucher, (1860), 1 De G.F. & J. 518; 29 L.J.Ch. 273; 2 L.T. 103; 45 E.R. 462; 35 Digest 34, 262.
- (3) Evans v. Bicknell, (1801), 6 Ves. 174; 31 E.R. 998; 35 Digest 33, 249.
- (4) Brownlie v. Campbell, (1880), 5 App. Cas. 925; 35 Digest 9, 24.
- (5) Derry v. Peek, (1889), 14 App. Cas. 337; 58 L.J.Ch. 864; 61 L.T. 265; 54 J.P. 148; 35 Digest 27, 185.
- (6) Nocton v. Ashburton (Lord), [1914] A.C. 932; 83 L.J.Ch. 784; 111 L.T. 641; 35 Digest 55, 493.
- (7) Le Lievre v. Gould, [1893] 1 Q.B. 491; 62 L.J.Q.B. 353; 68 L.T. 626; 57 J.P. 484; 35 Digest 28, 187.
- (8) Smith v. River Douglas Catchment Board, [1949] 2 All E.R. 179; 113 J.P. 388; sub nom. Smith & Snipes Hall Farm, Ltd. v. River Douglas Catchment Board, [1949] 2 K.B. 500; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (9) Winterbottom v. Wright, (1842), 10 M. & W. 109; 11 L.J.Ex. 415; 152 E.R. 402; 36 Digest 63, 407.

- (10) Alton v. Midland Ry. Co., (1865), 19 C.B.N.S. 213; 34 L.J.C.P. 292; 12 L.T. 703; 144 E.R. 768; 12 Digest 49, 269.
- (11) Pasley v. Freeman, (1789), 3 Term. Rep. 51; 100 E.R. 450; 35 Digest 25, 163.
- (12) Dixon v. Bell, (1816), 5 M. & S. 198; 105 E.R. 1023; 36 Digest 57, 354.
- (13) Low v. Bouverie, [1891] 3 Ch. 82; 60 L.J.Ch. 594; 65 L.T. 533; 35 Digest 33, 254.
- A (14) Cann v. Willson, (1888), 39 Ch.D. 39; 57 L.J.Ch. 1034; 59 L.T. 723; 35 Digest 33, 242.
- (15) Ashby v. White, (1703), 2 Ld. Raym. 938; 92 E.R. 126; revsd., (1704), 1 Bro. Parl. Cas. 62; 1 E.R. 417; 36 Digest 289, 376.
- (16) Chapman v. Pickersgill, (1762), 2 Wils. 145; 95 E.R. 734; 1 Digest 24, 193.
- B (17) Haseldine v. Daw & Son, Ltd., [1941] 3 All E.R. 156; [1941] 2 K.B. 343; 111 L.J.K.B. 45; 165 L.T. 185; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (18) Old Gate Estates, Ltd. v. Toplis & Harding & Russell, [1939] 3 All E.R. 209; 161 L.T. 227; Digest Supp.
- (19) Shiells v. Blackburne, (1789), 1 Hy. Bl. 158; 126 E.R. 94; 1 Digest 435, 1267.
- C (20) Heskell v. Continental Express, Ltd., [1950] 1 All E.R. 1033.
- (21) Everett v. Griffiths, [1920] 3 K.B. 163; 89 L.J.Ch. 929; 123 L.T. 280; 84 J.P. 161; affd., [1921] 1 A.C. 631; 90 L.J.K.B. 737; 125 L.T. 230; 85 J.P. 149; 33 Digest 267, 1862.
- (22) Fish v. Kelly, (1864), 17 C.B.N.S. 194; 144 E.R. 78; 44 Digest 108, 1032.
- D (23) Langridge v. Levy, (1837), 2 M. & W. 519; 6 L.J.Ex. 137; 150 E.R. 863; affd., (1838), 4 M. & W. 337; 150 E.R. 1458; sub nom. Levi v. Langridge, 1 Horn & H. 325; 7 L.J.Ex. 387; 35 Digest 51, 464.
- (24) George v. Skivington, (1869), L.R. 5 Exch. 1; 39 L.J.Ex. 8; 21 L.T. 495; 39 Digest 441, 705.
- (25) Heaven v. Pender, (1882), 9 Q.B.D. 302; 51 L.J.Q.B. 465; 47 L.T. 163; 47 J.P. 87; revsd., (1883), 11 Q.B.D. 503; 52 L.J.Q.B. 702; 49 L.T. 357; 47 J.P. 709; 36 Digest 8, 9.
- E (26) Blacker v. Lake & Elliot, Ltd., (1912), 106 L.T. 533; 39 Digest 458, 849.
- (27) Humphery v. Bowers, (1929), 45 T.L.R. 297; Digest Supp.
- (28) Ultramares Corp'n. v. Touche, (1931), 174 N.E. 441; 255 N.Y. 170.
- (29) Denny v. Supplies & Transport Co., Ltd., [1950] 2 K.B. 374.
- F (30) Laurence v. Fox, (1859), 20 N.Y. 268.

APPEAL by the plaintiff from an order of LLOYD-JACOB, J., made on July 14, 1950, whereby he dismissed the plaintiff's claim for damages, holding that the defendants owed to the plaintiff no duty to take care.

The defendants, a firm of accountants and auditors, had prepared, by their clerk, a company's accounts and balance sheet which, to the knowledge of the clerk, were intended to be put before the plaintiff to induce him to invest money in the company. The accounts had been prepared negligently and did not give a true view of the state of the company's affairs. Relying on the accuracy of the accounts, the plaintiff subscribed the sum of £2,000 for shares in the company. He lost this money and claimed that the defendants were liable for the loss which he had sustained. It was admitted that the defendants had failed to use proper care and skill in the preparation and presentation of the accounts, but there was no fraud on their part. The learned judge dismissed the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the defendants owed no duty to the plaintiff to exercise care in preparing and presenting the accounts. On appeal by the plaintiff it was contended for the defendants that (i) in the absence of fraud, a duty to take care in making statements could arise only out of a contractual duty owed by the defendants to the plaintiff or a fiduciary relationship between the parties, and no such duty or relationship existed, and (ii) a duty to take care arose only where the result of a failure to take care would cause physical damage to persons or property. The facts are fully set out in the judgment of DENNING, L.J.

N. Lawson for the plaintiff.

Foster, K.C., and Quass for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 26. The following judgments were read.

DENNING, L.J.: In September, 1946, the plaintiff invested £2,000 in a company called Trevanance Hydraulic Tin Mines, Ltd. (which I will call "the company"), and he has lost it all because the company turned out to be a failure. He now brings this action against the defendants, who are the company's accountants and auditors, claiming that he was induced to invest the money because of erroneous accounts put before him by them and on the faith of which he invested his money. The judge has found that the accounts were "defective and deficient" and presented a position of the company which was "wholly contrary to the actual position," that the accountants were "in fact extremely careless in the preparation of the accounts," and that the damage suffered by the plaintiff was "plain," but, nevertheless, the judge dismissed his claim because, in his opinion, there was no duty of care owed by the accountants to the plaintiff.

The case raises a point of law of much importance because counsel for the plaintiff submitted that, although there was no contract between the plaintiff and the defendants, nevertheless, the relationship between them was so close and direct that the defendants did owe a duty of care to him within the principles stated in Donoghue v. Stevenson (1), whereas counsel on behalf of the defendants submitted that the duty owed by the defendants was purely a contractual duty owed by them to the company, and, therefore, they were not liable for negligence to a person to whom they were under no contractual duty. Before discussing this point of law, I must set out the facts in some detail so as to see what exactly the relationship was between the plaintiff and the defendants.

In November, 1944, a Mr. Donald Ogilvie formed the company to work some surface tin in Cornwall, with himself as chairman and managing director for life. In March, 1946, he told the defendants that he wanted them to prepare the accounts of the company and to write up the books. The defendants entrusted the work to one of their clerks named Henry Fraser, but he had not done much towards it when, in June, 1946, Mr. Ogilvie told the defendants that he had decided "to go out for substantially more capital" and asked them to insert an advertisement in "The Times" as quickly as possible. They arranged it for him, and it appeared on July 8, 1946, in these words:

"£10,000 established tin mine (low capitalisation) in Cornwall seeks further capital instal additional milling plant, directorship and active participation open to suitable applicant—Apply," etc.

The plaintiff answered that advertisement in these words:

"I should be interested to take an active part in a Cornish tin mine and have about £2,000 to invest. Will you let me have particulars?"

The defendants sent that letter unopened to Mr. Ogilvie who got into touch with the plaintiff. As a result, in the first half of September, 1946, Mr. Ogilvie showed the plaintiff the Cornish workings and told him that if he invested £2,000 he would get a directorship in the company and a service agreement for two years at £10 a week. The plaintiff said, however, that he wanted to see the balance sheet of the company first. As a result of the plaintiff's request, Mr. Ogilvie started pressing the defendants to get out the accounts. He told their clerk, Mr. Fraser, that he wanted the accounts as quickly as possible, and that they were required to be shown to a potential investor in the company, whose name was Candler. Mr. Fraser was asked in the witness box:

"Q.—Did you assume at that time that the accounts that Mr. Ogilvie was pressing for had some relation to his negotiations with Mr. Candler?

A.—I thought there would be a connection, of course. Yes, I suppose so."

A Mr. Fraser, accordingly, in the middle of September, 1946, worked on the accounts very intensively, going to Mr. Ogilvie's flat two or three times a day for his explanation of various items. He was, as the judge found, under the mistaken impression that it was, in substance, Mr. Ogilvie's business and he accepted Mr. Ogilvie's statements without verification.

B On Monday, Sept. 16, 1946, Mr. Ogilvie asked Mr. Fraser to meet the plaintiff the next day so as to give him information relating to the accounts of the company, and, accordingly, on Tuesday, Sept. 17, Mr. Fraser went with Mr. Ogilvie to meet the plaintiff and took with him the draft accounts which he had by that time prepared. At the meeting Mr. Ogilvie introduced Mr. Fraser to the plaintiff as the representative of Crane Christmas & Co., the accountants and auditors of the company who were preparing the accounts, and he introduced the plaintiff to Mr. Fraser as a gentleman who was contemplating an investment in the company, Mr. Fraser knew, of course, of the advertisement which his firm had inserted for new capital, and he knew, when the meeting commenced, that the negotiations depended on the plaintiff being satisfied with the balance sheet of the company. At this meeting on Sept. 17, Mr. Fraser produced the draft accounts. They had already, at that time, on them a certificate ready for signature by the defendants, saying in the usual formula:

D "We have audited the balance sheet as above set forth. We have obtained all the information and explanations we have required and we report that such balance sheet is in our opinion properly drawn up so as to exhibit a true and correct view of the state of the company's affairs, according to the best of our information and the explanations given to us and as shown by the books of the company."

E That certificate was not signed at the time, but Mr. Fraser told the plaintiff that it would be signed with a clear docket, subject to one or two small alterations which he wished to consider for another two or three days. At the meeting the plaintiff took down in his own handwriting a copy of the accounts, because he wanted to put them before his own accountant for advice. There was a conflict of recollection as to how he came to take them down, but the judge said that it did not matter because Mr. Fraser clearly assented to the plaintiff taking a copy. The judge said:

G "Having regard to the fact that Mr. Fraser was plainly aware of the purpose for which the draft accounts were required, I entertain no doubt at all that he was aware of and acquiesced in the showing of these accounts to Mr. Candler: indeed, the meeting would have been wholly pointless but for that purpose."

H Mr. Fraser drew the plaintiff's attention to the fact that some of the items in the draft balance sheet might need revision and the parties arranged to meet again on Sept. 20, 1946. The judge expressly finds that, when the meeting of Sept. 17 broke up, Mr. Fraser must have been satisfied, not only that the plaintiff was considering an investment in the company, but was taking with him and relying on the draft accounts which Mr. Fraser had prepared. The parties did, in fact, meet again on Sept. 20. By that time Mr. Fraser had concluded his examination of the books and drew the plaintiff's attention to some modifications which are for present purposes immaterial. The plaintiff had meanwhile himself got advice from his own accountant and at the end of the meeting the plaintiff told Mr. Ogilvie and Mr. Fraser that he was satisfied and would invest £2,000 in the company. He sent off a cheque for £500 that day to Mr. Ogilvie and the balance of £1,500 on Sept. 25, 1946.

The judge has found that, to Mr. Fraser's knowledge, the plaintiff was induced to believe that the accounts, as modified on Sept. 20, 1946, would be the certified accounts as they emerged from the defendants, and that is what did, in fact, happen. On Sept. 27, 1946, the accounts were certified by the defendants in precisely the same form as Mr. Fraser had shown them to the plaintiff at the meeting of Sept. 20, without any alteration. It has subsequently turned out that the accounts gave an altogether false picture of the position of the company. Instances were given to us which show that there was no verification whatever by the defendants of the information which they were given by Mr. Ogilvie. Thus, among the assets were inserted: "Freehold cottages (at cost) £650." In fact, the company had no title deeds for the cottages. The cottages stood in Mr. Ogilvie's name and he had mortgaged them to the bank for his own overdraft. Again: "Leasehold buildings (at cost) £650." The company had no leases; the leases stood in Mr. Ogilvie's name and were ultimately forfeited for non-payment of rent. It was admitted that the defendants had entirely failed to use proper care and skill in the preparation and presentation of the accounts.

The result was disastrous for the plaintiff. In September, 1946, he entered the service of the company and moved down to Cornwall and worked at the mine. Indeed, he invested in November, 1946, another £200. A little later his suspicions became aroused because he discovered that his £2,000 had not been applied for the purposes of the company's business, but that most of it had been withdrawn by Mr. Ogilvie for his own private purposes. Ultimately he discovered that the company was in a very bad way. It was not even able to pay his salary. He himself issued writs against the company on May 1 and June 30, 1947, for salary and money lent. On Aug. 11, 1947, he presented a petition for winding-up and on Dec. 15, 1947, a winding-up order was made. There are no assets. The bank took the freehold cottages for Ogilvie's debt. The lessors forfeited the leasehold property. Ogilvie has gone bankrupt. The plaintiff has lost his £2,000 altogether, and he says it is due to the carelessness of the defendants because, if they had put before him accounts which had been properly prepared, the true position of affairs would have been disclosed and he would never have invested his money in the company. The only defences raised by the defendants at the hearing of the appeal were: (i) that Mr. Fraser was not acting in the course of his employment; (ii) that, even if he was, they owed no duty of care to the plaintiff.

The judge seems to have treated it as beyond question that Mr. Fraser was acting in the course of his employment, and I agree with him. There is no doubt that Mr. Fraser was acting within his actual authority in writing up the books and preparing the accounts, and, indeed, his action in so doing was ratified and confirmed by the senior partner who signed the certificate, but it is said that Mr. Fraser had no authority to show the draft accounts to the plaintiff or to answer his queries, at any rate not without asking his principals for permission to do so. The senior partner admitted that it was a very common thing for accountants at the request of the chairman or person in control of a company to give details of the company's accounts to a prospective investor so as to induce him to invest money, but he said that it was for the principal of the firm to do it and not for a clerk. That may well be so. It may not have been within Mr. Fraser's actual authority, but that is not the point. A master is often made responsible for the unauthorised or forbidden acts of his servant when he has for his own purposes put the servant in a position where he can do the acts. Practical good sense demands that, even though the master is not at fault himself, he should be responsible if the servant conducts himself in a way which is injurious to others. He takes the benefits of the servant's rightful acts and should bear the burden of his wrongful ones, and he is, as a rule, the only one who has the means to pay. So, here, I have no doubt that the defendants are responsible for the way in which Mr. Fraser conducted himself in preparing the accounts and showing them to the plaintiff, who, after all, was perfectly innocent in the matter and had not the slightest idea that Mr. Fraser had no authority to do what he did.

- A I come now to the great question in the case: Did the defendants owe a duty of care to the plaintiff? If the matter were free from authority, I should have said that they clearly did owe a duty of care to him. They were professional accountants who prepared and put before him these accounts, knowing that he was going to be guided by them in making an investment in the company. On the faith of those accounts he did make the investment, whereas, if the accounts had been carefully prepared, he would not have made the investment at all. The result is that he has lost his money. In the circumstances, had he not every right to rely on the accounts being prepared with proper care, and is he not entitled to redress from the defendants on whom he relied? I say he is, and I would apply to the present case the words of KNIGHT BRUCE, L.J., in Stim v. Croucher (2), an analogous case ninety years ago, where he said (1 De G.F. & J. 527):

"A country whose administration of justice did not afford redress in a case of the present description would not be in a state of civilisation."

- Turning now to authority, I can point to many general statements of principle which cover the case made by some of the great names in the law: LORD ELDON, L.C., in Evans v. Bicknell (3) (6 Ves. 183), LORD CAMPBELL, L.C., in Slim v. Croucher (2) (1 De G.F. & J. 523), LORD SELBORNE, L.C., in Brownlie v. Campbell (4) (5 App. Cas. 935), LORD HERSCHELL in Derry v. Peek (5) (14 App. Cas. 360), LORD SHAW OF DUNFERMLINE in Nocton v. Ashburton (Lord) (6) ([1914] A.C. 972), and LORD ATKIN in Donoghue v. Stevenson (1) ([1932] A.C. 581). It is said, however, that these statements of principle cannot be given effect to because there is an actual decision of this court in 1893 which is to the contrary, namely, Le Lievre v. Gould (7).

- E Before I consider the decision in Le Lievre v. Gould (7) I wish to say that, in my opinion, at the time it was decided current legal thought was infected by two cardinal errors. The first error was one which appears time and time again in nineteenth-century thought, namely, that no one who is not a party to a contract can sue on it or on anything arising out of it. This error has had unfortunate consequences both in the law of contract and in the law of tort. So far as contract is concerned, I have said something about it in Smith v. River Douglas Catchment Board (8) ([1949] 2 All E.R. 187). So far as tort is concerned, it led the lawyers of that day to suppose that, if one of the parties to a contract was negligent in carrying it out, no third person who was injured by that negligence could sue for damages on account of it: see Winterbottom v. Wright (9) (10 M. & W. 109), Alton v. Midland Ry. Co. (10) 19 C.B. N.S. 213, and the notes in Pasley v. Freeman (11) (2 Smith L.C., 13th ed., pp. 103, 110); except in the case of things dangerous in themselves, like guns: see Dixon v. Bell (12). This error lies at the root of the reasoning of BOWEN, L.J., in Le Lievre v. Gould (7) ([1893] 1 Q.B. 502), when he said that the law of England meaning thereby that, unless it was a thing which was dangerous in itself, no action lay. This error was exploded by the great case of Donoghue v. Stevenson (1) ([1932] A.C. 562), which decided that the presence of a contract did not defeat an action for negligence by a third person, provided that the circumstances disclosed a duty by the contracting party to him. The second error was an error as to the effect of Derry v. Peek (5), an error which persisted for thirty-five years at least after the decision, namely, that no action ever lies for a negligent statement even though it is intended to be acted on by the plaintiff and is, in fact, acted on by him to his loss. This error led the Court of Appeal in Low v. Bouverie (13) to deny the correctness of Slim v. Croucher (2), and in Le Lievre v. Gould (7) to deny the correctness of Cann v. Willson (14). The cases thus denied were so plainly just that the very denial of them was itself an error. The error was, however, exposed by Nocton v. Ashburton (6), which decided that an action did lie for a negligent statement where the circumstances disclosed a duty to be careful, and that all that is to be deduced from (though not decided by) Derry v. Peek (5) is that in the particular circumstances of that case there was no duty to be careful. VISCOUNT HALDANE, L.C., observed significantly ([1914] A.C. 947) that the authorities subsequent to Derry v. Peek (5) had shown " . . . a tendency to assume that it was intended to mean more than it did."

- H "... does not consider that what a man writes on paper is like a gun or other dangerous instrument . . ."

In my opinion, these decisions of the House of Lords in Donoghue v. Stevenson (1) and Nocton v. Ashburton (6) are sufficient to entitle this court to examine afresh the law as to negligent statements.

The first submission put forward by counsel for the defendants was that a duty to be careful in making statements arose only out of a contractual duty to the plaintiff or a fiduciary relationship to him. Apart from such cases no action, he said, had ever been allowed for negligent statements, and he urged that this want of authority was a reason against it being allowed now. This argument about the novelty of the action does not appeal to me. It has been put forward in all the great cases which have been milestones of progress in our law, and it has nearly always been rejected. If one reads Ashby v. White (15), Pasley v. Freeman (11) and Donoghue v. Stevenson (1) one finds that in each of them the judges were divided in opinion. On the one side there were the timorous souls who were fearful of allowing a new cause of action. On the other side there were the bold spirits who were ready to allow it if justice so required. It was fortunate for the common law that the progressive view prevailed. Whenever this argument of novelty is put forward I call to mind the emphatic answer given by PRATT, C.J., nearly two hundred years ago in Chapman v. Pickersgill (16) when he said (2 Wils. 146):

"I wish never to hear this objection again. This action is for a tort: torts are infinitely various, not limited or confined, for there is nothing in nature but may be an instrument of mischief . . ."

The same answer was given by LORD MACMILLAN in Donoghue v. Stevenson (1) ([1932] A.C. 619) when he said:

"The criterion of judgment must adjust and adapt itself to the changing circumstances of life. The categories of negligence are never closed."

It needs only a little imagination to see how much the common law would have suffered if those decisions had gone the other way.

The second submission of counsel for the defendants was that a duty to take care only arose where the result of a failure to take care will cause physical damage to persons or property. It was for this reason that he did not dispute two illustrations of negligent statements which I put in the course of the argument—the case of an analyst who negligently certifies to a manufacturer of food that a particular ingredient is harmless, whereas it is, in fact, poisonous, or the case of an inspector of lifts who negligently reports that a particular lift is safe, whereas it is, in fact, dangerous. The analyst and the lift inspector would, I should have thought, be liable to any person who was injured by consuming the food or using the lift, at any rate if there was no likelihood of intermediate inspection: Donoghue v. Stevenson (1); Haseldine v. Daw & Son, Ltd. (17). Counsel said that that might well be so because the negligence there caused physical damage, but that the same would not apply to negligence which caused financial loss. He referred to some observations of WROTTESELEY, J. ([1939] 3 All E.R. 209), which were in his favour on this point: Old Gate Estates, Ltd. v. Toplis & Harding & Russell (18). I cannot accept this as a valid distinction.

A I can understand that in some cases of financial loss there may not be a sufficiently proximate relationship to give rise to a duty of care, but if once the duty exists I cannot think that liability depends on the nature of the damage.

The third submission of counsel was that the duty owed by the defendants was purely a contractual duty, and, therefore, they were not liable for negligence to a person to whom they were under no contractual obligation. This seems to me to be simply a repetition of the nineteenth-century fallacy which was

B stated in Alton v. Midland Ry. Co. (10) and exploded by Donoghue v. Stevenson (1).

Let me now be constructive and suggest the circumstances in which I say that a duty to use care in making a statement does exist apart from a contract in that behalf. First, what persons are under such duty? My answer is those

C persons, such as accountants, surveyors, valuers and analysts, whose profession and occupation it is to examine books, accounts, and other things, and to make reports on which other people—other than their clients—rely in the ordinary course of business. Their duty is not merely a duty to use care in their reports. They have also a duty to use care in their work which results in their reports. Herein lies the difference between these professional men and other persons

D who have been held to be under no duty to use care in their statements, such as promoters who issue a prospectus: Derry v. Peek (5) (now altered by statute [Companies Act, 1948, s. 43]), and trustees who answer inquiries about the trust funds: Low v. Bouverie (13). Those persons do not bring, and are not expected to bring, any professional knowledge or skill into the preparation of their statements. They can only be made responsible by the law affecting persons

E generally, such as contract, estoppel, innocent misrepresentation or fraud. It is, however, very different with persons who engage in a calling which requires special knowledge and skill. From very early times it has been held that they owe a duty of care to those who are closely and directly affected by their work apart altogether from any contract or undertaking in that behalf. Thus, FITZ-HERBERT in his NEW NATURA BREVIVM (1534) 94D, says that

F “ . . . if a smith prick my horse with a nail . . . I shall have my action upon the case against him, without any warranty by the smith to do it well . . . for it is the duty of every artificer to exercise his art rightly and truly as he ought.”

This reasoning has been treated as applicable not only to shoeing smiths, surgeons and barbers, who work with hammers, knives and scissors, but also to

G shipbrokers and clerks in the Custom House who work with figures and make entries in books “ . . . because their situation and employment necessarily imply a competent degree of knowledge in making such entries . . .”:

see Shiells v. Blackburne (19) (1 Hy. Bl. 162, per LORD LOUGHBOROUGH) which was not referred to by DEVLIN, J., in Heskell v. Continental Express, Ltd. (20) ([1950] 1 All E.R. 1042). The same reasoning has been applied to medical men who make reports on the sanity of others: see Everett v. Griffiths (21) ([1920] 3 K.B. 182, 217). It is, I think, also applicable to professional accountants. They are not liable, of course, for casual remarks made in the course of conversation, nor for other statements made outside their work, or not made in their capacity as accountants: compare Fish v. Kelly (22); but they are, in my opinion, in proper cases, apart from any contract in the matter, under a duty to use reasonable care in the preparation of their accounts and in the making of their reports.

Secondly, to whom do these professional people owe this duty? I will take accountants, but the same reasoning applies to the others. They owe the duty, of course, to their employer or client, and also, I think, to any third person to whom they themselves show the accounts, or to whom they know their employer is going to show the accounts so as to induce him to invest money or take some other action on them. I do not think, however, the duty can be extended still further so as to include strangers of whom they have heard nothing and to whom their employer without their knowledge may choose to show their accounts. Once the accountants have handed their accounts to their employer, they are not, as a rule, responsible for what he does with them without their knowledge or consent. A good illustration is afforded by the decision in Le Lievre v. Gould (7) itself, which I certainly would not wish to call in question. The facts are somewhat differently stated in the various reports, but collecting them together they come to this: A surveyor there surveyed work for a building owner and handed certificates to him so that the owner could know the amounts which he had to pay the builder. The building owner then chose to show the certificates to his own mortgagees who advanced money on them instead of on the certificates of their own surveyor. The mortgagees then said that the owner's surveyor owed a duty of care to them. That was obviously untenable, because they should have had the work surveyed by their own surveyor. Indeed, they had actually stipulated for it. The relationship was, therefore, one in which the inspection of an intermediate person might reasonably be interposed, and was, consequently, too remote to raise a duty of care: see LORD ATKIN in Donoghue v. Stevenson (1) ([1932] A.C. 582). Excluding such cases as those, however, there are some cases—of which the present is one—where the accountants know all the time, even before they present their accounts, that their employer requires the accounts to show to a third person so as to induce him to act on them, and then they themselves, or their employers, present the accounts to him for the purpose. In such cases I am of opinion that the accountants owe a duty of care to the third person.

The test of proximity in these cases is: Did the accountants know that the accounts were required for submission to the plaintiff and use by him? That appears from Langridge v. Levy (23), as extended by CLEASBY, B., in George v. Skivington (24) (L.R. 5 Exch. 5), and from the decision of CHITTY, J., in Cann v. Willson (14) which is directly in point. In that case a valuer made a valuation of property for the very purpose of enabling his client to raise a mortgage on it. In order to further the transaction, the valuer himself actually put the valuation before the mortgagee's solicitor, saying that it was a very moderate valuation and not made in favour of the borrower. The mortgagee advanced money on the faith of the valuation, but it turned out that the valuer had been grossly careless, and the mortgagee lost his money. CHITTY, J., held that the valuer was liable in negligence, apart from any contract at all. He said (39 Ch.D. 42) that the valuation was sent by the valuer direct to the mortgagee's solicitor

“for the purpose of inducing the plaintiff and his co-trustee to lay out the trust money on mortgage. It seems to me that the defendants knowingly placed themselves in that position, and in point of law incurred a duty towards him to use reasonable care in the preparation of the document called a valuation. I think it is like the case of the supply of an article—the supply of the hairwash in the case of George v. Skivington (24).”

That reasoning seems to me to be good sense and good law. I know that in Le Lievre v. Gould (7) the Court of Appeal said that Cann v. Willson (14) was wrongly decided, but it must be remembered that at that time the general opinion of the profession was that George v. Skivington (24), on which CHITTY, J., relied, was itself wrongly decided, or, at any rate, that the principle stated in it by CLEASBY, B., was wrong: see per FIELD and CAVE, JJ., and BOWEN and COTTON, L.JJ., in Heaven v. Pender (25) (9 Q.B.D. 306, 307; 11 Q.B.D. 516, 517), and per HAMILTON, J., in Blacker v. Lake & Elliot, Ltd. (26) (106 L.T. 533). If George v. Skivington (24) was wrong, then, of course, Cann v. Willson (14) was wrong, for it was based on it. In Donoghue v. Stevenson (1), however, the House of Lords fully restored George v. Skivington (24), and LORD ATKIN approved ([1932] A.C. 584) the reasoning of CLEASBY, B. It seems to me that by so doing the House of Lords have implicitly restored Cann v. Willson (14), because they have restored the case on which it was based, and, if Cann v. Willson (14) is good law, it follows that in the present case the accountants owed a duty of care to the plaintiff, for the circumstances are indistinguishable.

Thirdly, to what transactions does the duty of care extend? It extends, I think, only to those transactions for which the accountants knew their accounts were required. For instance, in the present case it extends to the original investment of £2,000 which the plaintiff made in reliance on the accounts, because the defendants knew that the accounts were required for his guidance in making that investment, but it does not extend to the subsequent £200 which he invested after he had been two months with the company. This distinction, that the duty only extends to the very transaction in mind at the time, is implicit in the decided cases. Thus, a doctor, who negligently certifies a man to be a lunatic when he is not, is liable to him, although there is no contract in the matter, because the doctor knows that his certificate is required for the very purpose of deciding whether the man should be detained or not, but an insurance company's doctor owes no duty to the insured person, because he makes his examination only for the purposes of the insurance company: see Everett v. Griffiths (21) ([1920] 3 K.B. 211, 217), where ATKIN, L.J., proceeds on the self-same principles as he expounded fully later in Donoghue v. Stevenson (1). So, also, a Lloyd's surveyor who, in surveying for classification purposes, negligently passes a mast as sound when it is not, is not liable to the owner for damage caused by it breaking, because the surveyor makes his survey only for the purpose of classifying the ship for the Yacht Register and not otherwise: Humphery v. Bowers (27). Again, a scientist or expert (including a marine hydrographer) is not liable to his readers for careless statements in his published works. He publishes his work simply to give information, and not with any particular transaction in mind. When, however, a scientist or an expert makes an investigation and report for the very purpose of a particular transaction, then, in my opinion, he is under a duty of care in respect of that transaction.

It will be noticed that I have confined the duty to cases where the accountant prepares his accounts and makes his report for the guidance of the very person in the very transaction in question. That is sufficient for the decision of this case. I can well understand that it would be going too far to make an accountant liable to any person in the land who chooses to rely on the accounts in matters of business, for that would expose him, in the words of CARDOZO, C.J., in Ultramares Corp'n. v. Touche (28) (174 N.E. 444), to " . . . liability in an indeterminate amount for an indeterminate time to an indeterminate class."

Whether he would be liable if he prepared his accounts for the guidance of a specific class of persons in a specific class of transactions, I do not say. I should have thought he might be, just as the analyst and lift inspector would be liable in the instances I have given earlier. It is, perhaps, worth mentioning that Parliament has intervened to make the professional man liable for negligent reports given for the purposes of a prospectus: see s. 40 and s. 43 of the Companies Act, 1948. That is an instance of liability for reports made for the guidance of a specific class of persons—investors in a specific class of transactions—applying for shares. That enactment does not help one way or the other to show what result the common law would have reached in the absence of such provisions, but it does show what result it ought to reach.

My conclusion is that a duty to use care in statement is recognised by English law, and that its recognition does not create any dangerous precedent when it is remembered that it is limited in respect of the persons by whom and to whom it is owed and the transactions to which it applies.

One final word. I think the law would fail to serve the best interests of the community if it should hold that accountants and auditors owe a duty to no one but their client. Its influence would be most marked in cases where the client is a company or firm controlled by one man. It would encourage accountants to accept the information which the one man gives them without verifying it, and to prepare and present the accounts rather as a lawyer prepares and presents a case, putting the best appearance on the accounts they can without expressing their personal opinion of them. This is, to my way of thinking, an entirely wrong approach. There is a great difference between the lawyer and the accountant. The lawyer is never called on to express his personal belief in the truth of his client's case, whereas the accountant, who certifies the accounts of his client, is always called on to express his personal opinion whether the accounts exhibit a true and correct view of his client's affairs, and he is required to do this, not so much for the satisfaction of his own client, but more for the guidance of shareholders, investors, revenue authorities, and others who may have to rely on the accounts in serious matters of business. If we should decide this case in favour of the defendants, there will be no reason why accountants should ever verify the word of the one man in a one-man company, because there will be no one to complain about it. The one man who gives them wrong information will not complain if they do not verify it. He wants their backing for the misleading information he gives them, and he can only get it if they accept his word without verification. It is just what he wants so as to gain his own ends. And the persons who are misled cannot complain because the accountants owe no duty to them. If such be the law, I think it is to be regretted, for it means that the accountants' certificate, which should be a safeguard, becomes a snare for those who rely on it. I do not myself think that it is the law. In my opinion, accountants owe a duty of care not only to their own clients, but also to all those whom they know will rely on their accounts in the transactions for which those accounts are prepared. I would, therefore, be in favour of allowing the appeal and entering judgment for the plaintiff for damages in the sum of £2,000.

ASQUITH, L.J.: On two points I entirely agree with the judgment delivered by DENNING, L.J. I agree that the cause of action based on an alleged breach of duty occurring after the plaintiff became a shareholder cannot be made out if only because the damage relied on preceded the breach. I also agree, for the reasons he has given, that Mr. Fraser was clearly acting within the scope of his employment by the defendant firm in showing the draft accounts and giving certain other information to the plaintiff. I have, however, the misfortune to differ from DENNING, L.J., on the more important point raised in this case. The point may be put in this way. Assume that Mr. Fraser's negligent misrepresentations had been made by his employers, the partners in the defendant firm. Assume further, as the fact is, that there was no fraud and no contract or fiduciary relationship between them and the plaintiff. Would they, in those events, have been liable to the plaintiff in respect of damage incurred by him through acting on those negligent misrepresentations? The defendants say "No." They do not question that in the absence of fraud, contract and fiduciary relationship, there are cases in which A. may be under a legal obligation to B. to use reasonable care for some purposes. Their proposition is that under the conditions assumed in the present case the defendants were under no duty, sounding in tort, to the plaintiff to take care that their representations of fact should be true. They rely in support of this contention on Le Lievre v. Gould (7), a decision binding on this court. I agree with the learned judge in considering that authority to be conclusive in their favour unless it can be shown to have been overruled or to be distinguishable.

The plaintiff's case is that, whatever may have been the position before
 A Donoghue v. Stevenson (1), the rule applied by the majority of the House of Lords in that case necessarily involves the consequence that (even where fraud, contract and fiduciary relationship are absent) A. will be liable to B. for any negligent misrepresentations on which B. acts to his detriment, provided always that there exists between A. and B. the necessary degree of so-called "proximity." They argue that there was sufficient proximity on the facts
 B of the present case.

It may make for clearness first to consider some of the authorities preceding Donoghue's case (1) (as, for short, I will call it), and, secondly, to inquire what difference, if any, that case has made. I do not think it useful to go back further than Derry v. Peek (5), decided in 1889. In that case the plaintiff sub-C scribed for shares in a limited company in reliance on a prospectus issued by the directors who included the defendants. The prospectus contained a negligent mis-statement made in good faith. The claim on the writ as amended was for damages for deceit, for that and nothing else. There was no independent alternative claim in respect of negligent or innocent misrepresentation. The Court of Appeal held that fraud would be sufficiently established by proof that the directors had no reasonable grounds for believing the statement they made.
 D The House of Lords, reversing the Court of Appeal, held that this was not enough to constitute fraud. If the defendants believed what they said, it mattered not how credulous they were or how groundless their belief. Fraud necessarily connotes dishonesty and no degree of mere stupidity can serve in its place.
 The case is, therefore, primarily, and according to one view solely, a decision on the meaning of the word "fraud," and is, therefore, not directly relevant E to the main issue in the present case from which fraud, though originally alleged, has been eliminated. Nevertheless, it is indirectly relevant and illuminating.
 For, although it does not decide in terms, it clearly assumes or implies that a merely negligent misrepresentation made by director to potential subscribers for shares, on which some of them act to their detriment, affords the latter no remedy. The notion that Donoghue's case (1) was intended parenthetically or F sub silentio to sweep away this substratum of Derry v. Peek (5) seems to me quite unconvincing.

After the Court of Appeal had given its decision in Derry v. Peek (5), but before it had been reversed by the House of Lords, a case came up for determination at first instance on facts not materially distinguishable from those of the present case. In Cann v. Willson (14), CHITTY, J., relying on the decision G (then unreversed) of the Court of Appeal in Derry v. Peek (5), held that the plaintiff could recover damages in respect of a negligent, but (according to what we now know the word "fraud" means) non-fraudulent, misrepresentation.
 This was the view implicitly condemned by the House of Lords when Derry
v. Peek (5) reached them, and Cann v. Willson (14) was, consequently, on this assumption expressly overruled by the Court of Appeal in Le Lievre v. Gould (7).
 H As I have indicated, this last decision is binding on this court and disposes of the appeal, in my view, unless it can be shown to have been (a) overruled or
 (b) distinguishable.

I will deal with these points in turn, premising that the principle on which Gould's case (7) was decided was, in the words of LORD ESHER, M.R. ([1893]
 1 Q.B. 498), this:

"All that he [the defendant] had done was to give untrue certificates negligently. Such negligence, in the absence of contract with the plaintiffs, can give no right of action at law or in equity."

Both he and BOWEN, L.J., treated Derry v. Peek (5) as deciding not merely that fraud was not established in that case, but that nothing short of fraud could in the circumstances of that case have given a cause of action, for example, that negligent misrepresentation could not do so. This being so, the first question is whether the principle laid down in Gould's case (7) has been modified or overruled, either expressly or by necessary implication, by the decision in any other case of superior authority. It has been qualified by Nocton v. Ashburton (6) to this extent, that in the passage cited above, after the words "in the absence of contract with the plaintiffs" the further words "or in some circumstances where a fiduciary relationship exists between the defendant and the plaintiff" ought to be written in. Subject to this gloss has it been overruled? It has certainly not there been overruled expressly. Has it then been overruled by necessary implication? LORD ATKIN in Donoghue's case (1) refers pointedly to Gould's case (7) in his speech, without a hint or a suggestion that it was wrongly decided, or that the memorable formula which he himself was propounding was inconsistent with it. As regards the two minority judgments, one of them, that of LORD BUCKMASTER, also mentions the case, and without disapproval. On the other hand, it is arguable (though the argument does not carry conviction to my mind) that, whether or not LORD ATKIN realised the fact or directed his mind to the question, the formula which he laid down does, in fact, logically invalidate the principle laid down and acted on in Gould's case (7). This contention must be squarely faced. LORD ATKIN pointed out that the law governing the duty owed by A. to B. in the absence of fraud, contract or fiduciary relationship has been built up piecemeal—built up, if one may pursue the metaphor, in disconnected slabs exhibiting no organic unity of structure. Certain classes owed duties of care to certain other classes—road users to other road users, bailees to persons entrusting property to them, doctors and surgeons (and originally barbers) to persons entrusting their bodies to them, occupiers of premises to persons whom they invite or permit to come on the premises, and so on. These categories attracting the duty had from time to time been added to and subtracted from. No attempt, however, had been made in the past to rationalise them, to find a common denominator between road users, bailees, surgeons, occupiers, and so on, which would explain why they should be bound to a duty of care and some other classes who might be expected equally to be so bound should be exempt—no attempt, that is, save that of SIR WILLIAM BRETT, M.R. (from which his colleagues dissociated themselves) in Heaven v. Pender (25). Yet, says LORD ATKIN, there must be such a common denominator, or, at any rate, some general conception of relations present in the cases in which a duty arises, and absent in cases in which it does not.

Very tentatively (and prefacing his observation with a warning that it might go beyond the province of a judge to make such an attempt) he suggested the formula which has now become classic, but which, nevertheless, it is desirable here to quote afresh ([1932] A.C. 580):

"You must take reasonable care to avoid acts or omissions which you can reasonably foresee would be likely to injure your neighbour. Who, then, in law, is my neighbour? The answer seems to be—persons who are so closely and directly affected by my act that I ought reasonably to have them in contemplation as being so affected when I am directing my mind to the acts or omissions which are called in question. This appears to me to be the doctrine of Heaven v. Pender (25) as laid down by LORD ESHER (then BRETT, M.R.) when it is limited by the notion of proximity introduced by LORD ESHER himself and A. L. SMITH, L.J., in Le Lievre v. Gould (7)."

This passage, if read literally and without regard to the qualifying effect of its context or of the subjecta materies, might be taken to comprehend not only conduct causing physical injury to person or property through setting a certain kind of chattels in motion or in circulation (the case immediately under review), but also conduct of any kind, through any means (including negligent mis-statement) causing damnum of any kind recognised by the law, whether physical or not, to anyone who could bring himself within LORD ATKIN's definition of a "neighbour." I cannot believe so broad an application was intended by LORD ATKIN himself. The case may not decide quite so little as is contained in its somewhat conservative headnote, which purports to confine it to the act of a manufacturer launching into circulation a negligently manufactured chattel which is calculated to injure and, in fact, injures the ultimate consumer or user in circumstances in which neither he nor any intermediate party has a reasonable opportunity of examining it. In fact, it has since been applied somewhat outside this limited ambit: for instance, to physical injury caused by negligent failure to repair a lift: Haseldine v. Daw (17), and a motor car: Denny v. Supplies & Transport Co., Ltd. (29), or by the negligent adoption of a system of working. It has, however, I think, never been applied where the damage complained of was not physical. WROTESLEY, J., in Old Gate Estates v. Toplis & Harding & Russell (18), held its application was limited to cases where the injury was to life or limb. I think this is too narrow a view and that physical injury to property may suffice, but it has never been applied to injury other than physical. Apart, however, from any limitation which should be read into LORD ATKIN's language by reference to the facts of the case before him—the subjecta materies—it seems to me incredible that if he thought his formula was inconsistent with Gould's case (7), he would not have said so. This case, now nearly sixty years old, had at that time stood for nearly forty years. He must have considered it closely. Yet his only reference to it is as annexing a valid and essential qualification to SIR W. BRETT, M.R.'s formula in Heaven v. Pender (25). Not a word of disapproval of the decision on its merits. The inference seems to me to be that LORD ATKIN continued to accept the distinction between liability in tort for careless (but non-fraudulent) mis-statements and liability in tort for some other forms of carelessness, and that his formula defining "who is my neighbour" must be read subject to his acceptance of this overriding distinction.

Counsel for the plaintiff was unable to point to any clean decided case, standing unreversed, either before or after Donoghue's case (1), in which (always apart from fraud, contract and fiduciary relationship) A. had ever been held liable to B. in damages for a careless misrepresentation. He anchored, however, certain hopes on George v. Skivington (24) and on certain observations of LORD HERSCHELL in Derry v. Peek (5). I will say a word now on each of these cases.

George v. Skivington (24), a decision "battered but unbowed," was in the end vindicated by the House of Lords in Donoghue's case (1). The case was tried on demurrer. The declaration averred, inter alia,

" . . . that the defendant carried on the business of a chemist, and in the course of such business professed to sell a chemical compound made of ingredients known only to the defendant, and which he represented and professed to be fit and proper to be used for washing the hair, which could and might be so used without personal injury to the person using the same, and to have been carefully and skilfully and properly compounded by him, the defendant; and thereupon the plaintiff, Joseph George, bought of the defendant, and the defendant sold to him at a certain price, a bottle of the said compound, to be used by the plaintiff Emma for washing her hair, as the defendant then knew, and on the terms that the same then was fit and proper to be used, and could be safely used, by her for the purpose aforesaid, without personal injury to her, and had been skilfully, carefully, and properly compounded by the defendant . . .”

and that the wife suffered consequent injury. Thus, it was averred that the defendant put into circulation, knowing it was intended to be used by the purchaser's wife, a negligently compounded and deleterious hairwash. She used it, sustained physical injury, and an action was brought by her, or on her behalf, in which she succeeded on the issue raised by the demurrer. So far the case is on all fours with Donoghue's case (1) according to its narrowest interpretation, and it is not surprising that Donoghue's case (1) affirmed it. The declaration, however, also averred that the defendant had said the hairwash was safe. The present plaintiff, basing himself on this last averment, contended that it—an averment of negligent mis-statement—standing alone, would have evoked the same decision, namely, that the facts averred amounted, if proved, to a good cause of action. This I venture to doubt. It seems to me that the essence of the decision resided in the averment of negligent compounding and setting in motion by the defendant of a physical thing with knowledge that the plaintiff would, or might, use the physical thing so compounded and with resulting injury to the plaintiff, and that the parallel between Donoghue's case (1) and George v. Skivington (24) lay exclusively in these features.

Turning to the decision in Derry v. Peek (5), it is said that among decided cases Derry v. Peek (5) also lends indirect support to the plaintiff's case. This contention is based on a dictum of LORD HERSCHELL who, in deciding that the defendants were not liable for a non-fraudulent misrepresentation in their prospectus, said (14 App. Cas. 360) that he excluded from his purview cases “where a person within whose special province it lay to know a particular fact, has given an erroneous answer to an inquiry made with regard to it by a person desirous of ascertaining the fact for the purpose of determining his course . . .”

Here, again, is a statement which, if construed in its literal breadth, might seem to fit the present case. LORD HERSCHELL's dictum was, however, later interpreted both by the Court of Appeal in Low v. Bouverie (13) and later by the House of Lords in Nocton v. Ashburton (6) ([1914] A.C. 950). It seems clear from the latter case (in which the former was also considered and affirmed) that LORD HERSCHELL's proposition has been held only to hold good where (to use its terms) the “ . . . person within whose special province it lay to know a particular fact . . .” occupies a contractual or fiduciary position vis-a-vis the “ . . . person desirous of ascertaining the fact . . .” The cases which had decided otherwise are one by one dismissed by VISCOUNT HALDANE, L.C., as defensible if at all only on some other ground—warranty, estoppel, or what-not. He affirms that liability for negligence in word has in material respects been developed in our law differently from liability for negligence in act. The cases which are cited in support of LORD HERSCHELL's dictum are all based, according to LORD DUNEDIN ([1914] A.C. 964), “ . . . upon the existence of a fiduciary relationship, and subsequently the breach of duty arising.”

In what has gone before it has been assumed that the two law lords who agreed with LORD ATKIN's opinion or result, accepted the broad formula about “my duty to my neighbour” which he laid down, as well as in the narrow proposition limited to the liability of the negligent manufacturer of a chattel which reaches the consumer without an opportunity of intermediate examination and injures him. This assumption seems to me more than questionable. LORD THANKERTON, though he says ([1932] A.C. 604) that he entirely agreed with LORD ATKIN's discussion of the authorities, is clearly considering the authorities in their application to the narrow ambit of a manufacturer's liability, chattels and physical injury. His judgment does not travel outside these limits. Nor do I read LORD MACMILLAN's judgment as endorsing the wider proposition. There is a passage (ibid., 619) in which he lays down certain general propositions. It would have been easy for him to have adopted LORD ATKIN's formula in terms if he had thought so broad a proposition justified. When he says, however, in an oft-quoted phrase (ibid.): "The categories of negligence are never closed" he is not, in my view, accepting an acid test of liability valid in all circumstances. He does not mention the word "neighbour". He is merely saying that in accordance with changing social needs and standards new classes of persons legally bound or entitled to the exercise of care may from time to time emerge—in this case by the addition of a careless manufacturer or circulator of a chattel, as parties bound, vis-a-vis consumers or users, as parties entitled. In other words, what LORD MACMILLAN envisaged was the addition of another slab to the existing edifice, not a systematic reconstruction of the edifice on a single logical plan. For these reasons I am of opinion that Donoghue's case (1) neither reverses nor qualifies the principle laid down in Gould's case (7).

If I am wrong in thinking LORD ATKIN's formula was not accepted by the majority of the House, there remains the question whether, assuming that Gould's case (7) was well decided on its own facts, the facts of the present case are not so far different as to justify and require a different conclusion. The suggestion here is that the conclusion in Gould's case (7) could be defended consistently with the principle of Donoghue's case (1) being applicable to negligent misrepresentation, if in Gould's case (7) there was insufficient "proximity" between the parties to attract the Donoghue (1) principle, and that a conclusion favourable to the plaintiff in the present case could properly be reached on the ground that in the present case there was sufficient "proximity." The contention under this head is, in other words, first, that Donoghue's case (1) overrules Gould's (7) so far as the latter places careless mis-statements on a different and privileged level as compared with some other forms of careless behaviour, but, secondly, that the actual result of Gould's case (7) was right because the Donoghue (1) principle required "proximity" as a condition of liability and there was in Gould's case (7) no sufficient "proximity", and, thirdly, that this accounts inter alia for LORD ATKIN's omission to say that Gould's case (7) was wrongly decided. This argument also seems to me invalid. The only difference, quoad "proximity," between the present case and Gould's (7) is that in the present case Mr. Fraser knew when he made his representation the identity of the man who was likely to rely on his representations, whereas Gould did not know this. He did not know that the parties who were to make the advances were the mortgagees, the plaintiffs, or, at least, he did not know the contents of the mortgage deed. Consider, however, what he did know. He knew before any mortgage was effected that his certificates were required because advances were going to be made by someone to the builder on the security of the work performed up to date as vouched by his certificates. That someone could only be the building owner or some other lender relying on the same security. I take the following passage from the statement of facts ([1893] 1 Q.B. 492), premising that Hunt was the owner of the land on which two houses were to be built, Lovering was the builder, Dennes was the mortgagee who ultimately made advances, and Le Lievre, the plaintiff, was Dennes' assign.

"Hunt arranged with the plaintiff Dennes that he should advance the £850 to Lovering upon the security of a mortgage from him. Hunt also agreed with the defendant Gould, who was an architect and surveyor at Ilfracombe, that he should give certificates from time to time that the work had reached the respective stages at which the respective instalments were to be advanced as provided by the schedule of advances, a copy of which was given to the defendant. This agreement with the defendant was made before the execution of the mortgage . . .”

On those facts, to say there was insufficient proximity in the Gould case (7) seems to me wrong. LORD ATKIN, in affirming the Donoghue (1) type of liability, and annexing to it the condition of proximity, did not say: “There is no proximity unless the defendant can identify the ultimate victim of his carelessness in advance.” The manufacturers of the peccant bottle of ginger beer had no idea who would in the end consume it. All they knew was that someone would. You may adapt the formula “Certus est qui certus reddi potest.” The unidentifiability in advance of the ultimate consumer and victim did not, by displacing the notion of proximity or in any other way, protect them from liability. I am, therefore, of opinion, that this argument fails.

Singular consequences would follow if the principle laid down in Donoghue's case (1) were applied to negligent misrepresentation in every case in which the representee were proximate to the representor. The case has been instanced by PROFESSOR WINFIELD in his TEXTBOOK OF THE LAW OF TORT, 4th edn., p. 387, and referred to by DENNING, L.J., of a marine hydrographer who carelessly omits to indicate on his map the existence of a reef. The captain of the “Queen Mary,” in reliance on the map and having no opportunity of checking it by reference to any other map, steers her on the unsuspected rocks, and she becomes a total loss. Is the unfortunate cartographer to be liable to her owners in negligence for some millions of pounds damages? Yet what line can be drawn between him and the defendants in the present case? If it be said that there is no proximity between the cartographer and those for whose use his map is designed, the reply surely is that there is just as much as there was between the manufacturer of the peccant ginger beer and its ultimate consumer.

In the present state of our law different rules still seem to apply to the negligent mis-statement, on the one hand, and to the negligent circulation or repair of chattels, on the other, and Donoghue's case (1) does not seem to me to have abolished these differences. I am not concerned with defending the existing state of the law or contending that it is strictly logical. It clearly is not—but I am merely recording what I think it is. If this relegates me to the company of “timorous souls,” I must face that consequence with such fortitude as I can command. I am of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed.

COHEN, L.J.: The learned judge dismissed the plaintiff's claim. He found “no fraud” and from this part of his judgment the plaintiff does not appeal. He also found that the only duty which the defendants owed to the plaintiff was to produce accounts which they honestly believed to be the draft accounts of the company. In other words, he found that they owed no duty of care to the plaintiff. From that part of his judgment the plaintiff appeals on two grounds. He says, first, that, since to the knowledge of the defendants' employee, Mr. Fraser, the plaintiff was a prospective investor in the company and was asking for information about the accounts of the company to assist him in reaching a decision whether to make the investment, the defendants, in accordance with the principles laid down by LORD ATKIN in Donoghue v. Stevenson (1) ([1932] A.C. 580), owed a duty to the plaintiff, when giving him that information, to exercise care to see that it was accurate. Secondly, he says that since the information given to the plaintiff was inaccurate in material particulars owing to the negligence of the defendants' employee, Mr. Fraser, the defendants are liable in damages. Alternatively, the plaintiff alleges that, as he became a shareholder in the company and the defendants were the auditors of the company, they owed a duty to him as shareholder to give him the accurate information which they should have given him when he was a prospective investor. This duty, he says, was broken, and, accordingly, he is entitled to damages. So far as the second ground is concerned, I entirely agree with the learned judge that no damage flowed from the breach of such duty as is owed by the defendants as auditors to the plaintiff as a shareholder. The £2,000 had been irretrievably invested before the relationship had become operative. I would add that I doubt whether the defendants' alleged duty as auditors extends to cover information given to the plaintiff before he became a shareholder.

A The first ground presents more difficulty, but despite counsel's able and lucid argument, I have come to the conclusion that we are bound by authority to hold that the learned judge came to the right conclusion. Counsel for the defendants submitted, first, that Mr. Fraser was not acting within the scope of his employment in giving to the plaintiff information as to the accounts, and, therefore, the defendants could not be liable for his negligence in the preparation thereof. So far as this point is concerned, I have nothing to add to the reasons given by my brethren for thinking that it cannot be sustained.

B Secondly, he said that the principle of Donoghue v. Stevenson (1) had never been applied to a case of negligent mis-statement. A defendant could only be liable for negligent mis-statement where there was a contractual nexus or a fiduciary relationship between him and the plaintiff. In the absence of such a relationship the decision in Derry v. Peek (5), as interpreted in Nocton v. Ashburton (6), is, says counsel, authority that no liability in negligence exists.

C This argument, is, I think, well-founded.

In Donoghue v. Stevenson (1), and in all the other cases to which our attention was called, the breach of duty alleged has been one which has resulted in damages to the person of the plaintiff: see Haseldine v. Daw & Son, Ltd. (17); Denny v. Supplies & Transport Co., Ltd. (29). In Old Gate Estates v. Toplis & Harding & Russell (18), WROTTESELEY, J., refused to apply the principle of Donoghue v. Stevenson (1) to a case where a company had paid too much for a property owing to an over-valuation by the defendants who had been instructed by the promoters to value it for the purpose of the promotion. The company, which was the plaintiff, was not formed at the time of the valuation. WROTTESELEY, J., rejecting an argument based on Donoghue v. Stevenson (1), said ([1939] 3 All E.R. 216):

D

E

"The thing which runs through these cases alike, however, both in those applications of the principle and in the original case of Donoghue v. Stevenson (1) itself, is that that which was negligently created or put into circulation was something which was dangerous either to life or limb—those are, I think, the very words of LORD ATKIN himself and the other learned lords who delivered opinions, or the opinions of the majority, in Donoghue v. Stevenson (1)—or else was a thing which, carelessly handled, carelessly made, or carelessly mended, would become dangerous to life or limb or health. I think that today it is as true as it was in 1893, when Le Lievre v. Gould (7) was decided, that, to use the words of BOWEN, L.J. ([1893] 1 Q.B. 502): 'It is idle to refer to cases which were decided under totally different aspects, and upon totally different considerations of the law. Take, for example, the case of an owner of a chattel, such as a horse, a gun, or a carriage, or any other instrument, which is in itself of such a character that, if it be used carelessly, it may injure some third person who is near to it; then it is as plain as daylight that the owner of that chattel, who is responsible for its management, is bound to be careful how he uses it. Exactly in the same way with regard to the owner of premises. If the owner of premises knows that his premises are in a dangerous condition, and that people are coming there to work upon them by his own permission and invitation, of course he must take reasonable care that those premises do not injure those who are coming there.' A little later BOWEN, L.J., says (ibid.): 'How has it [the case of a certificate given by an architect] any application to the present case? Only, I suppose, on the suggestion that a man is responsible for what he states in a certificate to any person to whom he may have reason to suppose that the certificate may be shown. But the law of England does not go to that extent: it does not consider that what a man writes on paper is like a gun or other dangerous instrument, and, unless he intended to deceive, the law does not, in the absence of contract, hold him responsible for drawing his certificate carelessly.' I think that that is as true today as it was when it was said by BOWEN, L.J., and that there is nothing in Donoghue v. Stevenson (1) which makes that bad law. The exceptions laid down by Donoghue v. Stevenson (1)—the exceptions to the rule that a man is obliged to be careful only to those to whom he owes a duty by contract—are, as I understand the decision in that case, confined to negligence which results in danger to life, danger to limb, or danger to health, and, this being no one of those, I think that the plaintiffs have no cause of action on the analogy of Donoghue v. Stevenson (1)."

F

G

H

Counsel for the defendants submitted that these observations constituted a correct statement of the law, at any rate if the words "or property" were added after the words "or danger to health."

The question of liability for negligent mis-statement was also considered by DEVLIN, J., in Heskell v. Continental Express, Ltd. (20), a case where through carelessness a bill of lading had been issued for goods which had not been shipped. DEVLIN, J., said ([1950] 1 All E.R. 1041):

"In my judgment, therefore, the plaintiff has not established any contractual relationship with Strick giving rise to any particular duty owing to him. In putting forward the wider proposition that Strick owed a duty to the public not carelessly to circulate a document of title knowing it would be used as such, counsel for the plaintiff acknowledged the difficulty he encountered because of Le Lievre v. Gould (7), and other similar decisions which make it plain that negligent mis-statement can never give rise to a cause of action."

Read literally, this statement is too wide, since negligent mis-statement can give rise to a cause of action not only where there is a contractual relationship, but also where there is a fiduciary relationship: see Nocton v. Ashburton (6); but with this limitation the statement is, in my opinion, correct.

So far as I am aware, there is only one reported case involving negligent mis-statement which supports the plaintiff's claim. That is the decision of CHITTY, J., in Cann v. Willson (14). In that case an intending mortgagor, at the request of the solicitors of an intending mortgagee, applied to a firm of valuers for a valuation of the property proposed to be mortgaged. A valuation at the sum of £3,000 was sent in by the valuers direct to the mortgagee's solicitors, and the mortgage was subsequently carried out. Default having been made in payment by the mortgagor, and a loss having resulted to the mortgagee, he commenced an action against the valuers for damages for the loss sustained through their negligence, misrepresentation, and breach of duty. The court being satisfied on the evidence that the defendants knew at the time the valuation was made that it was for the purpose of an advance, and that the valuation as made was in fact no valuation at all, it was held that, under the circumstances, the defendants were liable on two grounds: (i) that they (independently of contract) owed a duty to the plaintiff which they had failed to discharge; (ii) that they had made reckless statements on which the plaintiff had acted. If the first ground of decision was good law, it would support the argument of counsel for the plaintiff, but the case was considered by this court in Le Lievre v. Gould (7), and LORD ESHER, M.R., BOWEN and A. L. SMITH, L.JJ., all agreed that Cann v. Willson (14) must be treated as overruled by Derry v. Peek (5).

The facts in Le Lievre v. Gould (7) differed somewhat from those in the present case, but I do not think the court thought the differences material, for LORD

ESHER, M.R., stated the problem with which the court was then faced in the following terms ([1893] 1 Q.B. 496):

"Then it is said that, even if there was no contract between the plaintiff Dennes and the defendant, nevertheless the defendant is liable to the plaintiffs for having given certificates which contained untrue statements; for, it is said, the defendant owed a duty to the plaintiffs to exercise care in giving the certificates, because he knew that the plaintiffs would or might act upon them by advancing money to Lovering."

LORD ESHER, M.R., then proceeded to consider the problem. He treated Heaven v. Pender (25), which was the foundation of Donoghue v. Stevenson (1), as good law, saying (ibid., 497):

"If one man is near to another, or is near to the property of another, a duty lies upon him not to do that which may cause a personal injury to that other, or may injure his property. For instance, if a man is driving along a road, it is his duty not to do that which may injure another person whom he meets on the road, or to his horse or his carriage."

He then considered Cann v. Willson (14), and said it was not good law, and finally came to the conclusion that the action failed, saying, in the last two or three lines of his judgment (ibid., 498):

"Such negligence, in the absence of contract with the plaintiffs, can give no right of action at law or in equity. All the grounds urged on behalf of the plaintiffs fail, and the appeal must be dismissed."

BOWEN and A. L. SMITH, L.JJ., gave judgment to the same effect. I need not, I think, refer to any passages in their judgments because I have referred to the material passage in the judgment of BOWEN, L.J., where it was cited by WROTESLEY, J., in Old Gate Estates v. Toplis & Harding & Russell (18).

The principle of the decision in Le Lievre v. Gould (7) seems to me directly in point in the present case. It is binding on us unless it can be said to be inconsistent with some other decision of this court or of the House of Lords. I am unable to find any such decision. Counsel asked us to say that it is inconsistent with the principle laid down by LORD ATKIN in Donoghue v. Stevenson (1). It is to be observed that in Donoghue v. Stevenson (1) LORD ATKIN himself cited with approval some passages from the judgments of LORD ESHER, M.R., and A. L. SMITH, L.J., in Le Lievre v. Gould (7), and I am unable to believe that if he had thought the ratio decidendi in that case was wrong he would have cited those passages without making it clear that he was not approving the decision. I think, therefore, that, although the passages in LORD ATKIN's speech ([1932] A.C. 580, 581) are couched in such general terms that they might possibly cover the case of negligent mis-statement, that question was not present to LORD ATKIN's mind or intended to be covered by his statement.

Counsel for the plaintiff further submitted that Derry v. Peek (5) was purely a case of fraud and did not touch the question of negligent mis-statement. It is true that the cause of action in Derry v. Peek (5) was one of fraud, but it is, I think, implicit in the speeches that their Lordships would have reached the same conclusion had there been an alternative plea of negligence. I am fortified in this conclusion by the observations of two of their Lordships in Nocton v. Ashburton (6). VISCOUNT HALDANE, L.C., examining the decision in Derry v. Peek (5), says ([1914] A.C. 947):

"My Lords, the discussion of the case by the noble and learned Lords who took part in the decision appears to me to exclude the hypothesis that they considered any other question to be before them than what was the necessary foundation of an ordinary action for deceit. They must indeed be taken to have thought that the facts proved as to the relationship of the parties in Derry v. Peek (5) were not enough to establish any special duty arising out of that relationship other than the general duty of honesty."

Again, LORD SHAW cites with approval (ibid., 971) a passage from the judgment of BOWEN, L.J., in Low v. Bouverie (13), where BOWEN, L.J., says ([1891] 3 Ch. 105):

"... Derry v. Peek (5) decides ... that in cases such as those of which that case was an instance, there is no duty enforceable at law to be careful in the representation which is made. Negligent misrepresentation does not certainly amount to deceit, and negligent misrepresentation can only amount to a cause of action if there exist a duty to be careful—not to give information except after careful inquiry. In Derry v. Peek (5) the House of Lords considered that the circumstances raised no such duty. It is hardly necessary to point out that, if the duty is assumed to exist, there must be a remedy for its non-performance, and that therefore the doctrine that negligent misrepresentation affords no cause of action is confined to cases in which there is no duty, such as the law recognises, to be careful."

Derry v. Peek (5) was a case where the action was founded on a false statement in a prospectus, and I find it difficult to imagine a case where the proximity test laid down by LORD ATKIN in Donoghue v. Stevenson (1) would more clearly be satisfied if the principle of that case is applicable to negligent mis-statement. Counsel for the plaintiff submitted that there was a distinction between Derry v. Peek (5) and the present case in that a prospectus is issued to the world at large, whereas Mr. Fraser's statements were addressed to the plaintiff in particular. This seems to me to be a distinction without a difference in principle. For these reasons I think the decision in Le Lievre v. Gould (7) is still good law and is conclusive of the present case.

I might, perhaps, add that the conclusion I have reached appears to accord with the views of the text-book writers. The learned editor of SALMOND ON THE LAW OF TORTS, 10th ed., p. 580, expresses the view that with certain exceptions not material to the present case:

"A false statement is not actionable as a tort unless it is wilfully false. Mere negligence in the making of false statements is not actionable either as deceit or as any other kind of tort."

He regards the rule as anomalous. In WINFIELD'S TEXTBOOK OF THE LAW OF TORT, 4th ed., pp. 386, 387, is expressed the author's dislike of it in more forcible language, but he recognises that decisions of this court are definitely against the existence of any action in tort for negligent statement. He thinks that it is open to the House of Lords to take the contrary view. On this point I need express no opinion. Before parting with the text-book writers, I ought, perhaps, to mention that Dr. CHARLESWORTH in his book on the LAW OF NEGLIGENCE, 2nd ed., p. 16, suggests an explanation of the alleged anomaly in the rule. He says:

"The duty to take care is ultimately based on the possible consequences which will occur if care is not taken. What the consequences may be of any particular act or omission is often a very difficult problem involving inquiry into questions of causation. This inquiry is difficult enough in cases where physical damage is concerned in which the cause, whether it be defective vehicles or machinery or lack of care and skill in management, can usually be accurately traced. To regard the issue of a certificate, an opinion, or a report as carrying the same duty of care as the delivery of a defective chattel would be to introduce a most disturbing factor into the mutual intercourse of society."

I do not find this explanation entirely satisfactory, but I am unable to suggest a better one. Be that as it may, I am satisfied that on the authorities as they stand we have no alternative but to dismiss this appeal.

A Since writing this judgment my attention has been directed by PROFESSOR GOODHART to an American case where a similar point was considered. The case is Ultramares Corpn. v. Touche (28). It has the merit that the decision of the court was given by CARDOZO, C.J. In that case the accountants had certified the annual report of a company which, in order to finance its operations, required extensive credit and borrowed large sums from banks and other lenders. The facts are stated by the learned judge as follows (174 N.E. 442):

B "In January, 1924, the defendants, a firm of public accountants, were employed by Fred Stern & Co., Inc., to prepare and certify a balance sheet exhibiting the condition of its business as of Dec. 31, 1923. They had been employed at the end of each of the three years preceding to render a like service. Fred Stern & Co., Inc., which was in substance Stern himself, was engaged in the importation and sale of rubber. To finance its operations, it required extensive credit and borrowed large sums of money from banks and other lenders. All this was known to the defendants. C The defendants knew also that in the usual course of business the balance sheet when certified would be exhibited by the Stern company to banks, creditors, stockholders, purchasers or sellers, according to the needs of the occasion, as the basis of financial dealings. Accordingly, when the balance sheet was made up, the defendants supplied the Stern company with thirty-two copies certified with serial numbers as counterpart originals. D Nothing was said as to the persons to whom these counterparts would be shown or the extent or number of the transactions in which they would be used. In particular there was no mention of the plaintiff, a corporation doing business chiefly as a factor, which till then had never made advances to the Stern company, though it had sold merchandise in small amounts. E The range of transactions in which a certificate of audit might be expected to play a part was as indefinite and wide as the possibilities of the business that was mirrored in the summary."

F The court held that mere negligence did not make the defendants liable to the plaintiffs, who had made advances on the strength of the certified accounts, though they, in fact, found that there was evidence of negligence by the defendants in making their report. CARDOZO, C.J., said (ibid., 444):

G "We are brought to the question of duty, its origin and measure. The defendants owed to their employer a duty imposed by law to make their certificate without fraud, and a duty growing out of contract to make it with the care and caution proper to their calling. Fraud includes the pre- H tence of knowledge when knowledge there is none. To creditors and investors to whom the employer exhibited the certificate, the defendants owed a like duty to make it without fraud, since there was notice in the circumstances of its making that the employer did not intend to keep it to himself . . . A different question develops when we ask whether they owed a duty to these to make it without negligence. If liability for negligence exists, a thoughtless slip or blunder, the failure to detect a theft or forgery beneath the cover of deceptive entries, may expose accountants to a liability in an indeterminate amount for an indeterminate time to an indeterminate class. The hazards of a business conducted on these terms are so extreme as to enkindle doubt whether a flaw may not exist in the implication of a duty that exposes to these consequences. We put aside for the moment any statement in the certificate which involves the representation of a fact as true to the knowledge of the auditors. If such a statement was made, whether believed to be true or not, the defendants are liable for deceit in the event that it was false. The plaintiff does not need the invention of novel doctrine to help it out in such conditions. The case was submitted to the jury, and the verdict was returned upon the theory that, even in the absence of a mis-statement of a fact, there is a liability also for erroneous opinion. The expression of an opinion is to be subject to a warranty implied by law. What, then, is the warranty, as yet unformulated, to be? Is it merely that the opinion is honestly conceived and that the preliminary inquiry has been honestly pursued, that a halt has not been made without a genuine belief that the search has been reasonably adequate to bring disclosure of the truth? Or does it go farther and involve the assumption of a liability for any blunder or inattention that could fairly be spoken of as negligence if the controversy were one between accountant and employer for breach of a contract to render services for pay? The assault upon the citadel of privacy is proceeding in these days apace. How far the inroads shall extend is now a favourite subject of juridical discussion . . . In the field of the law of contract there has been a gradual widening of the doctrine of Laurence v. Fox (30) . . . Until today the beneficiary of a promise, clearly designated as such, is seldom left without a remedy . . . Even in that field, however, the remedy is narrower where the beneficiaries of the promise are indeterminate or general. Something more must then appear than an intention that the promise shall redound to the benefit of the public or to that of a class of indefinite extension. The promise must be such as to 'bespeak the assumption of a duty to make reparation directly to the individual members of the public if the benefit is lost' . . . In the field of the law of torts a manufacturer who is negligent in the manufacture of a chattel in circumstances pointing to an unreasonable risk of serious bodily harm to those using it thereafter may be liable for negligence though privacy is lacking between manufacturer and user . . . A force or instrument of harm having been launched with potentialities of danger manifest to the eye of prudence, the one who launches it is under a duty to keep it within bounds . . . Even so, the question is still open whether the potentialities of danger that will charge with liability are confined to harm to the person, or include injury to property . . . In either view, however, what is released or set in motion is a physical force. We are now asked to say that a like liability attaches to the circulation of a thought or a release of the explosive power resident in words."

The learned judge then considers three cases which were said to support the plaintiff's action, and continues (ibid., 447):

"From the foregoing analysis the conclusion is, we think, inevitable that nothing in our previous decisions commits us to a holding of liability for negligence in the circumstances of the case at hand, and that such liability, if recognised, will be an extension of the principle of those decisions to different conditions, even if more or less analogous. The question then is whether such an extension shall be made. The extension, if made, will so expand the field of liability for negligent speech as to make it nearly, if not quite, co-terminous with that of liability for fraud. Again and again, in decisions of this court, the bounds of this latter liability have been set up, with futility the fate of every endeavour to dislodge them. Scienter has been declared to be an indispensable element, except where the representation has been put forward as true of one's own knowledge . . . or in circumstances where the expression of opinion was a dishonourable pretence . . . Even an opinion, especially an opinion by an expert, may be found to be fraudulent if the grounds supporting it are so flimsy as to lead to the conclusion that there was no genuine belief back of it. Further than that this court has never gone. Directors of corporations have been A acquitted of liability for deceit, though they have been lax in investigation and negligent in speech . . . This has not meant, to be sure, that negligence may not be evidence from which a trier of the facts may draw an inference of fraud . . . but merely that, if that inference is rejected, or, in the light of all the circumstances, is found to be unreasonable, negligence alone is not a substitute for fraud. Many also are the cases that have distinguished between the wilful or reckless representation essential to the maintenance at law of an action for deceit, and the misrepresentation, negligent or innocent, that will lay a sufficient basis for rescission in equity . . . If this action is well conceived, all these principles and distinctions, so nicely wrought and formulated, have been a waste of time and effort. They have even been a snare, entrapping litigants and lawyers into an abandonment of the true remedy lying ready to the call. The suitors B thrown out of court because they proved negligence, and nothing else, in an action for deceit, might have ridden to triumphant victory if they had proved the self-same facts, but had given the wrong another label, and all this in a State where forms of action have been abolished. So to hold is near to saying that we have been paltering with justice. A word of caution or suggestion would have set the erring suitor right. Many pages of opinion C were written by judges the most eminent, yet the word was never spoken. We may not speak it now."

The final passage which I wish to read is this (ibid., 448):

D "Liability for negligence if adjudged in this case will extend to many callings other than auditors. Lawyers who certify their opinion as to the validity of municipal or corporate bonds, with knowledge that the opinion will be brought to the notice of the public, will become liable to the investors, if they have overlooked a statute or a decision, to the same extent as if the controversy were one between client and adviser. Title companies insuring titles to a tract of land, with knowledge that at an approaching auction the fact that they have insured will be stated to the bidders, will become E liable to purchasers who may wish the benefit of a policy without payment of a premium. These illustrations may seem to be extreme, but they go little, if any, farther than we are invited to go now. Negligence, moreover, will have one standard when viewed in relation to the employer, and another and at times a stricter standard when viewed in relation to the public. Explanations that might seem plausible, omissions that might be F reasonable, if the duty is confined to the employer, conducting a business that presumably at least is not a fraud upon his creditors, might wear another aspect if an independent duty to be suspicious even of one's principal is owing to investors. 'Everyone making a promise having the quality of a contract will be under a duty to the promisee by virtue of the promise, but under another duty, apart from contract, to an indefinite G number of potential beneficiaries when performance has begun. The assumption of one relation will mean the involuntary assumption of a series of new relations, inescapably hooked together' . . . 'The law does not spread its protection so far' . . . Our holding does not emancipate accountants from the consequences of fraud. It does not relieve them if their audit has been so negligent as to justify a finding that they had no H genuine belief in its adequacy, for this again is fraud. It does no more than say that, if less than this is proved, if there has been neither reckless mis-statement nor insincere profession of an opinion, but only honest blunder, the ensuing liability for negligence is one that is bounded by the contract, and is to be enforced between the parties by whom the contract has been made. We doubt whether the average business man receiving a certificate without paying for it, and receiving it merely as one among a multitude of possible investors, would look for anything more."

I am glad, therefore, to find that the conclusion which I have reached on the basis of the English authorities seems to accord with the opinion of so eminent a student of the common law as CARDOZO, C.J. I would only add that, despite the observations of DENNING, L.J., I do not think the conclusion I have reached will encourage accountants to fall short of the high standard of conduct which the institutes to which they belong have laid down for their members. In the result, this appeal will be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Edwin Coe & Calder Woods (for the plaintiff); Ashurst, Morris Crisp & Co. (for the defendants).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

COMMISSIONERS OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE v. RENSOP DRAPERS, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Asquith, Birkett, L.J.J., Danckwerts, J.), February 5, 1951.]

Purchase Tax—Double tax—Relief—Tax chargeable on appropriation of goods by wholesaler—Tax paid on previous occasion on purchase by vendor to wholesaler—Finance Act, 1944 (c. 23), s. 15 (1).

R.D., Ltd., wholesale merchants, bought a quantity of cloth from G., another wholesaler. G. had bought the cloth from T.P., Ltd. and had paid purchase tax on it. R.D., Ltd., having appropriated the goods to the purposes of their business, claimed to be entitled to relief against payment of tax under s. 15 (1) of the Finance Act, 1944.

HELD: s. 15 (1) only applied where the person claiming relief was a party to the previous purchase of the goods in respect of which tax had been paid; in the present case R.D., Ltd. were not parties to the previous purchase; and, therefore, they were not entitled to relief.

[FOR THE FINANCE ACT, 1944, s. 15 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 21, p. 1294.]

Case referred to:

- (1) Devonshire (Duke) v. O'Connor, (1890), 24 Q.B.D. 468; 59 L.J.Q.B. 206; 62 L.T. 917; 54 J.P. 740; 42 Digest 607, 80.

APPEAL by the defendants from an order of SOMERVELL, L.J., sitting as an additional judge of the King's Bench Division, dated July 5, 1950, whereby he held that the defendants, who were registered wholesale merchants, were not entitled to relief under s. 15 (1) of the Finance Act, 1944, against a double charge of purchase tax in respect of goods on which tax had become chargeable on a previous occasion by virtue of a purchase made by someone other than the defendants.

Hallis for the defendants.

J. P. Ashworth for the commissioners.

DANCKWERTS, J.: This is an appeal from a judgment of SOMERVELL, L.J., sitting as an additional judge of the King's Bench Division, in an action by the Commissioners of Customs and Excise to recover £778 3s. 11d. which they claimed to be chargeable and payable for purchase tax by the defendants, Messrs. Rensop Drapers, Ltd. The matter depends primarily on the Finance

(No. 2) Act, 1940, s. 18 (as substituted by s. 10 (1) of the Finance Act, 1944), which provides:

“(1) A tax, to be called purchase tax, shall be charged, subject to and in accordance with the provisions of this Part of this Act, on the wholesale value of all chargeable goods bought under chargeable purchases. (2) A chargeable purchase is any purchase made from a wholesale merchant or manufacturer (other than one who is not required by this Part of this Act to be registered) selling by wholesale, so far as regards—(a) in the case of a purchase of ascertained goods, goods bought under the purchase which are in the United Kingdom at the time of the purchase, (b) in the case of a purchase of unascertained goods, goods appropriated to the purchase which are in the United Kingdom at the time of the appropriation, with the exception of a purchase made by a registered wholesale merchant or a registered manufacturer of goods as stock for his business in the case of a wholesale merchant or as materials in the case of a manufacturer.”

By s. 23 (1) of the Act of 1940 it is provided:

“Every wholesale merchant whose business includes the selling of any chargeable goods, and every manufacturer whose business includes the selling of any chargeable goods, shall be registered under this Part of this Act . . .”

Section 24 (1) provides:

“A purchase shall be deemed to be a purchase of goods by a registered wholesale merchant as stock for his business, or by a registered manufacturer as materials, if a representation is made to the seller in the prescribed manner and at the prescribed time by the buyer that he is the holder of a certificate of registration issued under this Part of this Act and that he intends to sell the goods or to use them as materials, and not otherwise . . .”

Section 25 (1), as amended by the Finance Act, 1944, s. 10 (4), which deals with appropriations, provides:

“Where a wholesale merchant or manufacturer who is required by this Act to be registered appropriates or applies any chargeable goods in his ownership, the property in which he acquired under a purchase of goods as stock for his business or as materials . . . or, in the case of a manufacturer, any chargeable goods which have been made by him or which are the result of a process applied by him, either—(a) to the purposes of any business carried on by him of selling chargeable goods by retail (otherwise than to registered manufacturers as materials), or (b) to the purposes of any business carried on by him of letting out chargeable goods on hire, or (c) to any other purpose not being a sale of the goods under a purchase which is a chargeable purchase or a sale of the goods to a registered wholesale merchant as stock for his business or to a registered manufacturer as materials, the appropriation or application shall be treated for the purposes of this Part of this Act as if it were a chargeable purchase, he shall be accountable for the tax chargeable in respect of the goods, and the tax shall become due at the time of the appropriation or application.”

We observe from that section that “appropriation or application” are dealt with together, and that the section is concerned with those two cases.

It is claimed by the defendants that they are entitled to relief under the provisions of s. 15 (1) of the Finance Act, 1944, which is in these terms:

“If a wholesale merchant or a manufacturer proves to the satisfaction of the commissioners, in the case of any goods in respect of which tax has become chargeable by virtue of a purchase made from him or by virtue of such an appropriation or application as is mentioned in s. 25 of the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1940, made by him, that tax also became chargeable in respect thereof on a previous occasion by virtue of a purchase thereof, or of such an appropriation or application thereof, made by him, or of an importation thereof effected by him at a time when he was not the holder of a certificate of registration, the commissioners may remit payment of the first mentioned tax, or if it has been paid may repay it, up to an amount not exceeding the amount of the last mentioned tax."

The circumstances which the defendants claimed entitled them to relief under that section were as follows. The defendants bought a quantity of cloth from one Green, who was not a registered wholesaler. Green had bought the same cloth from a company called Tenor Products, Ltd., who were registered wholesalers, and he paid, by inclusion of an appropriate amount in the price, the equivalent of the purchase tax which was payable by Tenor Products, Ltd. It is not stated whether tax has, in fact, been paid by Tenor Products, Ltd., but there is no doubt, I think, that they are accountable to the Commissioners of Customs and Excise for the amount of the purchase tax on that transaction. It is claimed by the defendants that, tax having once been paid in respect of this cloth, they are entitled to the relief given by s. 15 (1) of the Finance Act, 1944. It is urged that the tax is charged in respect of particular goods and not in respect of persons, and that, once the tax has been paid under the provisions of these Acts in respect of particular goods, that is the end of the intention of the charging provisions, and, therefore, it is inappropriate, and, indeed, unjust, that tax should become payable a second time in respect of the same goods.

Whether that is so or not, it seems to me that the rejection of the defence by SOMERVELL, L.J., was plainly right. One may approach the question in the same way as the learned lord justice did, that is to say, with a leaning in favour of finding relief, if possible, but it seems to me that in the present circumstances it is impossible to obtain any relief from s. 15 (1). An argument was based on the word "thereof" being used in reference to "by virtue of a purchase," and then being used again, not in each case of the words "appropriation or application," but once only in respect of those words, and then again being used in respect of an "importation." It seems to me that that argument carries the matter no further. The object of the use of the word "thereof" is to pick up the words "any goods in respect of which tax has become chargeable by virtue of a purchase made from him or by virtue of such an appropriation or application," and so on, and it seems to me that the explanation of the word being used three times and not four times is simply that "appropriation or application" is, as is pointed out, found in s. 25 (1) of the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1940. It seems to me that there is nothing in that argument which assists the defendants. Again, it is said that while, if one has regard to punctuation in s. 15 (1), it may appear that the words in the middle of the section, "made by him," refer to "by virtue of a purchase" as well as "appropriation or application," we are not entitled to have regard to punctuation. A reference was made to the rule stated by LORD ESHER, M.R., in Devonshire (Duke) v. O'Connor (1) (24 Q.B.D. 478), but, whether that is so or not, it seems to me plain that on the terms of s. 15 (1) "made by him" must refer to both "purchase" and "appropriation or application," as, indeed, also "effected" does to "importation." In each case the legislature has treated the person concerned as being the person who is claiming relief, and, if they had intended to refer to a previous purchase by somebody else, as is said by the learned lord justice in his judgment, it would have been unnecessary to add any words after "a previous occasion." The words which now follow would have been omitted, or one would have found the words "or in whosoever hands the goods are to be found." It is only a purchase or appropriation, application or importation by the person who is claiming relief which creates a case for relief, and the fact that tax has been paid by somebody else on a previous occasion on another purchase does not bring the case within the section. I, therefore, consider that the appeal should be dismissed.

BIRKETT, L.J.: I agree.

ASQUITH, L.J.: I also agree. The question is whether the words
A "purchase thereof" in the middle of s. 15 (1) are qualified by the words "made by him" in the next line of the sub-section, that is to say, by the merchant seeking relief, or whether the words "made by him" qualify only the intermediate words "or of such an appropriation or application thereof" which the phrase "made by him" immediately follows—in other words, whether a purchase of the goods on a previous occasion attracting tax by anyone whatsoever will suffice to found a claim for relief. If B. is claiming relief in respect of B "a purchase made by him," must he show that A., who is the immediate seller, became liable to pay and paid the tax, or will it suffice to show that Z., from whom A. bought, or Y. from whom Z. bought became liable to pay, and paid it? In my opinion, clearly the former is the true position. If I were permitted to take punctuation into account in construing an Act of Parliament, I should
C think the comma which comes after the words "appropriation or application thereof" before the words "made by him" would, in itself, be fatal to the defendants' argument, but, in deference to certain authorities binding on this court (none of them very modern) I disregard punctuation. On its natural construction, however, the section seems to contemplate throughout transactions to which the person claiming relief is a party. Thus, it contemplates
D (i) a purchase made by him; (ii) an appropriation of the goods made by him; (iii) an application of the goods made by him; and (iv) an importation of the goods effected by him. Between (i) and (ii) come the words "by virtue of a purchase thereof." It seems to me unnatural after those words to read in words such as "by whomsoever made" in a context which, otherwise, refers exclusively to things done by the claimant himself. For those and the other
E reasons given by SOMERVELL, L.J., and by DANCKWERTS, J., I agree that the appeal fails, for the previous purchase of the goods in respect of which tax became chargeable, which was relied on, was not one to which the defendants were a party. It was a purchase by Green from Tenor Products, Ltd. It is said that this is a charging statute, that the words are ambiguous, and that the ambiguity ought to be resolved in favour of the taxpayer. It is true that
F this is a charging statute, but it is equally true that this section is a relieving section—at any rate, it gives potential or discretionary relief in cases in which its conditions are satisfied. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Tarlo, Lyons & Co. (for the defendants); Sir Henry Nazeby Harrington (for the commissioners).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re WOKINGHAM FIRE BRIGADE TRUSTS. MARTIN AND OTHERS v. HAWKINS AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Danckwerts, J.), February 1, 1951.]

Charity—Benefit to the community—Provision of fire brigade.

In 1876 the W. fire brigade was established as a result of decisions taken at a public meeting held at W. for the purpose of fighting fires in W. and the surrounding district. Until 1939 it was maintained by private donations or subscriptions, fees for attending fires, and the proceeds of an annual ball. In 1940 the local authority for the district of W. undertook to pay £250 per annum to the fire brigade in return for the brigade's services in certain parishes. In 1942, on the formation of the National Fire Service, the equipment of the brigade was purchased for the use of the National Fire Service, and the question arose how the existing funds of the brigade and the proceeds of sale of its assets ought to be disposed of.

HELD: the brigade was formed for a public purpose and for the benefit of the community, and, therefore, the assets of the brigade were the subject of charitable trusts and ought to be applied under a cy près scheme.

[AS TO TRUSTS FOR PUBLIC PURPOSES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 4, pp. 122-127, paras. 161-168; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 8, pp. 255-257, Nos. 161-185.]

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine how in the events which had happened the assets of the Wokingham Fire Brigade ought to be dealt with. The brigade was maintained by donations and subscriptions, fees for attending fires and the proceeds of an annual ball. When the National Fire Service purchased the assets of the brigade and took over its functions the question arose whether its funds belonged to the members of the brigade, or ought to be returned to subscribers, or were the subject of charitable trusts, or were bona vacantia.

Monckton for the plaintiffs, trustees of the Wokingham Fire Brigade.

Elverston for members or personal representatives of deceased members of the Wokingham Fire Brigade.

J. L. Arnold for subscribers to the Wokingham Fire Brigade.

Denys B. Buckley for the Attorney-General.

Newsom for the Solicitor-General.

DANCKWERTS, J.: This case concerns the disposal of certain funds representing the proceeds of sale of equipment formerly used by a body called the Wokingham Fire Brigade for the purpose of fighting fires in the Wokingham and surrounding parishes. The funds now consist of £187 19s. 1d. at Barclays Bank, one thousand 3 per cent. Savings Bonds and one thousand 3 per cent. Defence Bonds, and the bulk appears to represent the proceeds of the sale of two fire engines, one a Dennis motor fire engine, bought in 1926 mainly as a result of public subscription, and a Leyland fire engine bought in 1937. The value of the Leyland engine is said to have been about £750 and the other £325. So those two between them account for £1,075 out of the funds in question, and, no doubt, the rest represents the proceeds of the sale of various articles of fire-fighting equipment.

On Nov. 9, 1876, a public meeting was held at the Rose Hotel, Wokingham, at which the proposal for a fire brigade was discussed. The brigade in question was formed, and, until September, 1939, when the war broke out, it was maintained by means of funds from private donations or subscriptions, fees of various amounts for attending fires (principally paid by the insurance companies concerned with the sites of the fires), and the proceeds of the fire brigade's annual ball. In 1940 the Wokingham Rural District Council wished to enter into an agreement with the brigade to provide fire brigade services in certain parishes. The council felt a difficulty about the persons with whom they should negotiate, and the existing fourteen members of the fire brigade took it on themselves to appoint trustees by resolution. On Jan. 27, 1940, those trustees executed a declaration of trust in which they purported to declare a trust on which the property and funds of which they had taken charge were supposed to be held. If a certain conclusion is reached in regard to this case, that method of appointing trustees had no validity whatever and the trustees had no authority to declare any trusts in respect of these funds. I cannot treat that document as having much weight or importance. On Dec. 3, 1940, an agreement was entered into between those trustees, so called, and the Wokingham Rural District Council under which the council undertook to pay £250 a year to the brigade and the brigade undertook to provide services in the parishes mentioned in the document. Those sums were duly paid over. In 1942, the National Fire Service having been established, the whole of the equipment of the brigade was purchased for the sum of £1,645 and the brigade became defunct. The question is: How shall the assets of the brigade, including the proceeds of sale, be dealt with?

I have before me a number of claimants. The plaintiffs are the survivors of the trustees appointed by the document of 1940. The first twelve defendants are either members of the fire brigade when it existed or personal representatives of deceased members, and they all claim through their counsel that the assets were the private property of the members of the brigade in much the same way as the property of a member's club is owned by the members for the time being, and, therefore, can be sold and the proceeds divided among the existing members at that time by an agreement among themselves. That negatives the existence of any trust over the assets at all. It is simply a question of property. On the other hand, the thirteenth and fourteenth defendants are representatives of subscribers, and it is alleged on behalf of that class that the property was given on a rather peculiar set of trusts, a trust to use the subscriptions of money given for the purposes of a fire brigade, or, possibly, if the money was not wanted for that purpose, for the individual subscriber's benefit, and, failing the devotion of the money in that way, on a resulting trust for the subscribers on the footing that they did not intend to part out and out with all the interest in the funds which they had subscribed. The Attorney-General claims that the fund is subject to charitable trusts of a public nature and that there should be a cy près application, and, finally, the Solicitor-General claims as bona vacantia any assets to which title cannot be made by any other claimant.

To discover whether there are trusts and what those trusts are, I think one is entitled to look at the history of the matter, and, though it is rather meagre, one document which is in evidence gives some indication of what the nature of the body was and its purposes were. It is an appeal for funds, and reads:

"Wokingham Fire Brigade, Established 1876. President: Marquis of Downshire. Chief Officer, W. B. Martin. Second Officer, E. Hawkins. Hon. Surgeon, Dr. H. F. Curl. Hon. Sec., C. W. Rawlings. Our first motor engine which was purchased mainly by public subscription in 1914 to replace the old horse-drawn steam engine has given many years of good service, but its frequent need of repairs during the last two years is reliable evidence of it having seen its best days. The enormous increase in the number of houses in the large area under our care and the consequent greater risk of fires makes it essential for us to keep our machines and equipment in first-class condition, and for this purpose we are endeavouring to raise the sum of £1,000 to purchase a new motor engine with its necessary fittings. We are a voluntary brigade and all monies received for use of our engines at fires is kept quite apart from the account of annual subscriptions and general expenses, and from this about £200 can be taken for the new engine. We feel sure that property owners and householders appreciate the difference in cost to them of a voluntary brigade and one provided by a public body, and will respond to our appeal generously."

Counsel for the subscribers relies on the appeal to self-interest which appears in the last paragraph of that appeal. That does not seem to me in the least conclusive, because many people subscribe to charitable purposes partly because they are induced by some motive in their own interest and the fact that there is an appeal to their interest does not rule out the possibility that it may be a charitable trust.

That document indicates the basis on which the brigade was carried on, and the fact that it was formed at a public meeting in 1876 points in the same way. In my view, this was a body of a non-profit-making character. It was formed to supply a public need, namely, to provide a means of fighting fires in the Wokingham district. That seems to me to be a public purpose. It was not formed for the benefit of the members, but for the benefit of the public, and its purpose was to prevent damage and loss of life in that community. The provision of a public fire brigade of this kind is as much a public charitable purpose as the provision of a life-boat, and the provision of a life-boat has been held in one way and another in a number of cases to be a public charitable purpose.

It seems, therefore, that the funds were subject to public charitable trusts which have been in operation for a number of years. That rules out any other application of the fund.

I think that the subscribers intended to part with all interest in the subscriptions when they made them for the benefit of this public purpose, and I do not feel impressed by statements which seem to me to be in the nature of after-thoughts. I do not believe that when the subscriptions were made there was any thought of the future disposition of the money in such circumstances as have arisen. The only thing which I think was taken into account was the provision of the brigade or its equipment, and, that being so, the funds were devoted out and out for a charitable purpose. That purpose being no longer practicable by reason of the sale of the assets to a different body charged with the duties previously performed by the brigade, the charitable trusts do not fail. It is not necessary to consider whether there was any general charitable intention and the trusts must be modified by means of a cy près application. For that purpose the matter will go to chambers for the settlement of a scheme.

Order accordingly. Costs of all parties to be taxed as between solicitor and client and raised and paid out of the fund. Proceedings stayed against all the defendants other than the Attorney-General.

Solicitors: Soames, Edwards & Jones, agents for Cooke, Cooper & Barry, Wokingham (for the plaintiffs and all defendants except the Attorney-General and the Solicitor-General); Treasurer Solicitor.

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

DEMETRIADES v. GLASGOW CORPORATION.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Normand, Lord Morton of Henryton, Lord MacDermott and Lord Reid), December 7, 8, 1950, February 7, 1951.]

Requisition—Land—Use by competent authority—Cutting of trees—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927), reg. 51 (2).

By reg. 51 (2) of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, it is provided:

“While any land is in the possession of a competent authority by virtue of this regulation . . . the land may . . . be used by, or under the authority of, the competent authority for such purpose, and in such manner, as that authority thinks expedient . . . and the competent authority, so far as appears to it to be necessary or expedient in connection with the taking of possession of . . . or with the use of any land . . . (a) may do, or authorise persons using the land as aforesaid to do, in relation to the land, anything which any person having an interest in the land would be entitled to do by virtue of that interest . . .” In 1943 the appellant’s house and garden were requisitioned for billeting troops, and in 1946 the requisition was transferred to the Secretary of State for Scotland who took possession to use the property for accommodating persons who were inadequately housed. The Secretary of State delegated his powers to the respondent corporation, who, in the course of alterations to the property, cut and mutilated a number of trees in the garden. In proceedings by the appellant in which he asked the court (i) to interdict the respondents from cutting, mutilating, or removing trees, (ii) to grant a declaration that trees had been unlawfully cut, mutilated, and removed, and (iii) to award damages,

HELD: (i) under the regulation the competent authority had an unrestricted discretion with regard to the use of requisitioned property, either by itself or under its authority, provided that it bona fide considered that the use to which the property was being put or the manner in which it was being used was necessary and expedient to effect the purpose of the requisition.

(ii) in the absence of averments of bad faith, ulterior motive, or, possibly, perverseness, on the part of the authority, the jurisdiction of the courts was excluded, and the competent authority was the judge of the use which it should make of the land and of what it should do in connection with such use for the purposes of the requisition.

(iii) accordingly, the proceedings were incompetent, and the appellant’s only remedy was to seek compensation under the Compensation (Defence) Act, 1939.

[AS TO COMPENSATION IN RESPECT OF TAKING POSSESSION OF LAND UNDER THE COMPENSATION (DEFENCE) ACT, 1939, s. 2, see HALSBURY’S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 3, p. 989.]

APPEAL from a judgment of the First Division of the Court of Session.

In 1943 the appellant’s property in Dumbreck Road, Glasgow, consisting of a house and large garden, was requisitioned by the Secretary of State for War for billeting troops. In 1946 the requisition was transferred to the Secretary of State for Scotland who took possession to use the property for accommodating persons inadequately housed. The Secretary of State delegated his powers to the Glasgow Corporation, the respondents, who carried out alterations and licensed certain persons to occupy the premises. The appellant complained that in October, 1948, he found that the respondents or their servants or others claiming right through them were mutilating valuable growing trees and causing irreparable damage to them. The respondents contended that they had altered the property in order to make it suitable for habitation for separate occupiers and had trimmed some trees because of complaints by an adjoining occupier of overhanging branches. Such work had been carried out in a workmanlike manner. In an action in the Sheriff Court of Lanarkshire the appellant asked the court (i) to interdict the respondents from cutting, mutilating or removing trees, (ii) for a declaration that trees had been cut, mutilated and removed, and (iii) to award damages. On the first question the sheriff substitute found against the appellant and also rejected the further submission that the requisition was not valid, but on the second question he held that the respondents were bound to administer the property in a proper manner. The respondents appealed to the Court of Session and by their judgment the First Division dismissed the appellant's action as incompetent.

Sir David Maxwell Fyfe, K.C., G. G. Stott, K.C., and Jas. A. Forsyth (both of the Scottish Bar) for the appellant.

T. P. McDonald, K.C., and Niel MacVicar (both of the Scottish Bar) for the respondents.

The House took time for consideration.

Feb. 7, 1951. The following opinions were read.

LORD NORMAND: My Lords, the appellant raised an action in the Sheriff Court of Lanarkshire craving the court (i) to interdict the respondents from cutting, mutilating or removing trees from a certain area of ground belonging to him; (ii) to declare that the respondents had unlawfully cut, mutilated and removed trees from the said area; and (iii) to award damages. In his condescendence he averred, inter alia, that the respondents had taken possession of the heritable subjects, consisting of a villa, offices and large garden under a pretended requisition made by the Secretary of State for Scotland, and that they or persons deriving right through them had caused irreparable damage to his property by cutting and mutilating trees thereon. The damage was specified in averments which relevantly instruct serious injury to the appellant's property. In their answers the respondents averred that the property had been requisitioned by the Secretary of State for War in 1943 for the billeting of troops and that in 1946, this purpose being spent, the Secretary of State for Scotland arranged that the requisition should be transferred to him for the purpose of accommodating persons inadequately housed, and that the respondents had, as his agents, carried out certain alterations on the property, thereby rendering it suitable for habitation by a number of separate occupiers, who subsequently took up their abode in the villa and were still resident there. They further averred that their whole actings relative to the property were carried out as agents for the Secretary of State. They explained that they had trimmed certain trees because the occupier of neighbouring property complained of overhanging branches and they averred that the trimming was carried out in a workmanlike manner. To this the appellant replied with a denial that the requisition was valid, without specification of the grounds of the averment or reference to the relevant statute or regulations. There was no averment of mala fides on the part of the respondents. The fourth plea in law for the appellant is in these terms:

"The Secretary of State for Scotland not having made any valid requisition of said subjects, any agency appointment by him in virtue of any pretended requisition is null and void and the defenders have no legal right to interfere in any way with the said subjects or the said trees, and the pursuer is entitled to declarator as craved."

The sixth plea (which was unsupported by averment) was based on the mala fide exercise of the respondents' powers.

After sundry procedure, which it is now unnecessary to consider, the case came before the sheriff substitute who, on May 27, 1949, inter alia, repelled the fourth and sixth plea in law, but allowed a proof of the parties' averments as regards the cutting down and mutilation of trees to the prejudice of the appellant. It appears from the note annexed to the interlocutor that the sheriff substitute thought it was desirable to establish the facts for the purpose of reckoning the compensation which would fall to be made at the end of the requisition. Against the interlocutor the respondents appealed to the First Division of the Court of Session. The appellant would have been entitled to take advantage of the respondents' appeal to appeal against any part of the interlocutor prejudicial to him. In fact, he failed to do so and he did not move the court to recall the interlocutor of the sheriff substitute so far as it repelled the fourth or sixth plea in law. The Lord President says in his opinion:

"It is true that on record there is a pro forma challenge of the validity, and, indeed, of the fact of requisition; but I did not understand that challenge was seriously intended or was now insisted upon, and I proceed upon the footing that this house . . . originally requisitioned by the Secretary of State for War has been for some time, and was at the material date, requisitioned by the Secretary of State for Scotland for the purpose of accommodating persons inadequately housed and, as is customary in connection with such requisitions, was being administered on behalf of the Secretary of State by the Corporation of Glasgow."

Nevertheless, counsel for the appellant, in opening the case, began by a challenge of the validity of the requisition. When his attention was called to the procedure below and to the passage cited from the opinion of the Lord President, he said he had understood that the question of the validity of the requisition had been kept open in the Inner House but had not been argued because a decision in a previous case, binding on the court, was conclusive in favour of the validity, and he intimated his intention to challenge that previous decision in the present appeal. My Lords, whatever may have been intended, it is clear from the Lord President's opinion that the question of the validity of the requisition was not reserved in the Inner House. It would be irregular for this House to allow a challenge of a part of the sheriff substitute's interlocutor which had been acquiesced in in the Inner House, and the appeal must be restricted to the question whether the cutting down and mutilation of the trees was an improper exercise of the respondents' powers as agents of the Secretary of State under a valid requisition of the property for the purpose of accommodating persons inadequately housed. The question, moreover, has to be decided on the footing that the respondents throughout acted in good faith.

The question thus narrowed and defined depends on the terms of reg. 51 (2) of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927). The relevant portion of the regulation is as follows:

"While any land is in the possession of a competent authority by virtue of this regulation, . . . the land may . . . be used by, or under the authority of, the competent authority for such purpose, and in such manner, as that authority thinks expedient in the interests of the public safety, the defence of the realm or the efficient prosecution of the war, or for maintaining supplies and services essential to the life of the community; and the competent authority, so far as appears to it to be necessary or expedient in connection with the taking of possession of any land in pursuance of this regulation, or with the use of any land in possession of the competent authority by virtue of this regulation . . . (a) may do, or authorise persons using the land as aforesaid to do, in relation to the land, anything which any person having an interest in the land would be entitled to do by virtue of that interest . . ."

The First Division unanimously held that the respondents' actings were within the discretionary powers conferred by the regulation and dismissed the action.

The regulation falls into two parts, and it is not obvious at first sight, nor does it greatly matter, which of the two is the part more relevant to the present case. The two parts are complementary and they extend to the use of the land in any manner for the purpose for which it was requisitioned and to any work or act done in connection with such use. The cutting down or trimming of trees seems on the whole to fall more naturally within the second part, and so far I am with the appellant. Neither part of the regulation confers on the competent authority unlimited powers of dealing with the subjects requisitioned. For example, the competent authority cannot alienate by grant or disposition any part of the subjects because it has itself no proprietary right and a purported grant or disposition of property would be without title. So, also, a grant of a lease is beyond power. That said, however, it is difficult to find in the regulation any limits to the powers of use or of action in connection with use of the subjects, provided that the competent authority, having applied its mind to the question, in good faith thinks the use expedient for the purpose of the requisition or the action necessary or expedient in connection with the use. Counsel for the appellant submitted that in the second part of the regulation a limitation was implied, if not expressed by the words "do . . . anything which any person having an interest in the land would be entitled to do by virtue of that interest." He maintained that "interest" fell short of ownership and that it meant a right adequate to enable the occupier to do anything necessary or expedient for the purposes of the occupation. I should myself read the words not as limiting the power of the competent authority, but as indicating its width. For example, if the land were requisitioned for the purpose of defence, the competent authority would have the power to demolish the house and offices and to alter the site and its contours in order to build gun emplacements or to clear the arc of fire of the guns, and to do other things which a proprietor might not be able to do without the superior's consent or acquiescence. In my view, "interest" means any interest or interests which any person or persons may have in the lands. But if counsel's gloss on the words is accepted, the result is precisely the same, for the demolition of buildings would then be warranted as the exercise of a right adequate to enable the occupier to do anything necessary or expedient for the purposes of defence.

Counsel for the appellant strove to find in the regulation a jurisdiction reserved to the courts to interfere with the use of the land or with the actions of the competent authority in relation to the land. He submitted that, though the competent authority was empowered to do anything ancillary to the purpose of the requisition, yet there was reserved to the courts the decision whether a particular act was ancillary or not. The words of the regulation appear to me to be well chosen to exclude such a reservation. Again, the terms of the regulation leave no jurisdiction to the courts to entertain the question whether the competent authority has acted with reasonable care and skill, and it is not intelligible to say that a negligent or unskilful act is not a thing which any person having an interest in the land would be entitled to do by virtue of that interest. In the absence of averments of bad faith or ulterior motive the jurisdiction of the courts is excluded and the competent authority is the judge of the use which it should make of the land and of what it should do in connection with such use for the purposes of the requisition.

I agree, therefore, with the learned judges of the First Division that the question in the appeal is not one for the courts. It follows that the craves for interdict and for declarator are incompetent, and, since it is agreed that on that view the appellant's only remedy is under the Compensation (Defence) Act, 1939, the interlocutor dismissing the action is unexceptionable and the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON: My Lords, your Lordships have held, for reasons which have already been explained, that it is not open to the appellant to challenge the validity of the requisition in this case. Accordingly I proceed, as did the Lord President in the First Division, on the footing that at the material date No. 7 Dumbreck Road was in the possession of a competent authority—namely, the Secretary of State for Scotland—who had legally taken possession thereof for the purpose of accommodating persons inadequately housed, and that the acts complained of were done by the respondents as agents of that competent authority. Regulation 51 (2) of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, provides that:

- A “While any land is in the possession of a competent authority by virtue of this regulation . . . the land may . . . be used by, or under the authority of, the competent authority for such purpose, and in such manner, as that authority thinks expedient . . .”
- B for any of the purposes specified in a statute which is admittedly applicable. It is not disputed that the purpose of accommodating persons inadequately housed comes within the specified purposes. For my part, I do not find it necessary to read the rest of the regulation. In the present case the land has been used, “under the authority of the competent authority,” in a manner which the appellant finds extremely objectionable. In his condescendence 4, the appellant alleges that on or about Oct. 27, 1948, the respondents, through
- C their servants, undertook certain operations on trees, approximately sixteen in number, on the premises No. 7 Dumbreck Road belonging to him and that such operations had the result that “the said trees were mutilated beyond repair and reduced from trees to dying stumps.” For the purposes of this appeal your Lordships must assume that these allegations are correct. The appellant, no doubt, takes the view that to treat his trees in this way is not
- D to “use” the property in a manner which is “expedient” for the purpose for which the competent authority took possession of the property, but the decision whether it is expedient or inexpedient is not left by the regulation to the decision of a court of law. The trees in question are part of the land in the possession of the competent authority, that which has been done to the trees is a user of the land, and by the words of the regulation the competent
- E authority is made the judge of what manner of user is “expedient” for the purpose for which he acquired the land. The position would be different if there were any allegation of fact that the competent authority, through his agents the respondents, had acted in bad faith and with some ulterior motive in carrying out this work on the trees. The truth or falsity of such an allegation could be investigated by a court of law. I can find no such allegation in the
- F condescendence for the appellant, and under reg. 51 (2), as I read it, the competent authority is entitled to say, through his agents: “I thought that this work was expedient for the purpose for which I went into possession of this property. I may have been correct or incorrect in so thinking, but that is a matter into which no court can inquire; it is enough that I so thought.” The action is thus incompetent, in so far as it seeks an interdict and declaration.
- G Turning to the appellant's claim to damages, I agree with the view of the First Division that the only competent remedy available to the appellant is by claim before the appropriate tribunal under the Compensation (Defence) Act, 1939, and subsequent statutes. Counsel for the appellant very properly stated that he felt unable to argue to the contrary, if the main question arising on this appeal were decided against his client. I would dismiss the appeal.
- H

LORD MACDERMOTT: My Lords, I have had the advantage of reading in print the opinion just delivered by my noble and learned friend on the Woolsack. I agree with him in thinking that this appeal fails and also in the reasoning which has led him to that conclusion. In particular, I share the view that the acts complained of come within para. (a) of the second part of reg. 51 (2), and that the words “anything which any person having an interest in the land would be entitled to do by virtue of that interest” authorise the doing on or to the land itself of anything which could be done by virtue of any interest or conjunction of interests therein.

LORD REID: My Lords, the appellant is the owner of a house and large garden in Dumbreck Road, Glasgow. In 1943 his property was requisitioned for billeting troops, and in 1946 the requisition was transferred to the Secretary of State for Scotland who took possession to use the property for accommodating persons inadequately housed. The Secretary of State delegated his powers to the respondents who carried out alterations in the house to make it suitable for housing separate occupiers and then licensed certain persons to occupy parts of the house.

The appellant avers that in October, 1948, he found that the respondents, or their servants or others claiming right through them, were mutilating valuable trees growing on his property and doing irreparable damage to them. In November, 1948, he raised the present action against the respondents for interdict to prevent further damage and for damages. His pleadings disclose two main grounds of action—first, that the requisition was invalid, and, secondly, that, even if it was valid, the respondents' actings were unwarranted and illegal. The sheriff substitute decided against the appellant on the first question and repelled those of his pleas in law which raised the question of the validity of the requisition, but on the second question he allowed a proof on the view that the respondents were bound to administer the property in a proper manner. The respondents appealed to the Court of Session. By interlocutor of Oct. 14, 1949, against which the present appeal is taken, the First Division dismissed the action as incompetent and irrelevant. It appears that at the hearing of the appeal before the First Division the present appellant did not raise the question of the validity of the requisition. If he had wished to take advantage of that appeal in order to appeal against that part of the sheriff substitute's interlocutor which repelled certain of his pleas in law, he ought to have made an appropriate motion in the course of the hearing. It is true that he could not usefully have argued the question because the Division were bound by a previous decision on a similar question. But if he wished to keep the matter open for an appeal to this House it was necessary for him at least formally to raise the question. In my opinion, it is now too late for him to attack the interlocutor of the sheriff substitute.

This appeal must be decided on the basis that the requisition was valid. As the case has been decided on relevancy we must proceed on the footing that the appellant's averments are well founded in fact. I think that his averments, so far as material to the question at issue in this appeal, can be summarised in this way. The respondents have cut and mutilated trees and they have done that in an unskilful manner so that irreparable damage has been done and the trees have been reduced to dying stumps, and it is further averred that this was in no way connected with housing persons inadequately housed. The damage done is estimated at £225. The respondents' powers were derived from the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 51, which at the material time was continued in force by the Supplies and Services (Transitional Powers) Act, 1945. That regulation conferred certain powers on competent authorities including power to delegate their functions. It is not disputed that the Secretary of State was a competent authority nor is it disputed that there was a proper delegation to the respondents. The regulation provides that while land is in possession of a competent authority it may be used by or under the authority of the competent authority "for such purpose, and in such manner, as that authority thinks expedient" for any of the purposes specified in s. 1 (1) of the Act of 1945, and the regulation further provides that the competent authority "so far as appears to it to be necessary or expedient" in connection with the taking of possession may do or authorise persons using the land to do in relation to the land "anything which any person having an interest in the land would be entitled to do by virtue of that interest." It is not now open to the appellant to contend that housing persons inadequately housed is not within the purposes specified in the Act of 1945.

A The argument for the appellant was that the authority to do work or make alterations on requisitioned land is a limited authority. It was said that the reference to "any person having an interest in the land" pointed to an interest less than ownership and that one must imagine a person with an interest sufficient, but only sufficient, to enable him to do what is necessary to enable the land to be used for the purpose for which it has been requisitioned. It is not easy to see why this part of the regulation has been drafted as it has been, but it certainly cannot mean that in no case is the competent authority to have as wide powers to make alterations as an owner would have. This regulation gives the necessary authority for defence works on requisitioned land and in many cases work clearly necessary for defence purposes could not have been carried out by anyone with less than the full powers of an owner. Indeed, in some cases it may have been necessary to do things which even an owner could not do without the permission of others, for example, where the rights of other riparian owners were involved, but it is not necessary to consider cases of that character. It is enough that in many cases no powers short of those of an owner would suffice. So, in my opinion, there is no substance in the argument that the respondents could not have power under the regulation to destroy trees if that were a proper thing to do in order to get full use of the land for the purpose for which it was requisitioned.

D The next argument was that the appellant is entitled to prove that the cutting of these trees could not properly be regarded as expedient in connection with the use of the property for housing. It was said that, although the regulation gives to the competent authority full discretion in matters clearly connected with the purpose of the requisition, it does not leave it to the authority to determine the issue whether doing a particular thing is sufficiently closely connected with the purpose of the requisition to be within the authority's power. This argument assumes that, because the Secretary of State took possession of the property to use it for housing, he would not be entitled to use it for any other purpose falling within s. 1 (1) of the Supplies and Services (Transitional Powers) Act, 1945. I must not be taken as assenting to that. It is unnecessary to consider that question in this case because, even if that assumption is right, I am unable to accept the appellant's argument. The discretion conferred on the competent authority by the regulation is very wide. The authority can use the land which it has taken "for such purpose, and in such manner, as that authority thinks expedient" for the purpose of the requisition. That must, in my opinion, mean that the authority is made the judge of how best to use the requisitioned property for that purpose. I am far from saying that in no case can the actions of the authority be challenged by legal action. Admittedly, the authority must act in good faith, but bad faith is not alleged here. And it may be that there would be grounds for action if it appeared that the authority's decision was so unreasonable as to be perverse, but the averments here fall far short of making a case of that kind. All that is said is that the cutting of the trees was in no way connected with housing persons inadequately housed. Cutting some trees may be very necessary to admit light and air to a house, and in other cases there may be room for great differences of opinion. There is nothing in these averments to show that this is not a case where there was room for differences of opinion. I need not, therefore, consider what would be the result in a case where stronger averments could be made. Further, it may be that there would be grounds for action if it could be shown that neither the authority nor anyone authorised by it ever made any decision about the expediency of doing what was in fact done. But all that is said in this case is that the cutting was not done in a workmanlike manner. If a case were made that what was done in fact was essentially different from that which the authority had decided was expedient, there might be room for action. But, again, that need not be decided here, because these averments are not sufficient to make a case of that character.

In coming to a decision on this appeal I do not proceed at all on the comparatively small amount of damage alleged. If the appellant had suffered a legal wrong he would be entitled to a remedy though his loss might be small and though the consequences might be far reaching. In my judgment, even if all that is averred was proved, the appellant could not succeed, and I, therefore, agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Stephenson, Harwood & Tatham, agents for Syminton & Blair, Glasgow, and A. Watson, Edinburgh (for the appellant); Martin & Co., agents for Simpson & Marwick, Edinburgh (for the respondents).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

WILCOX v. JEFFERY.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Devlin, JJ.), January 26, 1951.]

Alien—Breach of condition of leave to land—Aiding and abetting—Presence of music critic at concert—Leave to musician subject to condition not to take employment—Performance at concert—Aliens Order, 1920 (S.R. & O., 1920, No. 448), art. 18 (2).

On Dec. 11, 1949, one H., a musician and a citizen of the United States, was granted permission to land in the United Kingdom under art. 1 (4) of the Aliens Order, 1920, on condition that during his stay he would not take any employment, paid or unpaid. The appellant was present at the airport when H. landed and knew what condition had been imposed. That night H. attended a concert in a London theatre, and, on the invitation of the organisers of the concert, he gave a performance on the saxophone with other musicians. The appellant was present in the theatre throughout the concert, having paid for admission thereto, and later he wrote a laudatory commentary on H.'s performance in a magazine of which he was owner and managing editor and also published in the magazine a number of photographs.

HELD: the appellant's presence at the concert was not accidental, and in the circumstances it was open to the magistrate to find that his presence was an encouragement to H. to commit an offence against art. 1 (4) of the Order, and, therefore, under art. 18 (2), to convict him of aiding and abetting.

R. v. Coney (1882) (8 Q.B.D. 534), applied.

[AS TO CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR AIDING AND ABETTING OFFENCES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 9, pp. 30-32, paras. 30, 31; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 14, pp. 91-94, Nos. 605-638, and Digest Supp., and 2nd Digest Supp.]

AS TO THE CONDITIONAL LANDING OF ALIENS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 1, p. 476, para. 805.]

Case referred to:

(1) R. v. Coney, (1882), 8 Q.B.D. 534; 51 L.J.M.C. 66; 46 L.T. 307; 46 J.P. 404; 15 Digest 645, 6870.

CASE STATED by a metropolitan magistrate.

At a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Bow Street Magistrate's Court the appellant, Herbert William Wilcox, owner and managing editor of a monthly magazine entitled "Jazz Illustrated," was charged with aiding and abetting one Coleman Hawkins, a citizen of the United States, in contravening art. 1 (4) of the Aliens Order, 1920, by failing to comply with a condition attached to a grant of leave to land in the United Kingdom, namely, that Hawkins should take no employment paid or unpaid during his stay, contrary to art. 18 (4) of the Order. It was proved or admitted that on Dec. 11, 1949, Hawkins arrived at a London airport and was met by, among others, the appellant. The appellant was present when an immigration officer interviewed two other persons who had previously applied for permission for Hawkins to perform at a concert in London, but had been told by the Ministry of Labour that their application had been refused. At that interview it was stated that Hawkins would attend the concert and would be "spotlighted" and introduced to the audience, but would not perform. The appellant said he was not connected with the persons responsible for organising the concert and that he had only gone to the airport to report Hawkins' arrival for his magazine. The immigration officer gave permission to Hawkins to remain for three days in this country, making it a condition that he should not take any paid or unpaid employment. The appellant was aware that such a condition had been imposed. Later the same day the appellant attended the concert, paying for admission. Hawkins was seated in a box, but after being "spotlighted" he went on the stage and played the saxophone. A description of the performance by Hawkins with several pages of photographs was later published in the appellant's magazine. The magistrate was of the opinion that the appellant aided and abetted the contravention of the Order by Hawkins and imposed a fine of £25 and £21 costs.

Rountree for the appellant.

J. M. G. Griffith-Jones for the respondent.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is a Case stated by the metropolitan magistrate at Bow Street Magistrate's Court before whom the appellant, Herbert William Wilcox, the proprietor of a periodical called "Jazz Illustrated," was charged on an information that "on Dec. 11, 1949, he did unlawfully aid and abet one Coleman Hawkins in contravening art. 1 (4) of the Aliens Order, 1920, by failing to comply with a condition attached to a grant of leave to land, to wit, that the said Coleman Hawkins should take no employment paid or unpaid while in the United Kingdom, contrary to art. 18 (2) of the Aliens Order, 1920." Under the Aliens Order, art. 1 (1), it is provided that " . . . an alien coming . . . by sea to a place in the United Kingdom—

(a) shall not land in the United Kingdom without the leave of an immigration officer . . . "

It is provided by art 1 (4) that:

" An immigration officer, in accordance with general or special directions of the Secretary of State, may, by general order or notice or otherwise, attach such conditions as he may think fit to the grant of leave to land, and the Secretary of State may at any time vary such conditions in such manner as he thinks fit, and the alien shall comply with the conditions so attached or varied . . . "

If the alien fails to comply, he is to be in the same position as if he has landed without permission, i.e., he commits an offence.

The case is concerned with the visit of a celebrated professor of the saxophone, a gentleman by the name of Hawkins who was a citizen of the United States. He came here at the invitation of two gentlemen of the name of Curtis and Hughes, connected with a jazz club which enlivens the neighbourhood of Willesden. They, apparently, had applied for permission for Mr. Hawkins to land and it was refused, but, nevertheless, this professor of the saxophone arrived with four French musicians. When they came to the airport, among the people who were there to greet them was the appellant. He had not arranged their visit, but he knew they were coming and he was there to report the arrival of these important musicians for his magazine. So, evidently, he was regarding the visit of Mr. Hawkins as a matter which would be of interest to himself and the magazine which he was editing and selling for profit. Messrs. Curtis and Hughes arranged a concert at the Princes Theatre, London. The appellant attended that concert as a spectator. He paid for his ticket. Mr. Hawkins went on the stage and delighted the audience by playing the saxophone. The appellant did not get up and protest in the name of the musicians of England that Mr. Hawkins ought not to be here competing with them and taking the bread out of their mouths or the wind out of their instruments. It is not found that he actually applauded, but he was there having paid to go in, and, no doubt, enjoying the performance, and then, lo and behold, out comes his magazine with a most laudatory description, fully illustrated, of this concert. On those facts the magistrate has found that he aided and abetted.

Reliance is placed by the prosecution on R. v. Coney (1) which dealt with a prize fight. This case relates to a jazz band concert, but the particular nature of the entertainment provided, whether by fighting with bare fists or playing on saxophones, does not seem to me to make any difference to the question which we have to decide. The fact is that a man is charged with aiding and abetting an illegal act, and I can find no authority for saying that it matters what that illegal act is, provided that the aider and abettor knows the facts sufficiently well to know that they would constitute an offence in the principal. In R. v. Coney (1) the prize fight took place in the neighbourhood of Ascot, and four or five men were convicted of aiding and abetting the fight. The conviction was quashed on the ground that the chairman had not given a correct direction to the jury when he told them that, as the prisoners were physically present at the fight, they must be held to have aided and abetted. That direction, the court held, was wrong, it being too wide. The matter was very concisely put by CAVE, J., whose judgment was fully concurred in by that great master of the criminal law, STEPHEN, J. CAVE, J., said (8 Q.B.D. 540):

"Where presence may be entirely accidental, it is not even evidence of aiding and abetting. Where presence is prima facie not accidental it is evidence, but no more than evidence, for the jury."

There was not accidental presence in this case. The appellant paid to go to the concert and he went there because he wanted to report it. He must, therefore, be held to have been present, taking part, concurring, or encouraging, whichever word you like to use for expressing this conception. It was an illegal act on the part of Hawkins to play the saxophone or any other instrument at this concert. The appellant clearly knew that it was an unlawful act for him to play. He had gone there to hear him, and his presence and his payment to go there was an encouragement. He went there to make use of the performance, because he went there, as the magistrate finds and was justified in finding, to get "copy" for his newspaper. It might have been entirely different, as I say, if he had gone there and protested, saying: "The musicians' union do not like you foreigners coming here and playing and you ought to get off the stage." If he had booed, it might have been some evidence that he was not aiding and abetting. If he had gone as a member of a claque to try to drown the noise of the saxophone, he might very likely be found not guilty of aiding and abetting. In this case it seems clear that he was there, not only to approve and encourage what was done, but to take advantage of it by getting "copy" for his paper. In those circumstances there was evidence on which the magistrate could find that the appellant aided and abetted, and for these reasons I am of opinion that the appeal fails.

HUMPHREYS, J.: I agree that there was evidence sufficient to justify the finding of the magistrate.

DEVLIN, J.: I agree, and I wish to add only a word on the application of R. v. Coney (1). Counsel for the appellant sought to distinguish that case on the facts inasmuch as in R. v. Coney (1) the performance, which was a prize fight, was illegal from beginning to end, whereas in the case we are considering the bulk of the concert was quite legal, the only part of the performance which was illegal being that which involved Mr. Hawkins. That, however, is not, in my judgment, a distinction which affects the application to this case of the principle in R. v. Coney (1). It may well be that if a spectator goes to a concert he may explain his presence during an illegal item by saying that he hardly felt it necessary to get up and go out and then return when the performance resumed its legality, if I may so call it. It is conceivable that in such circumstances (and I should wish to consider it further if it ever arose) the presence of a person during one item might fall within the accidental or casual class which was envisaged by CAVE, J. Here there was abundant evidence, apart from the mere fact of the appellant's presence, that he was making use of this item in the performance and that his attendance at that item was, therefore, deliberate. In those circumstances I think the principle in R. v. Coney (1) applies, and that the magistrate was justified in drawing the inference which he did draw.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Elliot & Macvie (for the appellant); Treasury Solicitor (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re NOAD (deceased). NOAD v. NOAD AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Roxbury, J.), February 2, 5, 1951.]

Will—Gift “to the issue of our marriage”—Exclusion of grandchildren.

By his will, dated Mar. 1, 1914, a testator, who died in May, 1950, gave, devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate of every description “unto my wife E.L.N. for her life and upon her death to be equally divided between the issue of our marriage.” One son, born in 1906, was the only child of the marriage. The son survived the testator, and was himself the father of three children at the date of the testator's death. On the construction of the gift over on the widow's death, HELD: the phrase “issue of our marriage” ought to be construed as meaning only the child or children of the testator and his wife to the exclusion of the grandchildren.

Reed v. Braithwaite (1871) (L.R. 11 Eq. 514), followed.

Walsh v. Johnston ([1899] 1 I.R. 501), not followed.

[AS TO MEANING OF “ISSUE,” see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 34, pp. 313-317, paras. 362-364; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 44, pp. 851-861, Nos. 7051-7163.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Reed v. Braithwaite, (1871), L.R. 11 Eq. 514; 40 L.J.Ch. 355; 24 L.T. 351; 44 Digest 1153, 9977.
- (2) Walsh v. Johnston, [1899] 1 I.R. 501; 44 Digest 852, 7059 iv.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine whether, on the true construction of the will of Arnold John Noad, a gift expressed to be given to the "issue of our marriage" passed to the testator's only child absolutely or whether it was to be divided equally between the testator's child and grandchildren per capita.

Martin Roth for the plaintiff, the executor.

Hesketh for the first defendant, the only child of the testator.

T. A. C. Burgess for remaining defendants, the grandchildren of the testator. A

ROXBURGH, J.: The testator, Arnold John Noad, died in May, 1950, having by his will dated Mar. 1, 1914, given, devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate of every description

"unto my wife Elsie Louise Noad for her life and upon her death to be equally divided between the issue of our marriage." B

At the date of his will the testator had but one son, but there is no evidence before me to suggest that he might not have had other children. In fact, he had no other children. The son, Edward John, who was born in 1906, survived the testator, and has children. The question is whether, on the death of the testator's widow, the son takes the whole of the testator's residuary estate or whether it is to be equally divided between the son and the son's children per capita. C

Before I look at authority, I must emphasise the extreme improbability that the testator intended his son and his son's children to take per capita. It would not have been at all surprising if he had intended a distribution among his issue to all degrees per stirpes, but a distribution among issue of all degrees per capita in which parent and children compete with one another is, in my judgment, a most improbable testamentary disposition. D

Counsel for the testator's grandchildren said in his opening observations in a manner which I found very convincing: "'Issue' means issue to all degrees, unless there is a context restraining the meaning of the word. There is no context here, and, accordingly, it must mean issue to all degrees, whether the testator is likely to have intended such a result or not." Counsel for the son parried this argument with Reed v. Braithwaite (1). The headnote in that case is: E

"A testator gave his residuary estate to his wife for life, and afterwards to his cousin H. for her sole use; and should she have any legal issue by marriage, to be divided amongst them equally at twenty-one. 'Should the said H. not survive my wife, and die without the said legal issue by marriage,' he gave his residuary estate to M." F

So far as the report shows, no argument was addressed to the court on the meaning of the phrase "issue by marriage," but SIR RICHARD MALINS, V.-C., began his judgment, the substance of which deals with different matters, by observing that he was of opinion that the words "legal issue by marriage" clearly meant "children," and he continued (L.R. 11 Eq. 517): G

"The meaning of the clause creating the gift over is 'Should Maria Ann Halse die in the lifetime of my wife, and without such issue'; that is 'children who should attain twenty-one'." H

That decision, for it was, I think, necessary for the court there to construe the will though the judgment turns on other matters, has stood without question in England ever since. On the other hand, counsel for the grandchildren has discovered the Irish case, Walsh v. Johnston (2), and one of the gifts there considered was "To my wife and the issue of our marriage." Though Reed v. Braithwaite (1) was cited, CHATTERTON, V.-C., did not refer to the case in his judgment, but said ([1899] 1 I.R. 503):

"In dispositions by will the rule of construction is, that issue must be held to include all lineal descendants, and therefore it gives an estate in tail, or quasi-tail to the first taker, unless there are words in the context to cut down such a gift to children. The words 'of our marriage' are relied on as having that effect here. But a gift to the issue of an existing marriage does not, in my opinion, take the gift out of the general rule. 'Issue' necessarily implies lineal descent, and the addition of the words 'and the issue of a particular marriage' merely confines the descendants to those of a specified husband and wife."

There is, I think, a plain conflict between the English decision and the Irish.

It seems to me that it is not right to start, as the Irish court started, by first considering the meaning of the word "issue" simpliciter and then seeing whether it is affected by the context. It is true that "issue" means "issue to all degrees" unless that meaning is restrained by the context, but, in my judgment, "issue of our marriage" is a different, composite phrase, and ought to be construed, not as "issue" with a context, but as a different phrase altogether. After all, the words "of our marriage" qualify the word "issue." It is not a question of context at all. The phrase is a compound phrase which must be construed as such.

I agree that, if the court starts from the supposition that "issue" means "issue to all degrees," it is possible to construe the words "of our marriage" in such a way as not to restrain that meaning, and this is what the Irish court did, but, in my judgment, what really has to be determined is what is the proper construction to put on the compound phrase in a will, "issue of our marriage." The phrase "issue of our marriage" could only, I think, be found in a will. I cannot think of "issue of our marriage" appearing in a document like a settlement—"issue of the marriage," perhaps, but not "issue of our marriage"—and I do not think the phrase "issue of our marriage" has any technical legal meaning, whereas the word "issue" certainly has.

In my judgment, the phrase "issue of our marriage" ought to mean to the court, as it undoubtedly would mean to any layman, the children of the husband and his wife. Though the grandchildren are, in one sense, issue of the marriage between the husband and his wife, since there could have been no grandchildren if there had been no children, the grandchildren are not really issue of the marriage of the husband and his wife, but are issue of the son or daughter and his wife or her husband, who have been able to have issue by reason of the circumstance, among other things, that the grandfather had issue. My interpretation of that compound phrase accords with the decision of SIR RICHARD MALINS, V.-C., long ago.

Order accordingly. Costs of all parties as between solicitor and client to be paid out of the estate in due course of administration.

Solicitors: Ernest Bevir & Son, agents for Pinniger, Finch & Co., Westbury (for the plaintiff and the first defendant); Woodcock, Ryland & Co., agents for Vicary & Knight, Warminster (for the remaining defendants).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

PATEL v. WILLIS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Devlin, JJ.), January 22, 26, 1951.]

Control of Goods—Supply for export only—“Supply”—Delivery to agent—Declaration signed by agent in name of principal and undated—Validity—Proof of delivery in contravention of declaration—Knitted Goods (Manufacture and Supply) Order, 1948 (S.I., 1948, No. 316), art. 3 (2) (as substituted by art. 1 (a) of the Knitted Goods (Manufacture and Supply) (Amendment) (No. 2) Order, 1948) (S.I., 1948, No. 994); art. 3A (1) (as added by art. 1 (b) of the amending Order)—Utility Mark and Apparel and Textiles (General Provisions) Order, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 2642), art. 16 (1) (b), art. 18 (4).

By the Knitted Goods (Manufacture and Supply) Order, 1948, art. 3 (2) (as substituted by art. 1 (a) of the Knitted Goods (Manufacture and Supply) (Amendment) (No. 2) Order, 1948), a manufacturer shall not supply any goods of a certain class otherwise than by exportation or to a person who surrenders a declaration in writing, signed and dated by him, that he will not supply the goods except on the same terms, and by art. 3A (1) (as added by art. 1 (b) of the amending Order) a person to whom goods have been supplied against the surrender by him of such declaration shall not supply such goods except in accordance with the declaration. The appellant, stating that he represented a certain firm, bought on behalf of the firm from hosiery manufacturers a quantity of nylon stockings, which were goods within the provisions of the Orders. He said that the goods were required by the firm for export to Pakistan, and when, later, he collected the goods he signed the declaration required by art. 3 (2) of the Order of 1948. He signed it, not in his own name, but in a name purporting to be that of his principal and accepted by the sellers as such. He also omitted to write in the date and it was inserted later by the sellers. The goods having been delivered to him he placed them in a taxicab in which was waiting another man who consigned the goods by train to Leeds and York where they were collected.

HELD: (i) if goods were delivered to an agent who had authority to deal with them on behalf of his principal, they were supplied as much to the agent as to the principal; the appellant took from the manufacturers delivery of the goods as one clothed with authority to deal with them on behalf of his principal; and, therefore, the goods were supplied to him within the meaning of art. 3 (2).

(ii) to prove that goods had been supplied to the appellant in contravention of art. 3A (1) the prosecution must prove a delivery in circumstances in which, unless otherwise explained, the natural inference was that the delivery was either in pursuance of a contract or as a gift within art. 18 (4) of the Utility Mark and Apparel and Textiles (General Provisions) Order, 1947 (applied to the Knitted Goods (Manufacture and Supply) Order, 1948, by art. 13 (3) thereof), and, therefore, a “supply” within art. 18 (4) and art. 3A (1); it was then for the appellant to prove that the goods were not delivered to a third party otherwise than for exportation; he had failed to discharge that onus; and, consequently, he was guilty of an offence under art. 3A (1).

(iii) the fact that the appellant had not signed the declaration in his own name and had not dated it did not prevent the declaration being a good declaration for the purposes of art. 3A.

CASE STATED by London Quarter Sessions.

At a court of summary jurisdiction, sitting at Bow Street Magistrate's Court, the appellant was convicted on an information charging that between June 17 and June 22, 1949, he, being a person to whom knitted goods, to wit, two hundred dozen nylon stockings, had been supplied against the surrender by him of a declaration referred to in art. 5 of the Knitted Goods (Manufacture and Supply) Order, 1948, unlawfully did supply the said goods otherwise than in accordance with that declaration, contrary to art. 3A of the said Order (as added by art. 1 (b) of the Knitted Goods (Manufacture and Supply) (Amendment) (No. 2) Order, 1948). "He was sentenced to nine months' imprisonment and ordered to pay a fine of £500 and £250 costs. An appeal against the conviction and sentence was dismissed with costs by the appeal committee of London Sessions, on May 24, 1950.

On behalf of the appellant it was contended (i) that he had neither been supplied with, nor had he supplied, goods within the ordinary meaning of the word "supply" or within the meaning of the word as defined in the Utility Mark and Apparel and Textiles (General Provisions) Order, 1947, art. 18 (4), (applied to the Knitted Goods (Manufacture and Supply) Order, 1948, by art. 13 (3) of the latter Order); (ii) that the appellant had not surrendered the declaration within the meaning of art. 3 (2) or art. 5 of the Knitted Goods (Manufacture and Supply) Order, 1948, in that the declaration was given only on behalf of a person on whose behalf the appellant was acting, and was not signed or dated by the appellant. On behalf of the respondent it was contended that the acts complained of amounted to the offence charged either as a principal or as an aider or abettor.

Platts-Mills for the appellant.

G. Pollock for the respondent.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 26. DEVLIN, J., read the following judgment of the court. This is a case stated by the deputy chairman of the appeal committee of the London Sessions. The appellant was charged with an offence against an Order made under the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, which has as its object, among other things, to prevent the sale in the home market of goods—in this particular case, nylon stockings—manufactured for export. The Knitted Goods (Manufacture and Supply) Order, 1948, as amended by later Orders, provides by art. 3 (2) that a manufacturer shall not supply any goods of a certain class otherwise than by exportation or to a person who surrenders a declaration in writing signed and dated by him that he will not supply the goods except on the same terms. Article 3A (1) provides that a person to whom goods have been supplied against the surrender by him of any such declaration shall not supply any such goods except in accordance with the declaration. It is with a breach of this latter article that the appellant is charged.

The essential facts are short. In 1948 one V. S. Sastry registered himself as a firm under the title of the Central Oriental Agency. On May 18, 1949, the appellant called on Taylor Woods, Ltd., who are hosiery manufacturers, and stated that he represented the Central Oriental Agency. He arranged with Mr. Hughes, the general manager, that they should sell to the agency for export by them to Pakistan certain quantities of nylon stockings. This was followed by a written order signed by Mr. Sastry. On June 17, 1949, the appellant called to take delivery of some of the nylons. He was asked by Mr. Hughes for a declaration in the terms required by the Board of Trade, and replied that such a declaration was in the post. Mr. Hughes said that he could not hand over the goods unless they were signed for by the firm. Thereupon the appellant agreed to sign the declaration, which corresponds in its terms to that required by the Order I have read, and he wrote on the form offered to him the words "V. Shastri." The declaration was not then dated, but Mr. Hughes subsequently endorsed upon it a memorandum of the date. After the appellant had written on the declaration he was handed the nylons, and he took them and placed them in a waiting taxicab where there was another Indian gentleman. The taxicab drove to King's Cross Station—the appellant did not go all the way there—where the Indian gentleman sent part of the goods by train to Leeds and part by train to York. At both places they were collected by a third Indian, and nothing more is stated with regard to them.

Before the appellant can be convicted of the offence with which he is charged it is necessary for the prosecution to prove two acts of supplying, first by Taylor Woods, Ltd. to the appellant, and, secondly, by the appellant to some third party. It is contended on the appellant's behalf that there was no supplying to him, but only supplying to Sastry, and, further, that there is no evidence on which it can be said that he supplied to a third party. The case has thus given rise to a discussion on the meaning of the word "supply," which is of some importance inasmuch as it is the word commonly used in regulations of this type and there appears to be no authority on it. It is defined in art. 18 (4) of the Utility Mark and Apparel and Textiles (General Provisions) Order, 1947, and this definition is, by art. 13 (3) of the Order with which this case is concerned, applied to that latter Order. The definition provides that " 'supply' means supply in pursuance of a contract of sale, work, and labour with or without the provision of materials, sale or return, hire, hire-purchase, barter or a contract of any other description, and supply as a gift."

There is no doubt that there was a contract of sale between Taylor Woods, Ltd., and Sastry. There is likewise no doubt that, if the goods had been delivered to Sastry, they would have been supplied to him. In this case they were delivered to Sastry's agent. The definition of "supply" is very wide, but it is not every sort of delivery that amounts to a supply under "a contract . . . of any other description."

It may well be that, if goods are delivered to an agent of the seller, whose duty is merely to collect them—in short, to a mere messenger—the goods would not be supplied to the messenger. It is unnecessary to express any concluded view about that, for it is plain that the appellant was much more than that. In our judgment, if goods are delivered to an agent who has authority to deal with them on behalf of his principal, they are supplied as much to the agent as to the principal. There was ample material on which the appeal committee could come to the conclusion that the appellant was an agent in this class. He described himself, at his first interview on May 18, as representing the Central Oriental Agency, and it was he who arranged the terms of the contract. When he called to collect the goods on June 17, it is plain that he did so not merely as a messenger. He was able to inform Mr. Hughes that a declaration was in the post, and, when Mr. Hughes said that this was not sufficient and that he must have a signature "by the firm," he regarded himself as being in a position to sign the appropriate declaration. If he were a mere messenger there would have been no need for his presence at all, for it was another man who put the goods on the train. We think it plain that the appellant took delivery of the goods as one clothed with authority to deal with them on behalf of the firm.

Has the prosecution discharged whatever burden lies on it in relation to the second part of the case, and is there material sufficient to justify the conclusion that the appellant supplied the stockings to a third party otherwise than for exportation or against another declaration? The facts on this point are scanty, but we think they are enough. In our judgment, the prosecution, in order to prove a supply, must prove a delivery in circumstances in which, unless otherwise explained, the natural inference is that the delivery was either pursuant to a contract or as a gift. Once the prosecution have proved this, it is, we think, for the defence to show on what terms the goods were supplied. This is because the terms of the contract between the supplier and the third party is a matter peculiarly within the knowledge of the supplier. The burden is not, therefore, cast on the prosecution in the first instance of adducing material to show that the goods were delivered to the third party otherwise than for exportation.

Similarly, on well-established principles, if the defence have obtained from the third party a declaration in the terms of the Order, it is for them to produce it. It is not for this court to inquire whether the appellant gave evidence at his trial or to speculate on what his evidence was. We have to deal with the facts as stated. We must take it that the appellant was either unable or unwilling to give any explanation to the appeal committee for handing the goods to the Indian which the committee thought sufficiently credible to form the basis of any finding of fact. In these circumstances, we think that, once it is proved that an agent in the appellant's position handed to a third party goods which were despatched to their destinations by train, the proper inference, in the absence of any other satisfactory explanation, is that they were being supplied under one or other of the forms of contract so widely set out in the definition to which we have referred. As nothing was placed before the court to show whether that contract was for exportation or not and no declaration was produced, we think that the committee was justified in its conclusion that there had been a breach of the Order.

Before we leave this point we must deal with a contention on behalf of the appellant based on art. 16 (1) (b) of the Order of 1947 which provides that in relation to any provision controlling the quantity of goods a person who, in the course of supplying goods to another person through an agent, invoices those goods to the agent, shall be deemed to supply those goods to the agent, and the agent shall be deemed to supply the goods to that other person. It is not contended that this article is of direct application, but it is suggested that it can be used as an aid to construction and that we ought not to hold that goods are supplied to an agent within the meaning of the definition unless they are also invoiced to him. We do not find this article of any assistance. It is dealing, not with the definition of supply, but with what is "deemed" to be a supply for a particular and limited purpose. We were not referred to any provisions for controlling the quantity of goods, but it may well be that one of the objects of art. 16 (1) (b) is to prevent a double supply by the seller formally invoicing half the goods to an agent and the other half to his principal.

One other point was taken by the appellant. It was contended that the declaration was unsigned and undated—unsigned because the appellant had put on it, not his own name, but one which purported to be, and was taken by Mr. Hughes as being, the name of his principal, and undated because the date was not on it at the time of signature. So, it is contended, the appellant was not supplied with goods against a declaration in writing signed and dated by him, and, therefore, the case is not brought within the words of art. 3A. The point is quite unmeritorious since, if there was no proper declaration, the appellant not merely aided and abetted, but actively procured, the commission of an offence by the manufacturer under art. 3 (2), but we think that there is nothing in the point. There was a signature by the appellant with the name of his principal, and the document was in fact dated by Mr. Hughes, clearly with the implied authority of the appellant. Accordingly, we answer the question stated by saying that, in our judgment, the appeal committee came to a correct determination and decision in point of law.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Temple & Co. (for the appellant); Solicitor, Board of Trade (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

NOWELL v. NOWELL.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Lord Merriman, P., and Karminski, J.), February 1, 2, 1951.]

Infant—Maintenance—Education or training—Continuance of order after sixteen—Matters to be considered—Interests of child—Means of parties—Married Women (Maintenance) Act, 1949 (c. 99), s. 2 (2).

In July, 1938, the wife was granted an order of 30s. a week (later reduced to 20s.) for her own maintenance and one of 10s. a week for the maintenance of her son. In 1945 the marriage was dissolved, and the husband re-married. In November, 1950, the child having attained the age of sixteen, the wife applied to a metropolitan magistrate for the order for his maintenance to be continued under s. 2 (2) of the Married Women (Maintenance) Act, 1949. She proved that the child was still at school and that it was intended that he should remain there until he obtained his school certificate and should thereafter pursue further studies.

HELD: in deciding whether it was "expedient" to make a continuation order under s. 2 (2) the court must consider (a) whether the proposed education or training was or was not in the interest of the child, and (b) the financial position of the parties, and in the circumstances of the present case the order should be continued.

[FOR THE MARRIED WOMEN (MAINTENANCE) ACT, 1949, s. 2, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Interim Service, p. 1521.]

Case referred to:

(1) Bragg v. Bragg, [1925] P. 20; 94 L.J.P. 11; 132 L.T. 346; 27 Digest 665, 6242.

APPEAL from an order of the metropolitan magistrate sitting at West London Magistrate's Court.

This appeal arose out of an application under the Married Women (Maintenance) Act, 1949, s. 2 (2), made by the wife for the continuation of a maintenance order of 10s. a week in respect of her son. The son, who attained the age of sixteen in October, 1950, was attending a grammar school and it was intended that he should remain there until he obtained his school certificate and after that pursue further studies. The father opposed the application on the ground of lack of means but the magistrate granted it. The facts are set out fully in the judgment of LORD MERRIMAN, P.

D. E. Peck for the husband.

O'Malley for the wife.

LORD MERRIMAN, P.: This is a husband's appeal from a decision of the metropolitan magistrate sitting at the West London court, given on Nov. 28, 1950, to continue after the age of sixteen a payment of 10s. per week under an existing order of maintenance in respect of a child. As this is the first case, so far as I am aware, in which this particular provision of s. 2 of the Married Women (Maintenance) Act, 1949, has come before this court, and as the direction to himself by the magistrate has been called in question and is said to have vitiated the decision, I propose to say a word or two about the proper construction of the section.

The parties are no longer husband and wife, but in July, 1938, while they were still husband and wife, the Coventry justices made an order of 30s. in favour of the wife and one of 10s. for the maintenance of the child. That order continued in force without variation until 1945 when, the parties still being separated, the wife obtained a decree of divorce on the ground of desertion. Under

A a decision of this court in Bragg v. Bragg (1), which has been followed here without question, and, so far as I know, never dissented from by any higher court, the order still remained in force, and has been varied as recently as June 29, 1950, when the whole question was gone into before the justices for the Uckfield petty sessional division of Sussex. The child then was nearing the age of sixteen. He became sixteen in October last. On that occasion no application was made to the justices regarding his maintenance. Though by that time the Married Women (Maintenance) Act, 1949, was in force, and under s. 1 it would have been possible to ask for an increase in respect of his maintenance up to a maximum of 30s., his maintenance was left unchanged. The affairs of the husband were gone into with some elaboration, and the justices decided to reduce the maintenance in respect of the wife from 30s. to 20s. There was a considerable sum of arrears of maintenance payable to the wife in respect both of the 30s. for herself and the 10s. for the child. We are told that a sum earmarked as being the arrears in respect of the child (if, indeed, it is possible to earmark that sum as separate from the arrears payable to the wife under the order as a whole), was paid into court. Be it so. Whatever was left the justices remitted. They thus remitted arrears extending over a period of five years—a very considerable relief to the husband who was in some financial difficulty.

